Bedloe depoſed, That he was formerly a Lieutenant in Flanders; but of late employed by the Society of Jeſuits, and the Engliſh Monks at Paris, in carrying Letters to and from England, France, Spain, and Flanders; and that he was employed by Harcourt and Coleman to communicate the Letters he brought over to the Popiſh Party in England: That in the beginning of Auguſt there was a cloſe Conſult at Harcourt's Chamber, where he underſtood by one Pritchard, There was a Deſign to kill the King; and that, Grove and Pickering having failed, four Ruffians were hired to kill the King at Windſor.

That the latter End of Auguſt he (Bedloe) was at Harcourt's Chamber with Ireland, Pickering, Grove, Harcourt, Pritchard, and Fegarthy: And it was reſolved, that ſince the Ruffians had been diſappointed, Pickering and Grove ſhould go on, and Conyers ſhould be joined with them, and they ſhould aſſaſſinate the King in his Morning-Walks at New-market. That Grove ſaid, If they could not do it privately, they would openly; and that thoſe that fell, would have the Glory of dying in a good Cauſe; and both Oates and Bedloe depoſed, That the Duke of Ormonde was to have been aſſaſſinated, and an Inſurrection raiſed in Ireland at the ſame time.

The Priſoners Defence.

The Jeſuits, in their Defence, denied the whole Charge; they did acknowledge, indeed, that Oates was of their Society, and that being very poor, they often lent him Money; but as for the Conſultation at the White-Horſe in April, at London, they ſaid they could prove by many Witneſſes, if they had been permitted to ſend for them, that Oates was at that time at St. Omers: And Ireland actually produced ſeveral Witneſſes to prove that he was in Staffordſhire in Auguſt, when Oates made Oath he was at a treaſonable Conſult in London: But the Priſoners lamented they had not been allowed Pen, Ink, or Paper; or any Opportunity of ſummoning the reſt of their Witneſſes, which the Court did not ſeem to regard; though Ireland urged by way of Merit, that he had an Uncle killed in the King's Service; and that the Pendrels and Giffords, who were ſo inſtrumental in ſaving the King's Life after the Battle of Worceſter, were his near Relations; and Pickering ſaid, his Father was killed in the King's Service.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury

The Chief Juſtice, in his Directions to the Jury, ſeems to admit, that Ireland was not in London in Auguſt, when Oates and Bedloe had ſworn he was there at a treaſonable Conſult; but tells the Jury, though the Witneſſes were miſtaken in Point of Time, their Evidence might be true in the main; adding, That he thought it impoſſible for any Men to feign ſuch a Story as the King's Witneſſes had told, or for any one to disbelieve it when it was told: Nor was it difficult, he ſaid, to believe that theſe Prieſts, who had debauched Men's Underſtandings, overturned all Morals, and deſtroyed all Divinity, were engaged in a Deſign to murder the King; whoſe Humility was ſuch, that they trod upon the Necks of Emperors; their Charity ſuch, as to kill Princes; and their Vow of Poverty ſuch, as to covet Kingdoms: That they had rendered all Converſe with them impracticable, for they knew no Sin but what might be indulged; no Offence too big for a Pardon; and the blackeſt often accounted meritorious; and if Sacraments could not bind them, no Obligations or Covenants between Man and Man could, with a great deal more to the ſame Purpoſe; concluding, that the Matter was as plain and notorious as could be, That there was an Intention to bring in Popery by a cruel and bloody Way; and he thought Mr. Oates rather juſtified by the Teſtimony offered againſt him, than diſcredited: But obſerving that there was but one Witneſs againſt Whitebread and Fenwicke, he diſcharged the Jury of them, and directed them only to bring in a Verdict in relation to the other three Priſoners, whom they found GUILTY upon a very little Conſideration; and afterwards Sentence was paſſed on them as Traitors by the Recorder Jeffries; who was no leſs ſevere in his Reflections on them in the Speech he made when he pronounced Judgment, than the Chief Juſtice had been; and among others, uſed this Expreſſion, That the Priſoners Deſign was ſo horrid, that nothing but a Conclave of Devils in Hell, or a College of ſuch Jeſuits as theirs upon Earth, could have thought of it.

Whitebread and Fenwick reſerved for another Trial.

The other three convicted; and condemned;

But, however the Evidence might be believed by the Court and Jury, the King ſeems to have ſuſpected the Truth of it; for he ſuſpended the Execution of the three condemned Jeſuits, 'till the Houſe of Commons ordered the Recorder to attend them, and demanded why he had not iſſued his Warrant for their Executions? To which he anſwered, he had not yet received any Orders concerning them from the King: And they were afterwards reprieved till the 24th of January, when Ireland and Grove ſuffered; but Pickering was reprieved from Time to Time, 'till the ninth of May following, when he alſo was executed. The King ſeemed enclined to have pardoned them, if the Parliament had not inſiſted on their Execution; and ome Courtiers repreſented, that, as they were condemned by due Courſe of Law, it might hazard the Peace of the Nation, if the King ſhould pardon them, when the People were ſo generally perſuaded of their Guilt: But, whatever other People might think of them, they died profeſſing their Innocence to the laſt.

but reprieved from Time to Time, and executed at laſt,

Remarks on the Trial of Ireland, &c.

The People were ſo alarmed at this pretended Diſcovery of a Popiſh Plot, being made to believe, that a general Maſſacre was intended, of all ſuch Proteſtants as refuſed to be reconciled to Rome, that almoſt any Evidence was ſufficient, at that Time of Day, to convict a Papiſt; and nothing was thought a Hardſhip on thoſe who were accuſed of the Plot: The denying them all Opportunities of making their Defence, or of ſummoning their Witneſſes, was now held extremely equitable by our Whig Patriots; and the People were almoſt worked up into an Opinion, that it was lawful to knock any one on the Head, that was called a Papiſt: The infamous Characters of the principal Witneſſes, Oates and Bedloe, were not ſuffered to be touched upon: And though Oates himſelf declared he had turned Jeſuit, and taken Oaths and Sacraments without Number, only to betray his Brethren, yet was his Teſtimony looked upon as unqueſtionable; nay, the proving one of the Priſoners to be in another Place, when Oates and Bedloe ſwore he was in London, was very little regarded: And ſo artfully did Lord Shaftesbury, and his Whig Brethren, manage this pretended Diſcovery, that even a Majority of the Parliament and the Tories believed it, till they found it loaded with ſo many improbable Circumſtances, that the Forgery became too groſs to be ſwallowed any longer: Even the Chief Juſtice and the Recorder Jeffries, who tried them, ſeemed at that Time to be fully ſatisfied, and to applaud the Verdict given againſt the three Jeſuits; though they lived to alter their Minds, and ſhew their Deteſtation of the numerous Perjuries that thoſe unhappy Men were condemned upon.

The Impeachment of THOMAS Earl of DANBY, Lord High Treaſurer of England, for High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors, the 23d of December, 1678. 30 Car. II.

1678. 30 Car. II. Earl of Danby's Impeachment.

The Tenor of it.

THE Articles, which were carried up by Sir Henry Capel, Brother to the Earl of Eſſex, on the ſaid 23d of December, charged him with traitorouſly aſſuming Regal Power, in treating of Peace and War, and giving Inſtructions to Ambaſſadors abroad, without communicating the ſame to the Secretaries of State, or the Council: That in order to ſubvert the Conſtitution, and introduce Arbitrary Power, he procured an Army to be raiſed; and continued it, contrary to an Act of Parliament for disbanding it: That he negotiated a Peace with the French King upon diſadvantageous Terms, and endeavoured to procure a Sum of Money of his moſt Chriſtian Majeſty for conſenting to it: That he was Popiſhly affected, endeavoured to ſtifle the Plot, and diſcountenanced the Witneſſes: That he had waſted the Publick Treaſure, and procured Grants to himſelf of the Revenues of the Crown.

The Commons therefore prayed that the Earl might be put to anſwer, and brought to Trial, and Judgment thereupon; and that he might be ſequeſtred from Parliament, and forthwith committed to ſafe Cuſtody.

The Earl's Defence.

Upon reading the Articles in the Houſe of Peers, the Earl made a Speech in his Defence; wherein he obſerved, That, as to his aſſuming Regal Power, he had never tranſacted any thing of Moment, for which he had not his Majeſty's ſpecial Command: That the Army was no more raiſed by him, than by every Lord in that Houſe: That he had been ſo far from concealing the Plot, that it had been owned at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons, the Witneſſes had received all manner of Encouragement and Diſpatch from him; and that, if he had not ſeized Coleman's Papers, none of them had appeared; and they had wanted the moſt material Evidence of the Plot: That, as to his being Popiſhly affected, ſome of thoſe who voted the Impeachment, had acknowledged the Falſity of that Allegation: And as to waſting the Publick Treaſure, he knew of none in his Time to waſte; all the Money that had been given had fallen ſhort; and the King had laid out more than he had received, in building Ships, or paying off the Debts that had been ſtopped in the Exchequer before his Time; inſomuch, that his Conduct would appear rather meritorious than criminal. And laſtly, that his Gains were not what they had been repreſented: They might rather arraign his Prudence, in not having done for his Family what he juſtly ought: And if his Obedience to the King was not his Crime, he thought nothing elſe would affect him which the Articles contained. That if he had been either a Papiſt, or a Friend to the French, he had not been now accuſed: He had Reaſon to believe the principal Informer, Mr. Montague, had been aſſiſted with French Advice in this Accuſation: That no Man could vindicate him more than Montague, who had ſhewn how great an Enemy he (the Earl) was to France, under his Hand; and how much he might have had to have been otherwiſe; and what Montague might have had for getting him to take it: That Montague knew it would appear under his Hand, that the greateſt Invitations to his Majeſty to take Money of France, were made by himſelf; and that, if his Majeſty would have been tempted for Money, he might have ſold Towns there for as much as if they had been his own; but that he always ſcorned to yield the meaneſt Village, that was not agreed to by the Spaniard and Hollander; concluding, That ever ſince he had the Honour to ſerve his Majeſty, he had delivered it as his conſtant Opinion, That France was the worſt Intereſt he could embrace; they were were the Nation in the World from whom he ought to apprehend the greateſt Danger; and who had both his Perſon and Government under the laſt degree of Contempt.

The Earl remains at Liberty, after the Charge exhibited.

Whether the Lords were ſatisfied of the Earl's Innocence, or were influenced by the Court, they did not think fit to order him into Cuſtody; and the 30th of the ſame Month the King prorogued the Parliament, and on the 12th of January diſſolved it, calling another to meet the 6th of March following.

The next Houſe of Commons deſire he may be committed.

On Thurſday, March the 20th, the new Houſe of Commons reſolved, Nemine contradicente, to ſend a Meſſage to the Lords, to remind them of the Impeachment againſt the Earl of Danby, and to deſire he might be forthwith committed to ſafe Cuſtody, and appointed a Committee to draw up further Articles againſt him; and finding the Earl was not yet taken into Cuſtody, they ſent another Meſſage to the Lords the 22d of March, of the ſame Tenor as the former: And on the 25th of March, 1679, received a Meſſage from the Lords, that they had ſent to apprehend the Earl of Danby, both to his Houſe in Town, and at Wimbleton; and that the Uſher of the Black Rod had returned, that he could not be found. Whereupon the Commons, on the 4th of April, 1679, Reſolved, That his Majeſty be addreſſed to iſſue his Proclamation to apprehend the Earl of Danby, with the uſual Penalties on ſuch as ſhould conceal him; and that the Officers of his Majeſty's Palaces might have Orders that he ſhould not be harboured in any of them.

He withdraws.

An Addreſs for apprehending him.

He gets a Pardon;

In the mean time, the Earl having obtained the King's Pardon, the Commons reſolved to addreſs the King, and repreſent the Irregularity and Illegality of it; and the dangerous Conſequences of granting Pardons to Perſons impeached. They alſo ordered a Bill of Attainder to be brought in againſt the Earl, in which, after ſeveral Conferences, having prevailed with the Lords to agree with them in it, if he did not appear, the Earl of Danby thought fit to ſurrender himſelf on the 13th of April, and was committed to the Tower; and being brought before the Lords the 25th of the ſame Month, he pleaded his Pardon. Whereupon the Lords acquainted the Commons, that they had appointed Saturday, the 10th of May, to hear the Earl of Danby by his Counſel, to make good his Plea; but the Commons prevented its being argued, by Reſolving, That no Commoner preſume to maintain the Validity of the Pardon pleaded by the Earl of Danby: And that the Pardon pleaded by the Earl to their Impeachment, was illegal and void, and proceeded to demand Judgment of the Lords againſt him, which occaſioned a Conference between the two Houſes, on the 26th of May, 1679. When the Commons reminded their Lordſhips, that upon the Impeachment of the Earl, the common Juſtice of ſequeſtring him from Parliament, and committing him to ſafe Cuſtody, was denied them, of which their Lordſhips had been ſo ſenſible, that they had ſince declared, That upon the Impeachment of a Peer for High-Treaſon (where and pleads it.

Articles were exhibited againſt him) he ought of Right to be ordered to withdraw, and then be committed: And if this Juſtice had been done them, he had not had an Opportunity of obtaining that illegal Pardon which he had pleaded. 1678. 30 Car. II.

They ſaid they were ſurpriſed when they received a Meſſage from their Lordſhips, the 7th of May, That as well the Lords Spiritual as Temporal, had ordered, That the 10th of May, inſtant, ſhould be the Day for hearing the Earl of Danby make good his Plea of Pardon; and that their Lordſhips had addreſſed his Majeſty for naming a Lord High Steward.

That the Commons apprehended the admitting the Lords Spiritual to exerciſe Juriſdiction in theſe Caſes, was an Alteration of the Judicature of Parliament; and that if a Lord High Steward was neceſſary on Impeachments, ſuch Impeachments might be defeated, by ſuſpending or denying a Commiſſion to conſtitute a High Steward.

The Commons inſiſt, the Lords Spiritual ought not to ſit in the Houſe in Criminal Caſes.

That the Commons having communicated their Vote, That the Lords Spiritual ought not to have any Vote in any Proceeding againſt the five Popiſh Lords in the Tower, to their Lordſhips; and declared, that when that Matter ſhould be ſettled, and the Methods of Proceeding adjuſted, the Commons would then be ready to proceed upon the Trial of the Pardon of the Earl of Danby; their Lordſhips, without giving the Commons any ſatisfactory Anſwer, ſent them a Meſſage on the 22d of May, That the Lords Spiritual, as well as Temporal, had ordered the 27th of that inſtant May for the Trial of the ſaid five Lords; leaving them to conclude, that the Lords Spiritual have a Right to ſit and vote, 'till the Court proceeds to the Vote of Guilty, or Not guilty; and conſequently that they might be allowed to judge upon the Earl of Danby's Plea of Pardon.

The Commons therefore thought themſelves obliged not to proceed to the Trial of the five Lords on the 27th, but to adhere to their ſaid Vote; for which they alſo offered theſe further Reaſons:

1. Becauſe their Lordſhips had received the Earl's Plea of Pardon with a Proteſtation, wherein he had aſperſed his Majeſty by falſe Suggeſtions, as though his Majeſty had commanded, or countenanced the Crimes he ſtood charged with.

The Commons deny a Pardon can be pleaded in Bar to an Impeachment.

2. The ſetting up a Pardon to be a Bar to an Impeachment, defeated the whole Uſe and Effect of Impeachments; and therefore the Caſe of the ſaid Earl (which in Conſequence concerned all Impeachments) ought to be determined before that of the five Lords, which was but their particular Caſe.

3. Until the Commons have Right done them againſt this Plea of Pardon, they ſhould apprehend that the Juſtice of the Kingdom would be defeated, by Pardons of the like Nature, in the Caſe of the five Lords.

4. That an Impeachment was virtually the Voice of the whole Kingdom; and it would be dangerous if the whole Nation ſhould have Occaſion miniſtred to them to be apprehenſive of of the utmoſt Danger from the Crown, from whence they of Right expect Protection.

5. That Articles were firſt exhibited againſt the ſaid Earl, and the Trial appointed by their Lordſhips to be before that of the five Lords; but their Lordſhips, having ſince inverted that Order, had given them Cauſe to doubt, if they ſhould proceed firſt to the Trial of the five Lords, not only that Juſtice would be obſtructed in their Caſe, but that they ſhould never have Right done them in this Plea of Pardon.

The Lords inſiſt, the Lords Spiritual ought to vote, in Matters previous to the Trial.

The Commons Reaſons being read in the Houſe of Lords the 27th, and their Lordſhips continuing in their Reſolution, that the Lords Spiritual ought to ſit and vote in the Houſe, in Matters previous to the Trial; neither the Earl of Danby, or the five Popiſh Lords, were brought to their Trials at this Time; but moſt of them remained Priſoners in the Tower ſeveral Years: Whereupon the Earl of Danby brought an Habeas Corpus in Eaſter Term, 1681, and another in 1682, in order to be admitted to bail by the Court of King's-Bench.

An Habeas Corpus brought by the Earl, to be admitted to bail.

His Arguments.

The Arguments he uſed to induce this Court to bail him, were, 1. That he had been both accuſed and committed, without any Oath made againſt him.

2. That there was no particular Treaſon mentioned in the Articles; only the Word traitorouſly had been applied to Things that were not Treaſon, if they had been true; whereas in the Impeachments of the Popiſh Lords, they were charged with the higheſt Treaſons, and upon Oaths made againſt them.

3. That when a Day was ſet by the Lords for his being heard, and He appeared, his Council were threatned, if they durſt ſpeak to the Matter of Law.

4. That he had his Majeſty's Pardon, and yet the Pardon and he had been Priſoners together above three Years, of which he thought this was the firſt Precedent ſince the Conqueſt.

5. That he had not only his Majeſty's Pardon, but his Majeſty's Declaration of his Innocence, in his Speech to both Houſes of Parliament; wherein his Majeſty alſo declared, that he would give him his Pardon ten Times over, if that he had already was defective either in Matter or Form.

6. That he had been Priſoner above forty Months, without any Proſecution for the greateſt Part of that Time, which was another Reaſon in Law for bailing of him; for that, inſtead of a Reſtraint ad Cuſtodiam, he had undergone a Puniſhment greater than the Crimes alledged againſt him could have deſerved, if they had been true: That his Majeſty had alſo given his Directions to Mr. Attorney, to give his Conſent to his being bailed; and he ſaid, there was hardly a Precedent of a King's Priſoner, and at the King's Suit, refuſed to be bailed, when the King's Conſent had been obtained for it: And the Precedent would have been no leſs ſtrange and new againſt the King, than againſt himſelf, if he was not permitted to be bailed under ſuch Circumſtances; and that it muſt be very dangerous to the Subject, and a plain Failure of Juſtice, if he could be ſo reſtrained of his Liberty, that he might not be bailed without the Leave of the Houſe of Lords. He took it for granted there would have been no Diſpute in this Matter, but for a Declaration of the Houſe of Lords, made the 19th of March, 1678 (viz.) That the Diſſolution of the laſt Parliament, doth not alter the State of Impeachments brought up by the Commons in that Parliament: But, had the Lords actually made an Order againſt bailing him, it would have been illegal, and contrary to Magna Charta; as whatever ſubjected a Man to an indefinite Impriſonment was.

That it had been admitted in the worſt of Times, even during the Uſurpation, that an Order of Parliament was not of Force after a Diſſolution of the Parliament; and he hoped that the Liberty of the Subject was not more precarious now than it was then: That one of the chief Grounds of the late War between the King and Parliament, was, That an Ordinance of Parliament ſhould not be held equal to an Act of Parliament, and yet thoſe were Orders of both Houſes: And here, an Order of one Houſe was held equivalent to a Law; and that againſt our greateſt and moſt ſacred Laws of Liberty, which had been ſo often confirmed.

The Earl juſtly obſerved alſo, that the Diſtempers of the Times, had given more Weight to that Order, than any Thing elſe: There had been ſeveral Inſtances, where the Court of King's-Bench had allowed the Pardon of a Peer when pleaded there, though they had no Power to proceed to the Trial of him: That Men had been diſcharged by that Court upon the King's Writ, without any other Reaſon given in the Writ, but becauſe the King held the Parties to be innocent; as in the Caſes of Melton Archbiſhop of York, and Graveſend Biſhop of London. 7 Ed. 3.

That the King had aboliſhed Accuſations of Treaſon, as in the Caſe of Talbot and Ormonde, in Hen. VI. and where one pleaded an inſufficient Pardon, the Court had ſuch a Regard to the King's Intention of pardoning, that the Party was ordered to procure a better Pardon, 26 Aſſ. p. 46, and the King's Intention of pardoning him had been ſufficiently declared to the whole Kingdom; adding, that he had now no Proſpect when a Parliament would ſit; and, if they did, it was a Queſtion whether he ſhould meet with Relief there; for that his Petition had been read the firſt Day of the laſt Parliament; but publick Buſineſs intervening, they had not Time to conſider his private Caſe: That this had been his Misfortune in three Parliaments ſucceſſively; which made it but too plain, that he lay under an indefinite Impriſonment, unleſs he could find Relief in that Court, for that there was no other to appeal to.

He concluded, that as the King had ſufficiently declared there was no Danger in letting him have his Liberty, ſo he had ſuch Bail to offer the Court, as would ſufficiently ſatisfy the World, that he ſhould be forth-coming.

To

1678. 30 Car. II. The Judges refuse to bail him.

To this the Lord Chief Juſtice anſwered, They were not inſenſible of the Hardſhips of his Lordſhip's Caſe, or of the King's Deſire that he ſhould be no longer impriſoned; the King had done as much as lay in his Power to relieve him, but the Miſery of it was, the Court could only compaſſionate him, his Lordſhip having been impriſoned by a higher Hand, and where they had no Power to intermeddle; and that all the Judges had delivered their Opinions, that he could not be bailed: Nor was his Lordſhip indefinitely impriſoned; for whenever his Majeſty was pleaſed to call a Parliament, he would have a Remedy: (This Motion for Bail was made by the Earl in Eaſter Term, 1682, after he had been in Priſon three Years, and there was no Parliament in Being.)

Mr. Juſtice Jones ſaid, That the Earl had been charged with Treaſon by an Impeachment, and had pleaded a Pardon before the Lords (The Validity of which had not been allowed or argued) which Plea he took to be a tacit Confeſſion of Guilt in Law, though the Party were never ſo innocent, inſomuch that a ſecond Plea could not be admitted; and in that Caſe he did not ſee how that Court could have any Thing to do with his Lordſhip.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben ſaid, That he muſt confeſs the Caſe to be very hard; and he was not of the Opinion of his Brother Jones, that his Lordſhip would be debarred of another Plea, if the Pardon ſhould be over-ruled; but if he was put to give a preſent Anſwer, he muſt declare his preſent Opinion to be, That his Lordſhip could not be bailed; though he thought it might well deſerve another Conſideration.

Mr. Juſtice Raymond ſaid, that his Lordſhip's Caſe was attended with ſo many weighty Circumſtances, that it ought to be well conſidered, and by more of the Judges, betwixt that and the next Term; and therefore he would deliver no Opinion then.

And it ſeems the Judges were ſo much afraid of being called to an Account by ſome future Parliament, that his Lordſhip lay in Priſon till the 12th of Feb. 1683-4, being between five and ſix Years from the Time of his Commitment; and then the Court of King's-Bench ventured to bail him, together with the Earl of Powis and the reſt of the Popiſh Lords that ſurvived, who had been committed to the Tower for the Popiſh Plot, much about the ſame Time.

1678. 30 Car. II. Remarks on the Earl of Danby's Impeachment.

It is very much to be queſtioned, whether the Earl was guilty of any of the Articles he was charged with; but happening to be Prime Miniſter at this Time, and having incurred the Diſpleaſure both of Papiſts and Whigs, they took this Opportunity of charging him with all the Maladminiſtration that had happened for ſome Years: And when the King had granted him a Pardon, not only queſtioned the Validity of it, but arbitrarily commanded his Counſel not to plead for him, which was certainly an uncommon Stretch of Privilege, and can never be deemed juſt or legal.

The Lords indeed might have declared the Pardon valid, and thereupon diſcharged the Earl, on hearing what he had to ſay to it himſelf; but whether it was not thought fit to carry Things to this Extremity, and break abſolutely with the Houſe of Commons, or for what other Reaſon does not appear: The Earl was ſuffered to remain in Priſon ſeveral Years with the King's Pardon in his Pocket, as he obſerves.

The Judges who refuſed to bail him, no doubt, knew what the Law was in theſe Caſes, as well as the Judges that afterwards bailed him; but they had ſeen ſo many Inſtances of the implacable Rage and Malice of the Whig Leaders, who ſat in the Houſe of Commons about that Time, that they knew their Ruin would certainly have been the Conſequence of bailing him then: But when it was found the King was determined not to call a Parliament in Haſte; and that, if he had called one, they would have been Men of a different Stamp; the Judges made no Scruple of giving him his Liberty, as well as the Popiſh Lords that remained in the Tower; which we find ſo far approved by the next Parliament that was called, that their Bail was then actually diſcharged; and though the Court of King's-Bench have ever ſince refuſed to bail the Members of the reſpective Houſes, that have been committed by either, during the Seſſions; yet upon a Diſſolution, and ſometimes upon a Prorogation, they have been admitted to Bail: And it his held, That the Court of King's-Bench may admit to Bail, even a Lord impeached of High Treaſon, when the Parliament is not ſitting. Hawkins B. 2. p. 111.

The Trial of JAMES MITCHEL, for an Attempt to commit Murder at Edinburgh, before the Lord Juſtice General, and the reſt of the Lords Commiſſioners of Juſticiary, the 7th of January, 1677-8. 29 Car. II.

1677-8. 29 Car. II.

The Charge THE Indictment charges the Priſoner, That having conceived a deadly Malice and Hatred againſt the Right Rev. James, Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, on Account of his being promoted to that Archbiſhoprick, and made one of his Majeſty's Privy Council, he did contrive the Murder and Aſſaſſination of his Grace; and in order thereto, having provided himſelf with a Pair of Piſtols, did, on the 9th of July, 1668, proceed to execute his Purpoſe, when the Archbiſhop came down Stairs, and was going into his Coach with the Biſhop of Orkney: That he did diſcharge one of his Piſtols loaden with Powder and Ball at them, when they were got into the Coach, and thereby dangerouſly wounded the Biſhop of Orkney in the joyning of the Hand and Arm, ſo that he was mutilate and diſmembred, and never perfectly recovered his Health, but languiſhed thereof untill he died: From which Premiſes it was evident he was guilty of Murder and Aſſaſſination, by way of Forethought, Felony, &c. and therefore ought to ſuffer the Pains of Death, inflicted on ſuch Offenders, by the Laws of Scotland.

His Counſel's Objections to the Indictment. The Priſoner denied the Charge in the Indictment, or that he ever made any Confeſſion of it; and his Counſel obſerved, That he could not be charged with Murder; for a bare Endeavour, where the Thing was not effected, they ſaid, could not be puniſhed as if it was actually committed, unleſs in Treaſon and Parricide.

And though the Priſoner might be indicted for Aſſaſſination by their Law, yet it was not laid in the Indictment, That he was hired to commit the Fact, without which he was no Aſſaſſin: And as to the Mutilation of the Biſhop of Orkney, their Law did not extend to Mutilation, but to diſmembering only; and diſmembering was not ſo much as laid in the Indictment: And although it was inſinuated, the Biſhop died of the Wound, it not being laid, that the Wound was of its own Nature mortal, the Indictment in that Point was inſufficient: And beſides, it might be proved that the Biſhop went about and exerciſed his Function afterwards.

That it was not laid, he invaded (or aſſaulted) the Archbiſhop while he was engaged in his Majeſty's Service, which rendered it inſufficient in that Point; and the Act which made it Capital, was paſſed ſince the Fact committed.

That his Confeſſion, if he made any, was not before proper Judges, and was on a Promiſe of Pardon and Indemnity, and therefore ought not to be urged againſt him.

The Objections anſwered by the King's Counſel. To this the Lord Advocate and the King's Counſel anſwered, That they ſtill inſiſted, the invading and attempting the Life of a Privy Counſellor, was Capital; that in this Caſe the Priſoner proceeded to Action, and did all that lay in his Power to accompliſh the Murder: And whereas it was ſaid, it ought to be proved, that the Attempt was made on the Archbiſhop for doing his Majeſty's Service, that was always to be preſumed, where one attempted the Life of a Privy Counſellor; His Intentions were no otherwiſe to be manifeſted but by his Actions; and the Priſoner, being unknown to his Grace, could have no other Quarrel againſt him than for doing his Duty; the Law would interpret it to be ſo, unleſs he could ſhew ſome other private View he had in committing of it: And beſides theſe Preſumptions of Law, the Priſoner had acknowledged himſelf to be of a Sect that abhorred all Biſhops; and one of his Brethren had, in Print, declared it to be lawful to kill one of that Character: Nay, the Priſoner himſelf had declared it lawful to kill a Biſhop; had endeavoured to make Proſelites to his Opinion, and acknowledged the Reaſon he ſhot at the Archbiſhop to be, becauſe he was a Perſecutor, or Proſecutor, of the Rebels at Pentland-Hills; and though the laſt Act, which made it Capital to attempt the Life of a Biſhop, was made after the Fact, that was only explanatory of a former Act: And whereas it was ſaid, he was no Aſſaſſin that did not take Money: Indeed an Attempt to revenge a private Injury, was not Capital, becauſe Nature might plead ſome Excuſe for our Reſentment; but where a Perſon, after mature Deliberation, ſhould, by lying in wait, attempt to kill a Perſon that never offended him, the Law made it Capital; the Circumſtance of taking Money, was only demonſtrative and not reſtrictive, ſince theſe Criminals are much more dangerous than thoſe who do it for Hire, who chuſe Darkneſs and Privacy to tranſact their Villany, and never attempt it but with a Proſpect of eſcaping; but the Noon-day Sun, and the greateſt Concourſe of People, cannot ſecure a Man againſt theſe Murderers, who act upon Principle, and perſuade themſelves their Crimes will purchaſe them Seats in Paradiſe, or that the Multitude will protect them againſt their lawful Governors. As their Laws puniſhed Capitally an Attempt to rob or raviſh, much more, Attempts to commit ſuch execrable Crimes.

That he had no Promiſe of Life from any one who had Authority to make it; and if he made his Confeſſion ſpontaneouſly, it would not avail.

The Priſoner's Confeſſion produced as Evidence.

Mitchel convicted.

1677-8. 29 Car. II.

The Opinion of the Court on the Instructions.

The Court having considered the Indictment, and the Arguments on both Sides, found that the Article in the Indictment, founded on the fourth Act of the 16th Parl. Jac. 6. importing the Prisoner's assaulting the Archbishop, who was a Privy Counsellor, by firing a Pistol at him for doing his Majesty's Service, was sufficiently supported; it being proved that the Prisoner said, he made that Assault upon the Archbishop for persecuting those who were in Rebellion against his Majesty at Pentland-Hills.

But as to the Article concerning the assaulting Bishops and Ministers, they found it only inferred arbitrary Punishment: As to the other Article, concerning the mutilating the Bishop of Orkney, it only inferred arbitrary Punishment.

And as to the Promise of Life made before the Privy Council, they thought it sufficient to secure the Prisoner's Life, provided it was proved.

The Court having thus settled Matters of Law (as is usual in Scotland, previous to the Trial) a Jury, consisting of fifteen Persons, was sworn, and the Evidence produced. And first, The Prisoner's Confession before the Lord Chancellor, Lord Register, Lord Advocate, and Lord Treasurer, was read, wherein he freely confessed, he was the Person who shot the Pistol at the Archbishop of St. Andrew's, when the Bishop of Orkney was hurt, in the Year 1668. and that no living Creature persuaded him to do it, or knew of it.

Then several other Persons deposed, That, since his being in Prison, he had confessed his firing the Pistol at the Archbishop; and the Reason he gave for it was, That his Grace was an Enemy to the Godly; and they could not be in Security as long as he lived. Some Surgeons also deposed, That the Bones of the Bishop of Orkney's Hand were fractured by the Ball; but that he was afterwards able to lift it to his Head.

The Lord Chancellor and Treasurer deposed, That they saw the Prisoner sign his Confession; but there was no Assurance given him of Life.

However, the Prisoner procured a Writing to be read, which he called, An Act of Council (but the Members denied there was any such Act) importing, that the Prisoner, retiring with one of the Committee of Council, confessed the Fact, on Promise made him of his Life; and that he afterwards renewed his Confession before the Council: But that, being brought before the Lords of Justiciary, he refused to acknowledge his Confession, though his Majesty's Advocate told him, he should have the Benefit of the Indemnity promised him, if he adhered to his Confession; but otherwise he would lose the Benefit of it; and that thereupon the Lords of the Council declared the said Promise void.

Mitchel convicted.

This pretended Act being rejected, the Jury were ordered to withdraw, and on the 10th of January gave their Verdict, as to the first Part of the Libel or Indictment, founded on Act 4. 16 Parl. Jac. 6 concerning the assaulting, or attempting, any of the Lords of Session, Privy Council, &c. unanimously, That they found it proved.

1677-8. 29 Car. II.

As to the invading of Bishops and Ministers, and wounding the Bishop of Orkney, they likewise find it proved with one Voice. As to his Confessions, they likewise find them proved with one Voice. Lastly, As to the Prisoner's Exculpation (in relation to the Assurances given him of Life) they unanimously find it no ways proved.

Sentence passed on him.

Whereupon the Court adjudged, That the Prisoner be taken to the Grass-market in Edinburgh, on Friday the 18th of January, and there be hanged on a Gibbet till he was dead, and his moveable Goods and Gear to be Escheat to his Majesty's Use.

His Speech under the Gallows.

The Prisoner was accordingly executed at the Market-Cross in Edinburgh, on the 18th of January, and being a zealous Field-Conventicler, entertained his Audience with a Discourse that suited very well with the Principles of those Men, wherein he told the People, he owned and adhered, with all his Heart and Soul, to the Work of Reformation, as it was begun and carried on in that Kingdom, according to the Word of God, the National Covenant; and the solemn League and Covenant, as it was settled amongst them by General Assemblies, Synods, Presbyteries, Kirk-Sessions, and the People's just Power to chuse and call their own lawful Pastors; declaring that Patronage was a Popish Right, and an Usurpation in the House of God.

That the lawful Magistrate (the King) ought to be qualified according to God's Appointment: He must not make himself strong by Horses, to the end he may compel the Lord's People to rebel against the Lord's express Command; nor, Jeroboam like, compel the People to Apostacy: He must not multiply Wives to himself, much less Whores, and marry an Idolatrous Wife like Jezebel, (as he insinuates the King had); but he must be a diligent Student of the Law of the Lord, and judge the People accordingly; and if he should overturn the Covenant-Work of God, and by a Parliament, packed according to his own Mind, rescind the Acts of former Parliaments, Committees of States and Councils, he divested himself of all legal Right over his People; and it necessarily followed to be the Duty of such People, or any Part of them, to take up Arms in Defence of their Religion, Laws and Liberties, or they would be guilty of bringing God's Wrath upon the whole Land: Adding, I protest before God, Angels, and Men, against all those Acts of Parliament, or Council, which are against the Word of God and Reformation, and carrying on the same, according as we are engaged and sworn in these Holy Bands of the National Covenant, and of the Solemn League and Covenant. I hope the Time is drawing nigh, when the Man shall be accursed who keepeth back his Sword from Blood, and who doth the Work of the Lord deceitfully: Yea, happy shall he be, that taketh this Cursed, Malignant, and Prelatical Brood, and dasheth them against the Stones: For this Honour have all his Saints, the high Praises of God in their Mouth, and a two-

a two-edged Sword in their Hand, to execute Juſtice upon the Heathen.

It is obſervable from this Trial, That, by the Laws of Scotland, the Priſoner is allowed Counſel in Capital Caſes, and a Copy of his Indictment, which he is not in England; and that, before the Jury is ſworn, his Counſel are allowed to make their Objections to the Indictment; and if it be found defective, either in Form or Subſtance, by the Judges, the Priſoner is diſcharged: The Jury only try the Facts, and cannot convict or acquit the Priſoner by a general Verdict, as with us: They conſiſt of fifteen, ſeventeen, or ſome odd Number; nor can the Priſoner challenge any of them; and a Majority determines the Fact; but with us, All the Jury muſt agree in their Verdict in Capital Caſes.

We find alſo, That, by the Laws of Scotland, an Attempt to rob or Murder, is Capital, though it be not effected; which ſeems highly reaſonable, eſpecially where the Criminal fires a Piſtol, or offers to kill an innocent Man, with a Sword, or other Weapon; though, by the Laws of England, this is looked upon as no more than an Aſſault, and fineable.

As to this particular Caſe, it appears, That the Priſoner and his Brethren held it lawful, and even meritorious, to kill a Biſhop; that he once actually ſhot at the Archbiſhop of St. Andrews, and wounded the Biſhop of Orkney in Purſuance of this Principle; and having fled for it, and lived in Exile eight or ten Years, returned to Edinburgh again, when he thought the Matter was forgot, and took Lodgings again near the Archbiſhop's, where he was apprehended, with the ſame Piſtols loaded, with which he had attempted to aſſaſſinate his Grace before; from whence it was conjectured, he deſigned to attempt to murder him again; however, this was prevented by the Villain's being taken up. He ſeems to inſiſt, That his Life was promiſed him by ſome of the Privy Council, if he would make a full Confeſſion, and that he did make ſuch a Confeſſion; but then we find, he afterwards retracted that Confeſſion, by which the Court told him he had forfeited the Benefit of that Promiſe, if any ſuch was ever made him; and he was executed in Purſuance of his Sentence; and ſurely with a great deal of Juſtice; for if ſuch Men, who think themſelves at Liberty to murder Magiſtrates, and even their Sovereign, when ever they do not approve his Adminiſtration, are ſuffered to eſcape with Impunity, it is impoſſible any Government can ſubſiſt: But for a Proteſtant Preacher, A Miniſter of the Goſpel (as he called himſelf) to turn Aſſaſſin as well as Rebel, upon a pretended religious Principle, for which his Sect exclaim ſo loudly againſt Papiſts and Jeſuits. All the World muſt acknowledge the Juſtice, and even the Neceſſity, of making ſuch a Man an Example.

The Trial of ROBERT GREEN, HENRY BERRY, and LAURENCE HILL, for Murder, at the King's-Bench Bar, the 10th of February, 1678-9. 31 Car. II.

The Charge

THE Indictment charged, that the ſaid three Priſoners (together with Gerald and Kelly, two Prieſts, and one Philiber Vernet, who were fled) on Saturday the 12th of October, then laſt paſt, did make an Aſſault on Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, and that the ſaid Green having twiſted his Handkerchief, put it round Godfrey's Neck, and with the Aſſiſtance of his ſaid Accomplices, ſtrangled him; and ſo they were all found guilty of murdering the ſaid Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey.

The Evidence of Titus Oates.

A Jury being ſworn, and charged with the Priſoners, the Witneſſes were called. And firſt Titus Oates, who depoſed, That on the 6th of September, then laſt paſt, he gave in ſeveral Depoſitions upon Oath, containing a Narrative of the Popiſh Plot before the ſaid Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, then a Juſtice of Peace for Weſtminſter, and having taken two or three Copies of the ſaid Depoſitions, he went before Juſtice Godfrey again, on the 28th of September, and ſwore all the Copies he had made; and then attended the Council with his Narrative: That Juſtice Godfrey afterwards told the Deponent, that ſome Great Men thought he had been too zealous in this Buſineſs, while others ſaid he was too remiſs: That he was threatned on both Sides, and went in fear of his Life from the Popiſh Party, That he obſerved he had been dogged ſeveral Days, but ſaid, He ſhould not fear them, if they came fairly.

Of Robinſon.

Mr. Prothonotary Robinſon depoſed, That being alſo in Commiſſion of the Peace, and meeting Juſtice Godfrey at the Quarter-Seſſions for Weſtminſter, the 7th of October laſt, and dining with him the ſame Day at the High Bailiff's, the Deponent told him, he heard he had taken ſeveral Examinations about the Plot; and Godfrey anſwered, He would fain have had others have done it; he thought he ſhould have little Thanks for his Pains. Adding, Upon my Conſcience I ſhall be the firſt Martyr; but he ſaid, he did not fear them, if they came fairly; he ſhould not part with his Life tamely: That the Deponent replied, he would do well to have his Man go with him; but Godfrey ſaid, he did not like it; It was a Clog to a Man.

Objections to Prance's Evidence.

Prance's Evidence.

Miles Prance, a Silverſmith, who worked for the Popiſh Chapel at Somerſet-Houſe, depoſed, That two Prieſts engaged him to be concerned concerned in the Murder of Juſtice Godfrey, telling him it was no Sin, for he was a buſy Man, and would do a great deal of Miſchief: That they ſent to Juſtice Godfrey's Houſe to enquire when he went out, and dogged him ſeveral Days, and particularly on the Saturday Morning he was miſſing, they watched him into St. Clement's Pariſh; and about Eight or Nine in the Evening, Hill gave the Deponent and his Accomplices Notice to be ready, for Juſtice Godfrey was then coming by the Water-gate of Somerſet-Houſe; and Hill immediately went to the Juſtice, and told him there were two Men quarrelling, and deſired him to come down into the Yard and part them, which, with much Perſuaſion, he conſented to; and being come down as far as the Bottom of the Rails, Green twiſted his Handkerchief and put it about Godfrey's Neck, and threw him behind the Rails, where he ſtrangled him.

That about a Quarter of an Hour after, the Deponent Prance obſerving he was not dead, Green wrung his Neck quite round, and punched him with his Knee: That the Deponent ſtood at the Water-gate, while Green ſtrangled the Juſtice, and Berry watched the Stairs: And the Deponent ſaw Hill, Green, Girald, and Kelly, about the Body when he came from the Water-gate; and a little time after Berry came, and they all helped to carry the Deceaſed into Hill's Room, in Dr. Godden's Houſe, where the Corps lay till Monday Night, and then it was removed into Somerſet-Houſe, where Hill ſhewed it to the Deponent with a dark Lanthorn (but he could not deſcribe the Room where it was laid).

That on Tueſday the Corps was ordered to be carried to Hill's Chamber again; but ſome Body being there, they carried it to Sir John Arundel's Lodgings, over-againſt it, where it lay till Wedneſday Night, and then they removed it to the Room where it was firſt laid; and about Twelve on Wedneſday Night, they carried it in a Sedan through the great Gate of the Upper Court of Somerſet-Houſe to Soho, where Hill met them with a Horſe, and ſetting the Body upon the Horſe, Hill rode behind it: And the Deponent Prance meeting Hill the next Morning, Hill told him they had run the Juſtice through with his own Sword, thrown him into a Ditch, and laid his Gloves and Cane on the Bank by him.

Objections to Prance's Evidence.

The Priſoners objected to Prance's Evidence, That he had declared before the King and Council that all this was falſe; whereupon Richardſon, the Keeper of Newgate, was called.

Richardſon depoſed, That having received an Order to bring Prance before the Council, Prance deſired he might firſt ſpeak with the King; and the Deponent carrying him into the King's Cloſet, Prance fell down upon his Knees, and ſaid, He was Innocent, and they were all Innocent; and afterwards made the ſame Declaration before the Council; and the Lords asking him if any Body had been tampering with him, he ſaid, No: But he, the Deponent, was no ſooner returned with his Priſoner to Newgate, but Prance ſaid, all he had ſworn was true; and it was only his fear of loſing his Trade, and being murdered by the Papiſts, that induced him to make that Recantation before the King. And Prance now depoſed again in Court, that all he had ſworn againſt the Priſoners was true.

1678-9. 30 Car. II.

Then the celebrated Bedloe made Oath, That he was ſeveral Times ſolicited about the latter End of September laſt, by Le Faire, Pritchard, Kaines, and other Popiſh Prieſts, to aſſiſt in murdering a Gentleman; and though they did not directly tell him who it was, directed him to inſinuate himſelf into the Acquaintance of Juſtice Godfrey, which he did: That the Day the Juſtice was murdered, they told him, there was a material Man to be put out of the Way that Night, who had all the Information which Tongue and Oates had given in: That they had made ſeveral Attempts on him which had failed; and if he ſhould not be taken out of the Way, and the Papers taken from him, they muſt wait an Age before they could effect their Deſign: That he (the Deponent) promiſed to aſſiſt them; but demanded where the four thouſand Pounds were which had been promiſed as a Reward, and was anſwered, the Lord Bellaſyſe had engaged for that Sum, and Mr. Coleman had Orders to pay it. However, the Deponent did not go to the Place appointed, as he had promiſed; but meeting the ſame Prieſt who would have employed him in the Murder (on Monday Night following, after it was done) in Somerſet-Houſe Cloyſters, the Prieſt reproved the Deponent for not coming to aſſiſt them; but ſaid, if he would help to carry off the Body he ſhould have half the Reward: That then the Deponent was led into a Room, where they ſhewed him the Corps by a ſmall Light; that he knew the Body, and ſaw a Crevat about its Neck like that he (the Witneſs) had on: And the Deponent adviſed them to tie Weights to the Head and Feet, and ſink it in the Thames; but they replied, they would put it upon himſelf: And that the Prieſt adminiſtred the Sacrament to the Deponent twice a Week afterwards, to engage him to conceal both the Plot and the Murder. However, going down to Briſtol ſome little time after, he found himſelf ſo reſtleſs and diſturbed in his Mind, that he could not help making a Diſcovery.

Bedloe's Evidence.

The Surgeons, who viewed Juſtice Godfrey's Body after it was found, depoſed, That he had one Wound that ſtopped at a Rib, and that another went through his Heart; but they did not think thoſe Wounds the occaſion of his Death, becauſe there was no Evacuation of Blood; and his Neck was ſo looſe that they might have ſet his Chin upon either Shoulder.

The Surgeons Evidence.

Brown the Conſtable, who was called on finding the Body, alſo depoſed, That there was no Blood in the Ditch; nor any followed the Sword when it was taken out; that his Breaſt appeared black, and his Neck ſeemed to be broke; and that he had a great deal of Gold and Silver in his Pockets.

Other Witneſſes.

Elizabeth Curtis, Juſtice Godfrey's Maid, depoſed, That the Day before her Maſter was miſſing, Green enquired for him about Nine in the Morning, and was with her Maſter a Quarter of an Hour; that Hill, the Priſoner, was with her Maſter a conſiderable time on the Saturday Morning he was miſſing.

Stringer depoſed, That Berry the Priſoner ſaid he had Orders from the Queen to ſuffer no Strangers, or any Perſons of Quality, to come into Somerſet-Houſe the 12th, 13th, and 14th Days of October (This was to give Credit to a Suggeſtion of the Faction, that the Queen was concerned both in the Plot and the Murder) it being at that time the Corps lay in Somerſet-Houſe, according to the Teſtimony of the Witneſſes.

The Priſoners Witneſſes.

The Priſoners called ſeveral Witneſſes in their Defence, to prove that they were in other Places when the Murder was ſuppoſed to be committed; and that the Body was never repoſited in that Room in Somerſet-Houſe, where the King's Witneſſes had ſworn it was.

Mrs. Mary Tilden depoſed, That Hill had lived in her Uncle Dr. Godden's Family ſeven or eight Years; that he was a truſty Servant, and kept good Hours, always within at Eight o'Clock at Night, being the Time the Family went to Supper; and particularly, that he was not out after Eight that Night Juſtice Godfrey was ſaid to be killed; for he waited on them at Table that Evening, and did not ſtir out afterwards: She ſent the Maid to bar up the Door as ſoon as he came in, as ſhe did every Night.

She alſo depoſed, that it was impoſſible the Body could be in the little Room the other Witneſſes mentioned; for their Lodgings were ſo little, that nothing could be brought in but they that were within muſt ſee it; that the Rooms they mentioned was over-againſt their Dining-Room, and ſhe went into it every Day for ſomething or other, and ſaw none of the Body there.

Broadſtreet, another of Dr. Godden's Family, depoſed the ſame thing.

Dr. Godden's Maid alſo depoſed, She was every Day in the little Room mentioned by the Witneſſes, and ſaw nothing of the Body; nor did ſhe miſs Hill out of the Houſe that Evening Juſtice Godfrey was ſaid to be killed.

Green's Landlord and Landlady depoſed, That he was not out of their Houſe from half an Hour after Seven till after Ten, on the 12th of October in the Evening, when Juſtice Godfrey was ſuppoſed to be murdered: And the Maid of the Houſe depoſed, that Green was within betimes that Evening.

Berry, the Porter of Somerſet-Houſe, produced the Corporal of the Guard who placed the Centinels there on the 16th of October, at Night, when it was pretended Juſtice Godfrey's Body was carried out of the great Gate of that Palace in a Chair; together with the Soldiers who ſtood Centinels at the Gate, who all depoſed, that no Chair paſſed through the Gate that Night: And being asked how they remembered it was the ſame Night, they anſwered, Becauſe the King came from Newmarket; and the Queen went from Somerſet Houſe to White-hall that Evening, being Wedneſday, the 16th of October.

Berry's Maid alſo depoſed, That her Maſter was at the Gate of Somerſet-Houſe that Evening when the Queen went out; that he afterwards went to Bowls, and came home before Day-light ſhut in, and was not abſent an Hour till he went to Bed, which was about 12 o'Clock. 1678-9 31 Car. II

The Lord Chief Juſtice, in ſumming up the Evidence, gave That for the King all the Weight it would bear; but ſlighted the Teſtimony given in behalf of the Priſoners; telling the Jury it anſwered itſelf, or was impoſſible to be true: That Juſtice Godfrey had been murdered, either becauſe he knew ſomething the Prieſts would not have him tell, or they did it in Defiance of Juſtice, and in Terror to all thoſe who dare execute Juſtice upon them. The Chief Juſtice directs the Jury.

The Jury withdrawing a little while, brought all the three Priſoners in GUILTY; for which the Chief Juſtice commended them highly, and ſaid, if it was the laſt Word he had to ſpeak, he ſhould have pronounced them guilty; whereupon the People in the Hall gave a Shout as for a notable Victory, and the next Day Judge Wild pronounced Sentence of Death on them. They are convicted, condemned,

In Purſuance whereof, Lawrence Hill and Robert Green were executed at Tyburn, the Twenty-firſt of the ſame Month of February: Henry Berry, being a Proteſtant, was reprieved ſome few Days longer, in Expectation he would have become an Evidence; but the Faction being diſappointed, he alſo was executed at Tyburn; and they all died profeſſing their Innocence to the laſt, and that they knew nothing, either of the Plot or the Murder. and executed.

Never was more Pains taken, or more Artifice uſed to take away the Lives of innocent Men, under Colour of Law, than to get theſe three poor Men condemned. Remarks on the Trial of Green, &c.

William Bromwel and John Waters, who found the Body of Juſtice Godfrey in the Fields, being brought before a Committee, (of which the celebrated Lord Shaftesbury was Preſident) after their Examination, were ſeverally committed, the former to Newgate, and the latter to the Gate-houſe, and ordered to be fettered and hand-cuffed. Bromwel was kept in the Dungeon three Days and Nights, and then ſent for and examined again; but Shaftesbury finding he could make nothing of him, either by Threats or Promiſes, he was remanded to Newgate, where he lay nine Weeks more, no one being permitted to ſee him; only his Wife made an Intereſt in one of the Lords, and obtained Leave to viſit him twice. The Jury uſed to prove Juſtice Godfrey murdered by the Papiſts

Corral, the Hackney-Coachman, who was charged with carrying the Corps in his Coach to Primroſe-Hill, being examined before the ſame Committee, was offered five hundred Pounds if he would make ſuch a Diſcovery as was intimated to him; and upon proteſting he knew nothing of the Matter, Shaftesbury threatned him he ſhould be hanged, and ordered him to be thrown into the Dungeon in Newgate, where he was almoſt ſtifled with the Cloſeneſs and Naſtineſs of the Place. After ſome time, Lord Shaftesbury ſent for him again, and the Fellow ſtill profeſſing he knew nothing of the Matter, his Lordſhip ordered the 1678-9. 31 Car. II. the Keeper to take and ſtarve him to death: And he was carried back to Newgate, and kept in Irons, in the Condemned Hole, from Thurſday till Sunday Noon, without Meat or Drink, when he was brought before the Committee again, and offered a Reward of 500 l. and to be ſecured from Danger, if he would become an Evidence of Juſtice Godfrey's Murder; but the brave honeſt Man fell down upon his Knees, and ſaid, I know nothing of it, and before I will wrong any Man, I will die immediately! Whereupon the Lord Shaftesbury told him, He ſhould be carried back to Newgate, and rot there: And when he repreſented he had a Wife and Children, the ſame Lord anſwered, Let his Wife and Children ſtarve: And the poor Coachman was kept in the Condemned Hole loaded with heavy Irons, 6 Weeks and 3 Days, and afterwards ſeven Weeks on the Common-Side upon Boards, till another Perſon made Oath, that Juſtice Godfrey's Body was carried out of Town on Horſeback; and then, upon giving good Bail, Corral was diſcharged; but his Legs were ſo galled with his Irons, that he was not able to drive a Coach for two Months after he obtained his Liberty.

Miles Prance the Silverſmith, who was made the principal Evidence of Juſtice Godfrey's Murder, uſed to work for the Queen's Chapel in Somerſet-Houſe, as has been already obſerved; and having about this Time a Lodger named Wren, who was 14 Months in arrear for Rent; this Lodger, upon his Landlord's preſſing him for Money, was obſerved to uſe ſome threatning Words; and a Tankard being loſt about the ſame Time, a further Miſunderſtanding happened between the Landlord and his Lodger; but upon the 20th of December, Prance had his Rent all paid him, and the next Day was taken up by a Warrant from the Council, upon the Information of Wren and ſome others, who pretended to ſuſpect Prance was privy to Juſtice Godfrey's Murder: And his dealing with Popiſh Prieſts, and working for a Popiſh Chapel, gave ſuch a Colour to the Suggeſtion, that Wren put in his Claim for a Share of the 500 l. which the Diſcoverers of Godfrey's Murder were promiſed by Proclamation.

Prance, while he was in Cuſtody, was carried to a little Room in the Lobby of the Houſe of Commons, whither ſeveral People went out of Curioſity to ſee him, and among the reſt Bedloe the Evidence, who having enquired privately which was the Priſoner retired; and Prance, after ſome Hours Attendance on the Commons, was carried to an Eating-Houſe called Heaven, where Bedloe was planted on Purpoſe by Sir William Waller, and upon Prance's coming into the Room, Bedloe cried out, This is one of the Rogues that I ſaw with a Dark-Lanthorn about the Body of Juſtice Godfrey; but he was then in a Peruke: And Prance being afterwards brought before the Lords, Bedloe charged him directly with the Murder, and Wren his Lodger with being out of his Houſe when the Body was miſſing.

But Prance being examined, poſitively denied all, wiſhing Damnation to himſelf if he knew any Thing of the Murder, or if he ever ſaw Bedloe to his Knowledge; whereupon he was ſent to Newgate, thrown into the condemned Hole, and loaden with Irons. The next Day a Perſon came to him, and laying down a Paper on a Form by him retired; and ſoon after, another, having brought him a Candle, left the Room; whereupon Prance looking over the Paper, read the following Minutes, So many Popiſh Lords mentioned by Name——Fifty thouſand Men to be raiſed——Commiſſions given out——Officers appointed—— Ireland acquainted with the Deſign——and an Abſtract of Bedloe's Evidence as to the Murder; concluding, he muſt undoubtedly be privy to the Plot; and adviſing him rather to confeſs than be hanged.

For as it was contrived, that Bedloe ſhould ſecond Oates in his Evidence of the Plot, ſo they propoſed, Prance ſhould ſecond Bedloe in his Evidence of the Murder. Prance conſidering his Circumſtances, and being almoſt dead with Cold and the Naſtineſs of the Place, and in great Pain from his Irons, deſired to be carried to Lord Shaftesbury, where he was under Examination from five to eleven at Night, and threatned with Death, if he did not confeſs the Particulars mentioned in the Paper that was brought him: Whereupon Prance pretended to make a Diſcovery in Part, promiſing to be larger, when he had obtained his Pardon. While he was in this Diſpoſition, a Paper was drawn up and brought to the Priſoner to ſign; and being remanded to Newgate, a Committee of Lords and another of Commoners, went thither to examine him on the 23d of December, and the next Day being brought before the Council, he charged Girald and Kelly, two Iriſh Prieſts, Robert Green, Cuſhion-Man to the Queen's Chapel, Lawrence Hill, Servant to Doctor Godden, Treaſurer of the Chapel, and Henry Berry Porter of Somerſet-Houſe, with the Murder of Juſtice Godfrey.

The King afterwards appointed the Duke of Monmouth, the Earl of Offory, and Mr. Vice-Chamberlain, to go with Prance to Somerſet-Houſe, to ſee the Rooms where he pretended Godfrey was laid, and Prance went to ſome of the Rooms very readily, but was at ſuch a Loſs as to the principal Room, and ſome other Particulars, that when the Duke of Monmouth asked the Lord Offory what he thought of it, he anſwered, It was all a Cheat: However Prance, being brought before the Council again, and confronted with the Priſoners, Green, Berry, and Hill, confidently maintained the Charge againſt them, and they as poſitively denied it: After which Prance was remanded to Newgate, where he lay with his Irons ſometimes on and ſometimes off, according as he was found tractable or not, and was threatned by the Members of both Houſes ſeverely, to make him come up to Bedloe's Evidence. In the mean Time the Man was not ſo abandoned, but he had ſtill ſome Qualms of Conſcience; and deſiring to be brought before the King, he did, in his Majeſty's Preſence, declare, That the Men he had ſworn againſt were all Innocent, and what he had teſtified againſt them was falſe:

Upon

1678-9. 31 Car. II. Upon which the King ſaid, Is it ſo upon your Salvation? And he replied, Upon my Salvation the whole Accuſation is falſe; and being immediately carried before the Council, he fell upon his Knees, and made the ſame Declaration there, and that he never ſaw Bedloe before he was taken up; that he knew nothing of the Plot or the Murder, and could not reſt for the Story he had told; whereupon ſome of the Council threatned him with the Rack. The next Day he was brought before the Council again, and perſiſted he was innocent, declaring, That he had no other Hints to frame the Story by, he had told them, than the aboveſaid Paper of Inſtructions, which was laid by him in the Condemned Hole; and, unleſs at the Time Richardſon mentioned at the Trial of theſe Men, Prance ſtood firm and immovable in his Denial againſt all Terrors and Temptations, from the 29th of December to the eleventh of January; whereupon he was loaden with Irons again, and thrown into a cold naſty Room, where he lay in ſuch Torment, that he was perpetually roaring and groaning till he became delirious, and then he kept crying out, Not guilty, not guilty! No Murder, no Murder! and when People were ſcandalized at this Treatment, the Managers gave out that he was mad. The Keepers, Mr. Echard aſſures us, were under the Direction of an ambulatory Committee, who ordered them when, and in what Degree, to ſqueeze, to pinch, to eaſe or ſhackle, to comfort or torment their Priſoners; and Prance, being unable to hold out as Corral had done, and finding his Life in Danger, promiſed to become an Evidence again; whereupon his Irons were knocked off, and he was removed from that cold diſmal Place he was in, to a good Lodging, and had Variety of the beſt Meat and Drink provided him, allowed Pen, Ink, and Paper, and the Aſſiſtance of a Friend, to finiſh his Narrative. See Echard's Hiſtory of England, p. 960, to 962.

This ſame Prance alſo in the next Reign, made a voluntary Confeſſion in writing, declaring all the material Parts of his Narrative, Depoſitions, and Evidence, at the Trials of theſe Men, to be falſe, and the Effects of his Cowardice, having been threatned with Death, and tortured to make him accuſe them; which is a full Anſwer to that Queſtion of the Continuers of Rapin, How came it to paſs, that none of the Witneſſes againſt Green, Berry and Hill, retracted their Evidence in the next Reign, when they might have done it with Impunity, if it had been falſe? For here we find Prance did retract his Evidence; Oates, another of the Witneſſes, was proved perjured by forty Witneſſes on two Trials; and Bedloe, the other material Evidence, was dead, whoſe Teſtimony however was proved to be falſe at the Trials of Oates.

Beſides, for what End ſhould the Papiſts murder Juſtice Godfrey? Biſhop Burnet tells us, He behaved himſelf in a friendly Manner to the Roman Catholicks, and was in good Terms with them; and though he had 1678-9. 31 Car. II. ſeen Oates's Narrative ſworn, which he could not avoid, Oates ſwears in this Trial, he made ſeveral Copies of it, which were likewiſe ſworn and communicated to the Government, and to his Friends; ſo that the Juſtice was Maſter of no Secrets, but what many more were acquainted with, before this Accident happened: It is not conceivable therefore for what End they ſhould deſtroy him. Indeed the Nation appears to have been in a great Ferment, at the pretended Diſcovery of a Popiſh Plot, and ſo diſtracted with the Fears of a general Maſſacre, that they would not give themſelves Leave to examine the Improbability of what the King's Witneſſes teſtified; nay, we find that, though the Priſoner's, every one of them, brought good ſubſtantial Witneſſes to prove they were in other Places when the Fact was committed, their Teſtimony was not regarded, but they were Browbeaten, played upon, and ſome of them laughed out of Court. The Managers of the pretended Plot, had ſo contrived the Matter, that the Corps of Juſtice Godfrey was carried in great Funeral Pomp from Bridewell through the principal Streets of the City, to be buried at St. Martin's in the Fields, attended by three or fourſcore Reverend Clergymen, and ſeveral hundreds of eminent Citizens; and theſe were all looked upon as ſo many Witneſſes of his being murdered by the Papiſts, though they knew no more of the Matter than other People: And it was unſafe, after this, for any one to queſtion whether the Juſtice was murdered by the Papiſts, even before any Witneſſes appeared to ſupport the improbable Tale.

This ſhould make Judges and Counſel extreamly cautious how they are biaſſed by popular Clamour, or deceived by the Arts of deſigning Stateſmen, to run down the unhappy Priſoner. The Chief Juſtice who tried them, and ſome of the King's Counſel, lived to ſee they were egregiouſly miſtaken; and that the principal Witneſſes againſt theſe three Men were People of profligate Characters, and evidently perjured; and they could not but reflect with Horrour, how much they had laboured to pervert the Evidence, and influence the Jury to find them guilty.

And here we have an Inſtance of an Engliſh Inquiſition, erected by our great Whig Patriots, who, in this Land of Liberty, threw theſe poor People into loathſome Dungeons, before they were convicted of any Crime, and tortured them to death almoſt, to compel them to accuſe themſelves and other innocent Men: So little do theſe pretended Defenders of our Liberties regard them, when they have a Turn to ſerve! How much ſoever they may exclaim againſt Tyranny or arbitrary Power when they are out of Place, they themſelves are the crueleſt Tyrants and Oppreſſors when ever they are poſſeſſed of Power, or can work up the People into a Humour, to ſecond their Ambition and Revenge.

The

1678-9. 31 Car. II. Atkins's Trial.

The Trial of SAMUEL ATKINS, Gent. for Murder, at the King's-Bench Bar, the 8th, 10th, and 11th of February, 1678-9. 31 Car. II.

Charged as Acceſſary to Godfrey's Murder.

THE Indictment charges the ſaid Samuel Atkins with commanding, counſelling, and abetting Robert Green, Henry Berry, Lawrence Hill, —— Girald, Dominick Kelly, and Philibert Vernatt, to murder Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey, on the 12th of October, in the 30 Car. II. and with harbouring, comforting, and maintaining the ſaid Murderers, after the Fact was committed.

His Arraignment.

The Priſoner being arraigned the 5th of February, pleaded Not guilty, and deſired that all the Examinations that had been taken againſt him, might be brought into Court at his Trial: He deſired alſo that he might have a ſpeedy Trial, for he had already lain ſixteen Weeks in Priſon. To which the Lord Chief Juſtice anſwered, He ſhould be tried on Monday the 10th of February, after Green and the reſt of the Principals were tried, if the Court had Time; but he was not tried till the 11th of February.

The Priſoner, having been indicted as Principal in the ſaid Murder, was arraigned alſo as ſuch; but diſcharged of that Indictment for want of Evidence.

The Evidence,

The Witneſſes produced againſt the Priſoner at his Trial the 11th of February, to prove him Acceſſary to the Murder, were Charles Atkins, Bedloe, and Thomas Walton.

of Charles Atkins.

Charles Atkins depoſed, That Samuel Atkins, the Priſoner, told him, Sir Edmundbury Godfrey had very much injured his Maſter (Mr. Pepys, Secretary of the Admiralty) and asked him (Charles Atkins, the Witneſs) if he knew a Man that would be ſtout and ſecret; and asked particularly after one Child, bidding the Witneſs ſend him to his Maſter: That accordingly the Witneſs met Child, and ſent him to Mr. Pepys; that he afterwards met Child again, who ſaid he had been there; and Child propoſed to the Witneſs, Charles Atkins, to join with him in murdering a Man.

Bedloe's Evidence.

Bedloe depoſed, That Le Faire the Jeſuit told him, that ſuch a one was murdered, and they intended to diſpoſe of the Body; and that one Atkins was to aſſiſt in carrying it off: That the Deponent was at a Room in Somerſet-Houſe afterwards, where the Corps of Sir E. Godfrey lay, and ſeeing a young Man (with ſome other Company) there, he asked him, if his Name was Atkins; that the young Man anſwered, it was, and he was Mr. Pepys's Clerk; but he could not ſay the Priſoner at the Bar was the Man: There was no other Light but what they received from a Dark-Lanthorn.

Walton's Evidence.

Walton, the Schoolmaſter, depoſed, That the Priſoner, Samuel Atkins, promiſed to meet him at a Publick Houſe the 12th of October (the Day Godfrey was murdered) but did not come: And the Priſoner demanding of this Witneſs, if he did not know him to be a Proteſtant? He anſwered, he knew him to be a zealous Proteſtant.

However, the Attorney General called a Boy, to prove he had ſeen the Priſoner at Maſs; but the Boy declared he did not know him.

The Priſoner's Defence.

The Priſoner, being ordered to make his Defence, ſolemnly proteſted his Innocence; and ſaid, the Witneſs Charles Atkins, who accuſed him, had been ſubſiſted by him, and kept from periſhing; and that he never had any ſuch Diſcourſe with him as had been ſworn.

The Lord Chief Juſtice anſwered, Whether he had or had not, was not material; and acknowledged, that the Evidence Charles Atkins had given, was nothing to the Purpoſe.

His Witneſſes.

Then the Priſoner called Captain Vittles, Commander of one of the King's Yatchs, who depoſed, That the Priſoner was on board his Yatch the 14th of October, the Evening he was ſaid to be in the Room at Somerſet-Houſe with Godfrey's Corps, and that he ſtaid there till near Midnight; which was alſo confirmed by the Boat's Crew that brought him to London that Night.

He is acquitted.

Whereupon the Jury acquitted the Priſoner, without going from the Bar.

Remarks on Atkins's Trial.

This is a remarkable Inſtance of the Prevalence of the Faction at this Time: Here was an honeſt Gentleman charged with the Murder of Godfrey, committed to Newgate, and laid in Irons for ſixteen Weeks, upon the moſt trifling Suggeſtions; the principal Deſigns of which ſeems to be, to make him accuſe his Maſter, Mr. Secretary Pepys: But he was a Perſon of more Honour, and being able to prove himſelf in other Places, both at the Time of Godfrey's Death, and the Time it was pretended his Corps lay at Somerſet-Houſe, he was acquitted of courſe, of being either Principal or Acceſſary to Godfrey's Death. His Name-ſake Charles Atkins, appears to have been a very forward Witneſs; though he had been relieved by the Priſoner in his Neceſſity, yet, in Hopes of ſharing the great Rewards that were promiſed at this Time to the Diſcoverers of Godfrey's Murder, he had the Baſeneſs and Ingratitude to accuſe his beſt Friend, and endeavour by his deteſted Perjuries, to deprive him of his Life: And the Whigs, who had the Management of the Matter, and whoſe Buſineſs it was to enflame the People, we find, laid hold of the moſt remote and trifling Circumſtances, to confirm the Truth of the pretended Plot; but they ſeemed a little aſhamed at this Trial of accuſing and proſecuting an innocent 1678-9. 31 Car. II. Man ſo inhumanly, and endeavouring to take away his Life, when they had ſo very little Colour for it.

Mr. Pepys, Secretary to the Admiralty, to whom the Priſoner was Clerk, was accuſed alſo as a Conſpirator by the profligate Witneſſes of the pretended Popiſh Plot, and thereupon committed to the Tower by the Houſe of Commons; but he was admitted to Bail the next Month, and at length diſcharged without being brought to a Trial: And this was the Caſe of many more, whom the Witneſſes accuſed for no other Reaſon, but in Expectation of raiſing their Fortunes, by ſwearing Men out of their Lives. It muſt remain a laſting Reproach to this Nation, that ſo many were deſtroyed upon the Teſtimony of ſuch Wretches, as no Man ſcarce would have credited in the moſt trifling Concerns. 1678-9. 31 Car. II.

1678. 30 Car. II. The Trial of CHARLES Lord CONWALLIS, for Murder, before the Lord High Steward, and a certain Number of Peers commiſſioned to try him, in Weſtminſter-Hall, 1678. 30 Car. II. 1678. 30 Car. II.

The Trial of Lord Conwallis.

The Indictment.

AN Indictment was found by the Grand Jury of Middleſex, ſetting forth, That Charles Lord Conwallis (together with Charles Gerrard and Edward Bourne) on the 18th of May, then laſt paſt, did felonioufly, and of his Malice afore-thought, make an Aſſault on the Perſon of Robert Clerk, in his Majeſty's Palace of Whitehall, within the ſaid County; and that the ſaid Gerrard took up the ſaid Clerk in his Arms, flung him down and broke his Neck, of which the ſaid Clerk inſtantly died: And that the ſaid Lord Conwallis was preſent, aiding and abetting the ſaid Charles Gerrard to commit the ſaid Murder, and ſo was a Principal in it.

The Evidence.

A Soldier, who ſtood Centinel at the Bottom of the Stairs that led from the Gallery in Whitehall into the Park, that Night the Fact was committed, depoſed, That on the 18th of May, between one and two in the Morning, the Lord Conwallis and Mr. Gerrard, with three Footmen behind them, came from the ſaid Gallery down the Stairs into the Park, and demanding of him the Hour, he told them; but they being diſordered in Drink, with many Oaths replied, he lyed, went by him into the Park, and ſwore they would kill ſomebody before they went away: That about an Hour after they returned to the Stairs, and he (the Centinel) demanding, Who comes there? They anſwered him in a very obſcene rude Language, threatning to kill him, but he kept them off: Then one of them gave away his Sword, and ſwore he would kiſs him, which he (the Centinel) refuſing, they threatned him again, and ſeemed to contend which of them ſhould run him through: At length, going up the Stairs, there came two young Lads to the Centinel, and one of them deſired him (the Deponent) to call him early the next Morning, which my Lord Conwallis and Gerrard hearing as they ſtood on the Top of the Stairs, they bid the Deponent ſhoot the Boy, and they would bear him out; and, on his refuſing, one of them ſwore he would kick the Boy's Arſe to Hell: To which the Boy made ſome Reply, wherein the Word Arſe was repeated: Whereupon one of the Gentlemen in a Rage run down the Stairs; and the Boy who ſpoke the Words getting away, the Gentleman took the other Boy up in his Arms, he crying out all the while, O my Lord it was not I! indeed my Lord it was not I! and either by throwing him down on the Ground, or by a Blow, killed the Boy out-right.

The Boy who ſpoke the Words, confirmed the Centinel's Evidence; but depoſed, That he only ſaid, Why kick my Arſe to Hell? However the Gentlemen miſtook his Words.

Two of the Lord Conwallis's Footmen, who had been indicted for the ſame Murder and acquitted by the Court of King's-Bench, were admitted to give Evidence in this Caſe, and depoſed, That it was Mr. Gerrard that committed the Fact; and that my Lord Conwallis remained at the Top of the Stairs, and ran away as ſoon as the Fact was done, for Fear of being knocked on the Head by the Soldiers.

The Counſel's Obſervations on the Evidence.

Mr. Sollicitor General obſerved upon the Evidence, That it appeared, both my Lord and Mr. Gerrard had a murderous Intention, both of them ſwearing they would kill the Centinel: And as to the Murder that was actually committed, his Lordſhip was preſent at it, and had not given any Evidence that he diſapproved of it, or endeavoured to prevent it; all which amounted to as much in Law, as if he had ſtruck the Blow.

Mr. Serjeant Maynard alſo obſerved, That his Lordſhip's being at ſome Diſtance would not excuſe him, if he was engaged with Gerrard in an unlawful Deſign; and cited the Lord Dacres's Caſe, who went into a Park with other Company to ſteal Deer; and though my Lord and ſome of them fled on the Keeper's Coming, yet the Keeper being killed afterwards, when his Lordſhip was without the Pales, and a Mile diſtant from the Place, yet he was adjudged guilty of Murder.

Lord Conwallis's Defence.

The Lord Conwallis ſaid in his Defence, that he was indeed in Company with Mr. Gerrard that Night the Fact was committed, but that he had no ill Intention; and obſerved, that there was but one Witneſs who depoſed posed, that both of them said they would kill the Centinel: That he was not conscious that he had any Hand in this Murder, and therefore had not withdrawn himself; but trusting to his Innocence, surrendered to the Coroner the next Day, and now submitted to the Judgment of his Peers.

1678. 30 Car. II.

The Prisoner being taken from the Bar, and the Lords withdrawn to consider of their Evidence, the Lords, about two Hours after, returned to their Seats, and desired to propose a Point of Law to the Judges: To which the Lord Steward answered, That the later and better Opinion was, That such Questions ought to be put in the Presence of the Prisoner, that he might know whether the Case was justly stated: Whereupon the Prisoner was brought to the Bar again, and the following Question proposed to the Judges, (viz.) Whether those who were present, and contributed to any Disorders, whereupon a Manslaughter ensues, are as guilty of Manslaughter as he who is actually the Manslayer; as it is in Murder; where all, who are guilty of the Trespass which occasions it, are deemed equally guilty with him who commits the Fact?

A Point of Law referred.

The Judges answered, The Case was the same in Manslaughter, as in Murder.

The Lords withdrawing again, and returning into the Court after a short Recess, and the Lord High Steward demanding of them, in their Order, beginning with the youngest Baron, Whether the Lord Cornwallis was Guilty? Six of them declared him guilty of Manslaughter; but a great Majority acquitted him; whereupon his Lordship was discharged: And the Lord High Steward breaking his Staff, the Court was dissolved.

1678. 30 Car. II.

The Prisoner is acquitted.

Remarks.

The Lords, no doubt, gave their Verdict according to their Judgment: They believed, I presume, that the Deceased was killed by Accident; but had this Noble Peer been tried by a Jury of Commoners, possibly he had not come off so well: For here were two Gentlemen declaring they would kill the Centinel, or some Body, and actually attacked the Soldier, who deposed, that it was with Difficulty he kept them off: Then, without any Provocation, one of them takes up an innocent Boy in his Arms, and throws him down with that Force that he killed him upon the Spot. What Denomination must we give this Fact? And whether it was my Lord of Gerrard that did it, only appears by the Evidence of his Lordship's Footmen, who were indicted as Accessaries to the same Murder; and their Evidence was so well received, that it seems to have turned the Scale.

Upon the whole, as the Case stands, a Commoner must be mad who does not avoid all Occasions of contending with a Noble Peer, since the least ill Language is held a sufficient Provocation to take away his Life.

Lewis's Trial.

The Trial of DAVID LEWIS, Clerk, for High-Treason, at Monmouth Assizes, the 28th and 29th of March, 1679. 31 Car. II.

1679. 31 Car. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the Prisoner with High-Treason, upon the Statute of the 27 Eliz. cap. 2. for that he went beyond Sea, received Orders from the Church of Rome; then returned back to England, and remained here forty Days, and upwards; which is made High Treason by that Statute.

The Evidence.

Three or four Witnesses deposed, That the Prisoner read Mass several times, took Confessions, gave Absolutions, Married and Christened: And another, that she heard him preach both in English and Welch; and that there were Altars, Chalices, and Crucifixes in the Place where he officiated.

The Prisoner's Defence.

The Prisoner in his Defence said, he was indicted indeed on the 27th of Eliz. for that, being a natural-born Subject, he was ordained beyond Sea, by an Authority derived from the See of Rome, and returned back, and remained in England; but he conceived none of the Witnesses proved the Facts laid in the Indictment.

To which Mr. Justice Atkyns replied, It was not expected they should bring Persons to prove they saw him ordained; it was enough they had given Evidence that he had exercised the Function of a Priest.

The Prisoner said, they could not prove he read Mass, unless they first proved he was ordained by an Authority derived from the See of Rome; for, if there was no Ordination, there could be no Priest; and if no Priest, then no Mass: And as for Confessions and Absolutions, these were performed by the Ministers of the Church of England; and many of the Laity baptized in Cases of Necessity, though they were no Priests: And he apprehended that barely the reading Mass was not Treason.

Mr. Justice Atkyns told the Prisoner, That he who heard Mass, indeed, only forfeited 100 Marks by the 23d of Eliz. but he that used to read it, was guilty of High-Treason.

Then the Prisoner objected, that the Witnesses swore against him out of Malice; and particularly, that one of them, not being able to prevail against him in a Suit in Chancery, vowed, She would never leave prosecuting him, till she had washed her Hands in his Heart's Blood, and made Pottage of his Head: And the Prisoner produced four Witnesses, who attested the Truth of it. He also produced others, who deposed, That Price, one of 1679. 31 Car. II. of the principal Witneſſes againſt him, ſaid that very Morning his Trial came on, that he doubted if the Priſoner was the Man.

He is convicted, and condemned. The Jury being withdrawn, after a ſhort Receſs, brought in their Verdict, that the Priſoner was GUILTY; and Sentence paſſed on him as a Traitor.

He was reprieved from Time to Time, for the Space of five Months; but at length was executed at Uske in Monmouthſhire, on the 27th of Auguſt, 1679.

His Speech. At the Place of Execution Mr. Lewis made a Speech to the People, wherein he ſaid, he thanked God that he did not ſuffer as a Thief or a Murderer, but as a Chriſtian, and therefore was not aſhamed. How forward he had been to relieve the Poor, his impartial Neighbours could inform them; and yet, during his nine Months Impriſonment, ſeveral foul Aſperſions had been caſt upon him by ſome of thoſe to whom he had been charitably ſerviceable for thirty Years: He prayed God to forgive them, and hoped, notwithſtanding thoſe Calumnies, he ſhould retain the Character of an honeſt Man amongſt Gentlemen of Worth, with whom he had lived and converſed.

He declared, by all that was ſacred in Heaven and Earth, that he knew nothing of any Plot; nor could the Witneſſes of the Plot, Oates, Bedloe, Dugdale, or Prance, lay any thing to his Charge, though they ſifted him thoroughly laſt May, while he was confined in Newgate.

He was never taught the Doctrine of King-killing; and from his Soul he deteſted and abhorred it, as directly oppoſite to the Principles of the Chriſtian Religion, which he profeſſed: That it was the Reſolution of the Council of Conſtance, That it was damnable for any Subject, or private Perſon, to murder or conſpire againſt their lawful Prince, though he were a Turk, an Apoſtate, a Perſecutor, or a Tyrant. Clement, indeed, murdered Henry III. and Ravilliac, Henry IV. of France; but they were puniſhed for it with the utmoſt Severity, and ſtigmatized by all Roman Catholicks as Miſcreants and Villains; and the whole Body of Roman Catholicks ought not to be cenſured for the Villainy of a few Deſperadoes. For his Part, he always loved and honoured the King, and prayed for his Proſperity; and whatever Plot there might have been, he prayed it might be brought to Light, and the Actors brought to condign Puniſhment. 1679. 31 Car. II.

He confeſſed he was a Roman Catholick Prieſt, of the Society of Jeſus; and bleſſed the Hour in which he was ordained, ſo firmly was he fixed in his Religion. He ſaid, that if Life, and all the good Things of this World, were offered him to renounce it, they could not move him. He was condemned, he obſerved, for reading Maſs, hearing Confeſſions, adminiſtring the Sacraments, anointing the Sick, Chriſtening, Marrying, and Preaching: As for reading Maſs, it was the old accuſtomed and laudable Liturgy of the Holy Church; and all the other Acts were Acts of Religion, tending to the Worſhip of God; and as he died for theſe, he died for Religion. That he was told at his Examination in London, If he would diſcover the Plot, and conform, he might ſave his Life; but he knew nothing of the Plot, and his Conſcience would not ſuffer him to conform: He muſt die therefore for Conſcience and Religion; and as he died upon ſuch a good Account, he laid down his Life with Alacrity.

He forgave all his Enemies, eſpecially the principal Proſecutor, who had long thirſted after his Blood; and wiſhed his Soul ſo well, that, were it in his Power, he would ſeat him a Seraphin in Heaven; praying for them in the Language of St. Stephen, Lord, lay not this Sin to their Charge: And in the Words of our Saviour, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.

He ſaid, It was with Reaſon he loved them; for though they prejudiced their own Souls, they had conferred on him the moſt ineſtimable Benefits: He wiſhed them therefore a good Eternity; adding, O Eternity, Eternity! How momentaneous are the Glories, Riches, and Pleaſures of this World! And how deſirable art thou, endleſs Eternity!

Remarks. I ſhall make no other Obſervations on this Trial, but that this Gentleman was condemned and executed, purely for being a Popiſh Prieſt, without any manner of Evidence of his being in any Plot againſt the Government; as was the Caſe of ſome others at this Time. The Faction would not ſuffer a Popiſh Prieſt to live; and ſeemed to threaten the King, unleſs he ſuffered the Laws to be put in Execution againſt them with the utmoſt Rigour; though it is generally agreed, thoſe Laws were only made in Terrorem.

Directions to the Grand Jury.

THE Court directed the Grand Jury to find the Bill againſt Mr. Reading, if they had but probable Evidence of the Charge; becauſe their Preſentment, they ſaid, was not a Conviction, but in the Nature of an Accuſation, in order to bring the Priſoner to a fair Trial. They were inſtructed alſo not to find it Treaſon, but Miſdemeanor only; and the Jury having found the Bill, in Purſuance of their Directions, eleven of the twelve Judges aſſembled in the Court of King's-Bench, to try him on the 24th of April, when the Priſoner was brought to the Bar, and arraigned.

The Indictment.

The Indictment ſet forth, That, whereas Edward Coleman, William Ireland, John Grove, and other Traitors, had conſpired the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Eſtabliſhed Religion and Government, for which they had been attainted and executed; and whereas William Earl of Powis, William Lord Viſcount Stafford, with three other Noblemen, and Sir Henry Tichburn, were accuſed of the ſaid Treaſons, and committed to the Tower, and thereof impeached by the Houſe of Commons; The Priſoner, Nathanael Reading, well knowing the Premiſſes, and being deviliſhly affected againſt the King, his Supreme and Natural Lord, and deviſing to ſubvert the Government and the Religion eſtabliſhed, and to obſtruct and ſtifle the Diſcovery of the aforeſaid Treaſons, and retard the Proſecution of the ſaid Lords in the Tower, &c. did ſolicit and ſuborn William Bedloe to leſſen and ſtifle his Evidence againſt the ſaid Lords, and to give ſuch Evidence as he, the ſaid Nathanael Reading, ſhould direct; and to that Purpoſe did corruptly give to the ſaid William Bedloe fifty-ſix Guineas, and promiſed him more, to the Hindrance and Suppreſſion of Juſtice, in Contempt of the Laws, &c.

No peremptory Challenge in a Miſdemeanor.

The Priſoner pleading Not guilty, and the Jurors being called over, the Lord Chief Juſtice North directed that Sir John Cutler ſhould be Foreman of the Jury: Whereupon the Priſoner challenged him; but was told by the Court that he could challenge none without Cauſe, being indicted only for a Miſdemeanor.

Reading complains of Hardſhips.

The Priſoner replied, The Indictment contained expreſs Treaſon; and complained that he had no Counſel or Friend, or ſo much as his Wife ſuffered to come near him, though he had been very ill, occaſioned by the barbarous and illegal Uſage he had undergone; and believed he was the firſt Engliſhman, in ſuch Circumſtances, that was ever ſo uſed. He apprehended, that the Indictment charged him with greater Treaſons than Coleman and the reſt had been executed for, and therefore deſired the Judgment of the Court, If he might not be allowed a peremptory Challenge?

The Proſecutor calls the Crime what he pleaſes.

The Lord Chief Juſtice North anſwered, If the Fact laid in the Indictment had been laid as an Overt-Act for the evidencing the Imagination of his Heart in compaſſing the King's Death, and the Deſtruction of the Realm, there it had been an Indictment of Treaſon; but ſince there was no Treaſon formally laid, nor the Word proditorie, which was neceſſary in all Indictments of Treaſon, it was only a Miſdemeanor he was charged with, which was a great Favour; therefore he muſt ſhew his Cauſe of Challenge.

The Priſoner inſiſts, he was charged with Treaſon.

The Priſoner deſired to know, If, after this Favour ſhewed him, he might not be indicted for High-Treaſon? And obſerved, that there did not want any one Circumſtance of the Formality of an Indictment for High-Treaſon but the Word proditorie; for it was ſaid, that Coleman and others did conſpire the Death of the King; that the Lords in the Tower were accuſed of the ſame Treaſon; and that he, the Priſoner, knowing the Premiſſes, did falſely, maliciouſly, and adviſedly ſuborn the Witneſſes againſt them, &c. which muſt amount to Treaſon in him, or Miſpriſion of Treaſon at leaſt.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, There was a Difference between the Knowledge of a Treaſon that was ſecret, and the concealing it; and the Knowledge of a Treaſon that was diſcovered: That though the concealing of a ſecret Treaſon, and endeavouring to ſtifle the Evidence was Miſpriſion of Treaſon, yet the knowing of a Treaſon that all the World knew was not Miſpriſion of Treaſon; nor was it laid as a Crime here, but only as an Aggravation of the Crime. And as for his Demand, Whether he might not afterwards be tried for Treaſon, they were not to ſatisfy him; but he was to anſwer to the Indictment as it was. An Indictment of Treaſon or Miſpriſion of Treaſon, was not to be laid ſo as that the Crime ſhould be collected out of the Matter of Fact only, but it muſt be formally laid.

The Court anſwer, Treaſon muſt be formally laid.

The Priſoner replies, he was charged with formal Treaſon.

The Priſoner then deſired to know, If being deviliſhly affected to the King, intending to levy War, change the Government, and alter Religion, was not Treaſon?

1679. 31 Car. II.

The Court answered, They should resolve none of his Questions; but said, that no Judgment of Treason could be given against him upon this Indictment; therefore if he had any particular Cause to challenge Sir John Cutler, he must shew it.

His Challenges over-ruled.

The Prisoner replied, There was an uncommon Intimacy between Bedloe, his Accuser, and Sir John Cutler; but he was told, unless he could shew that Sir John had given his Opinion that he was guilty, this was no Cause of Challenge: And Sir John Cutler, and the rest of the Jury, were sworn.

Then the King's Counsel opened the Indictment, and were about to prove that Coleman, &c. had been attainted and executed; and that the Lords in the Tower were imprisoned and impeached as Conspirators in the Popish Plot: But Mr. Reading admitted these Facts, and said he believed there never was a greater Plot laid in Hell than this; he abhorred the Thoughts of it, and had encouraged the Discovery of it.

Bedloe's Evidence against him.

Then the King's Witnesses were called: And first, Bedloe deposed, That Mr. Reading had been very just to him in his private Concerns; and as to the Plot, had, in all publick Companies, pressed him to make a full Discovery of it; and declared, that those who had been executed for it suffered justly; and that, indeed, Mr. Reading never endeavoured to stifle the whole Plot, only in private desired him to be cautious as to some particular People he solicited for, not but that he believed them guilty as well as the rest; but desired he (Bedloe) would not be so hot against them. And after he had made him easy, as he termed it (given this Witness a Bribe) desired he would make Dugdale, the other Witness, easy too; telling the Deponent, he might gain his Point with the King and Parliament if some suffered, he need not run at the whole Herd; and said, he would advise him how far he should proceed, and if he could fix any thing for them, he should be sure to be well gratified: That the Persons he solicited most for, were, the Lords Powis, Petre and Stafford, Sir Henry Tichburn, Mr. Roper, Mr. Caryll and one Corker a Jesuit; and he made him easy too as to Whitebread and Fenwicke at their Trial, for he (the Deponent) had enough against them then; but he would not break off the Treaty between Mr. Reading and him, concerning the Lords in the Tower (as he must have done, if he had given all his Evidence against Whitebread and and Fenwicke then), because he knew that was of greater Consequence than two old Priests.

Confesses he suppressed Part of his Evidence.

That a Day or two after the Lord Danby was sent for by the Black-Rod, Mr. Reading told the Deponent he had been with the Lords in the Tower, and they did think he was capable of serving them; and that they desired the Deponent would give an Account what he could say against them, that they might view and correct it: That on Saturday the 29th of March, Mr. Reading came to the Deponent's Lodgings, as he expected he would, and he (the Deponent) had concealed Mr. Speke and his own Man there, ready against he came: That Mr. Reading said when he came into the Room, Is there no Body here that can over-hear us? And the Deponent answered, No; and asked Mr. Reading what the Lords in the Tower said, for he was to give in his Answer, to the Secret Committee that Night; but Mr. Reading desired him to put it off till Wednesday, and he would bring him their final Answer; and the Deponent agreed to put it off till Monday: Whereupon Mr. Reading said, though he had not yet a full Answer, as to what the Lords would do, he (the Deponent) might expect a noble Reward; and he had Orders to draw blank Deeds to be signed in ten Days after their Discharge, for Sums and Estates which they would settle on the Deponent; and he should have a speedy Supply of Money, as soon as it could be got in: That the Lord Stafford was cutting down Wood, and selling it, and when he had raised the Money the Deponent should have it; but at present his Lordship had not Money to defray the Charges of his Family. In the mean time Mr. Reading said he had Orders to supply the Deponent's present Occasions; and he acknowledged he had had a great deal of Money from him, the Prisoner giving him Gold sometimes when he did not ask it: But when the Deponent objected that he had only a verbal Promise from the Lords, which he could not rely on, Mr. Reading said he would engage his Soul and Life to make it good, though they did not think fit to give any thing under their Hands yet.

That Mr. Reading desiring to see the Copies of what the Deponent had accused the Queen and Lords, that he might carry those Papers to the Lords and have their Answer; the Deponent pretended they were at his Mother's Lodgings, and went with him thither, to give the other Witnesses an Opportunity to come out of the Places where they lay concealed: That not meeting with the Papers, and returning to his Lodgings, they found Mr Speke and the Deponent's Man there; and having desired Mr. Speke to go before them to Westminster, Mr. Reading and the Deponent fell to writing out what they had agreed upon; and when he inserted any Words that were home against the Lords, Mr. Reading would tell him the Law, and what would reach them, and then alter it: That on Monday following Mr. Reading brought him a Paper of his own Hand-writing, different from the Words they had set down in the Paper on Saturday, and which took off the whole Charge of Treason: That the Paper Mr. Reading brought was ten times shorter than the former, and that was forty times shorter than that the Deponent had given in to the Secret Committee.

The Court demanding, if he agreed to swear what Mr. Reading should direct him? Bedloe answered, It was to what he and the Lords should direct: The Prisoner was to give him an Account what the Lords would have him say; and told him that the Lords had corrected the Paper.

Then the Paper being produced, Mr. Reading acknowledged it to be his Hand; and that he delivered it to Mr. Bedloe before Mr. Speke, in the Painted Chamber.

The

1679. 31 Car. II.

The Court demanding, If he had not the firſt Paper? Bedloe anſwered, No; Mr. Reading carried it to the Lords, and he never had it again: This was the Paper corrected by the Lords, which he was to give to the Secret Committee.

Then the Paper was read, which conſiſted chiefly of Hear-ſays, and ſome other Particulars, that would not have affected the Lives of the Popiſh Lords; and thereupon Chief Juſtice North told the Priſoner, They ſhould expect a good Account from him, what he had to do to preſcribe the Evidence to the King's Witneſs in writing.

Speke's Evidence. Mr. Speke depoſed, That Mr. Bedloe daily acquainted him with the Treaties between him and Mr. Reading; and that he (the Deponent) came to Bedloe's Lodgings, between five and ſix in the Morning, on the 29th of March, where he and Bedloe's Man being concealed, Mr. Reading came in about ſeven, and having firſt asked Mr. Bedloe, If any body could over-hear them? He anſwered, No; and then fell upon the Diſcourſe concerning what Money and Eſtates the Lords in the Tower had promiſed to ſettle on Bedloe, for his Service in ſhortening and contracting his Evidence againſt them, and taking off the Charge of High-Treaſon (according to Bedloe's Depoſition); and that a Writing was drawn up in purſuance of what they had agreed on, for the Lords in the Tower to ſee and correct; after which it was to be delivered to the Secret Committee: And that the Deponent ſaw Mr. Reading deliver that Paper to Bedloe in the Painted-Chamber Weſtminſter; and Bedloe, immediately after Reading was gone, delivered the Paper to the Deponent, which he carried directly to the Lord Privy Seal's Room, where the Committee of Lords uſed to meet; and there he and Mr. Wharton read the ſaid Paper, being all written with Mr. Reading's own Hand.

Wiggins's Evidence. Henry Wiggins, Bedloe's Servant, alſo depoſed, That he lay concealed with Mr. Speke in his Maſter's Room, and heard the Diſcourſe already mentioned between his Maſter and Reading, concerning the contracting and leſſening the Evidence againſt the Popiſh Lords.

Reading's Defence. Mr. Reading ſaid in his Defence, That he attended the Lords in the Tower, and others charged with the Popiſh Plot, by the Leave and Approbation of ſeveral Lords of the Secret Committee, particularly the Prince, the Lord Treaſurer, and the Marquis of Worceſter: That the Lord Stafford deſired him to move for his Habeas Corpus, and gave him his Fee: That Sir Henry Goring and Sir John Gage, deſired the ſame, as did the Lord Brudenel and others, and he did accordingly move the Court of King's-Bench for their Writs of Habeas Corpus; whereupon he was ordered to attend the Attorney General, to know if he would conſent to their being bailed, which he would not, till he knew what they were accuſed of: He (Reading) went therefore to Bedloe and Oates, to know what they charged his Clients with, and if they might be bailed; which Mr. Attorney being ſatisfied of from their own Mouths, conſented to the bailing of ſeveral of them; and this occaſioned his diſcourſing ſeveral Times with Oates and Bedloe, concerning the Nature of the ſeveral Charges againſt the Gentlemen accuſed: That he had alſo Occaſion to attend Bedloe about his Pardon; to prove which he called Sir Trevor Williams, who depoſed, that having a great Opinion of Mr. Reading's Skill in the Law, and deſiring that Mr. Bedloe's Pardon ſhould be as perfect as might be, he recommended him to Mr. Reading for his Advice in it.

Then the Priſoner went on and ſaid, What he had done in this Matter, had been in Friendſhip to Mr. Bedloe: That he had ſupplied him with ſeveral Guineas, and one or two when he ſaid he wanted Bread: That Bedloe acknowledged the Services he had done him; and aſſured him (the Priſoner) when he received the 500*l.* Reward for diſcovering Godfrey's Murder, he would give him a third Part of it for the Services he had done him, repay whatever he (the Priſoner) had lent him, and give him the Fees that were due to him: That Bedloe ſaid, he was glad he was no longer confined in a ſeparate Appartment, and debarred from ſpeaking with Oates and Dugdale, for now they could lay their Stories together; and that he (Bedloe) had ſeveral Witneſſes who would ſwear whatever he bid them; and confeſſed he had not done well in ſome Things, particularly in charging Mr. Griffith.

The Lord Chief Juſtice North thereupon obſerved, that this was not a fair Way of managing his Defence; either he muſt call Bedloe to depoſe upon Oath what he told him, or produce other Witneſſes to prove it: This Kind of Defence indeed was artful enough; but he was not to be ſuffered to calumniate the King's Evidence, without Proof of what he charged them with: He ſhould anſwer to the Facts with which he was charged; all other Things were nothing to the Purpoſe.

Mr. Reading replied, Nothing could be more Material, if he underſtood his Defence; and deſired Bedloe might anſwer upon Oath, Whether he did not deſire him to ſpeak Truth? But bid him remember, the Land groaned for innocent Blood ſhed already; and if he went on to add Sin to Sin, and charge Men unjuſtly to take away their Lives, poſſibly he might ruin the Nation inſtead of preſerving it.

Bedloe then acknowledged, that Reading in publick gave him ſuch Advice, and charged him with the Wrong he had done Griffith; but that happened through the Miſtake of thoſe who took up the Uncle for the Nephew.

Then Mr. Reading demanded of Bedloe, If Mr. Griffith did not give him a Gold Watch? (Intimating, that Bedloe accepted the Watch to retract his Evidence againſt Griffith) Bedloe anſwered, He had the Watch, but acquainted the ſecret Committee with it preſently.

The Court demanded of Bedloe, Whether the ſeveral Sums he received of Mr. Reading, were lent him? To which he anſwered, I wonder Mr. Reading ſhould ſay I wanted Bread, when I had five Diſhes allowed me every Day (by the Government); declaring That 1679. 31 Car. II. that Mr. Reading told him, he had Orders from the Lords to let him have what Money he came for, and ſometimes Mr. Reading gave him Money when he did not ask it; but confeſſed, he agreed that Mr. Reading ſhould have an 100 l. per Annum, out of every 1000 l. a Year of his Reward.

Then Mr. Reading demanded of Bedloe, If he did directly or indirectly deſire him to leſſen a Syllable of his Evidence that was true? To which Bedloe anſwered, He was to have ſuch a Reward for bringing off the Lords as to what they were charged with; and that Reading ſaid, he had Orders to draw blank Deeds.

The Priſoner then objected, That the Witneſſes were not lawful Witneſſes; that Speke, by his own Confeſſion, was an Eves-dropper, which was a Crime in Law; and deſired that Bedloe might anſwer upon Oath, If he did not lay in Coals and Billets at two ſeveral Places to fire the City of Weſtminſter?

The Lord Chief Juſtice North interpoſed, and ſaid, The Witneſs was not obliged to accuſe himſelf; and beſides, his Pardon ſet him right againſt all Objections.

Reading replied, The Pardon might remit the Puniſhment, but ſtill theſe Facts would invalidate his Teſtimony; adding, that Bedloe firſt propoſed this Buſineſs to him, bidding him tell the Lords Stafford, Powis, and Petre, that if they did not ſecure him a good Reward, he would give ſuch Evidence, as ſhould deprive them of their Lives, and that he had other Witneſſes to back him; but if they would give him a ſuitable Reward, his Teſtimony ſhould do them no Hurt.

The Court demanded, If fifty-ſix Guineas were not paid by Mr. Reading to Bedloe, to induce him to leſſen his Evidence?

Bedloe anſwered, He had ſometimes two Guineas, ſometimes more, at ſeveral Times, which might amount to that Sum; but not ſo much at once.

Witneſſes for the Priſoner.

Then the Priſoner called Mr. Palmer, to prove Bedloe borrowed Money of him, who depoſed, That Bedloe having twenty Shillings in his Hand, Mr. Reading came in, to whom Bedloe ſaid, I have no more than this, and this I borrowed of my Mother; whereupon Mr. Reading gave him two Guineas; and Bedloe ſaid, God-a-mercy, thou art an honeſt Man, and my chief Fountain.

The Priſoner then demanded of Mr. Palmer, If he did not hear Bedloe confeſs he had laid in Fewel to burn the City of Weſtminſter?

Bedloe thereupon ſaid, He acknowledged it, and this was Part of the Treaſon the King pardoned: He acknowledged further, That he told Mr. Reading he would have ſuch an Eſtate of the Lord Stafford's in Glouceſterſhire ſettled upon him; and that Mr. Reading told him, he had Orders to draw blank Deeds for the conveying of that Eſtate, to be ſigned within ten Days after his Lordſhip's Diſcharge.

Reading ſaid, he went to the Lord Stafford in the Tower, and asked him, if he knew one Jordan, that Bedloe ſaid would ſupport his Evidence? To which his Lordſhip anſwered, That Jordan was his Tenant, but he would not give Bedloe Six-pence; he valued himſelf upon his Innocence and the Infamy of his Accuſers; and he ſhould look upon it as his greateſt Guilt, if he gave Bedloe any Thing; and would not promiſe him any Thing directly or indirectly. The Lord Powis ſaid the ſame; but added, If Bedloe will forbear to charge me unjuſtly, as he has hitherto done, he ſhall find I will do by him like a Gentleman, when I am diſcharged. 1679. 31 Car. II.

The Court anſwered the Priſoner, This made againſt him. Reading replied, He could not help it; he thought he was bound to do what he had done, to ſave innocent Blood.

The Court demanded, If he could juſtify carrying the King's Evidence to the Priſoners, if there was no more in it? The Priſoner anſwered again, He thought there was no Crime in it; and he did it to prevent Perjury, and the ſhedding of innocent Blood.

Whereupon the Chief Juſtice North ſaid, Will you take upon you thus to impeach the Juſtice of the Nation? Are not you a Lawyer, and know that no Man may be of Counſel for a Priſoner in Treaſon or Felony, till he is aſſigned? You have ſpoiled your Cauſe, and confeſſed as much as amounts to the whole Charge.

The Priſoner then exhibited a Protection, that Bedloe had given one Prickman, a Broken Merchant, under Pretence of being one of his Witneſſes; and ſaid, when he found Bedloe uſed ſuch Tricks and indirect Means, he thought he ſhould do both the King and the Nation good Service, if he could prevent his ſpilling innocent Blood.

The Court replied, He ought not to take upon him to do this; he ought to have acquainted the King's Council or the Secret Committee with it, if he had ſuſpected Bedloe's Honeſty; and this was but a plauſible Excuſe to cover his corrupt Dealing: And the Chief Juſtice, in ſumming up the Evidence, told the Jury, That the whole Charge had been proved by undoubted Teſtimony, and by the Priſoner's own Confeſſion: Whereupon, after a very ſhort Receſs, they brought him in Guilty. He is convicted.

The Chief Juſtice afterwards paſſing Sentence ſaid, The Priſoner's Offence was highly aggravated, becauſe he was a Counſel and knew the Law, and he thought therefore the Court ought to ſhew more than ordinary Severity againſt him, giving Judgment, That he ſhould be fined a thouſand Pounds, and be committed priſoned for a Tear; and that he ſhould be ſet in the Pillory in New Palace-Yard. However as his Offence was ſuch as had enraged the People to that Degree, that he might be in Danger of his Life, they had ordered the Sheriff and Juſtices to keep the Peace, ſo that no other ill Conſequences might happen to him, but only the Shame and Infamy he was condemned to, which he thought he deſerved as well as ever any Man did, that was convicted; and on the Monday following Mr. Reading was ſet in the Pillory, in Purſuance of his Sentence. The Sentence.

This ſeems to have been a very nice Caſe, and a Caſe that ſeldom happened, before ſuch extravagant Rewards were offered to raſcally Remarks.

Knights

1679. 31 Car. II.

Knights of the Poſt, to prove imaginary Plots, and ſwear innocent Gentlemen out of their Lives. Lord Shaftesbury, and the Republican Party, finding their Intereſt decline every Day, either trumped up this pretended Plot themſelves, or improved it, and encouraged the vile Forgers of it to charge every Man as a Conſpirator, that was eminent for oppoſing their Fanatick Schemes.

Their Artillery was not levelled againſt Popery; their ſeeming Zeal againſt that, and its Profeſſors, only ſerved to cover their Malice againſt the Adminiſtration, and all thoſe that were real Friends to the Conſtitution in Church and State. They had long charged the King, and his Friends, with a Deſign to introduce Popery and arbitrary Power; and when they found theſe Suggeſtions derided, and treated with the Contempt they deſerved, they changed their Batteries, and charged the Roman Catholicks, and many Proteſtants of Figure, with a Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life; with a Deſign to fire the City, and maſſacre all good Proteſtants; repreſenting the impending Danger in ſuch tragical Terms, and as ſo ſudden and unavoidable, that the Nation were alarmed and confounded; and no Man, for ſome Months, ſeemed to have the Exerciſe of his Reaſon.

Every Story, how improbable and inconſiſtent ſoever, and every Man, though never ſo inconſiderable and infamous, was attended to, and credited, if he offered to give any new Light into this pretended Plot: And, that they might never want perjured Villains to ſupport the Forgery, the Faction in a manner compelled the King to offer ſuch Rewards to the Diſcoverers, as were too great Temptations, to ſuch ſort of People, to ſwear whatever their crafty Leaders ſuggeſted to them: Nay, the People were taught to look upon the Title of a King's Evidence, as more honourable than that of a Nobleman or firſt Miniſter: Theſe Witneſſes were lodged in the King's Palace; had Tables allowed them there; were Hoſanna'd whenever they went abroad, and ſtiled our DELIVERERS, and THE SAVIOURS OF THE NATION: And as it was neceſſary to make ſome Sacrifices, to ſpill ſome Noble Blood, to confirm the People in the Belief of the Conſpiracy, five Popiſh Lords were charged with the Treaſon, and committed to the Tower: Nor did the Queen her ſelf eſcape their Malice. They proceeded ſtill farther, and accuſed the firſt Miniſter, and ſeveral Men of Quality, and Members of the Commons, as Accomplices in this Plot, that were zealous Proteſtants, and eminent for their Loyalty and Attachment to the Church of England: And indeed it was purely for the Sake of theſe, becauſe ſuch Men were ſuffered to be at the Helm, that the Nation was thrown into this Confuſion by the Whigs: The Deſign was, to perſuade the People that theſe Gentlemen were Popiſhly affected, and they themſelves were the only Friends to the Conſtitution; nay, that all the Friends of Monarchy and Epiſcopacy, as well as the Papiſts, were in a Plot to deſtroy the Proteſtant Religion, and the antient Government.

In theſe circumſtances, it was no wonder, that the Popiſh Lords, who found they were to be firſt ſacrificed, caſt about to countermine the Stratagems of their Enemies, and even offered the Witneſſes ſuch a Share of their Eſtates as might be equivalent to the Rewards offered to deſtroy them, that the Witneſſes might not be under ſuch ſtrong Temptations to diſguiſe the Truth, and take away their Lives.

This, ſurely, was allowable in the Lords, who knew themſelves innocent, whatever Interpretation the Lawyers might put upon it; nor could it be highly criminal in their Agent, Counſellor Reading, if he believed them innocent; eſpecially if he deſired the Witneſs Bedloe only to ſpeak the Truth, as he ſeems to acknowledge. I make no queſtion but there was a Bargain going forward between the Lords and Bedloe, for ſoftening his Evidence; and there is Reaſon to believe, from ſome Circumſtances in the Trial, that he firſt offered them his Service by Mr. Reading, with whom he was very intimate, and to whom he had been much obliged: That Bedloe was a Villain, is very certain by his own Teſtimony; ſometimes contracting, and at others enlarging his Evidence, to ſerve a Turn; Nay, we find, he made ſuch uſe of his Privilege of being a King's Witneſs, that he took upon him to give Protections to broken Tradeſmen, under Pretence they would ſupport his Evidence, and make further Diſcoveries of the Plot. He had propoſed to himſelf ſome thouſand Pounds a Year in Lands, for doing Juſtice to the Lords; for he ſays, in the Trial, that Mr. Reading was to have an hundred Pounds per Annum out of every thouſand a Year he was to have for his Reward. How he came not to accept the Offers of the Lords, I cannot certainly determine: Whether he thought he ſhould get more by Lord Shaftesbury, and his Whig Friends, when he ſaw himſelf ſo careſſed, and arrived at that Height of Power and Influence, as to diſtreſs the King and Government by his Perjuries; or whether he was afraid Mr. Reading would one Day lay open his Villanies, and he ſhould loſe the promiſed Reward, is not eaſy to ſay: But all the World are ſatisfied, he was governed by corrupt Motives, both in the contracting and enlarging his Evidence.

The Court indeed told Mr Reading, that, if he had ſuſpected Bedloe's Veracity, he ought to have communicated his Suſpicions to the Privy Council, or the Secret Committee: But this was not the Way to have ſerved his Clients; neither the Privy Council, nor the King himſelf, durſt, at that time, protect the moſt innocent Roman Catholick againſt the Rage of the Faction, who had ſo infatuated a Majority of the Commons, that they ran precipitately into all their wild Schemes. Whoever endeavoured to ſtem the Torrent, was expoſed to inevitable Ruin; and it was next to a Miracle, that the Conſtitution it ſelf was preſerved: So ſtrongly did the Fanatick and Republican Spirit operate upon the Senators of thoſe Days.

The Indictment. THE Indictment ſet forth, That Thomas White and the reſt of the Priſoners, with other falſe Traitors, did on the 24th of April, in the 30th Year of the King, adviſedly, maliciouſly, and traiterouſly compaſs, imagine, and intend to ſtir up Sedition and Rebellion, and to procure a miſerable Slaughter of the King's Subjects; to depoſe and murder his Majeſty; to levy War, and to ſubvert the eſtabliſhed Religion and Government; and that, in order to accompliſh their ſaid traiterous Imaginations and Purpoſes, they the ſaid Thomas White, &c. did on the 24th of April, in the ſaid 30th Year of the King, at the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, traiterouſly aſſemble, conſult, and agree, to murder his Majeſty, and ſubvert the eſtabliſhed Religion and Government: And further agreed to ſay a certain Number of Maſſes for the Soul of Pickering, and to give Grove a Sum of Money, as a Reward for murdering the King. That they took the Sacrament to conceal the ſaid Treaſons, and did at the ſame Time and Place, perſuade and excite four other Perſons to murder his Majeſty, againſt the Duty of their Allegiance, &c.

White and Fenwicke object, they had been tried already for the ſame Offence. The Priſoners being arraigned, Whitebread and Fenwicke objected, that they had already been tried for the ſame Facts, a Jury charged with them, and the Evidence found inſufficient, and then the Jury was diſmiſſed without giving a Verdict; and they apprehended they could not be put in Jeopardy of their Lives a ſecond Time for the ſame Cauſe; they ought, at the former Trial, either to have been condemned or acquitted.

Their Objection over-ruled. The Court anſwered, it was in their Diſcretion to diſcharge the Jury without taking a Verdict, where Witneſſes were wanting, or there was any Accident of the like Nature: Both the Chief Juſtices and moſt of the twelve Judges, who were upon the Bench, declared that this was their Opinion.

Then the Priſoners ſeverally pleaded Not Guilty, and the Jurors being called, they made no Challenges, but to thoſe who had been Jurors in former Trials for the ſame Facts they ſtood charged with.

Sir Creſwel Levinz opening the Evidence for the King, obſerved, that the Priſoners were all Popiſh Prieſts, and, as ſuch, were guilty of High-Treaſon by the 27th Eliz. and ought to die for that; but they were now charged with a Treaſon of a blacker Nature, and ſo would not have the Satisfaction of ſaying they died for their Religion: And notwithſtanding the ſaid Statute had been made an hundred Years, there were very few Examples of Prieſts who had ſuffered purely for their Religion, though many had ſuffered for ſuch Crimes as the Priſoners were charged with. On the contrary, in Popiſh Countries they had murdered the Proteſtants by thouſands, without Law or Juſtice; particularly at Mirandola, at Paris, in Ireland, and in Piedmont.

Oates's Evidence. Then Titus Oates was produced as an Evidence of the Plot, and depoſed, that the Priſoner Whitebread appointed a Conſult to be held at London, in the Month of April, 1678. and a Conſult was held accordingly, where the Priſoners Whitebread, Fenwicke, Harcourt, and Turner were preſent, and ſigned a Reſolution, that Pickering and Grove ſhould proceed in attempting to kill the King: That Whitebread ſigned this Reſolution at Wild-Houſe, Fenwicke at his Lodgings in Drury-Lane, and Harcourt at his Chamber in Duke-ſtreet; that the Deponent Oates, and nine or ten more Jeſuits, came from St. Omers to London to be at this Conſult; and when it was over they return'd again; particularly Whitebread arrived at St. Omers the Beginning of June, in order to viſit the Engliſh Colleges in Flanders, and ſtayed at St. Omers till the tenth of June, and in ſome of his Diſcourſes with thoſe Fathers, ſaid, He hoped to ſee the black Fool's Head at White-hall laid faſt enough; and that if his Brother ſhould appear to follow his Foot-ſteps, his Paſſport ſhould be made too, and he alſo ſhould be diſpatched: That the Deponent, on the 13th of June, O. S. receiving Orders to come to England again, took Paſſage in the Packet-boat the 14th, and arrived at London the 17th of June, and in July following came over Richard Aſhby, with Inſtructions from the Priſoner Whitebread, to offer Sir George Wakeman (the Queen's Phyſician) ten thouſand Pounds to poiſon the King: That Aſhby, two or three Days after his Arrival, viz. the latter End of July, or the Beginning of Auguſt, went to the Bath, and the Priſoners Fenwicke and Harcourt adviſed him to give an Account of Matters to the People in Somerſetſhire; and Fenwicke ſaid, he did not queſtion before he came to Town again, to have the Gentleman at White-hall (whom they called the black Baſtard) diſpatched.

That the Priſoner Gavan, in the Month of June, 1678. wrote Letters to the Fathers at London, giving an Account of their Affairs in Staffordſhire and Shropſhire, and of the Diligence of one Father Ewers in thoſe Parts: And in July or Auguſt, Gavan came to Town, and the Deponent met him at Ireland's Chamber, where he heard him give the ſame Account of the Affairs of Staffordſhire and Shropſhire as he had done

done in his Letters before. That the 12th of Auguſt (he was poſitive it was between the 8th and 12th) Mr. Ireland took his leave of them, as though he was going to St. Omers, and Fenwicke the Priſoner was to be Treaſurer and Procurator in his Abſence; that about the 21ſt of Auguſt Fenwicke and Harcourt, and ſome other Fathers, met together at Wild-Houſe, and there lay before them fourſcore Pounds, moſt of it in Guineas, which was to be paid to the four Iriſh Ruffians who were to murder the King at Windſor, and Coleman (that was executed) came in, and gave the Meſſenger a Guinea to haſten his Journey; and the Company adjourning from thence to Harcourt's Chamber, the Money was paid to the Meſſenger there: That the Day before, or the Day after this, there was a Conſultation of the Benedictine Monks, where Fenwicke and Harcourt were preſent, and related, they had received an Account from Archbiſhop Talbot in Ireland of the Papiſts conſpiring the Death of the Duke of Ormonde, and deſiring that Commiſſions and Money might be ſent over thither for carrying on the Deſign; and that Fenwicke actually ſent Commiſſions to Cheſter by a ſpecial Meſſenger, and ſome by the Poſt; and Fenwicke gave the Deponent Money for his Expences, and admoniſhed him to procure Maſſes to be ſaid for carrying on the Deſign: That on the 3d of December, the Deponent, hearing Whitebread was come to Town, went to his Chamber, but could not ſee him; and going again the next Morning, Whitebread reviled him and ſtruck him, imagining the Deponent had made a Diſcovery; for the Gentleman, the Deponent had communicated the Thing to, and who went to the King about it, being dreſſed like the Deponent, they were informed it was him; but the Deponent juſtifying himſelf to Whitebread, he ſaid he would be Friends with him, if he could learn who had done it; and he further depoſed, that on Sir George Wakeman's refuſing to accept 10,000*l.* for poiſoning the King, Whitebread ordered 5000*l.* more to be offered him, which he accepted.

Then Whitebread demanded of Oates, how long he was acquainted with him before the Conſult in April; and Oates anſwered he never ſaw Whitebread's Face till then.

It being demanded of Oates, how long he ſtaid in London, he ſaid, from the Time he came over to England, to the Time he went back again, was under twenty Days; and that Father Williams Rector of Wotton, the Rector of Liege, Sir John Warner, Sir Thomas Preſton, and others, came over with him.

The Priſoners demanding if Sir Robert Brett and Mr. Nevil came with him, he ſaid, he believed they might; and being told he had aſſerted it poſitively in his Narrative, the Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, a Man might venture to write more than he would ſwear; to which Fenwicke replied, his Narrative was upon Oath; whereupon the Chief Juſtice obſerved, that a Pamphlet was no Evidence; they muſt bring the Perſon that heard him ſwear it, to prove it.

Aſſigned Narrative no Evidence.

Then the Priſoners deſired Oates might aſcertain the very Week when he ſaw them in London, and the Places where, &c. that they might have an Opportunity to ſhew they were in other Places; to which the Chief Juſtice anſwered, Partiality of the Court.

he perceived their Defence would be little elſe but Captiouſneſs, to diſprove the Witneſſes in Circumſtances of Time, Place, Perſons, and Numbers, which were but little Matters to the Subſtance; and Dugdale, another Witneſs, was ſworn. (Dugdale was Steward to Lord Stafford, and run away with 300*l. of his Lord's Money.*)

1679. 31 Car. II.

This Witneſs depoſed, that the Priſoner Whitebread wrote a Letter to Mr. Ewers the Jeſuit, (the Deponent's Confeſſor) which he ſaw at Tixhall, the Lord Aſton's Seat in Staffordſhire; for all the Letters that came to Mr. Ewers, were directed to the Deponent, and encloſed in Mr. Groves's Letters; and this Letter he broke open and read, wherein Whitebread adviſed Ewers to chuſe them that were truſty ſtout Fellows, and ſuch as were hardy and deſperate, (to kill the King) and that Gavan and ſeveral others had engaged the Deponent in the Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life; that there were ſeveral Conſultations about it at Mr. Ewers's Chamber, at Mr. Gavan's, and at the Deponent's Chamber at Tixhall; and one particularly in September then laſt paſt, where Gavan, Lord Stafford, and ſeveral others, were preſent; and the Deponent was to be ſent to London, to aſſiſt in executing the Deſign, and to be under the Tuition of Parſons: Then Gavan bid the Witneſs look him in the Face, if he could; but the Court told Gavan, he muſt not threaten the King's Witneſſes.

Dugdale's Evidence.

Gavan averred, he never was in Dugdale's Chamber, and demanded of Dugdale, in what Room of the Lord Aſton's Houſe this Diſcourſe was, and who were preſent.

Dugdale anſwered, it was in the little Parlour, and in Mr. Ewers's Chamber; and that Mr. Ewers, Mr. Lawſon, Mr. Petre, and others, were there: That Gavan well knew the Deponent's Zeal, for he had given them 400*l.* to pray for his Soul, and carrying on this Deſign; and afterwards, when they ſaid they were afraid they ſhould want Money for carrying it on, he promiſed them an 100*l.* more, and Gavan aſſured him he ſhould be canonized for a Saint.

That Gavan ſaid farther, that there was a Letter come from Paris into the Country through Mr. Harcourt's Hands, importing, that it was their Opinion at Paris and St. Omer's, that they ſhould fling the King's Death on the Presbyterians, and then they might bring the Epiſcopal Men into their Party, to revenge themſelves upon them: That there was to have been a Maſſacre alſo; and if any eſcaped it, who were not Papiſts, there was to be an Army to cut them off: And Gavan endeavoured to prove by Scripture, that it was lawful and good to deſtroy the King, or any one, for the Sake of Religion; and obſerved, that the Reliques of Father Garnet (executed for the Powder Plot) had wrought great Miracles beyond Sea.

The King's Counſel demanding of Dugdale, how many Letters of Harcourt's he had intercepted, he anſwered, he believed an hundred; and particularly one, which gave an Account of the Death of Sir E. Godfrey the Monday before he was found, and muſt be written on the Saturday he was killed, for the Words were, This very Night Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey is diſpatched; and that the next Day, being Tueſday, he went to an Alehouſe near his Lord's Houſe, and asked, if they did not hear of a Knight that was killed at London: Then Mr. Chetwind was ſworn, and depoſed, that he was in Staffordſhire laſt October, and on a Tueſday that Month, one Mr. Sanbridge, a Kinſman of the Lord Aſton's, told him he had been at Eld's, and that a Girl of the Houſe acquainted him Mr. Dugdale had been there, and reported there was a Juſtice of Peace of Weſtminſter killed, and on the Saturday following his Letters brought down the News of it; and being at Litchfield the ſame Saturday, News came thither that Sir E. Godfrey was found murdered.

Whitebread the Priſoner then demanded of Dugdale, whether thoſe very Words killing the King were in the Letter he wrote; to which Dugdale anſwered, that to the beſt of his Remembrance, thoſe were the very Words that the Letter came by the ordinary Poſt, directed to him (the Deponent.)

The Chief Juſtice demanding of Dugdale, if he knew any thing againſt the Priſoner Turner, Dugdale anſwered, he agreed to all in his hearing at Mr. Ewers's Chamber in Tixhall, and at other Places, about two Years ago; to which Turner replied, he had not been in Staffordſhire theſe four Years.

Prance's Evidence.

Then Prance (Silverſmith to the Popiſh Chappels) was ſworn, and depoſed, that about a Year before he made Harcourt the Priſoner an Image of our Lady, and when he paid him the Money for it, he told him there was a Deſign of killing the King.

That the Deponent was with Mr. Fenwicke the Priſoner, Ireland, and Grove, at Ireland's Lodgings about a Fortnight before the laſt Michaelmas, and they were talking of 50,000 Men to be raiſed to carry on the Catholick Cauſe, and ſettle the Catholick Religion; and Fenwicke ſaid they were to be commanded by the Lords Arundel, Bellaſis, Petre, and Powis: And the Deponent demanding, what poor Tradeſmen muſt do, if there were Civil Wars, Fenwicke ſaid, he need not fear, for he ſhould have Church-work enough in making Images, Chalices, Crucifixes, Vaſes, &c. And that Harcourt the Priſoner had in like manner diſcourſed with the Deponent about the Plot, and particularly when he paid him 44 l. for four Candleſticks.

Bedloe's Evidence. confeſſes he ſuppreſſed Part of it.

Then Bedloe was ſworn, and depoſed, that he did not teſtify Half what he knew at the former Trial of Whitebread, Fenwicke, Ireland, &c. becauſe he had promiſed Mr. Reading to bring off Whitebread and Fenwicke, that he might put a Confidence in him concerning his Evidence againſt the Lords in the Tower—— But now he depoſed, that he ſaw Fenwicke at the Conſult, and heard Whitebread tell Coleman, at Harcourt's Chamber, the Manner of ſending the four Ruffians to Windſor to kill the King, about the Month of September; and that he ſaw Harcourt take eighty or an hundred Pounds out of his Cabinet for them, and pay the Meſſenger, giving him alſo a Guinea that Mr. Coleman left to drink his Health; that it was agreed alſo at Harcourt's Chamber, that Grove ſhould have 1500 l. and Pickering as many Maſſes ſaid for his Soul as amounted to that Sum, at Twelve-pence each Maſs; that Pickering had been checked and diſciplined by his Superiors for having miſſed ſo many Opportunities of killing the King: Once the Flint of his Piſtol was looſe, at another Time there was no Powder in the Pan, or he had loaded only with Bullets. That when Whitebread was at Mr. Harcourt's Lodgings, it was alſo agreed by them, that ſince Sir George Wakeman would not accept 10,000 l. he ſhould have 15000 l. but Ireland ſaid, the moſt certain Way of diſpatching the King was, in his Morning Walks at New-Market: That Fenwick and Conyers accordingly went thither, and he heard there were ſeven or eight of them. That Mr. Harcourt was no Stranger to the Deponent's bringing over Packets and Portmanteaus from beyond Sea: He had brought Letters from Watton, St. Omers, Bruges, Paris, Villadolid, and Salamanca, and carried Anſwers containing an Account of the Plot; and moſt of theſe were lodged in Harcourt's Hands, and he had been ſent from Harcourt to Langhorn with Papers relating to this Affair, to regiſter them. 1679. 31 Car. II.

That he ſaw Harcourt give Sir George Wakeman a Bill of Exchange for 2000 l. and tell him it was in Part of a greater Sum; and Sir George anſwered, that 15000 l. was but a ſmall Reward for ſettling Religion, and preſerving three Kingdoms from Ruin; and if it were not for a certain Woman (the Queen) he would not undertake it; but for her he would do any thing. And that Sir George Wakeman read the Bill, put it up, and went and received the Money.

Then the King's Counſel produced a Letter that was found among Harcourt's Papers from one Petre, at St. Omer's, a Jeſuit, giving an Account that Whitebread had appointed a Conſult in April, concerning ſome conſiderable Matters that required Secrecy; the Tenor whereof was, that the Provincial (Whitebread) had appointed all thoſe who had Suffrages at the intended Congregation, to be in London the 21ſt of April, O. S. in order to its Beginning the 24th; and if his Occaſions would not permit him to be preſent, he ſhould ſignify ſo much, that his Abſence might be ſupplied; but that none ſhould go to London much before the Time, or appear in Town till the Conſult was over, leſt Occaſion ſhould be given to ſuſpect the Deſign: Finally, Secrecy, as to the Time and Place, is much recommended to all thoſe that receive the Summons, as it appeared of its own Nature neceſſary. A Letter, appointing a Congregation of Jeſuits, the 24th of April.

To which Harcourt anſwered, the Letter was not written to him, but to one who had a Right to Vote in their Congregation, which was held once in three Years; the chief Buſineſs whereof was, the ſending a Procurator to Rome; and Secrecy was very fit to be recommended, as they lived in a Country where they were an Eye-ſore, and might give Offence by their meeting in ſuch Numbers.

The Chief Juſtice replied, this was a forced Conſtruction: Could it be ſuppoſed this Secrecy was only required on Account of their chuſing an Officer? The Priſoners urged again, that their Lives depended upon it; and Whitebread entring on his Defence ſaid, He thanked God he was not afraid to die, but would not die unjuſtly: Life was a Thing not to be thrown away; but without Contradiction, Mens Lives might be taken away by Perjury, as well as by a Knife or a Piſtol; and no Man's Evidence ought Whitebread's Defence. Partiality of the Court.

1679. 31 Car. II. to be admitted, that was not a lawful Witneſs, which Mr. Oates was not; and he hoped he might, without Offence, ſay that he was perjured; for he depoſed that he came over, and was preſent at the Conſult the 24th of April, and that he (Whitebread) ordered him to do ſeveral things, and diſcovered the whole Plot to him; but it was highly improbable he ſhould truſt a Man in ſuch a Buſineſs, whom, by his own Confeſſion, he never ſaw till the Time of the Conſult; he ought rather to have been ſent to Bethlem than Newgate, had he been ſo imprudent: Beſides, Oates was a Man that had nothing to ſubſiſt on, but what he had from them.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, it was no Wonder they ſhould take a Man into their Confidence, whom they had maintained abroad for a conſiderable Time.

Whitebread replied, his Predeceſſor had maintained him; but when he came to be Superior, he found him not fit for the Purpoſes he pretended to: For firſt, it was doubtful if he was a good Catholick; ſecondly, he led a very idle Life, and was very deſirous of being entertained by them; whereupon they deſired Oates to retire ſomewhere elſe, and to induce him to do ſo, gave him a good Suit of Clothes, a Peruke, and four Pounds in his Pocket, which Oates promiſed to repay them again when he had ſold his Library he boaſted of in London; but he never did: And urged that there was a wide Difference between doing a charitable Act to a Man in Want, and a Scholar, and truſting him in ſuch an Affair as that. And to ſhew that Oates could not be at the Conſult the 24th of April, he ſaid, they ſhould prove that he was not out of St. Omers, from the 10th of December to the 23d of June, above one Night. He deſired the Court alſo to conſider, how improbable it was he ſhould write ſo plainly, of a Deſign to kill the King, and ſend the Letter by the common Poſt to Dugdale, a Perſon he never ſaw but once.

Fenwicke's Defence. Fenwicke in his Defence, deſired the Court to obſerve the Tenor of the Evidence againſt him; eſpecially that of Oates, who ſwore he ſaw ſuch and ſuch Letters. Was it poſſible he ſhould ſhew ſuch Letters to a Man that had been turned away from St. Omers for his Misbehaviour? Beſides, he had a thouſand Letters taken upon him, in which there was not any thing to be found tending to a treaſonable Deſign: That there were taken upon him alſo five or ſix thouſand Pounds in Bills and Bonds, as well as Letters; and it was ſtrange this Deſign ſhould not appear in any of them.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, it was much more ſtrange, that One ſuch Letter ſhould be taken: He believed Harcourt would not have ſuffered the Letter that was read to have been ſurprized, if he had thought it would have been of ſuch Conſequence, and the Senſe have appeared ſo criminal.

Partiality of the Court. Then the Priſoners called their Witneſſes, who were Students of the Engliſh College at St. Omers, being ſixteen in Number; but before they were ſuffered to Speak, the Court obſerved they were all Roman Catholicks, and might have a Diſpenſation for what they ſaid.

1679. 31 Car. II. The Evidence of the St. Omers Students for the Priſoners. Theſe Gentlemen of St. Omers depoſed, that Oates was in the College of St. Omers (except one Night) from Chriſtmas to June 1678, and conſequently could not be at the Conſult held at London the 24th of April, as he pretended.

Some of them particularly depoſed, that they dined with Oates at St. Omers, that very Day he ſaid he came over, viz. the 25th of April, N. S. That Oates went into the Infirmary the ſame Day, and fell out with a Gentleman there.

Others depoſed, that they could not but take Notice when Oates was abſent, becauſe all the Students dined in one Room, and Oates had a diſtinct Table by himſelf, between the Lads and the Religious; for though he went to School with the Boys, yet being a Man, he was allowed the Privilege of ſitting by himſelf at Dinner.

Others depoſed, that Oates was put to read in the Sodality the 25th of March, 1678. and that he read there every Sunday Morning at Six a Clock, from that Time till June following, when he went away.

John Hall, the Butler of the College, depoſed, that he ſaw Mr. Oates at St. Omers, all the Months of April and May, and till the 23d of June, when he went away; that the Deponent ſerved Oates with Bread and Beer during that Time, except when he was in the Infirmary, which he thought was four or five Days, and that he had this Reaſon to remember him; that he laid his Table at a particular Place near the Door, where he always ſat.

Other Witneſſes depoſed, that ſeveral of the Perſons, Oates had ſworn came over with him, were then in Flanders.

Oates's Reply to this Evidence. To this Oates replied, that the Witneſſes were Papiſts and Jeſuits, and would ſwear any thing for their Cauſe; and the Lord Chief Juſtice obſerved, that though Papiſts were competent Witneſſes in Law, yet they were of ſuch Principles, that the Jury ought to give them but little Credit; (At which the People gave a great Shout;) Whereupon the Chief Juſtice ſaid to the Priſoners, they muſt pardon the People's ſhouting; for they had ſo turned their Hearts, that a Papiſt would hardly be able to live in England. (Then the People ſhouted again.) Gavan the Priſoner anſwered, If there be but a Place in Heaven for us, I am contented; and brought Witneſſes, to prove that he was in Staffordſhire at the time Oates ſwore he was in London, viz. in July 1678.

Partiality of the Court. Whitebread, the Priſoner, deſired he might prove that Oates was miſtaken in the Evidence he gave at Ireland's Trial: The Chief Juſtice anſwered, that would be to try Ireland's Cauſe over again. Whitebread replied, if Oates was convicted of Perjury in one Caſe, he was not to be believed in another: But the Chief Juſtice told them, they were not to take Notice of what was done at a former Trial, unleſs they could produce a Record of Oates's Conviction. And it was demanded of every one of the Priſoner's Witneſſes, before they gave their Evidence, if they were Papiſts? Whereupon Harcourt the Priſoner obſerved, if their Witneſſes could not be looked upon as good Witneſſes, becauſe they were Papiſts, they muſt renounce all Intercourſe with other Countries.

The Court anſwered, their hearing them ſhewed they looked upon them as good Witneſſes; but a Witneſs was of more or leſs Credit according to the Circumſtances; and therefore they thought it was a proper Queſtion to ask their Witneſſes, if they were Papiſts?

To which Harcourt replied, every one of the Witneſſes on the other ſide were known to be bad, flagitious Perſons, Men of deſperate Fortunes, that got their Livelihood by Swearing; and produced Witneſſes to prove that Ireland was in Staffordſhire the Beginning of September, when Oates ſwore he was at Mr. Harcourt's Chamber in London, and borrowed twenty Shillings of Mr. Ireland.

But the Court told the Priſoners, they muſt not charge Oates with what he had ſaid at a former Trial: However the Lord Chief Juſtice afterwards obſerved himſelf, that Oates had ſworn that Ireland was in London in Auguſt, and the Beginning of September, and ſaid that the Priſoners ought to have Right done them, and were at Liberty to diſprove it; whereupon Sir John Southcott, the Lady Southcott, Mr. Edward Southcott, and other credible Witneſſes, were called by the Priſoners, and depoſed, that Ireland was in the Country in Auguſt, and the Beginning of September, when Oates had ſworn he was in London; and Captain Hill depoſed, that Bedloe, another of the King's Witneſſes, was a Priſoner in the Marſhalſea, and lived upon the common Basket; to which the Lord Chief Juſtice anſwered, Bedloe might be an honeſt Man for all that.

Whitebread the Priſoner objected, that Bedloe at his laſt Trial depoſed, that he had nothing to ſay againſt him; and now charged him with great Matters: So that it was evident he had falſified his Oath; for if he was then ſworn to depoſe the Truth, the whole Truth, and nothing but the Truth; and he did not ſwear the whole Truth then, he was perjured; and if he did ſwear the whole Truth then, he could have nothing to charge him with now.

To which Chief Juſtice North anſwered, that Bedloe was then in Treaty with Reading, and to beget a Confidence in him, that he would ſerve the Popiſh Lords and bring them off, he was eaſy, as to the Priſoner Whitebread, and leſſened his Evidence at that Time: However, he told the Jury, they ought to conſider the Objection that was made to Bedloe's Teſtimony.

Then the King's Counſel called ſome Witneſſes to ſupport Oates's Evidence, and prove that Ireland was in London in Auguſt and the Beginning of September; and that Oates was in London the 24th of April 1678. at the Conſult, as he had ſworn.

Other Evidence to ſupport Oates's.

The firſt depoſed, that ſhe ſaw Ireland ſtanding at his own Door, as ſhe paſſed by, in Auguſt 1678. Another ſwore, that he ſaw Oates in the Street, in a Diſguiſe, the latter-end of March, or the Beginning of April; and a Third ſwore, ſhe ſaw Oates, in a Diſguiſe, at Sir Richard Barker's, in May; and a Servant ſwore, he ſaw Oates at his Maſter's, Sir Richard Barker's, the Beginning of May, and ſpoke to him.

Sir Richard Barker depoſed, that he ſaw Oates in June, or July, 1678, in London; and his Servants told him they had ſeen Oates the May before, in two ſeveral Diſguiſes: Another Witneſs depoſed, that he dined with Oates at Iſlington, the Beginning of May 1678, and that he had a Summer Suit on, and a Green Knot upon his Shoulder.

Whitebread the Priſoner hereupon obſerved, that Oates, at his firſt Trial, could not name any one Perſon that had ſeen him in England, and pretended to be but ſix Days in London; and now brought Witneſſes to prove he was in London moſt part of the Summer; ſo that either he or his Witneſſes muſt be perjured.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, they made their Defence to depend upon an Uncertainty of Time, which no Man could ever remember; but bid them ſay what they could for themſelves: Whereupon Gavan the Priſoner continued his Defence, and ſaid, he was charged by one Witneſs with a Fact committed in London; and by another Witneſs with another Fact committed in Staffordſhire, a different County; and deſired the Opinion of the Court, whether theſe were two Witneſſes, ſuch as the Law required? To which it was anſwered, that this had been ſettled in Sir Henry Vane's Caſe, who was indicted for levying War; and one Witneſs proved the levying War in one County, and the other his levying War in another County; and though they were but ſingle Witneſſes of ſingle Facts, yet, both coming up to the Charge in the Indictment, they were adjudged ſufficient to maintain it: So here, one Witneſs proving a Conſpiracy to kill the King in this County, and another proving a Conſult with other Perſons againſt the King's Life in Staffordſhire, theſe were two Witneſſes to the ſame Treaſon, and ſufficient in Law. Gavan afterwards made ſolemn Proteſtations of his Innocence, and obſerved that he was not of Age to be at the Conſult in April; appealing to the Jury, if the two Witneſſes produced againſt him could be deemed credible Witneſſes; for no Man, he apprehended, could be a good Witneſs, that was not an honeſt Man: That Oates's Evidence probably proceeded from Malice, having been turned out of the College of St. Omers and diſguſted; beſides, his Evidence had been proved falſe in ſeveral Inſtances, by ſixteen Witneſſes; and though he was not convicted of theſe Perjuries before, yet they made him appear to be no credible Witneſs: That the Teſtimony of thoſe, who only ſaid they ſaw Oates paſſing by, was not to be brought into Competition with that of thoſe Sixteen, who converſed with him daily. Beſides, Oates contradicted his own Witneſſes, by ſaying he was in London only ſix Days, when they depoſed he had been in London much longer. Gavan acknowledged he knew Dugdale at the Lord Aſton's in Staffordſhire, and had converſed with him in Ewer's Chamber; but never, he proteſted, upon any Treaſonable Matter; nor was Dugdale a credible Witneſs, who had run away with 300*l.* of his Lord's Money. The Court told him, he muſt not tell a Story out of this or that Lord's Mouth, to aſperſe the Witneſs, unleſs he had Evidence to prove what he charged him with.

Whitebread then repeated his former Objection, how improbable it was that he ſhould put theſe Words in a Letter, That he ſhould provide ſtout Men to kill the King, and ſend it by the common

mon Poſt; or that he ſhould beat one to whom he had committed ſuch Secrets as Oates depoſed; and obſerved further, that it was ſtrange there ſhould be a Plot, wherein ſo many Perſons of Honour and Quality were concerned, and ſuch Preparations pretended to be made, and yet no Footſteps of it appear; and concluded with recommending himſelf to God and the Jury.

Fenwicke the Priſoner obſerved, that it was not probable ſo many innocent young Lads ſhould come over to atteſt a Falſhood; and that the Witneſſes on the other Side, were People of a poor beggarly Condition, who expected to advance their Fortunes by this pretended Diſcovery: That it could not be ſuppoſed they ſhould truſt Oates with the Sight of ſuch Letters, and ſuch Secrets as he pretended; being a Perſon they never eſteemed, and had expelled the College. He obſerved further, that none of the Commiſſions or Letters, the Witneſſes mentioned, had appeared; nor was it proved that any Money was paid, or Arms provided, though it was three Quarters of a Year ſince the pretended Diſcovery; and indeed, that there were no Circumſtances to induce the Jury's belief, but downright Swearing; concluding that the Priſoners were Perſons of unblameable Lives, never accuſed of any Crime before; whereas the World were ſufficiently acquainted, how ſcandalouſly their Accuſers had lived.

The Directions of the Chief Juſtice to the Jury.

The reſt of the Priſoners having uſed much the ſame Arguments in their Defence, the Chief Juſtice ſummed up the Evidence, and told the Jury, that the Teſtimony of the St. Omer's Witneſſes was of much leſs Weight than that which had been given on the other Side; not only becauſe they were not upon their Oaths, but becauſe the Teſtimony of a Papiſt, was not to be credited, with or without Oath; ſince they were of a Religion that could diſpenſe with Oaths for the ſake of their Cauſe: The Teſtimony of theſe young Men therefore, who had been ſent over for this Purpoſe, and had been trained up in ſuch Principles, was very much to be ſuſpected: That the Priſoners' Defence conſiſted in catching at a Point of Time; but that was a thing no Man could charge his Memory with; they were not to govern their Judgments by a Miſtake of ſeven or eight Days: And if the ſixteen Witneſſes, that came over from St. Omers, were not to be believed, neither were the reſt; for the Papiſts never wanted Witneſſes to prove what they pleaſed; they made no Bones of it. He told them alſo, that Harcourt's Letter, written the ſame Night Juſtice Godfrey was miſſing, which ſays, This Night Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey was diſpatched, was an undeniable Evidence the Papiſts murdered him; becauſe he was not known to be dead, till the Thurſday following, by other People, which muſt turn every Proteſtant Heart againſt them; for the Plot was in a great Meaſure proved by that Murder: However, this, he ſaid, was but a Specimen of what the Papiſts intended, and none knew where it would End: They had killed but one Man's Perſon; but in Effigy, the whole Nation. It was but in one Man's Blood their Hands were imbrued; but their Souls were dipped in the Blood of All. They would kill the King, or any body elſe that ſtood in the Way of their Religion; a Religion they would bring in by a Converſion of Blood, and a Baptiſm of Fire.

Then the Jury being withdrawn, after a very ſhort Receſs, brought in all the Priſoners GUILTY; whereupon Mr. Recorder Jefferies ſaid, that the Priſoners had not been wanting to themſelves in offering, nor the Court in hearing, what they had to ſay; but upon a long Evidence, and a full diſcuſſing of all Objections, they had been found Guilty; and he thought every honeſt Man would ſay they were unexceptionably found ſo: It was a juſt Verdict the Jury had given.

They are convicted.

Jefferies applauds the Verdict.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the Priſoner with High-Treaſon, in compaſſing the Death of the King; and to that end, ſending Letters to procure Aid of the Pope and the French King: The Indictment alſo charges him with receiving ſeveral Commiſſions from Rome, conſtituting Military Officers to command the Forces to be raiſed in theſe Kingdoms, for executing the ſaid Treaſons, and with receiving other Commiſſions for conſtituting Civil Officers, and delivering them out to other Traitors. The Indictment further charges him with aiding and abetting Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, in their traiterous Deſign of killing the King, and with moving and ſoliciting the Benedictine Monks to pay the Sum of 6000*l.* to procure a Perſon to kill the King: And laſtly, it charges him with counſelling and abetting Coleman in his Treaſons, who had been convicted and executed, for writing Letters to le Chaiſe, the French King's Confeſſor, to procure the French King's Aid, in ſubverting the Government, and Religion eſtabliſhed.

General Evidence of a Plot.

The King's Witneſſes being called, Dugdale and Prance gave Evidence of a Plot in general Terms: That the King was to have been murdered, the Proteſtants maſſacre'd, an Army raiſed, and the eſtabliſhed Religion and Government ſubverted, &c.

Oates's Evidence.

Oates was more particular, and depoſed, that in April, 1677, he went into Spain, and in September following Mr. Langhorn's Sons came thither; the one entering himſelf a Scholar at the Engliſh College in Madrid, and the other at Valladolid, in order to qualify themſelves for Popiſh Orders. That the Deponent, coming to England, 1679. 31 Car. II. land, brought Mr. Langhorn Letters from his Sons, and told him, he thought they would enter into the Jeſuits Society; at which Mr. Langhorn rejoiced, being himſelf a great Votary to the Jeſuits; but ſaid, he hoped, if they continued in the World as ſecular Prieſts, they would ſuddenly have great Promotions in England, for Things would not long continue in the Poſture they were: That the Deponent afterwards carried a Letter from Mr. Langhorn to the Fathers at St. Omers; wherein he ſaid, he had written to Father le Chaiſe about their Concerns, but that Mr. Coleman had been ſo large, it was not neceſſary to trouble them with longer Epiſtles. In another Letter Mr. Langhorn expreſſed his great Care for carrying on the Deſign of the Catholicks; and ſaid, the Parliament began to flag in promoting the Proteſtant Religion, and now they had a fair Opportunity to begin and give the Blow: That after the Conſult in April 1678. the Deponent had Orders from the Provincial to give Langhorn an Account what Reſolutions paſſed at the Conſult; and he told him, that Father Cary was ordered to go Procurator to Rome; and that there was a Reſolve ſigned, that Pickering and Grove ſhould go on with their Attempt to aſſaſſinate the King; and Mr. Langhorn lifted up his Hands, and prayed God it might have good Succeſs: That the Deponent ſaw, in Mr. Langhorn's Study in the Temple, a Commiſſion for the Lord Arundel of Wardour, to be Lord Chancellor of England; another to the Lord Powis, to be Lord Treaſurer; a third to the Lord Stafford, to be Pay-Maſter of the Army; and another for Langhorn, to be Judge Advocate: As alſo Commiſſions to the Lord Bellaſis to be General, and to the Lord Petre to be Lieutenant-General, and a Commiſſion to Coleman to be Secretary of State. Theſe were all granted by an Authority derived from the Pope, and ſigned Johannes Paulus de Oliva, with the Jeſuits Mark, being a Croſs through the Letters J H S. That he ſaw about fifty more Commiſſions for inferior Officers, in the Priſoner's Cuſtody: That the Priſoner gave the Deponent ſome Original Letters from le Chaiſe, and Anderton Rector of the College at Rome, to carry to the Fathers, which were in Anſwer to ſome Letters the Priſoner had ſent them; and therein le Chaiſe aſſured him of his Conſtancy in aſſiſting the Society to carry on the ſaid Cauſe; and ſaid, he need not doubt but the French King would ſtand by them. Oates alſo depoſed, that the Priſoner Langhorn was Solicitor to the Society, and upon his ſoliciting the Benedictines for Money, the Deponent heard they promiſed ſix thouſand Pounds towards carrying on the Cauſe. He remembered alſo, that the Priſoner was diſguſted with Sir George Wakeman, becauſe he was not contented with 10000*l.* for poiſoning the King; ſaid he was a covetous Man, a narrow ſoul'd Phyſician, and that, it being a publick Concern, he might have done it for nothing.

Then the Priſoner demanded, what Time Oates went to St. Omers, and when he returned to England?

Oates anſwered, he went to St. Omers about the 10th of December, and ſtaid there till he came to England in April 1678. and that he did not remain in England above twenty Days; and that Father Williams, Father Marſh, the Rector of Liege, Sir John Warner, Sir Thomas Preſton, Mr. Pool, and Sir Robert Bret, came to England with him. 1679. 31 Car. II.

Mr. Langhorn demanded, if he came from Dover to London in the Coach, or Horſe-back?

Oates anſwered, the Queſtion was ſo ſudden, he could not be poſitive. Langhorn demanded, where he lodged in Town? Oates anſwered, he lodged at Mr. Groves's three or four Nights, in Town. Oates confounded.

Langhorn demanded, when he turned Papiſt?

Oates anſwered, in February or March, 1676.

The Priſoner aſked, if he left his Vicarage before he had turned Papiſt?

Oates anſwered, it was not very long before.

Langhorn demanded, if he became a Jeſuit? The Chief Juſtice ſaid, he muſt not aſk him a Queſtion that brought him in Danger: Langhorn replied, that Oates, in one of his Narratives, ſaid, There came over nine of us, All Jeſuits; and demanded of Oates, if ever he converſed with him, or ſaw him, after he acquainted him with the Conſult?

Oates anſwered, once or twice after he came to England again in July: That he uſed to go to the Priſoner's Chamber in the Temple, and not to his Houſe; for the Priſoner ſaid his Wife was a Proteſtant, and but Ambes-ace turned from a Devil; and therefore he ſhould not come to his Houſe.

Then Bedloe was ſworn, and depoſed, that Mr. Coleman and Mr. Harcourt ſent him with Letters to le Chaiſe and Father Stapleton; and that Coleman took the Letters unſealed, and carried the Deponent with him to Mr. Langhorn's Chamber, who regiſtered them in a Book; and then Mr. Coleman ſealed them up, and gave them to the Deponent to carry to le Chaiſe and Stapleton. The Purport of the Letter to le Chaiſe was, that they waited only for his Anſwer, how far he had proceeded with the French King about ſending the Money; for they only wanted Money; every Thing elſe was ready: The Engliſh Catholicks were ſafe, having procured all Places and Offices to be given to Catholicks, or ſuch as they thought would be ſo: That all the Garriſons were already in their Hands, or ready to be put into them: And in the Letter to Father Stapleton it was ſaid, they had ſo fair an Opportunity, having a King ſo eaſy to believe what was dictated to him by their Party, and the French King at the ſame Time ſo powerful, that if they miſſed this Opportunity, they muſt deſpair of ever having ſuch another to introduce Popery in England. Bedloe's Evidence.

That the Priſoner did not only regiſter theſe Letters, but every Penny of Money that was paid, and all Tranſactions in Relation to this Concern: That the Deponent brought Letters alſo from the Catholicks abroad to the Popiſh Lords here, which were regiſtered by Langhorn; the Tenor whereof was, that the Lord Bellaſis, and the reſt of the Party, ſhould be in a Readineſs; for they had provided Iriſh Troops in Spain, to be ſhipped at the Groyn, who ſhould land at Milford Haven, and join the Lord Powis in Wales.

Then Oates added to his former Evidence, that the Congregation at Rome contributed eight hundred thouſand Crowns to be ſent into England; and Langhorn, the Priſoner, enquired concerning cerning that Money, and had Knowledge of the Receipt of it in France, as he told Father Kaines and Father Fenwicke in July or Auguſt.

The Priſoner's Defence.

Mr. Langhorn objected to the Teſtimony of the Witneſſes, that they confeſſed themſelves Partakers in the Crime they accuſed him of; but was anſwered, they were good Witneſſes notwithſtanding, though they had not had their Pardons; but they had ſeveral Pardons: To which he replied, that they came under the ſame Reaſon of Law with an Approver; and though the Approver was pardoned, the Appellee ought to be diſcharged by Law; but objected further, that they had received, or expected, Rewards for their Evidence.

Oates and Bedloe brag of their Riches

In anſwer to this, Oates ſaid, he had diſburſed ſix or ſeven hundred Pounds out of his Pocket, and did not know when he ſhould ſee it again: And Bedloe ſaid, he was ſo far from gaining by it, that he was ſeven hundred Pounds out of Pocket.

Then the Court interpoſed, and ſaid, it was but reaſonable the Witneſſes ſhould have a Maintenance from the King; and, unleſs they could prove any Thing was given them by Contract, or by Way of Subornation, it could not be made an Objection.

Langhorn objects, the Witneſſes ſwore for Gain;

Langhorn anſwered, Bedloe had received 500 l. for his Evidence; and though it might be reaſonable to offer a Reward, by Proclamation, for the Diſcovery of a Perſon charged with a Crime, when he abſconded; yet he thought it hard, when a Priſoner was in Cuſtody, Witneſſes ſhould be brought in againſt him by ſuch Means.

Anſwered, this was the Wiſdom of the Parliament.

The Court replied, that the offering a Reward for the further Diſcovery of the Plot could be no Objection to the Teſtimony of the Witneſſes; that this was to fly in the Face, and reflect on the Integrity and Wiſdom, of the King, Lords, and Commons, for it was done by the Advice of all three; and demanded, if his whole Defence lay in Objections to the Incompetency of the Witneſſes?

The Priſoner's Hardſhips.

The Priſoner ſaid, his whole Defence muſt lie in diſabling the Witneſſes, for he had been kept cloſe Priſoner in Newgate, from the 17th of October to that Day ſev'night, and converſed with no Friend or Relation: He had not ſo much as heard what he was charged with, nor could foreſee what theſe Men would teſtify againſt him.

His Witneſſes.

Then the Priſoner called his Witneſſes, and proved that Oates did not come from St. Omers to England in the Company he pretended; and that he was at St. Omers all the Time he had ſworn he was in England, particularly in the Months of April and May; which was atteſted by near twenty Witneſſes, as well Students of St. Omers, (who ſaw him at Dinner in the College almoſt every Day, and converſed with him,) as others.

Further Partiality of the Court.

Then Mr. Langhorn deſired, (ſince Oates had affirmed he was ſix or ſeven hundred Pounds out of Purſe) he might examine a Witneſs or two, to ſhew he was very poor and indigent before he became an Evidence: But the Court anſwered, This was nothing to the Purpoſe.

The Priſoner then deſired he might read the Copy of a Record in the Houſe of Lords, to ſhew that Bedloe ſwore he had no other Perſon to accuſe, either in the Houſe, or out of the Houſe, than thoſe he then charged; and he, the Priſoner, was not one of the Perſons mentioned there.

The Court anſwered, perhaps Bedloe's Memory failed him; he ought not to be concluded by what he ſaid there.

The Priſoner demanded of Oates, if he knew that he diſtributed any of the Commiſſions he mentioned?

Oates anſwered, the Priſoner ſaid he had diſtributed them; and particularly, that he ſent one, by his Son, to the Lord Arundel of Wardour, to be Commiſſary-General: And Oates ſaid he had other Evidence, but he thought it proper not to mention it now, becauſe it would diſcover his Evidence againſt the Popiſh Lords; deſiring the Court to excuſe him, becauſe he reſerved it for another Trial.

Oates owns he ſuppreſſed Part of his Evidence.

Then the King's Counſel called the ſame Witneſſes, to prove Oates was in London, at the Time of the Conſult, in April and in May, 1678, as they had done in the preceding Trials of the Jeſuits, (to which the Reader is referred) and they gave the ſame Teſtimony in this.

Clay's Evidence.

And Clay, a Prieſt, depoſed, that he met Oates at Mr. Charles Howard's in Arundel-Houſe, twice in the Year 1678. once in April, and another Time in the Beginning of May: That he converſed with Oates; and Mr. Howard told the Deponent, Oates had ſome Thoughts of being a Jeſuit.

Then the Priſoner called Mr. Charles Howard as an Evidence, who depoſed, that Oates was at his Houſe in the Year 1677, and after July in the Year 1678. but he did not remember he was there in May: as Clay depoſed.

The Priſoner, proceding in his Defence, ſaid, as he had proved that Oates had falſified in one Point of his Teſtimony, namely, as to his being at the Conſult in April 1678. and as to the other Perſons he ſwore were there; particularly Sir Thomas Preſton, Sir John Warner, and Mr. Poole, who were proved to be in the Low Countries at that Time, he ought not to be believed in the reſt; proteſting that he had not ſeen Oates ſince November 1677. when he brought him Letters out of Spain from his Sons: And deſired the Court would obſerve, that he had but one Week's Time to prepare for his Defence; and was forced to take ſuch Informations as his Friends could pick up to anſwer Oates's Narrative, ſuppoſing he would have given the ſame Evidence here as he had done at former Trials. That it could not be ſuppoſed the young Gentlemen, who came over from St. Omers, came with any ill Deſign, or were bribed by Rewards to ſay what they did; for he never ſaw the Faces of any of them till his Trial.

To which Chief Juſtice North replied, they were all Papiſts, and ſpoke in a common Cauſe.

Mr. Langhorn ſaid, if they were not to be believed, becauſe they were Papiſts and Friends, neither were the other Witneſſes to be believed, becauſe they were Enemies. And as to Bedloe's Evidence, it was not probable that he, (the Priſoner) in his way of Practice, ſhould become a Clerk to regiſter Letters, and keep the Accounts of a Religious Order; and it was ſtill more improbable that he ſhould admit Bedloe to be privy to 1679. 31 Car II. those Accounts, being one he could not tell whether he had ever ſeen before. If he could have gueſſed what Bedloe would have charged him with, he might have been better prepared for his Defence: For his Part, he made uſe of ſuch Witneſſes as his Friends brought; he never ſaw them before they appeared in Court; while the other Side had Time to prepare and get their Witneſſes together; and he hoped he ſhould lie under no Diſadvantage on Account of Religion, for that would look as if they condemned him purely for his Religion. He ſaid, he abſolutely diſclaimed all Principles of Diſloyalty, and believed it was Damnation to any one that went about to kill the King, and concluded with recommending his Cauſe to the Court and the Jury.

The Directions of the Lord Chief Juſtice to the Jury.

The Lord Chief Juſtice, in ſumming up the Evidence, obſerved that the Priſoners Witneſſes came over to ſave their Brethren the Papiſts, who were about to be hanged for the Plot; they were ſent over for that Purpoſe, and then ſpeaking to no other Time, but the Months of April and May, 1678. would incline Men to believe it. He obſerved further, that the Lawfulneſs of depoſing and killing Kings of a different Religion, was a Doctrine they avowed in Print, and that they taught and practiſed all ſorts of Lying and Equivocation, as lawful to propagate their Faith; and it was not improbable that theſe St. Omers Boys, bred up in their Colleges, had theſe Principles inſtilled into them; that their Diſpenſations, Pardons, and Indulgencies for Breach of Vows, were ſtill worſe, and rendered them unfit for human Society, or to have any Faith or Credit given to their Teſtimony; although it might be fair to hear what they ſaid: And that there was not only this in it, but Oates had juſtified his being in London, by ſeven or eight Witneſſes, who expreſly contradicted the others Teſtimony; and though there were ſome Witneſſes, who depoſed, that Sir Thomas Preſton, and Sir John Warner, were on the other Side the Water, who were not contradicted by any other Witneſſes, yet if the reſt were not to be believed as to Oates's being there, neither were theſe: Indeed, there ſtood a Gentleman at the Bar for his Life; but if Mr. Oates ſaid true, Their Lives, their Liberties, their King, their Religion, and all were at Stake: They knew the cruel Principles of the Papiſts by Experience, and could not be blamed for taking care of themſelves. The Plot was proved as clear as the Day, by Oates and his Teſtimony; was confirmed by that which could never be anſwered, viz. The Letter found among Mr. Harcourt's Papers, who was one of the Conſpirators, giving an Account that the Conſult was to be held the 24th of April, 1678. as Mr. Oates had depoſed; and they did not read that Letter as an Evidence againſt Mr. Langhorn in particular, but as a Proof of the Plot in general.

The Priſoner begged leave to obſerve that Oates might eaſily know of this Congregation, there being ſeveral other Letters of Summons ſent over to the Fathers at St. Omers, for the holding that Congregation, which was like the Meeting of a Dean and Chapter; and there was Reaſon for requiring Secreſy, the Fathers being in great Danger if they were taken, on account of their Popiſh Orders.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, there was no Occaſion for extraordinary Caution, the Papiſts being uſed with great Indulgence at that Time; and having concluded his Charge, went off the Bench with the reſt of the Judges, leaving Mr. Recorder Jeffries to take the Verdict, and the Jury withdrawing, after a very ſhort Receſs, brought the Priſoner in GUILTY: Whereupon the Recorder ſaid, it was a Verdict according to the Juſtice of the Evidence. 1679. 31 Car. II. Langhorn convicted.

Then Mr. Whitebread, and the other four Jeſuits tried the Day before, were ſet to the Bar, together with Mr. Langhorn, and the Recorder made a Speech to them; wherein having expatiated on the Heinouſneſs of the Priſoners Crimes, and the bloody Principles on which their Religion was founded, he ſaid he was much concerned for Mr. Langhorn, who was arrived to great Eminence in his Profeſſion; but that he too had not only treſpaſſed againſt all the Rules of Chriſtianity, but againſt the Rules of his Profeſſion, and could not be ignorant what an Offence it was to attempt any Injury againſt the Perſon of the King, or to endeavour to introduce a foreign Power. He ſaid, their Crimes had been ſo fully proved, that no Perſon there could have any Doubt of their Guilt, and that there was not the leaſt Reaſon to ſuſpect the Credibility of the Witneſſes produced againſt them: They had been fully heard, and ſtood fairly convicted of the Crimes they were accuſed; and having again inveighed againſt their Principles, bid them conſider the Tribunal, whither they were going; concluding with abundance of pious Exhortations: After which he pronounced the uſual Sentence in Caſes of High-Treaſon. Sentence paſſed on the five Jeſuits, and Mr. Langhorn

The five Jeſuits being drawn on Sledges from Newgate to Tyburn, on Friday the 20th of June, obtained leave to ſpeak to the People: Whereupon Thomas Whitebread, their Provincial, ſaid, I am now going to make my Appearance before the Face of Almighty God, and receive a final Judgment for all my Thoughts, Words, and Actions, and cannot be ſuppoſed to ſpeak any thing but Truth; therefore in his moſt holy Preſence, and as I hope for Mercy from his divine Majeſty, I do declare, that I go out of the World as innocent, and free from any Guilt of theſe Things laid to my Charge, as I came into the World from my Mother's Womb: And I do from my Heart, renounce all manner of Pardons, Abſolutions, Diſpenſations for Swearing, as Occaſions or Intereſt may ſeem to require, which ſome have been pleaſed to lay to our Charge as Matter of our Practice and Doctrine, but is a Thing ſo unjuſtifiable and unlawful, that I believe, and ever did, that no power on Earth can authorize me, or any body, ſo to do. I heartily forgive thoſe that falſly accuſed me: Time will make it appear, they have wronged me, and their own Souls a great deal more: I pray God bleſs his Majeſty, both temporally and eternally, which has been my daily Prayer for him, and is all the Harm I ever intended, or imagined againſt him: And I do with this my laſt Breath, in the Preſence of God, declare, that I never did learn, teach, or believe; nor can, as a Catholick, believe, that it is lawful, upon any Occaſion or Pretence whatſoever, to deſign or contrive the Death of his Majeſty, or Whitebread's Speech at Tyburn.

or any Hurt to his Perſon; but on the contrary, all are bound to obey, defend, and preſerve his ſacred Perſon to the utmoſt of their Power. And I do moreover declare, that this is the true and plain Senſe of my Soul, in the Sight of him who knows the Secrets of my Heart, and as I hope to ſee his bleſſed Face, without any Equivocation, or mental Reſervation. What remains for me now to do, is, to recommend my Soul into the Hands of my bleſſed Redeemer, by whoſe only Merits and Paſſion I hope for Salvation.

Harcourt's Speech.

William Harcourt made a Speech of the like Tenor, proteſting he was innocent both of the Plot, and Godfrey's Death; and declared he did not write that Letter concerning the Diſpatch of Godfrey, as Dugdale had depoſed.

Turner's Speech.

Anthony Turner declared, he was never preſent at any Conſult or Meeting, where any Propoſal was offered, or Reſolve made, for taking away the King's Life; and if he had known of any Plot, he ſhould have thought himſelf obliged in Conſcience to diſcover it: Proteſted he was never once at Tixall, the Lord Aſton's Houſe, in the Year 1678, though the Witneſs had ſworn he was laſt September at a treaſonable Conſult of the Jeſuits there, in Mr. Ewers's Chamber. He acknowledged he was at the Congregation of the Jeſuits on the 24th of April, 1678, but, in that Meeting, as he hoped for Salvation, proteſted they meddled not with State-Affairs, but only treated about the Concerns of their Province, as they uſually did every third Year all the World over, without Offence to Temporal Princes.

The Sheriff told him, he obſerved they only juſtified themſelves, but the People would not believe a Word they ſaid; and therefore bid him ſpend his Time in Prayer, and he ſhould not think the Time too long.

Then Turner made further Proteſtations of his Innocence, and ſaid, As for thoſe Catholicks I have converſed with ſince the Noiſe of the Plot, I proteſt before God, in the Words of a dying Man, I never heard any one of them, either Prieſt or Layman, expreſs the leaſt Knowledge of a Plot againſt the King, for the advancing the Catholick Religion: Then he prayed for the King, and declared, he forgave all thoſe that had falſly accuſed him.

Gavan's Speech.

John Gavan alſo made a Speech, and ſaid, I am come now to the laſt Scene of Mortality, to the Hour of my Death; an Hour which is the Horizon between Time and Eternity; an Hour which muſt either make me a Star to ſhine for ever in the Empire above, or a Firebrand to burn everlaſtingly among the damned Souls in Hell below; an Hour in which, if I deal ſincerely, and with a hearty Sorrow acknowledge my Crimes, I may hope for Mercy; but if I falſly deny them, I muſt expect nothing but eternal Damnation; and therefore what I ſpeak in this great Hour, I hope you will believe. And now, in this Hour, I do ſolemnly ſwear, proteſt and vow, by all that is ſacred in Heaven and Earth, and as I hope to ſee the Face of God in Glory, that I am as innocent as the Child unborn, of thoſe treaſonable Crimes which Mr. Oates and Mr. Dugdale have ſworn againſt me at my Trial; nor do I make uſe of any Equivocation, or mental Reſervation, to palliate the Truth: Neither do I make uſe of any Diſpenſations from the Pope, or any Body elſe; or of any Oath of Secrecy, or any Abſolution, in Confeſſion or out of Confeſſion, to deny the Truth; but I ſpeak in the plain Senſe which the Words bear; and if I do ſpeak in any other Senſe, to palliate or hide the Truth, I wiſh with all my Soul, that God may exclude me from his heavenly Glory, and condemn me to the loweſt Place of Hell-Fire. 1679. 31 Car. II.

And I think it my Duty to proteſt to you, with my laſt dying Words, that neither I in particular, nor the the Jeſuits in general, hold the King-killing Doctrine, or any ſuch Opinion; but utterly abhor and deteſt it. Mariana, the Spaniſh Jeſuit, is the only one I know of, that holds this Opinion, and he does not defend it abſolutely, but only problematically; for which his Book was called in, and that Opinion expunged and cenſured. I refer you to that Royal Author Henry the Fourth of France, who, in a publick Oration he pronounced in Defence of the Jeſuits, declared, that he was very well ſatisfied with the Jeſuits Doctrine, concerning Kings; and indeed the whole Catholick World is the Jeſuits Advocate. Do not Germany, France, Italy, Spain, and Flanders, truſt the Education of their Youth to them, and truſt their own Souls to be governed by them in the Adminiſtration of the Sacraments? and can it be imagined ſo many great Kings and Princes ſhould do, or permit this to be done in their Kingdoms, if the Jeſuits were Men of ſuch damnable Principles as they are now taken to be in England?

As to Mr. Oates and Mr. Dugdale, I call God to Witneſs, that they by falſe Oaths have brought me to this untimely End: I heartily forgive them, and pray God to grant them Repentance. I have nothing elſe to do more, my great God, but to caſt my ſelf into the Arms of your Mercy. I believe you are One divine Eſſence, and Three divine Perſons: I believe the Second Perſon of the Trinity became Man to redeem me; and I believe you are an eternal Rewarder of the Good, and an eternal Chaſtiſer of the Bad: In fine, I believe all you have revealed for your own infinite Veracity: I hope in you above all Things, for your infinite Fidelity; and I love you above all Things for your infinite Beauty and Goodneſs; and I am heartily ſorry that ever I offended ſo great a God. I am contented to undergo an ignominious Death for the Love of you, my dear Jeſu, ſeeing you have been pleaſed to undergo an ignominious Death for the Love of me.

Fenwicke's Speech.

John Fenwicke, made the like ſolemn Proteſtations of his Innocence, both as to the Plot and Godfrey's Murder, the reſt had done: Whereupon How the Sheriff told him, he believed he had a Hand in Godfrey's Murder; Fenwicke anſwered, Now I am a dying Man, do you think I would damn my Soul? To which the Sheriff replied, I wiſh you all the Good I can; but I'll aſſure you, I believe never a Word you ſay.

Then Fenwicke went on and ſaid, In the Words of a dying Man, and as I hope for Mercy at the Hands of God, before whom I muſt ſhortly appear, and give an Account of all my Actions,

1679. 31 Car. II.

Actions, I do again declare, that what I have said is true; and I hope Christian Charity will not let you think, that by the last Act of my Life I would cast away my Soul, by sealing up my last Breath with a damnable Lye.

The five Jesuits executed.

After which, having performed their private Devotions, in which they met with some Interruption from Sheriff How, the Cart was drawn away, and they were all hanged together till they were dead, and then cut down and quartered.

Mr. Langhorn having been reprieved from Time to Time, either to give him an Opportunity of settling his Affairs with his Clients, or in hopes of making an Evidence of him, was at length drawn on a Sledge from Newgate to Tyburn, on the 14th of July; where he made no Speech before his Execution, but left a Paper with the Sheriff, of the following Tenor, (viz.)

Mr. Langhorn's Paper delivered to the Sheriff.

1. That he acknowledged King Charles II. to be his lawful Sovereign.

2. That he did, in his Soul, believe, that neither the Pope, nor any Prince, Potentate, or foreign Authority, nor the People of England, or any Authority, out of this Kingdom or within the same, have any Right to dispossess his Majesty of the Crown, or depose him for any Cause, or pretended Cause, whatsoever; or to license any Subject to bear Arms against his Majesty, or take away his Life, or do him any bodily Harm; or to disturb the Government, as established by Law, or to alter the said Government or Religion established, by Force.

3. That he never was guilty, in his most secret Thoughts, of any Treason, or Misprision of Treason.

4. That he never said to Oates, or any other Person, that if his Sons continued in the World as secular Priests, they would suddenly have great Promotions in England, for Things would not continue long in the Posture they were; or any Thing to that Effect.

5. That he never wrote any Letter or Paper to, or received any Letter or Paper from, la Chaise, or any other French Jesuit, or from Father Anderton, Cardinal Barbarino, or any other Cardinal; nor did he ever see any Letter or Paper purporting to be written to the said la Chaise, Anderton, or Cardinal Barbarino, unless the printed Letters in Mr. Coleman's Trial, which he never saw any where but in the printed Narrative of that Trial; nor did he ever hear any mention made of the Name of la Chaise, before he read the said printed Narrative.

6. That he never wrote, or entered in any Book, any Letters, or Copies of Letters, written by the said Coleman to any Person whatever.

7. That he never entered or registered in any Book or Paper, or caused to be entered or registered, any Act, Consult, Determination, Order, or Resolve, passed, decreed, or agitated in any Congregation, Consult, Chapter, or Assembly of the Society or Order of Jesuits, or of any other Religious Order; nor was any such ever communicated to him.

8. That he never saw Bedloe, who gave Evidence against him, till he saw him at his Trial, to his Knowledge.

9. That after the Month of November 1677. he never saw or spoke with Titus Oates, the other Witness, till he saw him at his Trial.

10. That he never saw any Commission, Patent, or Grant, to his Knowledge, under, or pretended to be under, the Hand or Seal of Johannes Paulus de Oliva, or any other General of the Jesuits, unless the Paper or Instrument produced and shewn him at his Trial; which, whether it was signed or sealed by the said de Oliva, he did not know. 1679. 31 Car. II.

11. That he never wrote, or procured to be written, any treasonable Letter or Paper, in any Book or Paper whatever.

12. That he believed, if he had known of any treasonable Design against the King, or to alter the Government or Religion established, and should have concealed it, it would have been a Sin unto Death, and deserved eternal Damnation.

13. That he believed, it was not lawful to lie, or speak any Untruth, or to commit any Sin that Good may come of it; and that it was not in the Power of any Priest, or Pope, or of God himself, to give him a Licence to lie or speak any Untruth; for Almighty God, who was perfect Truth, could not give any one a Licence to commit a Sin against his own Essence.

And he solemnly declared, in the Presence of God, that he made this Declaration and Protestation in the plain and ordinary Sense of the Words, as they are commonly understood by English Protestants, and the Courts of Justice, without any Evasion, Equivocation, Delusion, or mental Reservation whatsoever; and without any Dispensation, or Pardon, or Absolution already granted by the Pope, or any other Authority whatsoever; and without the Hope, Expectation, or Desire, of any such Dispensation; and without thinking he could be acquitted before God or Man, or absolved of this Declaration. And he left it to the Judgment of all good Men, Whether they would believe what he had thus solemnly affirmed and sworn in his present Circumstances, or what had been sworn by his Accusers: And having declared he died a Roman Catholick, he said, he believed his Religion was the sole Cause that moved his Accusers to charge him with Treason, and the only Ground that could give them any Hope to be believed; or which could move the Jury to believe the Evidence of such Men.

That he had not only a Pardon offered him, but also great Preferment and Estates, since he was condemned, if he would have forsaken his Religion, and owned himself guilty of the Crime charged upon him, AND WOULD HAVE CHARGED THE SAME CRIMES UPON OTHERS; but he blessed God, who had preserved him from yielding to those Temptations, and strengthned him, rather to chuse this Death than stain his Soul with Sin, and charge others, against Truth, with Crimes, of which he did not know that any Person was guilty.

Then he prayed for the King, and that his Majesty might never fall into such Hands as his Royal Father fell into. He prayed also for Oates and Bedloe, and all that had been accessary to the shedding his innocent Blood, or preventing the King's Mercy being extended to him; for all those that rejoiced at his Execution; and for all those who should be so unchristianly uncharitable as to disbelieve, and refuse to give Credit

Credit to the Proteſtations he then made. He prayed that God would not lay his Blood to the Charge of the Nation; and laſtly prayed for thoſe that had ſhewn any Charity for him.

Mr. Langhorn executed.

Mr. Langhorn having delivered this Paper to the Sheriff, and performed his Devotions, the Executioner did his Office.

Remarks on the Trials of the five Jeſuits and Langhorn.

The Objection made by Whitebread and Fenwicke, That they had already been tried for the ſame Facts, the Jury charged with them, and the Evidence given againſt them, and then the Jury diſmiſſed without giving a Verdict, was certainly an Objection of great Weight: For every Priſoner, with whom a Jury is charged in Capital Caſes, ought either to be convicted, or acquitted at that Time *; or elſe inſtead of one Trial, a Man may be made to undergo twenty Trials for the ſame Facts, when the Court find the Evidence againſt him defective. But this was not all; Oates and Bedloe both confeſſed, they took the Liberty to contract and enlarge their Evidence as they ſaw fit, and conſequently were both perjured, being ſworn to ſpeak the Whole Truth at every Trial, as the Priſoners themſelves obſerved; and they appear to have been rather encouraged than reprehended by the Court for this infamous Practice. We have an Intention (ſay both Oates and Bedloe) to reſerve our Evidence for the Deſtruction of greater Men, who might have been prepared to defend themſelves, if we had diſcovered what we intended to ſwear againſt them at the former Trial, and therefore we thought fit to conceal Part of our Evidence: We thought it of more Conſequence, ſays Bedloe, to diſpatch the Lords in the Tower, than take away the Life of an old Prieſt or two; for neither Oates or Bedloe imagined that theſe Prieſts could ever have been tried again, and brought a ſecond Time in danger of their Lives, for the very Facts they had been tried for before. And indeed I do not remember one Inſtance of the like Nature in all the Volumes of State Trials; though Chief Juſtice North was pleaſed to ſay, it was often done, and all the Judges declared it to be Law. The Opinions of Judges too often vary with the Times, and that which was Law one Day is not ſo another.

* Trials per pais 202. 2 Hawk. 459.

How did the King's Counſel, and the whole Bench of Judges, endeavour to enflame and prejudice the Jury againſt the Priſoners! It is often ſaid, indeed, that the Judges ought not only to be impartial, but to be Counſel for the Priſoners; and inſtead of interpreting and wreſting the Laws or the Evidence to their Deſtruction, as is but too common, they ought to take Care that they do not ſuffer in their Defence, by their own Ignorance or Inadvertency: But here the whole Court laboured, with all their Skill and Influence, to get the Priſoners convicted. They were prepoſſeſſed, and prejudiced themſelves with an Opinion of the Truth of the Plot, and ſeemed to think the Law ought to be ſtretched, and every reaſonable Maxim overruled, that tended to acquit and bring off the Priſoners.

They told the Jury, that the Teſtimony of a Papiſt was not to be believed, with or without Oath: But, were we to turn the Tables, and ſuppoſe a Proteſtant tried in a Popiſh Country, and the Judges declared, no Proteſtant was to be believed, ſhould we not have thought ſuch a Speech highly injurious? And, as the Priſoners obſerved, if we will admit no Evidence but that of Proteſtants, we muſt break off all Commerce and Intercourſe with Popiſh Countries, and our People muſt expect to be uſed there as we uſe the Papiſts here. But what is ſtill more ſhocking is, that the Chief Juſtice ſhould obſerve, that the Priſoners Defence conſiſted only in catching at a Point of Time, and direct the Jury not to govern their Judgments by a Miſtake of ſeven or eight Days; for what Defence could be more proper, when they were charged with being at treaſonable Conſults, than to ſhew they were at very diſtant Places at the Times the Witneſſes ſwore to?

We find alſo, that the Court would not ſuffer the Priſoners to ſhew the Witneſſes contradicted themſelves, and ſwore, at This, contrary to the Evidence they gave at former Trials, which was ſurely a Hardſhip: But the greateſt Hardſhip, as Mr. Langhorn obſerves, was, that Witneſſes ſhould be hired, by ſuch extravagant Rewards, to deſtroy them.

Let a Man be never ſo innocent, a Reward of 500 l. and ſo many Honours and Privileges as theſe Witneſſes procured to themſelves, by their Perjuries, muſt raiſe up a Multitude of raſcally Knights of the Poſt, to ſwear whatever is dictated by their crafty Principals; eſpecially where downright Swearing is thought ſufficient, without one probable Circumſtance to ſupport their Teſtimony. It was to no Purpoſe to object to the Characters of the Witneſſes, that they were Men of infamous Lives, that made a Trade of Swearing; that they did not only confeſs themſelves guilty of the Crimes they accuſed the Priſoners of, but many more: That all of them acknowledged themſelves perjured, and Oates, that he had turned Papiſt and Jeſuit, received Sacraments, and entered into the moſt ſolemn Oaths and Engagements, on Purpoſe to betray thoſe that relieved his Neceſſities. That Dugdale had cheated his Lord; and that Bedloe acknowledged, he had twice provided Fewel to ſet Fire to the City of London; but theſe Men's Teſtimony was preferred to that of Numbers of Papiſts of the beſt Quality and Characters, and againſt Men who had never been accuſed of any thing Criminal before this pretended Plot. The Chief Juſtice Scroggs, the Recorder Jeffries, and moſt of the Judges, lived to be convinced of their Error, and repent their forward Zeal, and even ſuffered by the like popular Clamours. Oates had the Impudence, a very little afterwards, to prefer Articles, to the King and Council, againſt the Chief Juſtice himſelf, as a Criminal and Favourer of the Plot. In the next Reign we find Oates convicted of Perjury in theſe Trials, upon two Indictments, by above forty Witneſſes, of which ſeveral were Proteſtants of Quality. Prance, another of the Witneſſes, retracted his Evidence, and declared, he was tortured into a Compliance with the Faction, and compelled to be an Evidence to ſave his Life. Another of the Witneſſes, that ſwore he dined with Oates at Iſlington, alſo retracted his Evidence; inſomuch, that there is ſcarce a Man in England at this Day, except the Fanaticks, who were the real Forgers of the Plot, and look upon themſelves as bound in Honour to ſupport the Credit of it, but believes the whole Charge to be a Sham; and that the principal Deſign of the Faction, in trumping up this Plot, was the ſame as that of their Fore-fathers, who by their Clamours againſt Popery, led the Way to the Ruin both of Church and State.

It is but too evident, from dear-bought, repeated Experience, that whenever the Sectaries and Republicans clamour loudeſt againſt Popery and Arbitrary Power, their Views are to deſtroy the Conſtitution, and ſubvert both the Civil and Eccleſiaſtical Eſtabliſhment; for within the Term Popery they ever comprehended Epiſcopacy, when they dare ſpeak out; and by Tyranny we are to underſtand Monarchy, however gentle and limited by the moſt equitable Laws.

Our Biſhops, they tell us, are the Servants, and make up Part of the Train of Antichriſt; our Liturgy is the Maſs in Engliſh; and our Doctrines and Principles the ſame, or no better than thoſe of Rome: The aſſerting the Freedom of the human Mind, and that it is in a Man's Choice whether he will be virtuous or vicious, is by them ſtiled Arminianiſm and Popery; and, when they are out of Play, all Government and Reſtraints put upon Men's Actions, are deemed Invaſions of their native Liberties, and downright Perſecution.

Thus we ſee it was in the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, nothing would ſatisfy the Puritans of thoſe Times, but an entire Subverſion of the Conſtitution; and when the Government did not think fit to humour them ſo far, they publickly preached up Rebellion, and confederated with the bigotted Spaniard, in the memorable Year 1588. to ſubdue their Sovereign, and deliver up their Country to a Popiſh Prince, rather than ſubmit to the Government as then eſtabliſhed in Church and State.—They continued their Clamours through the Reigns of King James I. and King Charles I. till they brought their King to the Block, ſet up their Idol Preſbytery, and their adored Republican Form of Government, as moſt agreeable to that Model, and perfectly eradicated the Royaliſts, and the very Conſtitution with them; which was no ſooner miraculouſly reſtored, but they fell to plotting again, and by the ſame vile Arts their Fathers uſed, a ſecond Time brought this flouriſhing Kingdom to the Brink of Ruin; they raiſed a violent Cry againſt Popery, hired falſe Witneſſes to ſwear the Papiſts intended a general Maſſacre, and fire the City; and ſo infatuated the Generality of the People, that every one who would not credit the improbable Tale, was deemed a Papiſt, and the beſt Friends of the Conſtitution proſecuted, under a Pretence they deſigned the Subverſion of it. And indeed this was their principal Aim, to render the Friends of the Eſtabliſhment ſuſpected of endeavouring to introduce Popery and arbitrary Power: And ſuch an Aſcendant had they gained over the People, that it was not, for ſome Time, in the Power of the King and Government to ſtem the Torrent; but theſe, and Abundance of innocent Men more, were ſacrificed to their Fury, before the Nation was diſabuſed and reſtored to their Senſes.

May we learn, from theſe memorable Inſtances of Fanatick Rage and Artifice, never to be ſo diſtracted with that dreadful Word POPERY as to fall into the Snare again, and become acceſſary to our own Deſtruction, as many honeſt Gentlement ſaw they had been, when it was too late, in the Year 1641. and were not able to retrieve the Miſchiefs they had done, by joining and encouraging the Faction.

From ourſelves our Deſtruction muſt proceed, if ever it is effected: Our Enemies are an inconſiderable impotent Faction, that can never hope for Succeſs, if they do not make a Party among ourſelves, and purchaſe ſome corrupt Members of our Body, that for Handfuls of Barley and Pieces of Bread, are ready to ſell themſelves and their Country: Men void of Thought and Reflection, and all Regard for Futurity; whoſe Eyes are ſo dazzled with the Honours and Preferments that are offered them, that they have loſt all publick Spirit, and for a little preſent Profit will venture the involving themſelves and their Poſterity in the common Ruin.

The Trial of Sir GEORGE WAKEMAN, Bart. and of WILLIAM MARSHAL, WILLIAM RUMLEY, and JAMES CORKER, Benedictine Monks, at the Old-Baily, for High-Treaſon, 18 July, 1679. 31 Car. II.

The Indictment of the firſt three.

SIR George Wakeman, Marſhal, and Rumley, were indicted for High-Treaſon, in compaſſing the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government and Religion eſtabliſhed, and for holding a Conſultation for that End the 30th of Auguſt, 1678. And Sir George Wakeman is further charged with accepting a Commiſſion, derived from the Authority of the See of Rome, to be Phyſician-General to the Popiſh Army, intended to be raiſed; and the ſaid William Marſhal and William Rumley are charged with paying the Sum of 6000 l. towards the effecting and conſummating the ſaid Treaſon.

The Indictment of Corker.

James Corker was indicted for High-Treaſon ſeparately, for being at the treaſonable Conſult, at the White Horſe, on the 24th of April, 1678. and hiring Aſſaſſins to kill the King, and for being an Accomplice with the five Jeſuits, in the reſt of their Treaſons, ſet forth in the Indictment of the ſaid five Jeſuits.

Sir Robert Sawyer's tragical Speech.

Sir Robert Sawyer, in opening the Evidence againſt the Priſoners, ſaid, they ſtood indicted as principal Actors in the late moſt Catholick and bloody Plot: That the Church and State ſeemed to them too trifling a Sacrifice to be offered up to the univerſal Supremacy of Rome: They had determined determined alſo to cut off the King, and reſolved on ſeveral Methods, to perpetrate the horrid Parricide: Some had contrived to ſhoot him, viz. Grove and Pickering, and theſe had been brought to condign Puniſhment; others were incited to ſtab him, and theſe had been brought to Juſtice too; and now a third Sort were to be tried, for endeavouring to take him off by Poiſon. Sir George Wakeman, whoſe Experience and Dependance on the Court gave him great Opportunities, was pitched upon as the propereſt Inſtrument to effect it; and though his Religion might be ſome Inducement to him to commit the Fact, yet was he hired with a Reward of fifteen thouſand Pounds, to undertake the great Employment; of which he had received Part in Hand.

The other Priſoners at the Bar, he ſaid, had been privy to the great Conſult for murdering the King; and though the Jeſuits were the principal Engineers, yet all the other Orders had agreed to contribute to it: The Benedictines in particular, were to furniſh the Sum of ſix thouſand Pounds; concluding that there was no manner of Credit to be given to the ſolemn Aſſeverations of the Conſpirators, who had been executed, and denied their Knowlege of the Plot with their laſt Breath.

The King's Witneſſes.

The King's Witneſſes being called, Dugdale firſt gave a general Account of the Plot, as was practiſed in the former Trials, viz. that the King was to be murdered, the Proteſtants maſſacreed, the City fired, and an Army raiſed to ſubvert the Conſtitution and the Proteſtant Religion.

Prance alſo gave a general Account of the Plot; and Jenniſon was produced to prove Ireland (who was executed) was in London when Oates ſwore he was there; from whence it was inferred, that there was no Credit to be given to Ireland's Aſſeverations at his Death, or to the Witneſſes that had ſworn the contrary.

Oates's Evidence againſt Wakeman.

Then Oates was called as a Witneſs to prove that Sir George Wakeman undertook to poiſon the King, and depoſed, that in July 1678, Aſhby the Jeſuit came ſick to London, and Sir George Wakeman wrote him a Letter, containing Inſtructions how he ſhould order himſelf at the Bath, and in the ſame Letter, informed Aſhby that the Queen would aſſiſt him (Sir George) in poiſoning the King: That two or three Days after, the Deponent ſaw Sir George Wakeman and Aſhby together, and they talked of a Commiſſion to make Sir George Phyſician-General of the Army: That the Fathers Harcourt, Fenwicke, and ſome others, were afterwards ſummoned to attend the Queen at Somerſet-Houſe; and the Deponent (Oates) attended on them thither, and waited in the Anti-Chamber, while the Fathers went in to the Queen; and he heard a Woman's Voice, ſaying, She would aſſiſt them, in propagating the Catholick Religion with her Eſtate, and that ſhe would endure theſe Violations of her Bed no longer; ſhe would aſſiſt Sir George Wakeman in poiſoning the King.

That when the Fathers came out, he (Oates) deſired to ſee the Queen, and had a gracious Smile from her; and while he was in her Preſence, ſhe asked Father Harcourt if he had received the laſt 1000 l. in the ſame Voice he heard without; and there was no other Woman in the Room with the Queen.

That in the ſame Month of July, Aſhby propoſed the giving 10,000 l. to Sir George Wakeman, to poiſon the King, in the Preſence of Fenwicke and Harcourt; and Sir George ſaid, it was too little; and a Letter being ſent immediately to the Provincial Whitebread, to inform him that Sir George Wakeman had refuſed 10,000 l. Whitebread ordered the Fathers in London to propoſe 5000 l. more; and it was accepted, and 5000 l. paid in Part; Sir George Wakeman's Name being ſubſcribed to the Receipt in a Book, which was kept by the Fathers at Wild-Houſe ſometimes, and ſometimes by Mr. Langhorn: That the Tenor of the Receipt was, Memorandum, ſuch a Day 15000 l. was propoſed to Sir George Wakeman, which he accepted; and underneath, Received in Part of this 15000 l. 5000 l. of Father Harcourt, by Order of Edward Coleman.

GEORGE WAKEMAN.

He further depoſed, that the Receipt was dated between the Beginning and Middle of Auguſt, 1678, and that he ſaw Sir George's Commiſſion to be Phyſician-General of the Army, in Sir George's Hands.

The Court demanding, if the Witneſs ever ſaw Sir George write in his Life, he anſwered, he ſaw him in a writing Poſture, with a Note before him; and when Sir George laid down the Pen and went away, he looked on the Note, and the Ink was not dry: That this was the ſame Hand the Letter to Aſhby, and the Receipt for the Money, were written in.

Sir George demanded of Oates, if he had not ſaid poſitively, he did not know the Hand?

Oates anſwered, he did not remember he had ſaid ſo: Sir George demanded, if he had not ſaid before the King and Council, that he never ſaw him, and did not know him?

Oates ſaid, having been up two Nights, and very much fatigued and indiſpoſed, he might not charge him home then; but now he had a proper Light, and could ſee his Face, he knew him to be the ſame Man; for he had ſeen him at Aſhby's Chamber two ſeveral Days, and once was when the 10,000 l. was propoſed to him.

Sir George demanded of Oates, what Day that Propoſal was made to him? He anſwered, it was made by Aſhby, in July, before he went to the Bath, in the Preſence of Harcourt, Ireland, and Fenwicke; whereupon Sir George obſerved, he would be ſure to name Perſons that could be no Witneſſes, and demanded why, if he knew theſe Things when he was before the Council, he ſaid he knew nothing of him, but concerning a Letter written from Aſhby to Fenwicke.

Oates's Evidence againſt Corker.

Oates did not think fit to anſwer the Queſtion at this Time, but proceeded in his Evidence againſt Corker, and depoſed, that he had a Patent from the See of Rome, to be Biſhop of London, and conſented to the Propoſal made by his Brethren, the Benedictine Monks, to contribute 6000 l. towards carrying on the Deſign, and wrote a Letter from Lamſpring in Germany, in Auguſt laſt, that he conſented to it; for he was Preſident of the Benedictines, and therefore his Suffrage was neceſſary.

That

1679. 31 Car. II.

That Corker alſo was privy to the Conſult, and excepted againſt Pickering's being concerned in the Aſſaſſination, becauſe he was an Eccleſiaſtick: It was more proper to employ a Layman, he ſaid, than one that attended at the Altar.

Againſt Marſhal.

As to Marſhal, he depoſed, that he agreed to the contributing 6000 l. and ſaid, (as Corker had done) that it was better to employ a Layman in the Aſſaſſination, than a Religious.

Againſt Rumley.

And as to Rumley, that he alſo was privy to the Contribution of 6000 l. and prayed for the Succeſs of the Deſign.

Corker demanded, if he accepted the Patent to be Biſhop of London? To which Oates anſwered, he ſaw it in Corker's Hands; and he ſaid, he hoped it would not be long before he exerciſed his Epiſcopal Function.

Marſhal's Defence.

Marſhal asked Oates, how long he had known him?

Oates anſwered, two Years, and had ſeen him officiate at the Altar, but never converſed with him. Marſhal then deſired to know what Day the Conſult was held; Oates anſwered, between the Beginning and the Middle of Auguſt; and it was a great Favour he told him the Month: To which Marſhal replied, it was impoſſible to make a Defence, if Circumſtances of Time and Place were not mentioned. Then Oates ſaid, it was held at the Benedictine Convent, either the Day before, or the Day after the Feaſt of the Aſſumption; whereupon Marſhal obſerved, he had now ſworn it poſitively: Oates ſtill ſaid, he would not be poſitive; and the Chief Juſtice ſaid, the Witneſſes were not to be ſnapped up thus: Then Oates ſaid, he verily believed it was the Day before, or the Day after. Marſhal demanded, if this would be Evidence againſt a Murderer or a Highwayman, unleſs the Day were fixed exactly?

Oates then depoſed further, that Marſhal was at another Conſult in the Benedictine Convent the 21ſt of Auguſt, about the Iriſh Affairs, and deſired Commiſſions might be ſent to Ireland for Officers in the Army that was be to raiſed there, and agreed to the Poiſoning the Duke of Ormonde. Then Oates deſired he might withdraw, becauſe he was not well; but the Chief Juſtice told him he muſt ſtay till their Defence was over; but he ſhould have any Refreſhments brought him.

Oates choked with the Queſtions that were asked him.

Bedloe's Evidence againſt Wakeman.

Bedloe being ſworn, depoſed, that he was at Mr. Harcourt's Chamber (as he thought) about the Beginning of Auguſt, 1678, when Sir George Wakeman came in, and taking a Turn about the Room, ſaid, for what am I drilled on thus, in a Concern of this Importance? Is this a Buſineſs to be ſlighted? I have no Performance of your Promiſes. Harcourt anſwered, why, what would you have? We are ready for you: And Sir George replied, then I am ready for you; and Harcourt taking a little Note out of his Cabinet, gave it to Sir George, and ſaid, there is a Bill for you; I have been to Day at Whitehall, and received it by the Queen's Order, from ſuch a Gentleman, and it is upon ſuch a Man for 2000 l. Whereupon Sir George ſaid, tis well Somebody gives me Encouragement; I have more Encouragement from my good Lady and Miſtreſs, than from any of you: Nay, ſays Harcourt, for Encouragement, that you ſhall not want, for the reſt ſhall be paid in due Time; adding, Sir George, this muſt be well followed, and cloſely obſerved, becauſe ſo much depends upon it; for if we ſhould miſs killing him at Windſor, and you ſhould miſs killing him Your Way, we will do it at New-Market: Sir George anſwered, if I find you ready, I will be ready in all Things. The Deponent ſaid, he did not know whether the Word Poiſon was mentioned, but he knew, by what Mr. Harcourt and others had told him, that Poiſon was meant; there was no body in the Room but Sir George, Harcourt, and himſelf; and Sir George asking Mr. Harcourt who he was, Harcourt ſaid, a Friend, that had been long engaged in their Buſineſs, and was to do the next great Work to his: That Sir George going into Fleet-ſtreet the ſame Day, to get his Bill accepted; the Deponent met him there, and asked if it was accepted, and Sir George anſwered it was, and he was to receive the Money that Afternoon: That the Deponent asking Harcourt, after Sir George was gone, whether this was Part of the 15000 l. he anſwered, that Matter was not adjuſted yet; he only received this as a preſent Supply, but it was for the ſame Deſign, if they ſhould fail of other Means; and that Sir George in a ſhort Time received as much as made the 2000 five thouſand Pounds.

Bedloe's Evidence againſt Corker.

As to Corker, Bedloe depoſed, that he heard him talking with Le Fevre, of the Letters they had received from beyond Sea, and how forward they were here in raiſing an Army; what Intereſt they had in the People, and who had been ſent to in the Country.

Corker demanded, if he heard the Words Killing, Army, or Deſign; Bedloe ſaid, every one of thoſe Words were uſed; but he could not ſay how they were placed.

Againſt Marſhal.

As to Marſhal, Bedloe depoſed, that he communicated the Letters, the Deponent brought from beyond Sea, to the Country Gentlemen who were to aſſiſt them in the Deſign, particularly to Sir Francis Ratcliff; and that they treated of the Subverſion of the Government, and introducing Popery: After which Sir George Wakeman and Bedloe had the following Dialogue in Court.

A Dialogue between Wakeman and Bedloe.

Sir George Wakeman. What Day was it I had the Diſcourſe you mention with Harcourt, and received the Bill from him?

Bedloe. It was the Beginning of Auguſt, (but I do not ſpeak to a Day) and you read it aloud.

Wakeman. Had I any acquaintance with you?

Bedloe. No, but Harcourt told you who I was.

Wakeman. And would I, on the firſt Sight of you, diſcover what would endanger my Life?

Bedloe. Ay; and an hundred Times more, if Harcourt had told you I was his Confident.

Wakeman. You do not know me?

Bedloe. Yes I do.

Wakeman. I call God to Witneſs, I don't know I ever ſaw you; and you have a very remarkable Face.

Bedloe. I was well enough acquainted with him when he was at the Bath, but that is ſome Years ſince; then I took Phyſick of him. Wakeman ſaid, I never was there but once, and that was about two Years ago; and though he tells you of a Bill delivered me, he neither mentions the

the Time when, nor on whom it was drawn: Here are all the Marks of Falſhood imaginable; and here is Mr. Chapman, Mayor of Bath, who received the Note Oates mentions, concerning the Directions for Mr. Aſhby at the Bath, and he thought he had Part of the Letter.

Oates ſaid, that Letter was half a Sheet of a Side, cloſe written; and he remembered, Aſhby was to take half a Pint of Milk, Morning and Evening, and have ſo many Strokes of the Pump; but this was ten Days before Aſhby went to the Bath.

The Chief Juſtice demanded, if the Buſineſs of killing the King was in the ſame Letter with the phyſical Directions?

Chapman Witneſs Wakeman.

To which Mr. Oates anſwering Yes, Mr. Chapman appeared as a Witneſs for Sir George, and depoſed, That the 17th of July, 1678. Mr. Aſhby came to the Bath; that he was about eighty Years of Age, very feeble and infirm; and telling the Deponent, that Sir George Wakeman had recommended him to him, and deſired he would provide him a Lodging as near the King and Queen's Bath as he could, the Deponent did ſo; and Aſhby ſhewed him a Letter from Sir George, of which that he produced in Court was the lower Part of half a Sheet of Paper, containing full Directions how Mr. Aſhby was to take Phyſick, and uſe the Bath, and the Pump: That the Deponent took the Latin Bill, which concerned him, and returned the other Part of the Letter to Mr. Aſhby; though his Son and he both read the Engliſh Part, and, upon the Word of a Chriſtian, there was nothing mentioned of killing the King; but he did not know the Hand, neither was there any Name ſubſcribed to it.

The Chief Juſtice obſerved thereupon, that this could not be the ſame Letter Oates mentioned; for that was of Sir George's Hand-writing, and his Name ſubſcribed to it.

Wakeman's Defence.

To which Sir George anſwered, that he never wrote any other Letter, but that which he dictated to his Man, and ſent by Mr. Aſhby to the Bath; and ſaid, that Oates owned before the Lords, that he ſent but one Letter; and had he mentioned the Contents to be ſuch as he had ſworn in Court, he ſhould infallibly have been taken into Cuſtody; but he had his Liberty, and might have gone to Conſtantinople, if he pleaſed, and ſhould certainly have made his Eſcape, if he had been guilty, after he ſaw ſo many apprehended on that Account.

The Court demanded of Mr. Chapman, if there was any Milk mentioned in that Letter? To which Mr. Chapman anſwered, No: It would be ridiculous to drink Milk with the Waters; it would make them curdle.

Oates ſaid, this Letter was not the ſame Hand he ſaw, and the Direction for Milk was while he ſtaid in Town.

Hunt's Evidence for Wakeman.

Then Hunt, Sir George's Servant, depoſed, that his Maſter coming home late and indiſpoſed, and Mr. Aſhby having ſent for Directions for the Bath, Sir George bid him take Pen, Ink, and Paper, and write what he dictated; and when he had written, there was ſome Miſtake in it, which his Maſter bid him correct; and afterwards the Deponent wrote it over fair, and carried it to Mr. Aſhby next Morning; and there was nothing in the Letter but Directions for the Bath, whither Mr. Aſhby was to go the next Morning.

Henningham's Evidence.

Eliz. Henningham, another Witneſs, depoſed, that ſhe was preſent at the Writing of the Letter Sir George dictated to his Servant, and there was no ſuch Thing as Oates mentioned in it.

Sir Philip Lloyd's Evidence.

Sir Philip Lloyd, one of the Clerks of the Council, depoſed, that on the 30th of September, 1678. Oates ſaid before the Council, he had ſeen a Letter from Mr. White to Mr. Fenwicke, at St. Omer's, wherein he wrote Word, that Sir George Wakeman had undertaken the poiſoning the King, and was to have 15000 l. for it, of which 5000 l. were paid by Coleman: That Sir George being called in thereupon, utterly denied it all, and ſeemed under no Concern at the Accuſation: And Oates being called in again, the Lord Chancellor demanded of him, if he knew any Thing perſonally of Sir George; and Oates lifted up his Hands, and ſaid, No: God forbid, he ſhould ſay any Thing againſt Sir George Wakeman, for he knew nothing more againſt him. Oates hereupon appealed to the whole Board, whether he was in a Condition to make any Anſwer at all; for he had been hurried, he ſaid, and ſat up two Nights, inſomuch that he was ſcarce Compos mentis.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, Was Mr. Oates ſo ſpent, that he could not ſay, I have ſeen a Letter under Sir George Wakeman's own Hand? Truly Sir George urged it right, that he would not have been permitted to have had his Liberty ſo long, if Oates had charged him with this then.

Oates reflects on the Council-Board.

Oates replied, They were ſuch a Council as would commit No-body: Whereupon the Chief Juſtice reprehended him, and ſaid, he had a great deal of Aſſurance; but the Council's not committing Sir George was an Argument to him, that Oates did omit to charge him with the Letter at that Time.

The Court refuſe to hear the Evidence before the Lords and the Council.

Sir George deſired a Copy of Oates's Examination before the Houſe of Lords might be read; but the Court would not permit it, becauſe there was no Witneſs to ſwear that they ſaw ſuch an Examination ſworn and ſubſcribed by Oates.

Then Sir George deſired, Sir Philip Lloyd might depoſe what Oates and Bedloe had ſworn before the Council; but this was held not fit to be done without the Leave of the Board.

Marſhal's Defence.

Marſhal then applied himſelf to his Defence, and deſired Bedloe would lay his Hand upon his Heart, and declare in the Preſence of God, if ever he ſaw him before he came to the Gatehouſe; and did not declare there, that he was an utter Stranger to him.

Bedloe anſwered, he had ſeen Marſhal before, at the Benedictine Convent in the Savoy: And Sir William Waller depoſed, that he went to the Gatehouſe with Bedloe, and Bedloe called Marſhal by his Name, as ſoon as he ſaw him; and Marſhal thereupon ſaid, he had ſeen his Face, but did not know him.

Marſhal demanded of Bedloe, when he ever ſaw him, before he ſaw him in the Gatehouſe? Bedloe anſwered, he carried Letters for him, and uſed to converſe with him, in the Savoy. Marſhal replied, Prove it by Man, Woman, or Child, that ever you were in the Savoy with me in your Life, and I will go to the Gallows, and not ſay one Word more. Bedloe ſaid, he had Witneſſes to prove it; but they were in Kent.

Corker's Defence.

Corker in his Defence ſaid, It was an eaſy Matter to deviſe Crimes, and frame Accuſations againſt innocent Men, in ſuch a Manner that the contrary could not poſſibly be demonſtrated; therefore there ought to be ſome Probability in the Teſtimony, as well as downright Swearing; otherwiſe Mr. Oates, and his Companions, might, upon their bare Oaths, by Turns, hang up all the innocent Men in the Nation: Beſides, he that ſwears ought to be a credible Witneſs; but thoſe, who ſwore againſt him, were Men of ſcandalous Lives.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, he muſt not heap up Contumelies, and call Men Names, when he had proved nothing againſt them.

Then Corker obſerved, that Mr. Oates did not only make him guilty of this great Conſpiracy, but involved the Nobility, Gentry, and the whole Body of the Catholicks, in this Treaſon; and he thought it highly improbable, that ſo many Perſons of Honour and Eſtates, who were Men of unblemiſhed Characters, and lived in Peace and Quiet under the Government of ſo good a King, ſhould hazard their Lives, Honours, Families, and Souls in ſuch a Deſign, wherein ſo many thouſands of People, and almoſt a whole Nation, were to be overwhelmed; that ſuch vaſt Armies ſhould be raiſed, and foreign Nations engaged in the Plot, and no other Evidence, no other Proofs of it, than the poſitive Oaths of Oates and Bedloe. And the Chief Juſtice obſerving, that Dugdale and Prance were Witneſſes of the Deſign to raiſe an Army, Corker went on, and ſaid, Conſidering what theſe Perſons were, their vile Oaths, the Encouragements they had met with, ſuch Endearments and Careſſes as they had found, their Teſtimony was not much to be regarded.—That it was impoſſible he could have been at Lamſpring, the farthеſt Part of Weſtphalia, as Mr. Oates had depoſed, ſince he was not abſent ſix Weeks: Neither was he Preſident of the Benedictines, as Mr. Oates had ſworn, and produced Witneſſes to prove, that Mr. Stapleton was then Preſident.

Both Corker and Marſhal alſo brought Witneſſes to prove, that when Oates came to the Savoy, to ſearch for the Conſpirators, and Pickering was taken, Oates declared he had nothing againſt Corker and Marſhal; and they were not taken up till a Month afterwards, when Oates had improved in his Evidence. Then Corker deſired, (as Sir George Wakeman had done already) that a Copy of Oates's Examination in the Houſe of Lords might be read; wherein he ſaid, that he knew nothing more of the Plot, or any other Perſons concerned in it, than what he declared there; but this the Court would not ſuffer to be read, affirming it was no Evidence.

Then Mrs. Rigby, the Houſe-keeper of the Benedictine Convent, was called, as a Witneſs for the Priſoners, Marſhal and Corker, and depoſed, that ſhe knew of no Conſult of the Jeſuits at that Houſe, and that ſhe never ſaw Mr. Oates there, unleſs in the preceding Summer, 1678, when he came a begging, and Mr. Pickering bid her ſhut the Door, and never let that Man come in again.

Whereupon Marſhal obſerved, that this was in the very Heat of the Plot; and it was ſtrange, if Oates was employed to carry on the Conſpiracy, as he had ſworn, that they ſhould ſuffer him to be in ſuch Neceſſity, and ſent away with a Flea in his Ear, when he could gain ſuch Advantages by diſcovering them; and deſired he might have two or three Days Time allowed him, to ſend for Witneſſes, to prove he was in Warwickſhire in June, July, and Auguſt, when Oates ſwore he was in London; and ſaid, he hoped the Court would not throw away his Life, when in three Days Time he could bring Witneſſes to prove it. The Chief Juſtice anſwered, then they muſt throw away the Lives of the Jury, for they muſt be kept faſting till they gave their Verdict. Marſhal replied, there had been Priſoners (meaning Whitebread and Fenwicke) upon their Trials, ſent back to Priſon without the Jury's giving a Verdict, and afterwards tried again. The Chief Juſtice ſaid, the Jury were wholly diſcharged of them. Marſhal anſwered, if the Court had any regard to his Life, they would diſcharge the Jury of him too, and produced a Witneſs, who depoſed, that Marſhal had his Witneſſes in Town the laſt Seſſions, to prove he was in Warwickſhire.

Here Sir George Wakeman and Corker made great Proteſtations of their Innocence, and their Abhorrence of Treaſon, and the King-killing Doctrine. And Marſhal continuing his Defence, ſaid, if no Door of Mercy could be opened, upon any Conſideration offered by the Living, yet the loud Cries of the Dying, the earneſt Vows and ſolemn Proteſtations of Innocence, made by thoſe who were lately executed, would ſurely have ſome Weight; for it muſt be confeſſed, that either they conſpired finally to damn their own Souls, or that they were not guilty of what they, and the Priſoners at the Bar, ſtood jointly charged with.

Juſtice Pemberton demanded, if they would affront the Court, and vouch the Truth of thoſe Speeches made at the Gallows; and affirm them to be innocent, when they had been found guilty, and executed according to Law.

Marſhal replied, he only deſired ſome Conſideration might be had to the Words of dying Men.

The Court charges the Priſoners with the King-killing Doctrine, &c.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, If your Religion was not made up of Equivocation and Lying, and you had not Indulgences and Diſpenſations for it, and if killing Kings were not deemed meritorious; if this were not avowed by your Popes and Great Men, your Argument might have ſome Weight. We know what your Religion is, and what merciful Men you are: You may have Tricks enough to gull your own Party; but Proteſtants can ſee through all your Actions.

They diſclaim it.

Corker anſwered, as to thoſe damnable Doctrines, they profeſſed themſelves innocent of them; and deſired the Jury might not go away with a Notion, that they entertained ſuch Principles of Religion: Theſe were horrid Crimes; they proteſted againſt them, and hoped the Jury would take Notice of it.

The Chief Juſtice of Opinion, the Evidence was defective.

Then the Chief Juſtice ſummed up the Evidence; and as to Rumley, he directed the Jury to acquit him, becauſe there was but one Witneſs againſt him; and he ſaid, he thought that Oates's

Oates's Evidence, as to Sir George Wakeman's Hand-writing, was very ſlight; and Bedloe's Evidence againſt Wakeman, he did not give much Credit to; nor did he think the Evidence of Oates and Bedloe, againſt Corker and Marſhal, concluſive, he ſaid; but left it impartially to the Jury, to be guided by their own Conſciences.

The Jury being withdrawn, after an Hour's Receſs, returned into Court with their Verdict, that the Priſoners were NOT GUILTY.

The Trials of theſe pretended Plotters were always introduced with violent declamatory Speeches of the King's Counſel, to prepoſſeſs and prejudice the Jury againſt them; and Witneſſes were produced to give a moſt tragical Account of the Plot in general, though this was acknowleged to be no Evidence againſt the Priſoners. The Judges alſo ſuggeſted perpetually, that the Priſoner's Witneſſes were not to be believed, becauſe they were Papiſts, and under ſuch Diſadvantages, ſcarce any of them could have eſcaped, if Oates and Bedloe, and the reſt of the ſwearing Tribe, had not over-acted their Parts, and by numerous Improbabilities and Contradictions in their Evidence, ſtaggered the Faith of the moſt willing Believers. They improved, it appears, in their Evidence and their Impudence every Day; and when they had ſolemnly declared before the Houſe of Lords and the Council Table, that they knew nothing more of the Plot, or the Plotters, than their Examinations and Narratives contained, daily diſcovered new Matter, and more Conſpirators; having the Aſſurance to charge the Privy Council, and ſeveral other great Men among the Proteſtants, as Promoters and Encouragers of the Plot, who were known to be the beſt Friends to the Conſtitution; which rendered the Generality of the People cooler in the Proſecution of Perſons accuſed, than they had been, and Juries more cautious of convicting them: The Proteſtations of ſo many dying Men, that they knew nothing of any Plot, had alſo ſome Effect upon the People, and induced them to weigh the Evidence againſt thoſe unhappy Men, more ſedately and impartially than they had done the Evidence given at former Trials.

No Gentleman appears to have been more zealous in proſecuting the Popiſh Plot at firſt, then the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs; but at theſe Trials we find he violently ſuſpected the Roguery of the Witneſſes, and, in a manner, directed the Jury to acquit all the Priſoners, who paid the greater Regard to his Opinion, no doubt, becauſe they had ſeen him ſo ſtrenuous an Aſſerter of the Reality of the Plot at the former Trials. There was no room to ſuſpect the Chief Juſtice to be partial in the Priſoners Favour, after what he had ſaid and done to forward the Conviction of Coleman, Ireland, and the five Jeſuits: None but a Man of Oates's Aſſurance, could ever have charged him with diſcountenancing the Diſcovery of the Plot afterwards. Here we have a fair Opportunity of obſerving, how eaſily the People of this Nation are carried away by popular Clamours, and the Arts of deſigning Men, who ever do their Buſineſs more effectually, by applying to the Paſſions of Men than their Reaſon. The People were ſo terrified and confounded at the Apprehenſions of an approaching general Maſſacre, that for ſome Time they ſeemed to have loſt their Senſes: They did not ſo much as reflect, what an inconſiderable Number the Papiſts in England were, compared with the Proteſtants; and that an Attempt of that Nature muſt have ended in the utter Deſtruction of the Roman Catholicks, if it did not ſucceed; as it was impoſſible it ſhould, where the Papiſts were not one in a Hundred, and had neither the Miniſtry, Forces, or any one Civil Magiſtrate to ſupport them; for, according to Oates's firſt Diſcovery, the King, the Duke of York, and the Miniſtry, both in England and Ireland, were to be ſacrificed with the Reſt; though afterwards, indeed, when Oates found how greedily his Narrative was ſwallowed, he ventured to charge the Queen, the Duke, the Privy Council, Miniſters, and Judges, with encouraging and favouring the Plot; that is, with a Deſign of murdering the King, and maſſacring all true Proteſtants: A Tale ſo monſtrous and improbable, that it evidently diſcovered the whole to be an Impoſture, and ſhewed how miſerably the People had been impoſed upon by the Faction, and the Perjuries of their wretched Inſtruments.

The Trial of CHARLES KERNE, Clerk, for High-Treaſon, before the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, at Hereford Aſſizes, the 14th of Auguſt, 1679. 31 Car. II.

1679. 31 Car. II.

The Charge. THE Indictment charged the ſaid Charles Kerne with High-Treaſon, in coming to England, and remaining here after, he had received Popiſh Orders, contrary to the Statute 27 Eliz.

The Evidence. The Witneſſes for the King being called, one of them depoſed, that ſhe ſaw the Priſoner in a Surplice deliver the Sacrament to four or five People in a Popiſh Chappel, and that he uſed the Words Corpus Chriſti, or ſome ſuch Words as Prieſts uſe at the Sacrament; for ſhe herſelf was a Roman Catholick at that Time.

Another Witneſs depoſed, that ſhe was in a Chamber, and heard the Priſoner Chriſtening a Child in the next Room.

The Defence. The Priſoner ſaid little in his Defence, but that the Witneſſes were inſtructed what to ſay; that he had taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; and that there was no Evidence of his being a Prieſt: And probably he thought the Proof ſo defective, that there was no Occaſion to ſay much; for the Chief Juſtice, in his Directions, told the Jury, that there ought to be two Witneſſes

Witneſſes in High-Treaſon, and here was but one Witneſs to prove the Priſoner exerciſed his Function, beſides the Maid, who ſaid ſhe heard him baptize a Child through a Wall; but this was a tender Point (I preſume, he meant the Witneſſes ſwearing to a Man's Chriſtening a Child through a Wall, when ſhe did not pretend to know what he ſaid, was a tender Point); and as he would not ſhed innocent Blood, ſo neither would he willingly let a Popiſh Prieſt eſcape; and leaving it to the Jury, they found the Priſoner NOT GUILTY.

1679. 31 Car. II. Bromwich's Trial.

The Trial of ANDREW BROMWICH, Clerk, for High-Treaſon, before the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, at Staffford Aſſizes, the 13th of Auguſt, 1679. 31 Car. II.

Jurors diſcharged on Suſpicion of their being Popiſhly affected.

THE Priſoner being arraigned, and the Jurors called, the Sheriff acquainted the Chief Juſtice, that Allen, one of the Jurors he had returned, declared, that as nothing was done againſt the Popiſh Prieſts above, ſo neither would he do any thing againſt them here, or find them guilty; and thereupon Allen was committed to Priſon by the Chief Juſtice, till he ſhould find Sureties for his good Behaviour; and he diſcharged three more of the Jurors, on Suſpicion of their being Popiſhly affected. After which a Jury was ſworn and charged with the Priſoner, who challenged none of them.

The Charge

The Indictment ſet forth, that the ſaid Andrew Bromwich, being a Native of England, and ordained a Prieſt by an Authority derived from the See of Rome, did on the 13th of January, in the 30th Year of the preſent King, come to, and remain at Perry Barr in the County of Staffford in this Kingdom, contrary to the Statute, which made the ſaid Offence High-Treaſon.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Ann Robinſon depoſed, that ſhe received the Sacrament of the Priſoner in a Wafer five Times, according to the Manner of the Church of Rome.

Jeffery Robinſon depoſed, he had heard the Priſoner ſay ſomething, in a Surplice, in an unknown Tongue; but he could not ſay what it was; and the Court demanding if he knew the Priſoner, he declared he did not know him.

Jane Robinſon, Jeffery's Wife, being ſworn, and the Court demanding of her, if ſhe ever heard the Priſoner ſay Maſs, or received the Sacrament of him, ſhe anſwered, ſhe never ſaw him do any thing; ſhe did not know him.

The Defence.

The Priſoner in his Defence, denyed his having ſaid Maſs, or given the Sacrament to any of the Witneſſes; alledged, he had taken the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy, and done every thing that might teſtify his Loyalty; and inſiſted that there was no Evidence of his being a Prieſt.

The Chief Juſtice's Obſervations.

The Chief Juſtice replied, none but a Prieſt could give the Sacrament in a Wafer; and though Jeffery Robinſon pretended he did not know the Priſoner, he had ſaid at firſt, that he heard him ſay ſomething, in a Surplice, in an unknown Tongue; that this Witneſs durſt ſay no more than his Wife and his Prieſt would give him Leave to ſay, and they could not expect more poſitive Evidence from theſe People.

and Directions to the Jury.

Then he ordered the Statute of 27 Eliz. Cap. 2. to be read, which makes it High-Treaſon, for Popiſh Prieſts, Subjects of this Crown, to remain in England; and in his Directions to the Jury, informed them that they were not to find poſitively that the Priſoner was a Prieſt; but if they believed in their Conſciences, upon the whole Evidence, that he was a Prieſt, they were to find him guilty: That here was one poſitive Witneſs, and another had ſworn he heard the Priſoner ſay ſomething in an unknown Tongue, in a Surplice; and he left it to them, whether they would not believe the Teſtimony of one poſitive Witneſs, and the circumſtantial Evidence of the other Man: They ſaw what Dangers they were in, and he left it upon their Conſciences, whether they could let Prieſts eſcape, who were the very Peſts of Church and State; declaring, they had better get rid of one Prieſt, than three Felons.

The Priſoner convicted.

The Jury being withdrawn, and continuing without ſome Time, at laſt brought in a Verdict, that the Priſoner was GUILTY: Whereupon the Chief Juſtice commended the Verdict, and ſaid he ſhould have found the ſame Verdict himſelf.

1679. 31 Car II. Atkins's Trial.

The Trial of WILLIAM ATKINS, Clerk, for High-Treaſon, before the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, at Staffford Aſſizes, the 13th of Auguſt, 1679. 31 Car. II.

The Charge

THE Indictment was of the like Tenor as the former, viz. That the Priſoner being a Native of England, and having accepted Popiſh Orders, came to Wolverhampton in Staffordſhire, and remained there, contrary to the Statute; which made this Offence High-Treaſon; and the ſame Jury was charged with the Priſoner, as had tried Bromwich. Then the Witneſſes being called, 1679 Car. II. Evi-ce.

Francis

Francis Wilden depoſed, that he had heard the Priſoner at Prayers in an unknown Tongue with a Surplice on, and ſeen him give the Sacrament after the Manner of the Church of Rome, to ſeven or eight People, at Mrs. Stamford's Houſe in Wolverhampton.

John Jarvis depoſed, that he had heard the Priſoner ſay ſomething in an unknown Tongue; that he had confeſſed to him, and received the Sacrament of him a great many Times when he had his Prieſt's Habit on. A third depoſed, he had confeſſed to him, and a fourth, that he had been at Confeſſion, and ſeen the Priſoner perform divine Service according to the Manner of the Church of Rome: And the Priſoner finding the Evidence ſo full againſt him, made no Defence; whereupon the Jury found him GUILTY, and the uſual Sentence in Caſes of High-Treaſon was pronounced on him and Bromwich.

The timerous Chief Juſtice having been threatened and bullied by the Leaders of the Faction and their Tools, Oates, &c. for ſhewing himſelf impartial at the Trial of Wakeman, Corker, &c. ſeems to be endeavouring at theſe three Trials to make amends for his Remiſſneſs, by delivering up theſe unhappy Prieſts to the Fury of the Populace; concluding that his Conduct at theſe Trials would for ever wipe off the Reproach of his attempting to ſtifle the Popiſh Plot, with which Oates and his Brethren of the Poſt, had endeavoured to charge him.

The Statute of 27 Eliz. indeed makes it High-Treaſon for an Engliſh Prieſt to be found in England; but then the Statute does not aſcertain what ſhall be deemed legal Proof of a Man's being a Prieſt; whereupon the Judges have determined that a Man's exerciſing any Part of the Prieſtly Office, whether he be really a Prieſt or not, ſhall be deemed ſufficient Proof of his being a Prieſt, which ſeems to be a pretty handſome Stretch upon ſo penal a Law, eſpecially as the Offence is purely the exerciſing an Act of Religion, and the Parties have committed no Offence againſt the State, as in this Caſe. But the Chief Juſtice goes ſtill farther, and informs the Jury, that notwithſtanding two Witneſſes are required in High-Treaſon, yet, if they believed in their Conſciences from the Circumſtances, that the Priſoners were Prieſts, though there was but one poſitive Witneſs of their exerciſing the Prieſtly Office, it was ſufficient: He would not, he told them in Kerne's Caſe, willingly ſhed innocent Blood; (one of the Witneſſes ſwearing only that ſhe heard the Priſoner ſay ſomething ſhe did not underſtand through a Wall;) but on the other Hand, he would not willingly have one popiſh Prieſt eſcape; intimating that he would have every popiſh Prieſt hanged, if it was for no other Offence, but purely for being a Prieſt, and that upon every ſlight Evidence: Though the Lawyers had always held till this Time, that thoſe Laws were only made in terrorem, and were never intended to be put in execution rigorouſly. In all the former Trials for the popiſh Plot, the King's Council ſeemed to make a Merit of it, that they did not proſecute the Jeſuits and popiſh Prieſts purely on account of Religion; and of all the Prieſts that were tried at London, either in this, or in any former Reign, I do not remember any that were executed purely for being Prieſts. It was not thought fit to make ſuch Examples, even now in the Capital City, whatever was done on the Borders of Wales in a Corner of the Kingdom, leſt the ſame ſhould have been taken notice of by Foreigners, and retaliated on the Proteſtants of other Countries. But ſuch was the Fury of the Faction at this Time, that the Government was in a Manner compelled to give up theſe unhappy Men to their Rage; even the Chief Juſtice was content to be their Inſtrument, to ſave himſelf from being perſecuted as a Promoter of Popery; and yet this would not skreen him from their Reſentment, as appears from future Proceedings.

Whether it was ſtrictly legal to diſcharge three of the Jurors upon Suſpicion they were popiſhly affected, as was done in Bromwich's Caſe, eſpecially as there was no Proof it, and it does not appear they were regularly challenged for the King, is very much to be queſtioned; but to tell the Jury, if they believed the Priſoner to be guilty, (though there were not two Witneſſes) this was Satisfaction to find him guilty; was certainly carrying Things a great deal too far; as two poſitive Witneſſes are ever required in Treaſon. Nor did the Chief Juſtice ſhew any great Impartiality, when he alarmed the Jury with the pretended Dangers that threatened them from the Papiſts, and telling them they had better rid the World of one Prieſt, than three Felons; but this, as I have already obſerved, was to curry favour with the Faction. If he could have reſtored himſelf to the good Graces of the Populace, by ſacrificing an old Prieſt or two, he would have thought it an excellent Expedient; but he lived to repent his Eaſineſs, and found his Enemies were not to be appeaſed by a leſs Sacrifice than that of his own Head, which they bid fair for afterwards. May all timerous Magiſtrates and Time-ſervers meet with the like Fate.

The Trial of THOMAS KNOX, (Servant to the Earl of Danby,) and JOHN LANE, for a Miſdemeanor, at the King's-Bench Bar, the 25th of November, 1679. 31 Car. II.

1679. 31 Car. II.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charges, that the Defendants, Knox and Lane, knowing that Oates and Bedloe had been Witneſſes againſt Coleman, Ireland, Grove, and other Traitors, who had been executed for their Treaſons; and knowing the Lords Powis, Stafford, Bellaſis, Arundel, Petre, and Sir Henry Titchburne, were accuſed of Treaſon, and committed to the Tower, and ſtood impeached by the Houſe of Commons for the ſame; and that Thomas Earl of Danby alſo was impeached of High-Treaſon and other Miſdemeanors; they, the ſaid Knox and Lane, intending to ſtifle the Diſcovery of the ſaid Treaſons, and to evade the Laws and the Proſecution of Juſtice againſt the ſaid Lords and Sir Henry Titchburne, did, on the 30th of April, in the thirty firſt Year of his preſent Majeſty, falſely and maliciouſly conſpire to ſcandalize the ſaid Oates and Bedloe, and to repreſent them as wicked Perſons, and Men of no Credit. And that the Defendant Knox, by the Agreement of the Defendant Lane, and one Osborne, did cauſe ſeveral Letters to be written, wherein the ſaid Oates and Bedloe were accuſed of conſpiring falſly to charge the ſaid Earl of Danby; and ſuggeſting that Oates was a vicious Perſon, and would have committed Sodomy on the ſaid Lane; and that Knox, the better to effect the ſaid wicked Deſigns; gave ſeveral Sums of Money to the ſaid Lane and Oſborne, and promiſed them great Rewards. All which is laid to be contrary to their Duty; to the Obſtruction of Juſtice, &c.

The King's Council's Obſervations upon it. The King's Council, in opening the Indictment, obſerved to the Jury, that the Queſtion to be tried by them, was not whether the Lords, and others, charged with the Treaſons mentioned in the Indictment, were guilty of the Popiſh Plot; but whether the Defendants, in this Indictment, were guilty of endeavouring to diſcountenance and ſuppreſs the Evidence, and of ſcandalizing the Witneſſes who were to give Evidence againſt the Lords, and the reſt of the Priſoners; informing the Jury, that the endeavouring to withdraw, or diſgrace the King's Evidence in any Caſe, was unlawful, but it was ſtill a much greater Offence in Caſes of High-Treaſon; and as ſeveral Perſons had been attainted and executed for theſe Treaſons, the Defendants had affronted and diſparaged the Juſtice of the Nation, which was not to be endured.

The Evidence of Radford. The Witneſſes being called, Mr. Radford was ſworn, and depoſed, that Richard Lane, Father of the Defendant, John Lane, was one of the Yeomen of the Guard, as the Deponent alſo was; and that, they being upon Guard together, about a Year before, Richard Lane, the Father, told the Deponent, that Oates had attempted his Son, John Lane, the Defendant, ſeveral Times, in order to commit Sodomy with him.

Of Samuel Oates. —— Samuel Oates, Brother to Titus Oates, depoſed, that John Lane, the Defendant, was Servant to his Brother Titus, and turned away twice; and he heard him ſay, as he was jeſting with the Servants, a Fortnight before he was turned away the laſt Time, that he did not queſtion, ere long, to find a Way to get a thouſand Pounds.

Of Sir William Waller. Sir William Waller depoſed, that as he was attending the Committee of Lords appointed to enquire into the Plot, on the 29th of April laſt, a Complaint was brought before them, that Oates had attempted to commit Sodomy with his two Servants, Oſborne and Lane; and thereupon the Lords ordered the Deponent, and Mr. Warcop, another Juſtice of Peace, to take the Examinations of Oſborne and Lane: And Lane confeſſed, he had been ſeduced by Knox to betray his Maſter Oates, and ſwear ſeveral Things againſt him which Knox dictated; and Lane then produced ſeveral Informations, charging Oates with Sodomy; which he acknowledged had been carried by Knox, Oſborne, and himſelf, to ſeveral Juſtices of Peace, charging Oates with attempting to commit Sodomy on the ſaid Lane, but no Juſtice of Peace would meddle with it. And that afterwards Knox took private Lodgings for Lane and Oſborne, that Oates might not find them out; perſuading them to ſtand faſt to what they had ſaid, and they ſhould not want a conſiderable Reward: That Lane depoſed farther, before him, the ſaid Waller, and Mr. Warcop, that Knox dropped a Guinea at a Tavern, and ſaid he would not give it them, becauſe then he could ſwear ſafely, he never gave them any Money: And that Knox told them, the ſaid Lane and Oſborne, that the Lord Treaſurer Danby would never have ſurrendered himſelf, unleſs they had promiſed to ſtand faſt by the Evidence Knox had dictated. Sir William Waller farther depoſed, that, as they were taking Lane's Examination, Knox wrote a Note to Lane, which was conveyed through the Door, of the following Tenor: We always clubbed, and you paid two Shillings at the Sugar-loaf: Tear this. And that Lane confeſſed, it was agreed amongſt them, that if any one of them ſhould diſcover, the other two ſhould murder him: And that both Lane and Oſborne confeſſed, that Knox ſaid, the Lords in the Tower would not be wanting to acknowledge their Kindneſs, in diſparaging the King's Evidence.

Sir William Waller depoſed farther, that Knox alſo was brought before him and Mr. Warcop, and, to excuſe himſelf, ſaid, he received the Papers from Lane and Oſborne, and that they told him they wrote them out, being troubled in Conſcience, and deſired him to go with them to a Juſtice of Peace: That Knox confeſſed, he dropped a Guinea, and alſo ten Shillings, upon a Bed one Morning, but ſaid, he lent it them, and they were to repay him again. Knox alſo conconfeſſed, that the Papers, ſo drawn up and delivered to him, had been in the Keeping of the Lord Latimer a long Time.

Mr. Warcop.

Juſtice Warcop depoſed to the ſame Effect as Sir William Waller had done, adding, that Lane, when he was before the Committee, begged their Pardon, and God's Pardon, for what he had ſworn againſt Oates, for it was all falſe: And that Knox acknowledged, he lay with Lane and Oſborne, in ſeveral private Places, when Warrants were out for apprehending them; adviſed them where to lie concealed, and paid for their Lodgings, but ſaid they were to pay him again; and that Osborne and Lane both ſwore that Knox paid for all, treated them ſeveral Times at the Tavern, and bid them call for what they would have.

Wiggins.

Wiggins, Servant to Bedloe, depoſed, that being with Knox at a Publick-Houſe, Knox deſired him to get Copies of his Maſter Bedloe's Papers, eſpecially ſuch as concerned the Lord Treaſurer Danby, and to take a Journal of his Maſter's Actions, and the Names of thoſe that came to him; for the Lord Treaſurer had heard, that Lord Shaftesbury and the Duke of Bucks caballed with Bedloe againſt him: That Knox offered to carry the Deponent to the Lord Treaſurer, who would give him Encouragement, he ſaid; and that Knox added, Oates and Bedloe were two great Rogues, the King knew them to be ſo; and when he had heard all they could ſay, he would hang them; and that, if the Deponent was turned out of his Buſineſs, he ſhould have any Place in his Lord's Diſpoſal.

Dangerfield.

Thomas Dangerfield depoſed, that he was employed by the Lady Powis to carry Money to the Defendant Lane, in the Gatehouſe, ſeveral Times, and particularly once he received twenty Shillings of Mrs. Celier, by the Lady Powis's Order, and ſent it to Lane; and that the Defendant Knox, deſiring Lane would write ſomething to ſignify he continued firm, Lane wrote a Note of the following Tenor, (viz.) That he would die before he would comply with that Villain Oates, and if any good People would get him his Liberty, he would do the Catholicks great Service, by diſcovering what he knew of Oates; declaring he wrote this from the Bottom of his Heart, and would die in it: That this Note being carried to the Lady Powis, ſhe and the Lord Powis were much rejoiced at it; and he was told the Lady Powis was the greateſt Part of the next Day upon her Knees, giving God Thanks for the great Advantage their Cauſe had gained by it.

That he (the Deponent) afterwards obtained Lane's Liberty, and carried him to Powis-Houſe, where he remained ſome Time; but afterwards the Lord Powis thought proper to ſend him into the Country, and conceal him there: That the Deponent alſo was employed to procure Knox's Liberty, but could not; however, Knox obtained his Liberty afterwards by Mr. Nevil's Means: That the Deponent received ſeveral Papers from Knox, containing a Charge againſt Mr. Oates, for attempting to commit Sodomy with Lane, which he ſent by Mrs. Celier, to the Lords in the Tower, who made their Remarks on them; and that Mrs. Celier directed the Deponent to draw up an Affidavit from thoſe Papers, and get Lane ſworn to it; which he did, and it was ſworn before Sir James Butler: That Osborne alſo made an Affidavit, that Oates attempted to commit Sodomy with Lane, which Knox ſhewed to the Deponent, and ſaid it would do Oates's Buſineſs; and the Lady Powis afterwards furniſhed Knox with Money, underſtanding that his Circumſtances were but low, and that (his Maſter) the Lord Treaſurer, did not ſupply him; and the Deponent let Knox have forty Shillings, on his complaining of the Diſtreſs he was in, taking a Note of him, as if borrow'd of himſelf.

Then an Information, that Knox had ſworn before a Juſtice of Peace, was read; wherein he depoſed, that Osborne came to him, and told him he was Servant to Oates, and that he had heard Oates and Bedloe conſulting how they might deſtroy the Lord Treaſurer; and that his Conſcience would not ſuffer him to ſleep till he had revealed it: That Lane alſo came to him (the Deponent Knox) and gave him the ſame Account, and ſhewed him ſeveral Papers, which were Memorials relating to his Majeſty, the Queen, and the Lord Treaſurer: And that they both conjured him (Knox) to keep the Thing ſecret; for they were afraid, if it came to the Ears of Oates and Bedloe, they ſhould be murdered.

Knox's Information.

Mr. Withins, Counſel for the Defendant Knox, obſerved, that the Indictment conſiſted of two Parts: The firſt charged, that the Defendants, in April laſt, did conſpire againſt Oates and Bedloe, who had diſcovered the Popiſh Plot, to take away their Reputation, and render their Teſtimony of no Credit.

The Defence of Knox by his Counſel.

The other Part charged, that Knox had cauſed Letters to be written, as from Osborne and Lane, to himſelf, containing the Aſperſions above-mentioned; but as to the laſt Part of the Charge, there had been no Manner of Proof made of it: And as to the firſt, he did not controvert, but that Osborne and Lane might have a Deſign to diſgrace Oates and Bedloe, and to draw his Client Knox in to countenance their Malice; but inſiſted that he was not in the Contrivance, for that they had ſhewn the Papers to ſeveral others before they brought them to Knox, nor did it appear in the whole Evidence, that Knox himſelf had ſworn any thing againſt Oates or Bedloe; there appeared only a great deal of Weakneſs in Knox, in believing ſuch idle People, which he hoped would not be thought a great Crime in a young Man, who had no Malice or ill Deſign in it; but apprehending he had met with a Diſcovery againſt his Lord's Life, was endeavouring to prevent it.

The Defence of Lane by his Counſel.

Mr. Holt, Counſel for the other Defendant Lane, alſo inſiſted, that there had been Evidence given only of one Part of the Charge in the Indictment; and that the Proof not being proportionable to the Charge, his Client ought to be acquitted, otherwiſe he might become liable to a ſeverer Puniſhment than the Crime proved would juſtify.

The Chief Juſtice's Obſervations.

To which the Chief Juſtice anſwered, If there was Evidence enough to prove a Contrivance to diſcredit them, that was ſufficient.—Mr. Holt deſired to know, if the Jury did not find them Not Guilty generally, whether they might not find them not guilty of writing the Letters. The Chief Juſtice anſwered, No; for if five Things were laid, and one of them proved, which tended to the Diſparagement of Oates and Bedloe,

1679. 31 Car. II.

Bedloe, which was the Subſtance of the Charge that maintained the Indictment, that was ſufficient; beſides, the Tranſactions between Knox and Dangerfield implied a Confederacy; and Knox owned he took Lodgings for Osborne and Lane, and lay with them when Warrants were out againſt them.

To which the Counſel for the Defendant Knox, replied, that Dangerfield ſwore that Lane brought him a Paper, containing the ſame Matter he brought to Knox, and that he got it ſworn before Sir James Butler; and if Dangerfield believed the Charge to be true, and carried Lane before a Juſtice of the Peace to ſwear it, why might not Knox believe it?

However the Court acquainted the Jury, that the Caſe was ſo clear againſt the Defendants, that they did not ſee any occaſion to ſum up the Evidence; and the Jury laying their Heads together, without going from the Bar, found the Defendants GUILTY. At which the People gave a great Shout; and the Defendant Knox was ſentenced to pay a Fine of 200 Marks, to ſuffer one Year's Impriſonment, and to find Sureties for his good Behaviour for three Years. Lane was ſentenced to be ſet in the Pillory, to pay a Fine of 100 Marks, and to be impriſoned for a Year; which Sentences were executed upon them.

The Defendants convicted. Fined, Pilloried, and impriſoned.

Remarks. Theſe were very difficult Times; the Faction, by offering extravagant Rewards, had raiſed up a Set of Witneſſes, that appeared ready to ſwear any Man out of his Life, their Maſters were pleaſed to mark out for Deſtruction. They began with Papiſts as moſt obnoxious; againſt whom it was not doubted their Evidence would be eaſily credited; but by degrees they proceeded to accuſe ſome of the beſt and greateſt Proteſtants in the Kingdom with being Popiſhly affected, and engaged in the ſame Deſign, to ſubvert the eſtabliſhed Religion and Government; and this was indeed the principal Deſign of the Faction, in trumping up this Plot, a Stratagem of their Fore-Fathers, revived to charge the Friends of the Church and Government with being Popiſhly affected, and endeavouring to introduce arbitrary Power, in order to ſubvert both Church and State themſelves, and eſtabliſh their Idol Presbytery, and a Republican Form of Government in the room of them. There was a Conſpiracy indeed, to deſtroy both our Religion and Government by the Presbyterians, as appeared a very little afterwards, and they had the Cunning to throw it upon the Papiſts, who finding their party every Day cut off by falſe Witneſſes, artfully managed by that Incendiary Shaftsbury, endeavoured to countermine his Projects, by offering Rewards to the Witneſſes hired to ſwear againſt them; and by endeavouring to expoſe the ſcandalous Lives of ſome of thoſe raſcally People, dubbed with the Character of the King's Witneſſes; and ſince ſuch vile Arts were uſed to get innocent Men condemned, ſurely the Perſons charged with ſuch Crimes, could not be much blamed, eſpecially by the Faction who taught them the Way, for endeavouring to ſave their Lives by the like Means; as others endeavoured to murder them under a Colour of Law.

Knox depoſed upon Oath, that both Osborne and Lane firſt came to him, and offered to ſwear Sodomy againſt Oates; and that both Oates and Bedloe were in a Conſpiracy to take away the Life of the Lord Treaſurer Danby, which ſeems much more probable, than that Knox ſhould frame ſuch a Story, and deſire them to ſwear it, if the Characters of the reſpective Parties be conſidered; eſpecially as it is evident that the Witneſſes ſometimes tampered with the Faction, and ſometimes with the Lords in the Tower, to ſee which they could make the moſt of; and when they found the Lords (particularly the Lord Treaſurer) not inclinable to anſwer their Expectations, they betrayed the Inſtruments concerned in theſe kinds of Negociations, in order to raiſe their Merit, and entitle themſelves to the greater Rewards from the Faction.

But further, it is very certain that Oates had been charged, and was generally eſteemed guilty of many flagrant Crimes (and eſpecially of Perjury and Sodomy) long before he became a Witneſs of the Popiſh Plot; and no wonder if the Noblemen he endeavoured to deſtroy by his Perjuries, made ſtrict Enquiries into theſe Particulars, in order to take off the Credibility of his Teſtimony. This was no more than Self-preſervation prompted them to, and was very far from being Criminal, though it was a very difficult and dangerous Task at this Time, when the People were ſo infatuated as to look upon every Man to be a Papiſt and a Traitor to the Government, who offered to enquire into the Characters of thoſe infamous Wretches. Knox, no doubt, hoped to do his Maſter, the Earl of Danby, great Service in diſcovering the Deſigns the Faction had againſt him; and encouraged Osborne and Lane in ſwearing their Depoſitions before a Juſtice of Peace, though his Maſter, it ſeems, refuſed to ſupport him in it, leaſt it ſhould caſt an Aſperſion upon him, and prove diſadvantageous to his Cauſe, for he knew Shaftsbury's Ars; and that he would either corrupt or terrify them to retract what they had ſwore, as he had done by Dangerfield; who at firſt was an Evidence for the Popiſh Lords, and afterwards made an Evidence againſt them by ſome ſuch Means.

As to Oates's ſcandalous Life, there are ſome Men perhaps that will give more Credit to Biſhop Burnet, than any other Writer in this Matter, who ſpeaking of the Credibility of the Plot, in the firſt Volume of his poſthumous Hiſtory, ſays, Titus Oates was the Son of an Anabaptiſt Teacher, who conformed and went into Orders, as his Son the Evidence alſo did: That the Son was an ignorant Man, proud, ill-natured, and haughty, and Complaints had been exhibited againſt him, for very indecent Expreſſions concerning the Myſteries of Chriſtianity: That he had alſo been proſecuted for Perjury; and being Chaplain to a Man of War, was diſmiſſed upon Complaint of ſome unnatural Practices not to be named: Being admitted afterwards Chaplain to the Duke of Norfolk, and diſcovering an Inclination to Popery, Hutchinſon, a Jeſuit of that Family, had the Honour of his Converſion, who being very intimate with the Biſhop, told him, that Oates and the Jeſuits were always in ill

Terms;

1679. 31 Car. II.

Terms; and they allowing him but Nine-pence a Day, Hutchinſon often relieved him: That the Jeſuits, wanting to get rid of Oates, ſent him beyond Sea, which made it unlikely he ſhould be truſted with their Secrets.

That the Biſhop talking with Oates about the Plot, Oates broke out into a mighty Rage againſt the Jeſuits, ſaying, he would have their Blood; and it being demanded of him, what it was prevailed on him to change his Religion and turn Papiſt, Oates ſtood up, and laying his Hand upon his Breaſt, ſaid, God and his holy Angels knew he never changed, but went amongſt them on purpoſe to betray them; which gave the Biſhop ſuch a Character of the Man, that he never afterwards had any Regard to what he ſaid or ſwore.

As to Bedloe, the Biſhop ſays, at his firſt Examination before the Secretary of State in his Majeſty's Preſence, he declared he knew nothing of the Plot; but being examined at the Bar of the Houſe of Lords the next Day, he pretended, of his own Knowledge, to make a full Diſcovery of the Plot, and to confirm Oates's Teſtimony, which convinced the King, that ſome body had practiſed upon him ſince his Examination before the Secretary, and inſtructed him what to ſay: The Biſhop adds, that Bedloe had led a very vicious Life, and gone by falſe Names, whereby he had cheated ſeveral People; that he had alſo perſonated a Man of Quality in France and Spain, where he lived by Cheating; ſo that he could not think he made this Diſcovery out of Conſcience, as he gave out.

On the other Hand, I do not find any thing objected to the Character of Knox before this Trial; and all that he ſeems to be convicted of here, was an honeſt Zeal to ſerve his Maſter, and the reſt of the Lords that were falſely accuſed.

1679. 31 Car. II.

The Trials of LIONEL ANDERSON, WILLIAM RUSSEL, CHARLES PARIS, HENRY STARKEY, JAMES CORKER, WILLIAM MARSHAL, and ALEXANDER LUMSDEN, Popiſh Prieſts, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 17th of January, 1679. 31 Car. II.

Charge. THE Indictment charges them with High-Treaſon, in remaining in England after having taken Popiſh Orders, contrary to the Statute of 27 Eliz.

To which they all pleaded Not Guilty, except Corker and Marſhal, who objected, that they ought not to be arraigned for High-Treaſon again, becauſe they had already been tried for High-Treaſon and acquitted; but the Court told them, the former Trial was for being in a Plot againſt the King and Government; and this Indictment was, for remaining in England after they had accepted Popiſh Orders; whereupon they pleaded Not Guilty, as the reſt had done.

The Priſoners making no Challenges to the Jurors, the firſt twelve in the Panel were ſworn.

Anderſon pleads, he abided in England, by the King's Order.

Then Mr. Anderſon ſaid, as to the Crime of remaining in England, with which he was charged, he ſtaid here by the King's expreſs Command, and had an Order for it from the Council-Board: To which the Court anſwered, if he had ſuch an Order, he muſt apply himſelf elſe where; their Buſineſs here was to try him on the Statute on which he was indicted.

The conſirmed on Statute, ſtill the Iriſh Plot, and now revived on account of the Practices of the Prieſts againſt the Government.

The King's Counſel proceeding to open the Indictment, obſerved, that this Statute, on which the Priſoners were indicted, had been made above an hundred Years; but that through the Lenity of our Princes, it had lain dormant till this Time; and that the Reaſon of reviving it now, was the Practices of the Popiſh Prieſts to ſeduce the People, and incite Rebellions againſt the Government, which firſt gave Occaſion to the making of it, and at preſent made this Proſecution neceſſary: That it was not purely for being Prieſts they were indicted, but for remaining in England after they had received Popiſh Orders, acknowledging foreign Authority, and rejecting that of their Sovereign.

Dangerfield's incredible Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Dangerfield depoſed, that being a Priſoner for Debt in the King's-Bench, in May or June laſt, he went to Confeſſion to the Priſoner Anderſon; and having received Abſolution from him, Anderſon ſent him to another Prieſt that was ſaying Maſs, to receive the Sacrament; after which he returned to Anderſon again, who gave him a Toleration to go and be drunk with one Stroud: For the Deponent was employed by the Catholicks to endeavour to bring over Stroud to be a Witneſs for the Lords in the Tower, and to invalidate Bedloe's Teſtimony; and the Deponent demanding of Anderſon, if he might lawfully get drunk juſt after receiving the Sacrament? Anderſon replied Yes; he gave him Authority to do ſo, it being for the good of the Cauſe.

Anderſon thereupon ſaid, here I am upon my Life and Death, and I wiſh that all the Puniſhments of Hell and Damnation may come upon me, if ever I opened my Mouth to this Rogue about any ſuch Buſineſs.

Anderſon objects, that he is not a credible Witneſs.

The Court told him, they muſt not ſuffer ſuch Language; to which Anderſon replied, if Dangerfield and he were ſo well acquainted, ſome body muſt have ſeen them talk together one time or other; and if he could produce one Perſon that would teſtify he ever ſaw him ſpeak to this Witneſs, he would be hanged, and ſay no more: That Witneſſes ought to be creditable People; and this Man had been pilloried twice, broke Priſon once, and committed many heinous

Offences; and that his Teſtimony againſt Colonel Manſel, whoſe Blood that Villain deſigned to have ſhed, was not admitted, upon that Account.

But the Court told Anderſon this would not avail him, unleſs he could produce the Record of his Conviction: Then Titus Oates was produced as a Witneſs, who depoſed, that Anderſon was a Prieſt, and he had heard him ſay Maſs.

His further Defence.

Whereupon the Priſoner acknowledged he had ſaid Maſs, but ſaid that was no Proof of his being a Prieſt; and that the Law made a Difference, and only ſet a pecuniary Penalty of 200 Marks, and a Year's Impriſonment upon one that ſaid Maſs; and there was no Proof of his receiving Orders from the See of Rome.

The Chief Juſtice replied, if this Statute could never have any Effect, or a Prieſt be convicted on it, unleſs they could produce Witneſſes that ſaw him take Orders, then indeed he might avoid the Statute: But when it was plainly proved, that he had done thoſe Acts which none but Prieſts were allowed to do, it muſt convince all the World that this Iſſue, whether he was a Prieſt or not, was well proved.

Anderſon demanded, if they could prove him to be an Engliſhman? Oates anſwered, he had heard the Priſoner ſay he was an Engliſhman, and the Son of an Engliſh Gentleman. And Bedloe appeared, and depoſed, that he was a Prieſt, and an Engliſhman, Son of Mr. Anderſon, a Gentleman of two or three hundred Pounds per Annum in Oxfordſhire; he knew his Father very well: Anderſon replied, was I guilty of being acquainted with ſo great a Rogue as this Fellow, I would have been my own Executioner, and not have expected my Sentence here: My Father has the Honour to be well known to my Lord Chief Baron, who knows this to be falſe.

Bedloe proved perjured in Court.

Whereupon the Lord Chief Baron ſaid, Mr. Anderſon was the Son of a Gentleman of Quality in Lincolnſhire.

And yet, ſays Anderſon, this Rogue can ſay this upon Oath; but indeed his whole Life has been full of ſuch Miſtakes.

Prance then depoſed, he had heard the Priſoner ſay Maſs at Wild-Houſe ſeveral Times.

Anderſon anſwered, he could prove he never ſaid Maſs at Wild-Houſe; for ſome of thoſe Fathers would have had him excommunicated, for writing for the King's Temporal Juriſdiction over all his Subjects, independant of the Pope, as appeared by a Letter from the Biſhop of London on his Behalf. He was known, he ſaid, to moſt of the dignified Clergy in England, and would not deny his having ſaid Maſs; but he had not ſaid Maſs in any Popiſh Chappel theſe ten Years: He would not tell a Lye to ſave his Life, or to take away the Life of the greateſt Villain upon Earth; no, not of that Rogue (pointing to Dangerfield); but I proteſt, my Lord (ſaid he) there is not one Word that has been ſworn againſt me true, unleſs what Oates depoſed concerning my ſaying Maſs; and I can prove to your Lordſhip by Authority, that it was the Opinion of all the Judges, about nine Years ago, delivered to the King and Council, that this Law was only made in terrorem.

He urges, this Law was made only in terrorem.

The Court anſwered, he muſt not be permitted to talk thus; would he arraign the Judges? Twas true, the Statute had not been rigorouſly put in Execution, till they themſelves gave Occaſion for it: But now it appeared neceſſary for the Preſervation of the King's Life, againſt which there were ſuch Conſpiracies.

1679. 31 Car. II.

Then Anderſon deſired three Things might be proved: Firſt, that he was an Engliſhman; Secondly, that he took Orders from Rome; and thirdly, that he did abide in England contrary to the Statute; for this being a Penal Law, the Facts ought to be proved poſitively, and the Perſon accuſed was not to be preſumed guilty from Circumſtances.

Requires ſtrict Proof of the Facts.

The Court anſwered, The Firſt he had proved himſelf, by appealing to the Chief Baron; and the Second, his being a Prieſt, he had acknowledged.

Then Anderſon deſired that they would ſtop Proceedings till they knew the King's Pleaſure; for he had given ſeveral Teſtimonies of his Loyalty and Obedience to the Government: But the Court told him, the Jury muſt now try the Fact, and declared that the Proof was abundantly ſufficient to convict him.

urges his Loyalty.

Mr. Corker, being brought upon his Trial, Oates, Bedloe, and Prance, all depoſed, they had heard him ſay Maſs, and perform other Parts of his Function.

Corker's Trial.

To which Corker only anſwered, he had not ſaid Maſs at ſome of the Places the Witneſſes mentioned.

Then Mr. Marſhal was ſet to the Bar, and there being but one Witneſs of his being a Prieſt, Witneſſes were called, to prove he acknowledged himſelf a Prieſt in Court, at his Trial for the Plot; which the Court obſerved was very hard, and ſuch Teſtimony as ought not to have been made uſe of.

Marſhal's Trial.

Marſhal inſiſted that Oates's Teſtimony being found falſe at his former Trial, he ought not to be credited now; but he was anſwered, a Witneſs might ſwear true, though the Jury did not believe him.

Mr. Ruſſel being brought to the Bar, and proved to be a Prieſt by three Witneſſes, did not offer any thing in his Defence; whereupon Charles Paris was brought upon his Trial, and Prance teſtifying he had heard him ſay Maſs two Years, or two Years and a half before. The Priſoner deſired the Witneſs might be poſitive as to the Time, or it would be impoſſible to diſprove him; but the Court anſwered, a Man could not be poſitive as to the Time; however, he produced Witneſſes to prove he was at Windſor about the Time the Witneſſes ſwore he was in Town, and deſired he might give the Venetian Ambaſſador's Letter in Evidence, who teſtified he had never officiated in his Family; but Paris was told this was no Evidence.

Ruſſel's Trial.

Paris's Trial.

A Letter not allowed to be given in Evidence.

Then Mr. Starkey was brought to the Bar; and Oates depoſed, that he heard him ſay Maſs about three Years before, conſecrate the Hoſt, and receive the Sacrament in both Kinds, in a Prieſt's Habit; and Starkey demanding of this Witneſs, what a Prieſt's Habit was? Oates anſwered, he had a Thing about his Neck, and a Surplice, and a Thing about his Arm; the Surplice was girt about him.

Starkey's Trial.

Starkey replied, that Oates neither knew a Prieſt's Habit, nor the Difference between Habits

bits and Ornaments; that his Habit was a Caſſock down to the Ground, and a Side-Cloak; that his Ornaments were not a Surplice, but an Albe that falls to the Ground, with other Things beſides: He inſiſted that there was no Proof of his taking Orders, and if he was not in Orders, it could be no Maſs; for it was the Prieſt that made the Maſs, and not the Maſs the Prieſt; and he had known a Lay-Man, a Proteſtant, ſay Maſs about London, and at laſt ſtole the Chalice; his Name was Gardener.

Then Prance depoſed, he had heard Starkey ſay Maſs at ſeveral Places, and heard him ſay, he had ſaid Maſs in the late King's Army.

Starkey anſwered, he never did; but he appeared for the King, when he had not above five hundred Men in Appearance for him; had ſpent above four thouſand Pounds in the King's Service, and loſt a Leg by a Cannon Shot; and when he was baniſhed, had but three Half-Crowns left in the World.

The Court replied, whatever he had merited by his Service, he had beſt apply to the King for Mercy; but the Jury could take no Notice of it.

Starkey ſaid, he was baniſhed by the Uſurpers into France fourteen Years, becauſe he refuſed to take the Engagement never to bear Arms for the King; and he had diſcovered a Plot againſt the King's Life.

The Court anſwered, they were only to try whether he was a Prieſt or not; and told the Jury, there were two Witneſſes of it, and, if they believed them, they ought to find him guilty.

Alexander Lumſden being brought upon his Trial, it was proved, by three Witneſſes, he had exerciſed the Prieſt's Function: To which he objected, that this was no Proof of his being a Prieſt; but the Chief Baron, in his Directions to the Jury, told them, there was no Neceſſity they ſhould have Proof of a Prieſt's Ordination; but if it was proved he had exerciſed the Office of a Prieſt, it was ſufficient Evidence to convict him; but that Mr. Lamſden's Caſe differed from the reſt: As he was a Scotchman, the Court were in Doubt whether he was within the Statute; for the Words being within the King's Dominions, they queſtioned whether they extended to a Native of Scotland, which was not under the Dominion of the King of England at the Time of making that Statute; and therefore they directed the Jury to find a ſpecial Verdict as to him.

The Jury, after a ſhort Receſs, brought in the firſt ſix Priſoners GUILTY; and as to Lumſden, they found that he was a Prieſt, and that he was remaining in England, as the Indictment charged; but that he was born at Aberdeen in Scotland, and whether he was guilty of High-Treaſon, they left to the Determination of the Court.

All the Priſoners (except Lumſden) being brought to the Bar again to hear their Sentence, and having nothing more to offer againſt pronouncing Judgment, than they had already urged at their Trials, the Recorder made a Speech on the Occaſion; wherein he obſerved, that neither the Law on which they were convicted, nor the putting it in Execution at this Time, were unreaſonable: That the King ought to be acknowledged Supreme Head and Governor in his Dominions; and ſuch Perſons as were for transferring their Allegiance to a Foreigner, and giving him a Power to depoſe the King, and diſpoſe of his Dominions, as every one did who accepted Orders from the See of Rome, muſt be thought to deſerve the greateſt Puniſhment; and if Care was not taken of thoſe who profeſſed ſuch Principles, and preached ſuch Doctrines, they ſhould ſoon ſee an End of their Government and Religion too; and ſince they were now endeavouring to put theſe Doctrines in Practice, there could be no Reaſon alledged, but as the Occaſion of making the Law was revived, ſo the Execution of the Law ſhould revive with it: After which the uſual Sentence in High-Treaſon was pronounced; but they were reprieved from Time to Time, and never executed.

Six condemned as Traitors; but reprieved.

The King's Counſel ſeem to admit, that this Law, making it High-Treaſon for an Engliſh Popiſh Prieſt to remain in the King's Dominions, was never put in Execution, till the pretended Popiſh Plot; when it was taken for granted that all ſuch Prieſts were in a Conſpiracy, with the reſt of the Papiſts, to murder his Majeſty, and to ſubvert our Religion and Government; and we find three or four Popiſh Prieſts were actually executed, on the Borders of Wales, ſome few Weeks before, on this general Surmiſe, without any Proof of their being in a Plot againſt the Government, though it was not thought fit to execute theſe, who were condemned in the capital City; not only becauſe their Loyalty was conſpicuous to all the World, but leſt the Catholick Powers ſhould be alarmed at it, and retaliate it on the Proteſtant Clergy abroad.

Remarks on Anderſon's Trial.

Indeed the King and the Adminiſtration were always averſe to theſe rigorous Proceedings againſt the Papiſts, purely for their Religion; but were puſhed upon it by the Faction, that they might have a Handle to charge the Government itſelf, with favouring Popery, if they refuſed to let theſe ſanguinary Laws, that were made only in terrorem, be put in Execution: But when they proceeded to accuſe Men of the moſt approved Loyalty, who had loſt their Fortunes in the Royal Cauſe, been plundered, wounded, and baniſhed, for adhering to the King and Royal Family, it was thought high Time to put a Stop to their Rage; and though by their Clamours they prevailed to have theſe Gentlemen brought upon their Trials, yet, when their Loyalty appeared ſo eminently in the Defence they made, it convinced all Men of Senſe and Impartiality, that they ought to have met with better Treatment: It is obvious, that the greateſt Reaſon the Faction were prejudiced againſt them was their conſpicuous Loyalty: It was not becauſe they conſpired againſt the King's Life, but becauſe they had contributed ſo nobly to the Support of the Monarchy, when their rebellious Fore-fathers attacked and overturned it, that they would have ſacrificed them.

But to carry our Reflections a little further: Poſſibly our Sectaries and Republicans were the only People upon the Face of the Earth, that ever were for hanging, drawing, and quartering all Prieſts of a different Perſuaſion: Their Brother and Advocate Defoe, indeed, would have fixed this Calumny upon the Church of England, for which he was deſervedly puniſhed: But here we ſee ſee the Sectaries themſelves labouring to get theſe Laws put in Execution, and charging all Men with being popiſhly affected, and Enemies to the Conſtitution, that oppoſed their Fury; though I believe all Mankind but themſelves will admit, that the Roman Catholicks are generally better Friends to the Monarchy than our Fanaticks; or rather, that there is more Occaſion to guard againſt the Plots of the Sectaries than the Papiſts, ſince the former have appeared Enemies to the Conſtitution ever ſince they began the Schiſm in the Church: They once actually deſtroyed both Church and State, and ſtill appear maliciouſly bent to deſtroy them again, whenever they can meet with another favourable Juncture to effect their Deſigns: And, as has been already obſerved, the Government has never more Reaſon to be upon its Guard againſt the Faction, than when they clamour loudeſt againſt Popery: For, among the Sectaries both in England and Scotland, the Church of England has been ever looked upon as a Popiſh Church, and treated as ſuch, when they have had the Power in their Hands.

Tasborough and Price their Trial.

The Charge. THE Indictment recites, that Whitebread, Harcourt, Langhorn, and others, had been convicted and attainted of High-Treaſon, in conſpiring the Death of the King, and that Dugdale was a Witneſs againſt them: That the Defendants, intending to ſtifle the Diſcovery of the ſaid Treaſons, did, before the Trial of the ſaid Harcourt, ſuborn and endeavour to perſuade the ſaid Dugdale not to be a Witneſs at the ſaid Trial; and after the Trial, did ſuborn and ſolicit the ſaid Dugdale to retract and deny his Evidence, and promiſed him large Sums of Money to induce him ſo to do; adviſed him to withdraw himſelf, and importuned him to ſign a Note, importing, That he had ſworn falſly againſt the Catholicks, and that, knowing he had many powerful Enemies, he had withdrawn himſelf to a Place of Safety, in order to make a full Diſcovery, &c. And to prevail on him to ſign the ſaid Note, promiſed him many great Rewards.

The Witneſſes being called,

Dugdale's Evidence. Stephen Dugdale depoſed, that the Defendant, Mrs. Price, having been a Servant with him in the Lord Aſton's Family, when he came up to London to be a Witneſs for the King, he ſent for her, and they uſed to converſe much together; and that, in June laſt, the Night before Harcourt's Trial, ſhe would have perſuaded him not to give Evidence againſt Harcourt, becauſe he was her ghoſtly Father; but the Deponent anſwered, he could not help it; and he did not ſee her again a pretty while: However, ſhe was afterwards reconciled to him, and came to him again in September laſt, telling him, ſhe came from a great Perſon, and if he would retract his Evidence, and go to Flanders, he ſhould have a thouſand Pounds ſecured to him in a Merchant's Hands, which he ſhould receive when he returned to give Evidence for them; telling him he muſt take the Plot off the Catholicks, and throw it on the Proteſtants: That the next Time ſhe came, he demanded of her who was the great Perſon ſhe came from; and ſhe telling him from the Duke of York, the Deponent immediately went to the Lord Shafteſbury and Mr. Hampden, and acquainted them with it; and that they directed him to go on a little farther, and trepan her, that they might diſcover the whole Deſign; and accordingly he gave her Encouragement, and got Dr. Chamberlain and his Clerk concealed in a Place where they might hear his Diſcourſe with Mrs. Price; after which he aſked Mrs. Price, who firſt propoſed this Matter? and ſhe anſwered, ſhe did.

That Tasborough, the other Defendant, came firſt to the Deponent in October laſt, and ſaid, Mrs. Price acquainted him he would come over to them, and he gave Tasborough Encouragement to believe ſo; whereupon Tasborough ſaid, he was come from the Duke, to confirm what Mrs. Price had promiſed, and it ſhould certainly be made good, and he ſhould have the Duke's Protection: That, if he did come over to them, it would be a very charitable Act, and like a Chriſtian; and if he had done amiſs, he might have a Pardon for it: That they produced the Note mentioned in the Indictment, for him to ſign; and Tasborough ſaid, it was nothing but what he might lawfully do; and, upon the Deponent's Importunity, Mrs. Price left the Note with him, and he gave it to Dr. Chamberlain to copy.

That he afterwards met Mr. Tasborough and Mrs. Price at the Six Cannes in Holbourn, and they told him, it was the laſt Time they would meet him, if he did not then ſign the Note; that his Refuſal would be much to his Prejudice, and they ſhould not be able to do any Thing for him, unleſs he ſigned it before the Duke went to Scotland: And that, once before this, Mrs. Price pretended to go to Windſor about the Buſineſs, and get his Pardon, telling him the Duke would protect him: That Tasborough directed him alſo to apply to the Spaniſh Ambaſſador, and he would write Letters to Flanders in Behalf of the Deponent; but he could never find the Duke countenanced the Matter, or knew of it, though they uſed his Name. He depoſed farther, that they told him, before the Duke would believe him real, he muſt ſubſcribe to the Note: That the thouſand Pounds were prepared for him; he ſhould go to Flanders, and be maintained and protected there; and objecting his Fears of the Inquiſition, if he went to Flanders, Mrs.

Mrs. Price alledged, if he could not be content to be in a [illegible] Earl's Houſe, and not go beyond Sea.

That diſcourſing once with Tasborough about Sir George Wakeman's Trial, he obſerved what a Progreſs had been made, by acquitting Sir George: The Proteſtants themſelves were now at a Stand, he ſaid, Whether there was a Plot or not; adding, if you come over to us, it will overthrow all; as for Oates, Bedloe, and Prance, they ſhould ſoon do their Buſineſs.

Then a Copy of the Note mentioned in the Indictment was produced, and proved to be a true Copy.

Wright's Evidence.

———Wright, being ſworn, depoſed, that he heard Mrs. Price deſire Dugdale to be kind to Father Harcourt; and another Time he heard her ſay, ſhe had been to viſit Harcourt, who took her in his Arms, and ſaid, do not cry for me, I die in a good Cauſe; and ſhe added, if the King commanded her to be burnt at a Stake, ſhe would ſubmit to it, and ſo would the whole Party; whereupon Dugdale ſaid, while you uſe theſe kind Expreſſions, you would cut off his Head; and Mrs. Price replied, you are a Rogue, I am ſatisfied; and often ſaid, there were not four greater Rogues on this Side Hell than the King's Evidence, (Oates, Bedloe, Prance, and Dugdale.)

The Chief Juſtice obſerving, it was ſtrange ſhe ſhould tamper with him after ſhe had called him Rogue, the King's Counſel anſwered, who ſhould ſhe tamper with, but one ſhe thought a Rogue?

Croſs's Evidence.

Croſs, the Vintner, depoſed, That Mrs. Price came often to his Houſe, in June and July laſt, and uſed to ſend for Dugdale; and he heard them diſcourſe concerning Harcourt, but did not know what it tended to.

Chamberlain's Evidence.

Then Chamberlain and Cleave his Clerk were ſworn, who lay concealed in Dugdale's Chamber while he converſed with Mrs. Price, and depoſed, that they heard her tell Dugdale, the Spaniſh Ambaſſador was unwilling to treat with him, becauſe his Interpreter was out of Town, and it would be dangerous to truſt another; but that the Duke of York would protect him, and pardon him, and give him a thouſand Pounds to maintain him; and Dugdale ſaid, you know, Mrs. Price, that I did not begin this Intrigue, but you propoſed it to me; and ſhe owned ſhe propoſed it.

Clerk of the Council's Evidence.

Sir Robert Southwell, Clerk of the Council, being ſworn, depoſed, that Mrs. Price was examined before the Council the 23d of October, and it being demanded who framed the above-ſaid Paper, ſhe anſwered, ſhe indicted it herſelf, and one Mrs. Man wrote it out for her: And that Mr. Tasborough being examined alſo, acknowledged he told Dugdale, that unleſs he ſigned it, he could procure him no Favour; for that was to be the Foundation, to teſtify that he was a Man of that Sorrow he had expreſſed himſelf to Mrs. Price.

Then Mr. Sanders, Counſel for Mrs. Price, entered upon her Defence, and ſaid, It was true Mr. Dugdale and Mrs. Price were Fellow-Servants in the Lord Aſton's Family, and Dugdale had promiſed her Marriage, though he thought fit afterwards to deſert her: That upon his coming to London, he renewed his Courtſhip; and it was not unlikely, as ſhe was a Papiſt, ſhe might ſolicit a Man ſhe had an Intereſt in for her Party; but it was probable, the Story of ſuborning him was framed by Dugdale himſelf, which was baſely done by one with whom he had contracted Marriage.

1679. 32 Car. II.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, It was much they ſhould be contracted, when ſhe told him he was a great Rogue.

Mr. Sanders anſwered, He deſired it might be obſerved, that it was after ſhe had told him he was a Rogue that he pretended ſhe had ſuborned him.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton replied, And therefore ſhe thought him fitter for her Purpoſe.

To which Mr. Sanders anſwered, If ſhe had an Intent to ſuborn him, ſhe would not have called him Rogue to his Face; that was not the Way to inſinuate herſelf.

The Priſoner's Witneſſes.

Then Sir John Nicholas depoſed, that Dugdale acknowledged before the Council, he had made ſome Propoſals of Marriage to Mrs. Price, but ſaid there was no Contract.

Other Witneſſes depoſed, that Dugdale courted and kept Company with Mrs. Price after he came up to Town: Upon which her Counſel obſerved, that ſhe kept him Company on that Account, and not with an Intent to ſuborn him to retract his Evidence. To which the Court replied, Why did you write that Note then?

Tasborough's Defence by his Counſel.

Mr. Pollexfen, Counſel for Mr. Tasborough, ſaid, that, notwithſtanding any Evidence that had been given, his Client might be very innocent; for it appeared Mrs. Price told him, that Dugdale was ſorry for what he had ſworn, and would retract his Evidence; and Dugdale himſelf ſaid, he ſeemed to comply, and treated as if he was yielding.

Mr. Juſtice Pemberton thereupon obſerved, that Tasborough ſaid, Mrs. Price acquainted him with the Propoſal ſhe had made of a thouſand Pounds, and he was the Man that was to confirm the Promiſes ſhe had made.

The Chief Juſtice alſo obſerved, That Tasborough told Dugdale, if he would retract his Evidence, according to the Note that was produced, he ſhould have a thouſand Pounds for his Pains: And it was obſerved, that Tasborough uſed the Duke of York's Name, and ſaid he had Authority from him to propoſe thoſe Things, which was a Wrong done to ſo great a Prince.

The Counſel replied, that as Dugdale apprehended he ſhould make himſelf a great many Enemies, and might want a Subſiſtence if he complied with them, Tasborough might ſay, very innocently, he ſhould be protected, and have a Proviſion made for him, if he deſerved it: There was a great deal of Difference, between offering a Man Money to ſwear a Falſhood, and retract the Truth, and offering him Money to bring Truth to Light, and retract a Falſhood; and it was lawful to promiſe a Witneſs Protection and Aſſiſtance.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, A thouſand Pounds Reward was too great a Temptation: They did not live in ſo virtuous an Age, but a Man might be tempted, by ſuch a Promiſe, to retract his Evidence, though it was true: By this they would let in all manner of Temptations to Witneſſes; they ſhould never know where they were.

Mr. Thompſon, Counſel for Mr. Tasborough, urged, that he was a Gentleman of a fair Character, and not likely to be concerned in ſuch an Affair as Dugdale would repreſent this to be, (namely, the ſuborning him to retract his Evidence, without any Regard whether it was true or falſe;) and that Mr. Tasborough had applied himſelf to the Lord Privy Seal, upon Mrs. Price's giving him this Information, that Mr. Dugdale might receive ſuch Encouragement as was fitting in this Matter.

Then Mrs. Price, having obtained Leave to ſpeak for herſelf, ſaid, that Dugdale importuned her to go to the Duke of York, and promiſed to pay her Coach-Hire; for the Truth of which ſhe appealed to Dugdale himſelf; but was told by Mr. Juſtice Pemberton, ſhe muſt not interrogate him.

Mrs. Price then averred, that Dugdale himſelf ſolicited her to draw the Note mentioned in the Indictment; and appealed to Dugdale, if he did not acknowledge to her, that he was perjured: Whereupon the Court told her, ſhe was an impudent Woman, ſhe muſt have her Mouth ſtopped, and would not ſuffer her to ſay any more. And Mr. Juſtice Jones proceeding to ſum up the Evidence, obſerved to the Jury, that the Familiarity which had been proved between Dugdale and Mrs. Price, was rather an Argument of her tampering with him, than the contrary; for it was not uſual to attempt ſuch Things with Strangers; and he thought both Parts of the Indictment well proved as to her, as well the perſuading Dugdale not to give Evidence againſt Harcourt, as the ſuborning him to retract his Evidence afterwards: Tasborough indeed was not concerned in the firſt Part, but in the ſuborning Dugdale to retract his Evidence, he was equally guilty; for he did not, as had been ſuggeſted, charge Dugdale with giving a falſe Evidence againſt his Conſcience, but only adviſed him to keep out of the Way, and retract his Evidence againſt the Catholicks, and he ſhould have a thouſand Pounds, a Pardon, and Protection; and though it might be a very good Thing, to adviſe one who had done an Injury to Repentance and Recantation, yet the offering him a Reward of a thouſand Pounds could never be juſtified: That this was the uſual Way of ſuborning People; no Man ever came to another, and deſired him directly to forſwear himſelf; but the telling him of a thouſand Pounds Reward, and how he might ſerve the Catholick Cauſe, were very proper Arguments in this Caſe to prevail with him, and ſuch as few People in his Circumſtances would have reſiſted; and though Tasborough might have the Character of an honeſt Man, it was not to be doubted he had been taught, that in the Service of the Catholick Cauſe, all ſuch Practices would be ſanctified.

They are convicted. After which the Jury laid their Heads together, and found both the Defendants guilty without going from the Bar; and being committed to the Marſhal of the King's-Bench, Tasborough was fined one hundred Pounds, and Price two hundred.

Their Sentence.

Remarks on the Trial of Tasborough and Price.

It was the Unhappineſs of theſe Times, that no Man, charged with deſigning to ſtifle this pretended Plot, and tampering with the Witneſſes, could make a proper Defence: He durſt not ſo much as ſuggeſt that the Plot was a Forgery, and the Witneſſes perjured, for Fear of being charged as a Conſpirator, and drawing upon himſelf a Criminal Proſecution. And indeed, Shaftesbury, and the Faction, had worked up the People to ſuch a Fury, that a Man was in Danger of being pulled in Pieces, that dared to doubt of the Conſpiracy, or the Veracity of the Witneſſes, or to take any notice of their infamous Characters.

It ſeems to be admitted on all Hands, that if the Plot was a Forgery, and the Witneſſes perjured, there was no manner of Hurt in encouraging the Witneſſes to retract their Evidence, and make what Satisfaction they could to the Perſons they had injured by their Teſtimony; nay, this muſt be acknowledged by all Mankind to be their Duty, ſince it was done with a Deſign to prevent the ſpilling innocent Blood; and it is evident at this Day, to a Demonſtration, that the Plot was in Reality a Sham, and the Witneſſes notoriouſly perjured: Even Burnet and Rapin, the celebrated Advocates of the Faction, have, both of them, been compelled, by the Force of Truth, to confeſs thus much, however they may have endeavoured, in ſome Part of their Works, to diſguiſe their real Thoughts, leaſt they ſhould incur the Diſpleaſure of their Party.

Rapin ſeems very ready to grant, there was no Deſign againſt the King's Life: On the contrary, like a true Diſciple of Shaftesbury's, he has formed another Plot, in which he makes the King and the Duke of York the principal Conſpirators. But if it be admitted there was no Plot againſt the King's Life, whatever Deſigns the King and Duke might have to ſubvert the eſtabliſhed Religion and Government, all thoſe who were executed for the Plot, were certainly murdered, under a Colour of Law; for it was a Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life they were charged with, and this is what they were condemned for: Beſides, a Conſpiracy to aſſiſt the King, to bring about an Alteration in the eſtabliſhed Religion or Government, was not Treaſon by any Statute or Law then in being, and conſequently the Witneſſes were perjured, and the Sufferers unjuſtly put to death, though ſuch a Conſpiracy, as Shaftesbury, and after him Rapin, ſuppoſes, ſhould be admitted.

But whoever forged the Plot, it is evident, from the Narratives of Tongue and Oates, that the Original Deſign was to charge the Jeſuits, or rather the Pope, with a Deſign to murder both the King and Duke, to alter the very Frame of the Government, uſurp the Dominion of the Kingdom, and to govern it by a Viceroy or Lieutenant, as a Province of the See of Rome: And this is ſtill more apparent from the Commiſſions both for Civil and Military Offices, which Oates pretended were iſſued out at Rome, by an Authority derived from the Pope, or the General of the Jeſuits; and the Authority, he pretended, was given them, by thoſe Commiſſions, to depoſe and murder his Majeſty.

However, when Shaftesbury came into the Project, he perfectly new-modelled their Scheme; and inſtead of ſetting aſide the King and the Duke, he made them to be in a Plot with the Papiſts, and thoſe he called Popiſhly affected, againſt the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties of the People, in order to incite incite a Rebellion againſt King Charles II. as the Faction had done againſt K. Charles I. and they had infallibly brought the Son, as well as the Father, to the Block, if their Views had not been ſeen through before the Project was ripe: So that here was in reality a Plot of the Faction, and not of the Papiſts, to deſtroy the King and Government.

It can never be expected indeed, that the Sectaries, and their Adherents, ſhould entirely give up the Popiſh Plot, how full ſoever the Proof of the Forgery may be, becauſe they muſt then confeſs the Villainy of their Party in forging it, and in putting ſo many innocent Men to death, by hiring perjured Witneſſes to ſwear them out of their Lives, which muſt render their Party odious to all Mankind, and induce thoſe that wiſh well to the Government, to be upon their Guard whenever the Sectaries exclaim againſt Popery; a Stratagem they have formerly tried with ſuch Succeſs, that we find them repeating it in almoſt every Reign. But to return to the Trial:

The Judge, who ſummed up the Evidence, ſeems to labour with all his Might to get the Defendants convicted, inſomuch that he ſcarce confines himſelf to Truth; for he ſays, Tasborough did not charge Dugdale with giving falſe Evidence, and therefore deſired him to retract it; but would have him retract it, right or wrong; whereas in the Note that was drawn up for Dugdale to ſign, it is expreſly ſaid, that Dugdale had ſworn falſly. Then the Judge obſerves, that the offering of a thouſand Pounds Reward could never be juſtified; but if it be conſidered, that this was offered only to prevent the ſhedding innocent Blood, and that the Party offered as largely to get them convicted, when they knew the Priſoners innocent, the offering a thouſand Pounds to get the Witneſs to retract his murdering Evidence, might very well be juſtified; it would have been in vain to have offered leſs to a Man of Mr. Dugdale's Honeſty, who was reſolved to make the moſt of the Parties that bid Money for his Evidence.

It was, indeed, enough to confound all Juſtice, and render it impoſſible almoſt to diſtinguiſh between Right and Wrong, if ſuch extravagant Rewards were offered to Witneſſes in ſuch mean Circumſtances, as the Judge rightly obſerved: But the Faction led the Way, and that in a very wicked Cauſe; and ſurely it was as lawful for innocent Men to endeavour to get the Evidence, falſly given againſt them, retracted, as it was for their Enemies to hire Witneſſes to take away their Lives.

Nor can I ſee why Dugdale ſhould not have been permitted to have made ſome Anſwer to Mrs. Price, when ſhe charged him to his Face in Court, and appealed to himſelf, Whether he did not importune her to go with him to the Duke of York? And whether he did not acknowledge himſelf perjured? If the Truth might have been brought to Light, by this or any other Means, it would have given more Satisfaction, than the adhering rigorouſly to Rules that have very little Reaſon to ſupport them.

Charge publiſhing a ſeditious Libel.

THE Defendant, by an Information exhibited by Mr. Attorney-General, was charged with publiſhing a Libel, entitled, An Appeal from the Country to the City; in which it was ſaid, That the greateſt Danger accruing to the Kingdom, upon the King's untimely Death, would proceed from a Confuſion, and Want of ſome eminent and intereſted Perſon they might truſt, to lead them up againſt a French and Popiſh Army; for which Purpoſe no Perſon was fitter than the Duke of Monmouth, as well for Quality, Courage, and Conduct, as for that his Life and Fortune depended on the ſame Bottom as theirs: He would ſtand by them, and therefore they ought to ſtand by him; and remember the old Rule, He who has the worſt Title, ever makes the beſt King; and inſtead of that Motto, God and my Right, he ought to take that of God and my People.

Evi-

Three Witneſſes proved the Defendant's ſelling the Book; and a Fourth depoſed, that the Defendant was eſteemed an Anabaptiſt; and that when he was queſtioned by the Company of Stationers, for ſelling ſuch ſcandalous Books, he anſwered, he had ſeveral Thouſands to ſtand by him.

The Defence.

The Defendant's Counſel admitted he ſold the Book, but ſaid he did not do it maliciouſly: He ſaw the Book about Town, and bought a Parcel of them, hoping to get Money by them in his way of Trade; but had no Intention to ſcandalize the King or Government, and called two of his Neighbours to teſtify he was a peaceable Man, and not uſed to ſpeak diſreſpectfully of the Government.

The Charge of the Chief Juſtice.

The Chief Juſtice, in his Directions to the Jury, ſaid, that the expoſing this Libel to Sale was a great Offence; that it had been lately reſolved by all the Judges, that thoſe who printed or ſold ſcandalous Books or Pamphlets, reflecting on the Publick, or on private Perſons, ſuch Books might be ſeized, and the Offenders puniſhed by Law; and that all Writers of News, though not ſcandalous, ſeditious, or reflecting on the Government, if they wrote falſe News, were puniſhable: That the Book in Queſtion contained ſuch baſe Reflections againſt all ſorts of Perſons, he thought there could not be a worſe; or a worſe Man than the Defendant, who for a trivial Profit diſturbed the Peace of his Country, and would ſet the People together by the Ears for the Value of a Groat.

The Charge, for Publishing a Libel,

AN Information was exhibited against the Defendant by the Attorney-General, charging him, that after the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, Marshal, Rumley, and Corker, and their Acquittal before the Lord Mayor, the Lord Chief Justice Scroggs, &c. he had published a scandalous Libel, entitled, Some Observations on the late Trial, reflecting on the Court, &c.

He afterwards submitted to a small Fine.

JANE CURTIS, also being prosecuted for publishing the same Libel, came into Court, confessed her Offence, and made her Submission; whereupon the Jury found her Guilty.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges, that Sir Thomas Gascoigne, late of Elmet in the County of York, on the 30th of May, in the 31st Year of his present Majesty, at Elmet aforesaid, did compass and imagine the Death of the King, and the Subversion of the Established Religion and Government; and that the said Sir Thomas Gascoigne, Sir Miles Stapleton, and other false Traitors, did at the Time and Place aforesaid, assemble themselves, and resolve to put the said Treasons in Execution, agreeing to contribute large Sums of Money to several of his Majesty's Subjects, to procure them to kill him; and that the said Sir Thomas Gascoigne did himself solicit Robert Bolron, and promised him for that Service 1000 l.

Some assigned to assist the Prisoner.

The Prisoner being fourscore and four Years of Age, and very deaf, obtained leave for two of his Friends to stand by him and assist him at his Trial; but I do not perceive there was any one but Mr. Hobart an Attorney, that did him any Service.

The Evidence of Bolron, the Prisoner's Servant.

The Witnesses being called, Bolron, lately a Servant to Sir Thomas, deposed, that in 1674, he came to live with Sir Thomas as Steward to his Coal-works; and that a little before Easter, 1675, being in the next Room, he heard Sir Thomas tell Mr. Charles Ingleby, that least his Estate should be forfeited, he was resolved to make a collusive Conveyance thereof; and Charles Ingleby said, he would draw the Conveyance: That the Defendant afterwards went with Sir Thomas to Sir William Ingleby's, and saw him Receive 1000 l. as the Consideration Money (colourably); that he heard the Deed read, and was Witness to the Execution of it; and it was a Conveyance of Sir Thomas's whole Estate to Sir William Ingleby for seven Years, reserving only 100 l. per Annum, besides the Consideration Money; and this he did (as the Deponent heard him tell Sir Miles Stapleton) to secure his Estate in case he should be discovered to be in the Design of killing the King: That in the Year 1676, he heard Sir Thomas tell Christopher Metcalfe, that he resolved to send 3000 l. to the Jesuits in London, for carrying on the Design; and Sir Thomas mentioned 300 l. for Corker, 300 l. for Harcourt, 300 l. for Cowwallis, alias Pracid, and 300 l. to several other Persons; and said he would return 300 l. at a Time, by Richard Phisick, to prevent Suspicion: That in 1677, he heard Sir Thomas say, he had returned it; and that, were it a thousand Times as much, he should be glad to spend it in so good a Cause; and at other Times, he heard him say, it was for killing the King: He further deposed, that Sir Thomas Gascoigne, Sir Miles Stapleton, the Lady Tempest, Thomas Thwing, and several more, agreed to found a Nunnery at Dolebank, if their Design of killing the King took Effect, and the Roman Catholick Religion was established in England; and Sir Thomas assigned 90 l. a Year out of his Estate towards endowing it.

Bolron added, that on the 30th of May last, Sir Thomas bid him go into a Gallery, and there William Rushton, his Confessor, came to him, and would have persuaded him to kill the King, telling him how meritorious an Act it would be, and that the Pope would give the Kingdom to another: That returning to Sir Thomas again, and telling him what Discourse he had with Rush-

Ruſhton, Sir Thomas took him by the Hand, and ſaid, if the Deponent would engage in the Deſign of killing the King, he would give him 1000 l. and when he refuſed to be concerned in ſuch a wicked and bloody Deed, Sir Thomas deſired he would keep his Diſcourſe ſecret; but he went immediately to a Juſtice.

The Court demanding how ſoon he went? He ſaid he went within a Fortnight to Mr. Tindal, and made Oath that Sir Thomas offered him 1000 l. to kill the King: That going afterwards to London, he applied himſelf to Sir Robert Clayton, who carried him to the Lord Shaftesbury, and an Order of Council was made concerning him.

It being demanded of him by the Court, If he left Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Houſe in good Friendſhip? Bolron anſwered, Yes: He was often at his Houſe afterwards, and went thither to hear Maſs. It being demanded if he had any Eſtate when he left his Service? Bolron anſwered, he rented 15 l. per Ann. of Sir Thomas, and had 7 l. a Year of his own; and added, that he heard Sir Thomas tell the Lady Tempeſt he would ſend 150 l. to Dolebank, in hopes the Blow would be ſhortly given; and Cornwallis wrote Word he had received it, but ſaid it was too little to carry on ſo great a Deſign; for this was to arm the poor Catholicks when the King was killed.

Priſoner's Anſwer to this Evidence.

Then Mr. Hobart, who was appointed to aſſiſt Sir Thomas, repeated Part of the Evidence to him; and Sir Thomas anſwered, He acknowledged he had Money of Sir William Ingleby, and ſealed a Deed to him, and that he had returned more than 3000 l. by Phiſwick, who was his Servant, for the Uſe of his Sons, Daughters, and other Relations; but averred, that what Bolron had atteſted concerning the founding a Nunnery, and the Deſign of killing the King, was abſolutely falſe: And particularly his offering Bolron 1000 l. to be one of the Aſſaſſins: And demanding if ever he knew him have 200 l. together in his Life? Bolron anſwered, he had ſeen 500 l. together in his Houſe, and 700 l. in Mr. Phiſwick's Hands: That Sir Thomas's Eſtate was then at leaſt 1200 l. per Ann. though he believed he had ſettled 600 l. per Ann. on his Son. Sir Thomas replied, he wiſhed Bolron would make it good; but there was not one Word of Truth in his Evidence: After which Mowbray, another of Sir Thomas's Servants, was ſworn, and ſaid he would firſt give Evidence of the Plot in general (as the reſt of the Witneſſes were taught) and depoſed, that he came to wait on Sir Thomas in his Chamber in 1674, and continued with him till 76, during which Time Adamſon, Fincham, Stapleton and Killingbeck, all Prieſts, and the two Thwyngs uſed to viſit Mr. Ruſhton; and the Deponent, being diligent in attending Sir Thomas at the Altar, was much in his Favour, and permitted to be in his Chamber when the Prieſts were in private with him, where he often heard them talk of a Deſign to advance the Popiſh Religion, and that it was like to be effected ſpeedily, ſince moſt of the conſiderable Papiſts were engaged in it; and if fair Means could not do it, Force muſt be uſed; for the King had promiſed the Jeſuits abroad to eſtabliſh their Religion when he was reſtored, which they deſpaired of now, and therefore he was adjudged an Heretick, and to be killed; and Ruſhton had given an Oath to Sir Thomas, his Son and Daughter, to conceal it, and be active in it: That at another Time Ruſhton produced a Liſt with 4 or 500 Names ſubſcribed to it, among which was Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's; the Title whereof was, A Liſt of them that are engaged in the Deſign of killing the King, and promoting the Catholick Religion; and they ſaid the Pope had given a Commiſſion to execute the Deſign, with a plenary Indulgence of Ten Thouſand Years to all who ſhould either act, or contribute thereto; beſides other Gratifications.

1679. 32 Car. II.

That about Michaelmas, 1676, he heard Sir Thomas, his Son, the Lady Tempeſt, and Mr. Ruſhton, diſcourſing concerning killing the King, and firing the Cities of London and York; and Sir Thomas then aſſured Ruſhton he would obſerve the Oath of Secrecy, and contribute to the utmoſt of his Power to promote the Deſign; and they unanimouſly agreed it was a meritorious Undertaking, and ſaid they would venture their Lives and Fortunes in it: This he heard, as he ſtood without the Door of the Room.

The Priſoner's Anſwer to this Evidence.

Mr. Hobart having repeated this Evidence to Sir Thomas, he anſwered, this Witneſs had got his Story out of the News-Books: There was not a Word of Truth came out of his Mouth; and demanded why he did not diſcover this Matter ſooner? Mowbray ſaid, he was perſuaded to continue a Papiſt, that he might not diſcover it; and after he had taken the Oaths, and turned Proteſtant, they threatened to take away his Life; and his Circumſtances would not permit him to come to London.

Further Evidence.

Then Sir Thomas's Almanack was produced as Evidence againſt him, wherein was mentioned 100 l. paid to Peter for Corker, which Sir Thomas ſaid was part of Mary Appleby's Portion that he returned to Corker, becauſe he did not know where ſhe lived in Paris.

Mr. Attorney obſerved, There was another Book which mentioned 900 l. paid to Corker: To which Sir Thomas anſwered, he had been ſeveral Years returning Money: He was obliged to pay 100 l. annually to Mary Appleby, and ſeveral other Sums, as the Rents came in: They might amount to 2000 l. from firſt to laſt. And the Money he was charged with applying to erect a Nunnery, was for Mr. Thwyng and his Siſters, that lived next Door to him.

A Letter was then produced, to prove his Intention of founding a Nunnery, containing grateful Acknowledgments to Sir Thomas for all charitable Favours: Tells him his Niece, and Mrs. Haſtings, deſired to ſee him at Dolebank, and that the Writer had ſent a Paper ſafe to Mrs. Bedingfield, and informed her of Sir Thomas's Deſign to have the following Proviſo inſerted in the Writing, (viz. That if England be converted, then the whole 90 l. per Ann. to be applied here in Yorkſhire, about or at Heworth), which would be for the Glory of 1679. 32 Car. II. God; and that the good Religious there were desirous to remove to Mr. Dawson's, because the House would not receive more Scholars, and had other Inconveniencies.

Whereupon the Chief Justice observed, it was pretty plain there was a Nunnery designed.

Another Letter, written by Pracid the Priest, was read, wherein it was declared, that the pretended Oath of Allegiance could not be taken; and whoever gave Leave, deceived the People, and acted contrary to the Catholick Church.

Then Phiswick was sworn, and deposed that he was Servant to Sir Thomas above six Years, and in that Time had returned upwards of six thousand Pounds; Part whereof was for Sir Thomas, Part for his Son, and Part for the Lady Tempest; and it being demanded what Estates they had? Phiswick answered, His Son had between 4 and 500 l. per Ann. the Lady Tempest 300 l. and Sir Thomas 1600 l. per Annum.

The Prisoner's Witnesses.

Sir Thomas being permitted to call his Witnesses, Babington appeared and deposed, that last Spring Sir Thomas gave him Orders to sue Bolron on two Bonds: Whereupon Bolron offered to convey a House at Newcastle to Sir Thomas, and a Conveyance was drawn, as a collateral Security for the Money; but Bolron refused to execute it, unless Sir Thomas would deliver up the two Bonds: That the Deponent also received Orders to deliver Declarations in Ejectment to turn Bolron out of his Farm, and telling Bolron of it, he said, Then, by God, I will do that which I did not intend to do; and Moor, who was bound for Bolron, told the Deponent that Bolron declared, if Sir Thomas sued him, he would inform that he kept Priests in his House.

Moor also deposed, that Bolron, desiring him to be bound with him to Sir Thomas Gascoigne, told him, he need not fear any Trouble; for if Sir Thomas sued him, he would inform he kept Priests; and that Bolron not paying the Money, the Deponent desired Mr. Babington to take out a Writ against him; whereupon he absconded, and went to London: That the Deponent meeting him upon the Road, as he was returning to Yorkshire, Bolron said, you and I have often discoursed of Sir Thomas Gascoigne; you may do me Good: If you do not, pray do me no Harm; and the Deponent demanding if Sir Thomas was in the Plot, for he had often told him he was Innocent, Bolron answered, he was then a Papist, and equivocated, and if he had told a thousand Lies, or killed twenty Protestants, their Priests would have forgiven him: And then pulled out Ten Shillings, and said, It is all the Money I have: Pray do me no Harm, for you know I have all along denied it.

Thompson deposed, that Bolron was Steward of Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Colliery, and Sir Thomas not liking his Accompts turned him out; and there being a great deal of Money due to Sir Thomas, he desired the Deponent to be bound with him, and so became bound with him to Sir Thomas; but demanding afterwards how he should be indemnified? Bolron answered, if Sir Thomas sued him, he would do him an ill Turn, and soon after went to London: That Bolron returning from London, and having taken up Sir Thomas, the Deponent asked him, What he designed to do? and Bolron answered, Do not fear, I am to receive 30 l. on the King's Account; but another bids me 60 l. I know what Oates and Bedloe had, and will not bate a Farthing. 1679. 32 Car. II.

Backhouse, the Constable, deposed, That on the 7th of July last, he served a Warrant on Sir Thomas, and was ordered to bring the Witnesses before the Justices; and Mrs. Bolron being then sick, said, she knew nothing against Sir Thomas; but her Husband said she must go, or he would have her drawn at the Cart's Arse: Another Witness deposed, that when Bolron told his Wife she must go, and swear against Sir Thomas, she cried, and refused to go; and Bolron threatening to tie her to a Horse's Tail, she answered, she knew nothing against Sir Thomas relating to his Majesty or the Church.

Gregson deposed, That in August, after Bolron came from London, the Deponent asked him, how Sir Thomas did, and how he would come off about the Plot? and he answered, Sir Thomas might come off well enough; but it would cost him much Money. The Deponent then asked, how they came to differ? and he said, that Rogue Addison, the Priest's Brother, was the Occasion of it, who called him to an Account, or else he had not done it; and after Bolron had rode from him a little way, he returned and said, the King had like to have been stabbed by one of the Privy-Council, and now they would sooner believe his Information.

Two Witnesses deposed, That they overheard Bolron and Mowbray discoursing concerning Sir Thomas Gascoigne; and Bolron said, Sir Thomas had been severe upon them both, and now they had a Way to be revenged: Mowbray answered, he thought Sir Thomas an honest Man; but if he knew any Thing to hang my Lady Tempest, he would discover it; and Bolron replied, but Sir Thomas troubles me, and if I do not make out something against him (which must be by two Witnesses) he will ruin me; and Mowbray demanding how they should do it? Bolron answered, If thou wilt come to my House, I will put thee in a Way, and we shall be well rewarded; and Mowbray fixed a Day to go to him.

Hickeringill deposed, That on the 12th of September last, he was at an Alehouse with Mowbray, and one Legat, and they were consulting together how to disgrace Sir Thomas, and take away his Life; and Mowbray called out the Deponent, and said Sir Thomas and the Lady Tempest had done all they could to disgrace him, (he supposed he meant their giving out he had robbed them, which became the Country Talk) and now he would match them: Now he would requite them.

Johnson deposed, That the first Month Bolron came into Sir Thomas's Service, he lost 3 l. by him; for the Deponent stated the Accompt: To which Bolron answered, Sir Thomas forgave it him.

Pebles, the Clerk of the Peace for the County of York, deposed, That Bolron was very very busy in charging People with Disaffection, and had but an indifferent Character in the County; most Men spoke ill of him.

Clow deposed, That he arrested Bolron at the Suit of Hickeringill, and Bolron said he would make Sir Thomas pay the Debt, or he would play him such a Trick as he little dreamt of.

Hobart deposed, That he knew of the Payment of most Part of the Money, that had been mentioned to be returned by Sir Thomas, 1800 l. whereof was paid to Trumbal, upon a Purchase; 200 l. to a Client of his, and 600 l. to Corker at Times, for the last of which Sums he had Receipts from Mrs. Mary Appleby, to whom Sir Thomas was Guardian.

er Wit-es for King.

Then the King's Council called Sir John Nicholas, Clerk of the Council, who deposed, that Sir Thomas said before the Council, Bolron was his Servant, till within this Twelve-month; and for his Honesty, he had nothing to say to him, 'till of late, that he had not behaved himself so well in giving an Information against him.

Mrs. Bolron being called, deposed, That she was unwilling to go before the Justice; but that her Husband nevre threatned her, to make her accuse Sir Thomas.

Another Witness deposed, He heard Sir Thomas say, he never had a more faithful Servant than Bolron.

ges di-the a-t the ner.

Then Mr. Justice Jones summed up the Evidence, and directed the Jury to find the Prisoner guilty; as did Mr. Justice Dolben, and Mr. Justice Pemberton; and particularly, Mr. Justice Dolben told the Jury, he observed they took Notice how improbable it was that Sir Thomas Gascoigne should sue Bolron upon the Bonds that were mentioned, and take a Course to turn him out of his Farm, at a Time when he knew Bolron was privy to his Conspiracy; and when Sir Thomas himself had offered him a Thousand Pounds to kill the King: But he said, they must give a Verdict according to their Evidence. And there being two Witnesses who swore positively to a Thing within their own Knowledge, scarce any Improbability ought to weigh against Evidence: But notwithstanding the Court laboured in this manner to get Sir Thomas convicted, the Jury, after half an Hour's Recess, brought in their Verdict, that he was Not Guilty.

1679. 32 Car. II.

Remarks on this Trial.

Thus we see new Witnesses of the Plot rising up every Day: If a Servant had cheated or robbed his Master, he would revenge himself, and endeavour to ward off a Prosecution, by swearing his Master into a Plot.

This was an expeditious Way of paying Debts, and getting a Protection against the Officers of Justice, which most of the Witnesses of the Plot wanted; but when there were such extravagant Rewards offered besides, for Witnesses to support the Credit of the Plot, no Wonder we find them multiply apace. The Chief Justice seems to have been sufficiently convinced that the Prisoner was Innocent, and probably went off the Bench, that he might not incur the Displeasure of the Faction, by declaring his Opinion on summing up the Evidence. The other three Judges were either still deluded with the Belief of a Plot, or biassed by their Fears of the same Party, or they would not have borne so hard on the Prisoner, in their Directions to the Jury; particularly Mr. Justice Dolben, who tells them they ought to believe the two Witnesses, notwithstanding the high Improbability of Sir Thomas's giving Orders to sue a Man, and turn him out of his Farm, after he had offered him 1000 l. to kill the King. Surely he ought to have taken Notice also, that the Witnesses were not credible Witnesses: That they were moved by Revenge, or Avarice, or that they gave this Evidence to save themselves from a Jail; but in State Prosecutions it is very rare to find Judges perfectly indifferent: They are too often moved, either by Hopes or Fears, to shew great Partiality, and instead of being Counsel for the Prisoners, as they sometimes have declared they ought to be, they wrest both the Law and the Evidence to his Destruction: And where they do this, with an Intent to serve, or keep fair with a powerful Faction, or an arbitrary Administration, they seem to look upon such Motives as a sufficient Justification of their Conduct to Men; but how they will be able to answer it to the Righteous Judge of all the Earth, possibly they seldom reflect.

1680. 32 Car. II. Caſtlemaine's Trial.

The Trial of ROGER PALMER, Eſq; (Earl of Caſtlemaine in Ireland) for High-Treaſon, at the King's-Bench Bar. June 23d, 1680. Trin. 32 Car. II.

The Charge THE Indictment charges the Earl with High-Treaſon, in conſpiring the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the eſtabliſhed Religion and Government; and in order thereto, promiſing great Rewards, and paying divers Sums of Money to ſeveral Perſons unknown, and writing Notes to incite ſeveral other Perſons to engage in the ſame traiterous Deſigns.

Mr. Attorney's Obſervations. Mr. Attorney, in opening the Evidence, obſerved, that the Lord Caſtlemaine was the Perſon who managed the Evidence for the Priſoners who had been tried for the Popiſh Plot, and was always preſent at thoſe Trials, and countenanced the Criminals, and afterwards became an Interceſſor for them.

Oates's Evidence. Oates depoſed, That he brought a Letter from the Fathers in Spain to the Earl of Caſtlemaine, whereby they informed him, that the Fathers there zealouſly concurred with the Fathers in England in the Deſign, namely, The Subverſion of the Government, the Alteration of Religion, and the Deſtruction of the King.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, If this was expreſſed in the Letter? Oates anſwered, The Word Deſign was; under which they uſed to comprehend all thoſe Things.

That he did not deliver this Letter to my Lord himſelf, but ſaw a Letter afterwards at St. Omers, wherein he acknowledged the Receipt of it: That he (the Deponent) afterwards came over from St. Omers, to the Conſult at the White Horſe in the Strand, and conſented with the reſt of the Jeſuits to the King's Death; and that my Lord Caſtlemaine, being ſome few Days after at Wild-houſe, endeavoured to reconcile thoſe Fathers and the Jeſuits, that they might the better carry on the Deſign: That the Deponent did not know his Lordſhip then; but going over Lincoln's-Inn-Fields with Mr Langhorne afterwards, and meeting his Lordſhip, Mr. Langhorne preſented the Deponent to him, and they went together to Mr. Fenwicke's Chamber, where they diſcourſed of the Conſult, and how unanimous the Fathers were in ſigning it: They talked alſo of laying aſide the King, and bringing in the Popiſh Religion; and my Lord ſaid, He wiſhed them Succeſs, and now he ſhould be revenged for the Injuries done him.

The Chief Juſtice demanded, If they always meant the Death of the King, when they mentioned The Deſign?

Oates anſwered, It was ſo taken among them (the Jeſuits), and ſo received by the Lord Caſtlemaine.

The Chief Juſtice asked, How he could ſay it was ſo received by his Lordſhip?

Oates anſwered, He had often in his Letters ſpoken of introducing the Popiſh Religion, and annexed it to the Word Deſign. Whereupon the Chief Juſtice replied, Then Deſign meant ſomething elſe beſides killing the King.

The Court demanded, When he firſt diſcovered the Lord Caſtlemaine was concerned in this Buſineſs? Oates anſwered, The laſt Seſſion of the Long-Parliament: That he accuſed him Trinity-Term was Twelvemonth, and he was committed; and when Dangerfield came in and accuſed my Lord, he (the Deponent) brought a Charge a ſecond Time againſt him.

Lord Caſtlemaine obſerved, when this Witneſs was before the King, he ſpoke of a Divorce.

The Attorney General anſwered, What he ſaid in another Place, was not to be debated now.

His Lordſhip replied, If he proved him an ill Man in any Place, it was fit to be mentioned here; and demanded, If he ſaw the Divorce.

Oates ſaid, He would give Evidence of that, if his Lordſhip came to be indicted for his Prieſthood; but he did hear my Lord ſay at Wild-houſe, he had been at great Charge to carry on that Buſineſs of the Divorce: And a Letter was found, in a Prieſt's Chamber that was ſearched, wherein the whole Caſe was ſtated between him and his Wife Barbara; and he did tell the King, he ſaw in Strange's Hand an Account of a Divorce between my Lord Caſtlemaine and Barbara Dutcheſs of Cleveland.

Mr. Attorney objected, That if the Priſoner might ask Queſtions about ſuch foreign Matters, any Man might be catched. The Chief Juſtice anſwered, This was not ſo remote, but Uſe might be made of it. And the Lord Caſtlemaine ſaid, How could a Man be catched in the Truth? And demanded of Oates again, Whether he ſaw a Divorce, and where; or whether he ſaid ſo?

Oates anſwered, He did not know whether he ſaid ſo or not; and would have ſtolen away, but my Lord deſired he might ſtay in Court.

Then Dangerfield was called as a Witneſs, to whoſe Teſtimony his Lordſhip objected, That he had been convicted of Felony; broke Priſon, and been outlawed upon it; that he was alſo ſtigmatized, had ſtood in the Pillory, and been burnt in the Hand; and deſired his Counſel might be heard, as to his his being a Witneſs: Whereupon Counſel was heard, and the Judges being in Doubt, one of them went and conſulted the Judges of the Common Pleas; after whoſe Return the Chief Juſtice ſaid, Mr. Juſtice Raymond had put the Caſe to the Judges of the Common Pleas, (viz.) That the Witneſs was convicted of Felony, had been burnt in the Hand, out-lawed for Felony, and had a General Pardon; and they were of Opinion, that a General Pardon would not reſtore him to be a Witneſs, after an Outlawry for Felony, becauſe of the Intereſt the Subject had in him; but where a Perſon was burnt in the Hand, they looked upon it as a more general Diſcharge than a Pardon would amount to; and that, if he had been convicted of Felony, and not burnt in the Hand, a Pardon would not have ſet him right, but being convicted and burnt in the Hand, they ſuppoſed he might be a Witneſs.

Then Dangerfield was ſworn, and depoſed, That about a Year ago, the Lady Powis ſent him with a Letter to the Lord Caſtlemaine, and his Lordſhip ſent an Anſwer by him, which the Lady Powis read aloud to the Deponent and Mrs. Cellier, in which were theſe Words: This Perſon I like very well, and though he be no Scholar, he will ſerve to inſtruct the Youths as he ſhall be directed; and that by the Youths, were meant the St. Omers Witneſſes, whom his Lordſhip uſed to inſtruct; and it was a common Saying, when any of them were out in their Parts, I muſt go to my Lord Caſtlemaine for my Leſſon; and that his Lordſhip went with them to the Trials, and complained of the ill Uſage ſome of them received there; and that his Lordſhip employed him to get Lane out of the Gate-houſe.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, How he came into his Lordſhip's Acquaintance? He anſwered, The firſt Time was when he went with the Lady Powis's Letter, and in July after, he went to wait on him with ſome Letters of the ſame Purport with thoſe he conveyed into Colonel Manſel's Chamber, to promote the ſham Plot; for there was a Purpoſe, that ſo many Letters ſhould be conveyed into the Houſes of ſeveral Perſons of Quality, called Presbyterians (for that was the Character all Perſons, who were not for promoting the Catholick Intereſt, lay under); which Letters his Lordſhip approved, and ordered ſeveral Copies to be made of them, ſaying, He would contribute to thoſe who were concerned in that Matter: That in Auguſt afterwards, the Day after the Deponent had been treated with by the Lords in the Tower to kill the King, he waited on the Lord Caſtlemaine, who, ſending his Servant out of the Room, looked upon him with a ſtern Countenance, and demanded, Why he refuſed the Buſineſs for which he was taken out of Priſon; and the Deponent anſwering, Would his Lordſhip have him kill the King? His Lordſhip fell into ſuch a Fury, that he was forced rudely to leave the Room; adding, that he had heard my Lord ſeveral Times, in familiar Diſcourſe, call the King Tyrant.

The Earl's Witneſſes.

The Lord Caſtlemaine then entered upon his Defence; and firſt he produced a Witneſs to prove, that Oates indicted one Haſtings for Sodomy, who was acquitted. Then Hutchinſon the Prieſt, who converted Oates, was called, who depoſed, He was very poor and neceſſitous. Several Students of the College of St. Omers, depoſed, That he was at St. Omers when he ſwore he was at London at the Conſult.

Records proving Dangerfield a common Cheat.

A great many Records were produced, being the Convictions of Dangerfield for ſeveral notorious Cheats, ſuch as gilding Silver, and paſſing it away for Gold, for which he had been ſeveral Times ſet in the Pillory.

Mrs. Cellier depoſed, That the Earl of Caſtlemaine was very angry with her, for ſending ſuch a Raſcal as Dangerfield to him. And another Witneſs depoſed, that Dangerfield ſaid, His Lordſhip was very angry with him, for going to the Tower in his Lordſhip's Name, unknown to him.

Which the Chief Juſtice obſerved, was before the Time Dangerfield pretended he had that Diſcourſe with his Lordſhip, about killing the King.

Dangerfield's Evidence contradicted.

The Lady Powis depoſed, That ſhe never ſent a Letter by Dangerfield to the Lord Caſtlemaine, or any body elſe; or read a Letter in his Preſence, or was ever long enough in his Company. And Mrs. Cellier depoſed, That no Letter was read by the Lady Powis in the Preſence of her and Dangerfield.

Other Witneſſes for the King.

Then Sir Richard Barker was called as a Witneſs for the King, and depoſed, That his Servants told him, Oates was in London at Whitſun-tide 1678, and that he ſaw him there himſelf the latter End of June.

Another Witneſs depoſed, That he ſaw Dangerfield at the Lord Caſtlemaine's in June, July, or Auguſt; but he thought it was July.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice, in ſumming up the Evidence, ſaid, He would have no Man think him partial, where our Religion, the King's Life and the Government, were in danger; but he muſt ſay, there ought to be competent Proofs, where Men where charged with ſuch Things; becauſe their Lives, Eſtates, and Honours, were at Stake: That he thought no great Matter had been offered by my Lord againſt Oates's Credit; but as to Dangerfield, they ſaw many enormous Crimes proved againſt him, and though the Law allowed him to be a Witneſs, yet it was the Buſineſs of the Jury to weigh the Reputation of the Witneſſes; nor did he think a Judge could diſcharge his Conſcience, without taking Notice of ſuch Things: That had Dangerfield been only guilty of this Treaſon, he ſhould have thought him a competent Witneſs notwithſtanding, for that was Oates's Caſe too; but when ſo many Crimes of another Sort had been proved againſt him, whether the Man were on a ſudden become a Saint, when he became an Evidence, he left to them. They were to take Notice alſo, how he was contradicted in his Evidence, by the Lady Powis and Mrs. Cellier; and that, where two Witneſſes were produced, both ſpeaking materially to the ſame Thing, and one was believed, and the other not, then there was in Truth but one Witneſs, which was not ſufficient to find the Priſoner guilty.

The other Judges deliver their Opinion.

Mr. Juſtice Jones alſo declared, That it was neceſſary, in a Caſe of Treaſon, That there ſhould be two Witneſſes believed by the Jury.

Mr. Juſtice Raymond gave it as his Opinion, That both the Witneſſes muſt be believed by the Jury.

Whereupon the Jury, after a ſhort Receſs, brought in their Verdict, That he was Not guilty.

Remarks on Lord Caſtlemaine's Trial.

At this Trial, the Eyes of the reſt of the Judges (as well as of the Chief Juſtice) ſeem to be opened; they appear to have reſumed their Reaſon and their Courage, and determined no more to be made the Tools of an inſolent Faction, to hunt down ſuch Gentlemen as they were pleaſed to mark out for Deſtruction: They now very honeſtly inform the Jury, that they ought to take Notice of the infamous Characters of the Witneſſes, and that, where there were not two Witneſſes believed by them, the Priſoner ought to be acquitted: And the Chief Juſtice very juſtly obſerves, that a Judge could not diſcharge his Conſcience, without taking Notice of ſuch Things to the Jury: But how different this Conduct was from their Behaviour at ſome former Trials, is obvious to every common Reader. [illegible] in with the [illegible] brow-beat and threaten both t[illegible] and their Witneſſes, when they end[illegible] to make the ſcandalous Lives of the [illegible] Evidence appear, and tell them, that no probabilities in their Teſtimony, how ſtr[illegible] ing ſoever, ought to be conſide[illegible] they had the Oaths of two poſitive W[illegible] not only inſinuating, that the Witne[illegible] to be believed, but declaring it was impoſſible their Teſtimony could be disbelieved!

Theſe Proceedings muſt make future Judges exceeding cautious how they fall in with popular Clamours, and are borne down by Noiſe and Impudence to ſerve the vile Purpoſes of Deſigning Men, whoſe Revenge, Ambition, or Avarice, put them upon forming pretended Plots to cover and conceal the real Conſpiracies they themſelves are engaged in, to deſtroy the Conſtitution in Church and State: This has ever been the grand Stratagem of the Party, which they have ſo often played with Succeſs, that they have had the Aſſurance to revive it again in our Days. They find many People ſo exceeding weak, as to be deceived frequently by the ſame Wiles their Fathers practiſed, and indeed to have leſs Sagacity than Solomon could ſuppoſe Brute Animals had, where he ſays, Surely in vain the Net is ſpread in the Sight of any Bird.

Proceedings againſt the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs.

Articles of High Miſdemeanors, offered to the Conſideration of his Majeſty and the Privy-Council, againſt Sir WILLIAM SCROGGS, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench, by Titus Oates, and William Bedloe. Anno 1679. 31 Car. II.

Articles exhibited to the Council by Oates and Bedloe.

1. THAT the ſaid Chief Juſtice had ſet at Liberty ſeveral Perſons accuſed of High-Treaſon, particularly the Lord Brudenel, &c.

2. That at the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, and others, he did brow-beat and curb the ſaid Oates and Bedloe, two of the principal Witneſſes for the King; ſpoke ſlightly of them, miſrepeating and omitting material Parts of their Evidence, whereby the Parties were acquitted of the Fact, though fully proved by the ſaid Witneſſes.

3. That, after the Trial of Sir George Wakeman, &c. he ſaid, they were not to be believed, ſhould be believed by him, to their great Diſparagement.

4. That he oppreſſed his Majeſty's Subjects, by long Impriſonment, particularly Henry Care, for publiſhing The Weekly Packet of Advice from Rome, diſcovering the Idolatries of the Papiſts, though the ſaid Book contained nothing contrary to Law, and refuſed to admit him to Bail.

5. That he refuſed to admit to Bail Jane Curtis, Francis Smith, and others (charged with publiſhing ſeditious Libels).

6. That the ſaid Chief Juſtice was addicted to curſing, ſwearing, and drinking to Exceſs; and at the Houſe of a certain Perſon of Quality publickly uttered many Oaths and Curſes, and drank to Exceſs.

7. That he had admitted to Bail Charles Price, charged with being a Popiſh Prieſt; and ſeveral other Perſons charged with High-Treaſon.

8. That he had refuſed his Warrant to ſearch for Popiſh Prieſts and Jeſuits; and in a ſlighting and ſcornful Manner bid the Informer go to Sir William Waller, who buſied himſelf in ſuch Matters.

9. That, at the Trial of Knox and Lane for endeavouring to diſcredit the ſaid Oates and Bedloe, he did not give any Directions to the Jury, but abruptly left the Court before they gave their Verdict, to the great Diſparagement of the King's Witneſſes, the ſaid Oates and Bedloe.

10. That he permitted Osborn, who was engaged with Knox and Lane to diſcredit them, to make an Affidavit before him, reflecting on the ſaid Oates and Bedloe, without the the Conſent of his Majeſty, or his Counſel, or of the ſaid Oates and Bedloe.

11. That the ſaid Chief Juſtice had dared to ſay, in Preſence of his Majeſty and the Council, That he thought Oates and Bedloe always had an Accuſation ready againſt any Body.

12. That he ſaid to Bedloe, at Monmouth Aſſizes, that he did believe in his Conſcience that Richard Langborne, whom he had condemned, died wrongfully.

13. That he made Merchandize of the Trials of Sir George Wakeman, and ſome Popiſh Prieſts, ſelling them to the Bookſellers: And though he took 20 Guineas Earneſt of one Set of Bookſellers, yet ſold them to another, and would not return the Earneſt he had taken.

The Anſwer of Sir William Scroggs, Knt. Lord Chief Juſtice, to the Articles exhibited by Titus Oates and William Bedloe.

1. To the firſt he ſaith, That the Lord Brudenel was bailed, and afterwards diſcharged by the Court of King's-Bench; and that Bedloe uſed much Importunity to get him diſcharged, declaring he had nothing to ſay againſt him.

2. That the ſecond Article was a Reflection upon the whole Court; but it having been urged at the Trial, That if Oates had charged Sir George Wakeman with ſuch a Letter, under his Hand, before the Council, they would have committed him: Oates anſwered, That that Council would commit no Body for the Plot, which might occaſion his being frowned upon.

3. To the third he ſaid, There were ſome Paſſages in that Trial which gave him great Cauſe to doubt.

4 and 5. To theſe Articles he ſaid, The Perſons mentioned in them were committed for publiſhing libellous and ſcandalous Papers, according to Law; but there was no Law for theſe Men to call him to an Account for judicial Acts relating to others.

6. The ſixth was an inſolent Scandal, and he referred himſelf to the Teſtimony of that Perſon of Quality, whoever he was.

7. The Perſons, mentioned in this Article, were bailed, and diſcharged by the Court; the Attorney-General being firſt called, but indeed the Conſent of Oates and Bedloe was not asked.

8. He ſays he does not think himſelf obliged to do all the Buſineſs of a Juſtice of Peace; but it was a Servant that gave that Anſwer.

9. To the ninth he ſays, He told the Jury the Matter was plain, and went away, to try Cauſes in London, without paying any Compliment to Mr. Oates.

10. He ſays, that the Affidavit, mentioned in this Article, was not ſworn before him, but two others, in one of which Osborn depoſed Oates had ſaid, That the Kingdom of England would never flouriſh, till it became Elective: And in the other, that he was not ſled at Knox's Trial, as Oates had ſworn.

11. To the eleventh he anſwered, It was more to be wondered how Oates dared to charge that as an Article of a Miſdemeanor, which was ſaid in the King's Preſence, and repeated falſe too. 1679. 32 Car. II.

12. That he did tell Mr. Bedloe, at Monmouth Aſſizes, that he was more unſatisfied at Langborn's Trial than all the reſt; for that he was credibly informed ſince, That Mr. Langborn's Study was ſo ſituate, that one who was walking in his Chamber could not ſee him write in his Study, which was Bedloe's Evidence.

13. That this was Matter of meer Contract with other Men, of which he did not think himſelf bound to give Oates and Bedloe an Account: But that by taking Twenty Guineas he loſt Forty; and that his Backwardneſs to go to Wakeman's Trial, did not look as if he had received 10000 l. to favour Wakeman (as theſe Witneſſes had given out.)

Concluding that if theſe Articles ſhould appear to his Majeſty to be frivolous, ſcandalous, or not true, his Majeſty would pleaſe to ſhew his juſt Reſentment thereon, in Honour to his Courts and Government: And that ſuch an unprecedented Attempt might not go unpuniſhed, the Promoters of it might be left to be proceeded againſt according to Law.

This Matter was debated before the King and Council, the 21ſt of January 1679, and Oates and Bedloe left to be proſecuted at Law.

Complaints againſt the Chief Juſtice to the Houſe of Commons.

The Party not ſucceeding in this extraordinary Attempt againſt the Chief Juſtice, before the King and Council, brought the very ſame Accuſation againſt him before the Houſe of Commons, in November, 1680, and were ſo ſucceſsful there, as to procure an Impeachment of High-Treaſon to be preferred againſt him, conſiſting of Eight Articles.

Articles of Impeachment for High-Treaſon reſolved on.

1. By the firſt whereof it was charged, that the ſaid Chief Juſtice Scroggs had traiterouſly endeavoured to ſubvert the fundamental Laws, Religion and Government of this Kingdom, and inſtead thereof to introduce Popery and arbitrary Power.

2. That he arbitrarily diſcharged the Grand Jury of Middleſex, in Trinity-Term, 1679, before they had made their Preſentments, and found ſeveral Bills of Indictment before them, by which illegal Diſcharge of the ſaid Jury, the Courſe of Juſtice was maliciouſly ſtopped, the Preſentments of many Papiſts, and other Offenders, were obſtructed, and in particular a Bill of Indictment againſt James Duke of York, for abſenting himſelf from Church, which was then before them, was prevented from being proceeded upon.

3. That the Chief Juſtice, and the reſt of the Judges of the King's-Bench, did make a Rule of Court, that The Weekly Packet of Advice from Rome, publiſhed by Henry Care, ſhould not be printed or publiſhed, thereby aſſuming to themſelves a Legiſlative Power.

4. That he, and the reſt of the Judges of that Court, had moſt notoriouſly departed from all Rules of Juſtice, in the Impoſition of Fines on Perſons convicted of Miſdemeanors; nors; being manifeſtly partial to Papiſts, and Perſons popiſhly affected, and grievouſly oppreſſing his Majeſties Proteſtant Subjects.

1680. 32 Car. II.

5. That he refuſed to bail Perſons that were bailable, particularly Care, Broome, Harris, Smith, Curtis, &c. which was a high Breach of the Liberty of the Subject, deſtructive of the fundamental Laws, and tending to introduce arbitrary Power.

6. That he had granted Warrants for attaching the Perſons, and ſeizing the Goods of his Majeſty's Subjects, not named or deſcribed, particularly in the ſaid Warrants (againſt ſeditious Libels and their Publiſhers).

7. That he openly defamed and ſcandalized ſeveral of the Witneſſes of the Popiſh Plot; endeavouring to diſparage their Evidence, and take off their Credit; traiterouſly endeavouring to ſtifle and diſcourage the Diſcovery of the ſaid Plot.

8. That the ſaid Sir William Scroggs, by his frequent and notorious Exceſſes and Debaucheries, and his prophane and atheiſtical Diſcourſes, did daily affront Almighty God, diſhonour his Majeſty, give Countenance and Encouragement to all Manner of Vice and Wickedneſs, and brought the higheſt Scandal on the publick Juſtice of the Kingdom.

An odd Concluſion of the Articles.

All which Words, Opinions and Actions, were ſpoken and done traiterouſly, and maliciouſly, to alienate the Hearts of the King's Subjects from his Majeſty; to ſet a Diviſion between him and them; to ſubvert the fundamental Laws, Religion and Government, and to introduce Popery and arbitrary Power: For which they impeached him of High-Treaſon, and other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors;

Praying that the ſaid Sir William Scroggs, Chief Juſtice of the Court of King's-Bench, may be put to anſwer the Premiſſes, and committed to ſafe Cuſtody.

The Queſtion being put, to impeach the Chief Juſtice, on theſe Articles, ſeveral Speeches were made on the Occaſion, for and againſt it; of which I ſhall tranſcribe one or two on each Side, which will give a conſiderable Light into this Matter.

Sir Thomas Lee againſt the ſaid Impeachment

Sir Thomas Lee ſtood up and ſaid, Mr. Speaker, In my Opinion, the Matter contained in the laſt ſeven Articles does not anſwer the firſt Article, or the Title: For therein you accuſe Sir William Scroggs in general Words of High-Treaſon, the higheſt of Crimes; and when you come to Particulars, you inſtance the diſmiſſing of Grand Juries, prohibiting the printing of Pamplets, the Inequality of levying Fines, and the like. Sir, I would not be underſtood to be an Advocate for the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs, but I hope, as long as I ſit here, you will always give me Leave to be an Advocate for this Houſe; which I can not more ſignally demonſtrate, than by offering my Opinion againſt every Thing which I think will reflect on the Juſtice or Prudence of the Houſe, or prove any Hindrance to the finiſhing of thoſe great Affairs you have under Debate.

Sir, I am of Opinion, that though all theſe Things, contained in theſe Articles, ſhould be fully proved, they will not amount to

680. Car. II. any thing declared Treaſon in Parliament, which was not Felony by ſome expreſs known Law before. And I hope we ſhall be ſo careful of ourſelves, and our Poſterity, as not to go about to make a Breach upon the Conſtitution of the Government, in this Particular; but rather make it an Impeachment only for high Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

Fran- Win- gton the Im- chment

Sir Francis Winnington, on the other Side, ſaid, Mr. Speaker, I cannot agree with that honourable Member that ſpoke laſt, as to his Notion, that the Parliament cannot declare any thing to be Treaſon, which was not Felony before: The Statute of 25 Edw. III. leaves the Power at large to Parliaments, without any ſuch Reſtriction. And I am of Opinion, that any thing that tends to the Deſtruction, or Alteration of the Government, hath always been, and always ought to be, declared Treaſon in Parliament, if brought there to be adjudged. The Parliament doth not in this make new Crimes, and then condemn them; but only declares that to be a Crime which was ſo before, and wanted nothing but Condemnation. And it may conſiſt with the Prudence of this Houſe, as well to be careful how to weaken thoſe Laws, and Cuſtoms, which tend ſo much to the Preſervation of the Government, as how to increaſe any that may tend to the Deſtruction of any one Man, by multiplying Precedents for chaſtiſing Treaſon: The Crimes for which Treſilian, and the reſt of the Judges, in the Reign of Richard II. were impeached, were not Felony by any known Law, and yet they were condemned by Parliament. Empſon and Dudley were accuſed in general, for endeavouring to ſubvert the Government, which being in general Words, was not Felony by any known Law; yet, the Judges having Recourſe to Parliament, they were condemned. The Articles againſt Finch, Berkley, and the reſt of the Judges (Anno 1641) were all for High-Treaſon, and the Matter, contained in the Articles, amounted to no more than what is contained in this. There is ſo little Weight in the Caſes that have been offered againſt this, that I think they are offered for Ornament, rather than Argument. The Chancellor is the Keeper of the King's Conſcience; and the Judges of his Coronation Oath. As they are in great Places, and have great Power, ſo they ought to be more carefnl how they behave themſelves: And as they have greater Encouragements, ſo they ought to be ſubject to more ſevere Chaſtiſements than others, the Publick being more concerned in their Actions: And therefore the Cuſtom of Parliaments hath made that Treaſon in them, which is not ſo in other Perſons; the Words of Judges, and Privy-Counſellors, in ſome Caſes, are Overt-Acts of themſelves. I think it will become the Wiſdom of the Nation, to make all the Defence and Proviſion they can, againſt the corrupt Doings of Men in thoſe Places; and I do not ſee what Danger can ariſe to Poſterity by ſuch Proceedings. Is it not with the Parliament we intruſt this Power? Who can imagine that ever a Parliament can be ſo conſtituted, as not to be carefully concerned in their Proceedings, as to Life and Death; and only to concern themſelves therein, when ſome extraordinary Exigencies, in which the Government is much concerned, requires it? What Man would deſire to live, after he was thought worthy of Death by ſuch an Aſſembly? And notwithſtanding what has been ſaid, to extenuate the Crimes mentioned in theſe Articles, I think that the Order that was made in the King's-Bench, about printing, by the Judges, was taking on them a Legiſlative Power, which hath formerly been adjudged Treaſon: And I think now we live in as dangerous Times as ever, under as great Neceſſity to have a Care of the Miſchiefs that may happen to the Nation, by ill Judges, as ever; and I ſee no Reaſon to doubt our being able to make good theſe Articles.

Mr. Powel ſeconded Sir Francis Winnington, repeating good Part of his Argument, and inſiſted on the Precedent in the reign of Richard II. and the Condemnation of a Knight in Cheſhire, for conſpiring the Death of the King's Uncle; and of the Earl of Northumberland, for giving a great Number of Liveries; concluding, that he was of Opinion, that the Order made in the King's-Bench againſt Printing, their Warrants for ſeizing of Books, and their diſmiſſing Grand Juries, did tend to the Subverſion of the Government, and had been, and ever ought to be, in Judges, adjudged High Treaſon; and therefore it could not conſiſt with the Prudence of the Houſe, or the Security of the Nation, that the Chief Juſtice ſhould be impeached of any thing leſs than High Treaſon.

Mr Powel for it.

Sir Richard Temple replied, Mr. Speaker, I can not admit that Parliaments, by Impeachments before the Lords, can make any thing Treaſon, but only ſuch Matters as were Treaſon by Common Law, before the Statute of Edward III. And I think we ought to be ſo cautious of Poſterity, as not to preſs for ſuch Precedents, leſt you put into the Hands of the Lords a Power, for which we may have cauſe to repent hereafter, but never get back again; for the Lords do not uſe to part with thoſe Powers they once get. There are Precedents, by which it appears that the Lords have attempted to make declarative Treaſons alone, without any Impeachment from the Commons. Have a Care how you give them Encouragement to proceed therein: Better keep to the other way of making no declarative Treaſons, but by Bill (by Act of Parliament.)

Sir Richard Temple againſt it.

However, it was reſolved that the Impeachment ſhould be engroſſed, and carried up to the Houſe of Lords, by Mr. Cavendiſh; and it being carried up accordingly, the Chief Juſtice put in the following Anſwer.

The ſaid Sir William Scroggs, by and under Proteſtation, that there is no manner of High-Treaſon, nor any Overt-Act of High Treaſon, particularly alledged or expreſſed in the ſaid Articles of Impeachment, to which the ſaid Sir William Scroggs can, or is bound by Law to make Anſwer unto; and ſaving to himſelf, (and which he prayeth may be ſaved to him) both now, and at all Times hereafter, all, and all manner of Benefit and Advantage of Exception to the Inſufficiency of the ſaid Articles in point of Law; as well for that, there is no overt-act of Treaſon expreſſed therein, as for all other the Defects therein appearing; for Plea thereto he ſaith, that he is no wiſe guilty of all, or any the Crimes, Offences, or Miſdemeanors, of what Nature, Kind, or Quality ſoever, by the ſaid Articles of Impeachment charged upon him, in Manner and Form, as in and by the ſaid Articles is ſuppoſed; which he is ready to aver and prove, as this honourable Houſe ſhall award, and humbly ſubmitteth himſelf, and the Juſtice of his Cauſe, to this moſt honourable Houſe, and prayeth to be diſcharged of the Premiſes, and to be hence diſmiſſed and acquitted of all the Matters, Crimes, Miſdemeanors, and Offences, in, and by the ſaid Articles of Impeachment charged upon him.

The Anſwer of the Chief Juſtice.

1680. 32 Car. II.

His Petition for a Trial.

The Lord Chief Juſtice alſo petitioned the Lords, that whereas he was Impeached by the laſt Parliament, and had put in his Anſwer, they would appoint the Commons to reply; that a convenient Day might be appointed for hearing the Cauſe, and he might no longer lie under the Reproach of High-Treaſon.

The Chief Juſtice reſigns, and has a Penſion.

Whereupon the Lords ordered the Anſwer and Petition to be ſent to the Houſe of Commons; but I do not find there was any further Proceedings thereupon: However it was thought fit that he ſhould reſign the Poſtof Chief Juſtice, as he lay under ſuch an Impeachment, and accept a Penſion from the Crown in the Room of it.

Reſolutions to impeach other Judges.

The Commons alſo reſolved to impeach Sir Francis North, Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, Sir Thomas Jones, another of the Judges of the Kings-Bench, and Sir Richard Weſton, one of the Barons of the Exchequer: But it does not appear they proceeded on theſe Impeachments.

Remarks on the Proceedings againſt the Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs.

The Impudence of Oates and Bedloe, in preferring that ſcandalous Charge to the King and Council, againſt the Lord Chief Juſtice, is ſurely not to be paralleled. The Editor of this proceeding has indeed dubbed one of them with the Title of Doctor, and the other with that of Captain, to render them more conſiderable in the Eye of the World; but I do not find the firſt was ſo much as a St. Omers Doctor, or the other Captain of any thing, unleſs it were of a Company of Knights of the Poſt that he employed to ſecond his own Perjuries: And that theſe vile Wretches ſhould have the Face to tell the Lord Chief Juſtice whom he ſhould bail, and whom he ſhould not admit to Bail, direct him how he ſhould treat the Witneſſes at every Trial, and what Directions he ſhould give to the Jury, is very extraordinary; nay, they charge it as an Offence, that the Chief Juſtice dared to bail People without their Conſent, and ſuffered Affidavits to be made before him, reflecting on their Characters, and yet were not aſhamed or afraid themſelves to accuſe the Chief Juſtice of being a common Swearer and a Drunkard. This, it is manifeſt, they were encouraged and ſupported in, by Saint Shaftesbury, and the Faction, or they durſt not have treated one of the greateſt Magiſtrates in England in this Manner.

But what puts it beyond all Doubt, that Shaftesbury and his Party were at the Bottom of all this is, that they procured the very ſame Articles to be exhibited againſt the Chief Juſtice, in an Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons, which thoſe deſpicable Tools had preferred to the Council: And ſurely the State was in a very happy Situation at this Time, When two or three abandoned Villains under Pretence of being the King's Evidence, ſhould take upon them to direct and reprehend the Judges of the higheſt Courts, and expect they ſhould ask Leave of them before they bailed or committed an Offender. It is plain the Faction had reduced the Crown to a very low Ebb, when ſuch Inſolence was ſuffered with Impunity. What had the greateſt private Subject to do to preſcribe Rules to the Courts of Juſtice, much leſs Men the moſt obnoxious to Juſtice themſelves of any of the King's Subjects? This was to make the Bar arraign the Bench, and Criminals ſit in Judgement upon their Judges: And yet even this we find countenanced and encouraged by a Party that Shaftesbury had formed in the Houſe of Commons; a Party that fell very little ſhort of that which began the Grand Rebellion, and whoſe Artillery was indeed levelled againſt the King. They hoped to wound him through the Sides of his Miniſters, and render him odious to the People, by reflecting on his Judges, that they might have a Pretence to depoſe and murder him as they had his Father; and they had this farther View in attacking the Judges, that none ſhould dare for the future to oppoſe their treaſonable Schemes, or ſtand up in Defence of the Crown or the Conſtitution. Thus they exactly copied after the Precedents their Fore-fathers had ſet them, and had met with the like Succeſs, had not the King been alarmed at their inſolent Proceedings in Time; taken the Reigns of the Government into his own Hands, and ſhewed them that, whenever he was pleaſed to exert his political Talents, he knew how to protect himſelf and his loyal Subjects, and defeat their impotent Malice.

The Gentlemen who ſpoke againſt the Impeachment, ſufficiently ſhewed the Abſurdity, and Injuſtice, of Impeaching a Perſon of High-Treaſon, when they were not able to ſpecify one Fact that had the leaſt appearance of Treaſon in it, but leave the Lords to find out and declare Something to be Treaſon that was never thought to be ſo before: And they were certainly very unlucky in the Precedents they brought for it, as that in the Reign of Richard II. when the Barons broke out into Rebellion againſt the King, and compelled him to ſacrifice his Miniſters and Judges to their Fury; and that other in the happy Days of 41, juſt before the Grand Rebellion, when they charged the Lord Strafford with High-Treaſon, for his faithful Service to his late Majeſty, and whoſe Attainder had been repealed by an Act of Parliament of this very Reign: And ſurely very unhappy muſt the Subject be, when every Action of his Life is capable of being interpreted and declared Treaſon, which a Faction in the Houſe of Commons is pleaſed to charge and denominate ſuch.

But

1680. 32 Car. II.

But never was ſo merry a Concluſion to an Impeachment of High-Treaſon: Namely, that All the Chief Juſtice's Words, Opinions, and Actions (above ſpecified) were ſpoken and done Traiterouſly and Maliciouſly, which was as much as to ſay, That he ſwore, curſed, and got drunk, traiterouſly and maliciouſly; for theſe are the Crimes charged againſt him in the laſt Article.

However, this doughty Impeachment was dropped for Matters, the Faction apprehended of more Conſequence, namely, the immediate altering of the Succeſſion, the depoſing their Sovereign, and changing the Monarchy into a Common-wealth, in which we ſhall find they did not meet with the ſame Succeſs their rebellious Anceſtors had done.

1680. 32 Car. II.

The principal Crime they intended to charge the other Judges with, particularly Sir Francis North, and Mr. Juſtice Jones, whom they likewiſe reſolved to impeach, was, their aſſiſting in drawing up a Proclamation againſt tumultuous Petitions for the ſitting of a Parliament, but theſe alſo were dropped, to make room for more important Schemes.

Other Judges charged withdrawing up Proclamations.

1680. 32 Car. II. Cellier's firſt Trial.

The Trial of ELIZABETH CELLIER, for High-Treaſon, at the King's-Bench Bar. 11th, June, 1680. 32 Car. II.

1680. 32 Car. II.

The Charge.

THE Indictment charges the Priſoner with High-Treaſon, in compaſſing the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the eſtabliſhed Religion and Government; and particularly with paying great Sums to ſeveral Perſons unknown, to kill the King, and to throw the Plot upon other People.

The Evidence of Gadbury.

The firſt Witneſs examined againſt her, was Gadbury, the pretended Conjurer and Almanack-maker, who depoſed, That telling Mrs. Cellier he could ſay enough to invalidate the Teſtimony of Oates and Bedloe, ſhe anſwered, ſhe cared not, if it coſt her ten Guineas, if ſhe could diſcover the Truth: That walking through Weſtminſter-Abbey with the Priſoner, ſhe ſaid, This Place was formerly filled with Benedictine Monks, and the Temple with Friars; and what if it ſhould be ſo again?

That ſhe alſo demanded of him, when the King was ſick, Whether he would live or die, and ſaid, ſhe was afraid he would die; and the Deponent anſwering, he would not inform her, becauſe it was his Sovereign, ſhe replied, ſhe would go to another Aſtrologer then: That ſhe alſo brought a Nativity to him, to know if the Perſon was to be truſted, and he afterwards underſtood it was Dangerfield's.

Then Dangerfield was called as a Witneſs; but the Priſoner objected to his Teſtimony, becauſe he had been whipped, tranſported, pilloried and perjured; and produced ſeveral Records of his Conviction, but none for Perjury: Whereupon Dangerfield produced his Pardon; but the Chief Juſtice not thinking it reached all the Crimes he was charged with, his Evidence was waved: There being but one legal Witneſs therefore, and his Evidence very defective, the Jury acquitted her according to the Chief Juſtice's Direction, and Dangerfield was committed.

Dangerfield's Evidence objected to.

The Priſoner acquitted.

Dangerfield committed.

Mrs. Cellier had been pretty buſy in ſearching into the Characters of the Witneſſes of the pretended Popiſh Plot, and in detecting the vile Practices of Lord Shaftesbury, and the Faction, to ſupport the Credit of it; but had the good Fortune to eſcape this Time: However upon publiſhing a Pamphlet afterwards, in which ſhe ſtated her Caſe, and made ſome Reflections on the King's Witneſſes, as they were called, ſhe was brought upon the Stage again, and ſuffered ſeverely for her Indiſcretion, as will appear in a future Trial.

Remarks.

The

1680. 32 Car. II. Care's Trial.

The Trial of HENRY CARE, for a Misdemeanor, in publishing a scandalous Libel, at Guild-Hall, 2d July, 1680. 32 Car. II.

The Charge. THE Information charges, That whereas there was a Plot, and traiterous Conspiracy, against his Majesty, and the established Religion and Government, of which divers Traytors had been convicted; the said Henry Care, intending to scandalize and bring into Contempt the Justice of the Kingdom, did on the 18th of August last, at the Parish of St. Sepulchres, London, print and cause to be published a scandalous Book entitled, The Weekly Packet of Advice from Rome, in which were the following Expressions: viz. "There is lately found out by an experienced "Physician, an incomparable Medicament, "called, the Wonder-working Plaister, truly "Catholick in Operation, somewhat of kin "to the Jesuit's Powder, but more effectual. "The Virtues of it are strange and various: "It will make Justice deaf as well as blind: "Takes out Spots of deepest Treasons, more "cleverly than Castle-Soap does common "Stains: It alters a Man's Constitution in two "or three Days, more than the Virtuoso's trans-"fusion of Blood in seven Years: Is a great A-"lexipharmick, and helps Poysons and those "that use them: It miraculously exalts and pu-"rifies the Eye-sight, and makes People behold "nothing but Innocence in the blackest Male-"factors: It is a mighty Cordial in a declining "Cause; stifles a Plot as certainly as the Itch "is destroyed by Butter and Brimstone: It "makes Fools Wise Men, and Wise Men "Fools, and both of them Knaves. The "Colour of this Balm is bright and dazling, "and being applied privately to the Fist, in "decent Manner, and a competent Dose, in-"fallibly performs all the said Cures and "many others". Which was laid to be done in great Contempt of the King, to the Scandal of the Government, the Administration of Justice, &c.

The Evidence. The Printer Stevens, deposed That he treated with Care as the Author of the Book, and received the Copy from him, or his Order: He did not remember that any body but Mr. Care's Boy brought any Part of the Copy to him.

The Printer's Man deposed, That he received several Parts of the Copy of the Weekly Packet from Care's own Hand; but he could not say the particular Paper in the Information; and that Mr. Care's Boy brought some of the Copy.

His Defence. Sir Francis Winnington, and the rest of the Prisoner's Counsel, said in his Defence, That Mr. Care was a Satyrist against Popery, and his Packets were very well liked, 'till he committed this Fault: An extravagant Flight might slip from him without any ill Intention; and as he was a good Subject, and loved the Government in Church and State, he could not be supposed guilty of Malice. Then two or three Witnesses were called, who deposed, they had seen him at Church, but could not say he ever received the Sacrament: And Sir Francis Winnington insisted, that he was not proved the Author of that individual Paper in the Information.

The Chief Justice's Direction. The Chief Justice, in his Directions to the Jury, said, he at first took it to be a Cause of small Moment, but was convinced, by the Noise and Shouts during the Trial, that it was a Party Business; and told the Jury, they were not to concern themselves whether the Prisoner was Malicious or not, but only to try the Fact, whether he published the Book; and if they found him Guilty, he would judge whether it implied Malice: Whereupon the Jury withdrew, and after an Hours Recess, brought in their Verdict, That the Prisoner was Guilty. And he was sentenced to pay a Fine of to be set in the Pillory and imprisoned.

Remark. The Prisoner's Counsel seem to admit the Fact at first, and then pretend that the Particular Paper in the Information, was not proved to be his; but as the Printer deposed, he treated with Care for the Copy, and received all the Copy from him or his Servant, this Paper must be included.

And here we find, when the Faction could no longer blind the Judges with false and specious Tales, attested by their Knights of the Post, their next Stratagem was to employ Swarms of Scriblers, to accuse the Judges of Bribery and Corruption, and even to charge them formally with Partiality and Injustice before the Privy Council and the Parliament: Whereby they hoped to deter the Judges from prying too narrowly into their Knavery, or to get these removed and others put in their Places, that would comply with their dictates: And could they have made the Judges of Westminster-Hall their Tools, no Doubt but they might have supported the Credit of this, or any other Plot they were pleased to invent, and by this means have destroyed all the true Friends of the Constitution on Pretence of their being Popishly affected. This was the Game they played with such Success in the Year 41, when every Judge, that durst appear faithful to his Prince, and the Trust reposed in him, and would not submit to the Direction of the Rebels, was immediately charged with High-Treason: And King Charles being surrounded with a Set of treacherous Courtiers, who advised him to give up his Judges, and his best Friends to their Rage; lost all manner of Power and Influence in his Dominions in that very Instant. Those who were desirous to serve their King, found he could no longer protect them, since both the Ministry and Judges were become accountable to the Commons: But it is to be presumed, that future Princes, from this Example, will be cautious cautious how they ſuffer themſelves to be ſtripped of their Authority, by the Clamours of a reſtleſs Faction, againſt their Judges and Miniſters, who are uſually attacked in the firſt Place, in order to make their Way to the Throne itſelf: On the other Hand, it is acknowledged to be the Intereſt and Duty of every Prince, to abandon thoſe Miniſters and Judges, he is ſatisfied have abuſed him, or his People; and even to puniſh their Miſdemeanors himſelf, with the utmoſt Severity and Diſpatch; for Men will ever form ſome Notion of the Maſter from the Servants he employs. If the Miniſter wants either Capacity, or Integrity, it is preſumed the Prince is defective in his Intellects, or in his Concern for the Welfare and Protection of his People.

1680. 32 Car. II.

The Trial of JOHN GILES, for an Aſſault on JOHN ARNOLD, Eſq; a Juſtice of Peace for Monmouthſhire, 14 July 1680. 32 Car. II.

1680. 32 Car. II. Giles's Trial.

THE Indictment charges the Defendant, That he, together with divers others, on the 15th of April laſt, aſſaulted the ſaid John Arnold, at the Pariſh of St. Dunſtan in the Weſt, in the County of Middleſex, cutting the Throat and Face of the ſaid John Arnold with a Knife, and giving him ſeveral other dangerous Wounds with their Swords; one whereof between his Belly and his left Pap, of the Depth of ſeven Inches, two others in his Breaſt, and two in his left Arm. The Indictment.

The King's Counſel, in opening the Evidence, obſerved, That this was a Branch of the Popiſh Plot; and that the Reaſon of this cruel Aſſault upon Mr. Arnold, was occaſioned by his putting the Laws in Execution againſt Papiſts; and particularly his proſecuting and convicting one Evans, a Popiſh Prieſt. The Obſervations of the King's Counſel.

Then Mr. Arnold was ſworn, who depoſed, That on the 15th of April laſt, he was with ſome Company at the Devil-Tavern, near Temple-Bar, till Ten o'Clock at Night; and then remembring he had Buſineſs with Mr. Phillips, his Counſel, who lived near the End of Bell-Yard, he deſired the Company to ſtay a Moment till he returned, and deſired his Friends Servants, who waited in another Room, to go with him: Croſſing Fleet-Street, to Bell-Yard, he ſaw two Men in Cloaks follow him, and imagined they were the Servants he had called; but entering Bell-Yard, one of them got before him, and looked earneſtly in his Face: The Deponent paſſed him again, and by the Light of a Candle in a Woman's Hand, ſaw perfectly that it was the Priſoner, whoſe Companions coming up, they laughed aloud; but he continued his Way to Fatkanapes-Lane End, and there, as he was looking for the Kennel, a Cloak was thrown over his Head, and they run him croſs the Lane, againſt a Wall, with that Violence, that they broke his Head: Then he drew his Sword, but could not turn about to defend himſelf, before he was knocked down, and perceived a ſharp thruſt in his Side, the Point running into his Belly: He was afterwards run through both Arms with a broad Sword, and through one of his Arms with a ſmall Weapon, and received ſeveral other Wounds. And while one of them kept him down, with his Foot on his Breaſt, the Perſon that kept him down was run into the Leg by another of his Companions, and ſaid, Damm me, thou haſt ſpoiled my Leg: That the Deponent received ſeveral Wounds in his Body, notwithſtanding he had a Pair of Whale-bone Bodice on, and ſome of them perceiving it, ſaid, Damm me, he has Armour on; whereupon one of them gave him ſeveral Cuts in the Face, and he thought he ſhould never recover ſome of the Wounds and Bruiſes he received: That there being a Candle in a Window, and a Link-boy paſſing by, he again ſaw the Priſoner's Face; and the Cloak being pulled off, he cried out, and People came in, and carried him to the Sugar-Loaf, and from thence to his Lodgings, and ſent for a Surgeon: That the Aſſaſſins laughed aloud all the while they were cutting and hacking him; and when they went away, one of them ſaid, Now, you Dog, pray for the Soul of Captain Evans. Arnold's Evidence.

Other Witneſſes depoſed, they heard Giles the Priſoner ſay, He muſt make Haſte into Glouceſterſhire, leſt he ſhould be ſtopped on Suſpicion of Arnold's Buſineſs. Other Evidence.

A Sword-Cutler, of Uske, in Monmouthſhire, depoſed, That Giles came to him to mend his Sword, and demanding if he had been fighting with the Devil? Giles anſwered, No; but with damn'd Arnold.

Another depoſed, That the Day Mr. Arnold was wounded, Giles aſked him where he might buy a good Rapier? To which he anſwered, He did not know; but he had then a good broad Sword.

Others depoſed, Giles was out of his Lodgings at Ten that Night; nor could he give an Account where he was at that Time.

Other Witneſſes depoſed, He was a Papiſt, or popiſhly affected: That he was acquainted with Lewis the Jeſuit, and ſaid he would perſuade the Executioner not to execute Lewis; and afterwards attending at the Execution, he ſaw Giles dip Cloths in Lewis's Blood, when he was quartered.

Hobbs, the Surgeon, depoſed, That he ſaw Mr. Arnold's Wounds, which were as he had related; and that they could not be given by himſelf, as the Priſoner ſuggeſted.

The Recorder Jeffries, in ſumming up the Evidence, ſaid, In Caſes of this Nature, the The Recorder's Directions.

1680. 32 Car. II.

Laws of England had not proportioned the Punishment to the Crime: He thought it was impossible now to doubt the Truth of the Plot: This Piece of Villany was little short of that acted upon Sir Edmund-bury Godfrey: That Giles could give no Account where he was that Night, from Nine to One; and though the Proof ought to be very strong, it was not to be expected it should be altogether so full, as in Cases of private Right, and where Things were transacted publickly, in the Face of the Sun.

Giles is convicted.

The Jury, after half an Hour's Recess, brought in the Prisoner GUILTY: Whereupon he was sentenced to stand three Times in the Pillory, viz. in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, at Gray's-Inn, and at the May-Pole in the Strand: To pay a Fine of 500 l. and lie in Prison till he paid it, and find Sureties for his good Behaviour for Life. 1680. 32 Car. II.

Remarks.

It is highly probable that Giles, and his Company, committed this Outrage on Mr. Arnold, for his prosecuting Popish Priests, and especially Lewis the Jesuit, who was executed a little before; for I could never hear they had any other Quarrel with him. And our Laws seem exceeding defective, as the Recorder observes, that such desperate Assassines should escape with so inconsiderable a Punishment: Whereas, for taking a single Penny from a Man, the Punishment is Capital.

1680. 32 Car. II. Thwyng's Trial.

The Trials of THOMAS THWYNG, and MARY PRESSICKS, for High-Treason, at York Assizes, 29 July 1680. 32 Car. II.

The Charge.

THE Indictment charges the Prisoners with High-Treason, in compassing the Death of the King, the Subversion of the Government, and the Protestant Religion; with assembling and consulting to put the said Treasons in Execution, contributing several Sums of Money to accomplish their said traiterous Designs, and giving Notes for more.

Bolron's Evidence.

The Witnesses being called, Bolron deposed, That he was made Steward of Sir Thomas Gascoigne's Coal-works, in 1674, and in 75 he turned Papist; and that in January 76, Father Rushton, his Confessor, with the Prisoner Thwyng, and several others, came to the Deponent's House, and asked him how he stood affected to the Roman Catholick Religion, and if he would venture his Life and Estate in it on Occasion? To which the Deponent agreeing, Rushton gave him the Oath of Secrecy; and in 1677, Sir Thomas Gascoigne, Sir Miles Stapleton, the Lady Tempest, Mr. Rushton, the Prisoner Thwyng, and several others, met in the old Dining Room at Sir Thomas Gascoigne's House, and agreed the King should be killed; and Thwyng said, if they lost this Opportunity, they should never have the like again; and that the effecting it would be very beneficial to the Church of Rome. They also agreed to erect a Nunnery at Dolebank, after the King should be killed; and the Lady Tempest offered them Broughton for the present, and Thwyng was to be Confessor to the Nunnery: That the Deponent paid 10 l. to Rushton in Thwyng's Presence, towards killing the King, and saw a List, in Thwyng's Hands, entitled, A List of the Names of the Actors, and Contributors, engaged in the Design of promoting the Roman Catholick Religion, and also of establishing a Nunnery: By which was meant raising Money for killing the King. And Thwyng told the Deponent afterwards, That 30,000 l. was raised in Yorkshire, Lancashire, and Derbyshire, for killing the King; and the List of Particulars was sent beyond Sea.

That in 1678, the Deponent discoursing with the Prisoner Pressicks, about the Plot, at his own House, she said, Father Harcourt, her Confessor, first engaged her in it. That Pickering told her, he was to have killed the King, and she was sorry he did not do it: The King was an Ass, and not fit to govern; for what Money the Parliament gave him, he spent upon Whores and Concubines.

Mowbray's Evidence.

Mowbray deposed, That about Michaelmas 1676, Rushton, Addison, and Thwyng the Prisoner, with other Priests, met at Rushton's Chamber, and agreed to kill the King, because he had not kept his Promise, made to the Jesuits beyond Sea, to bring in their Religion; and said that York and London were to be fired: And that Force must be used against the King, and all other Heretick, that opposed the Advancement of their Religion. It was not only lawful, but meritorious to kill him: That there was a List of those engaged in the Design, and Rushton and the Prisoner Thwyng were the Managers of it.

Mrs. Bolron, the elder, deposed, That the Prisoner Pressicks said several Times, that she knew of the Plot: That Pickering was to have killed the King, and she was sorry he did not do it; though it had been done, if it had not been for Oates and Bedloe: There would be no Quiet in England, till the Roman Catholicks got the upper Hand, and there was not a Protestant left in England: The King spent his Money among Concubines, and was not worthy to be a King, and hoped an Army of Catholicks would be raised to bring in Popery.

Mrs. Bolron, the younger, deposed, That in 1678, she heard Pressicks the Prisoner say, That there was a great Conspiracy carrying on, to alter the Government, and establish the Romish Religion.

Job

1680. 32 Car. II.

John Hutchinſon deposed, That he heard Preſſicks the Priſoner ſay, We ſhould never be at Peace, till we were all of the Roman Catholick Religion; for the King was an Heretick, and ſpent more Money on his Whores, than on his Queen: We ſhould never be at Baſe, till the Duke of York was made King.

Thwyng's Defence.

Thwyng, the Priſoner, called ſome Witneſſes, who deposed, That the King's Witneſſes ſwore againſt him maliciouſly at this Trial; but that they had declared formerly, that neither Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, to whom he was related, nor any of his Family were concerned in the Plot.

Other Witneſſes deposed, Bolron ſwore he would ruin Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, and his Family; and Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Groom deposed, That Thwyng was not at his Houſe at the Time one of the Witneſſes deposed he was there at a Conſult.

The Judges Directions.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben, in ſumming up the Evidence, directed the Jury to acquit Preſſicks, becauſe there was no Evidence againſt her, but of what ſhe had ſaid others were to do; and it did not appear ſhe was privy even to that: As to her ſaying ſhe was ſorry Pickering did not kill the King, &c. he did not think ſuch Words amounted to Treaſon: But as to Thwyng, there were two poſitive Witneſſes againſt him; and intimated, that he thought the Witneſſes Thwyng brought to invalidate the Teſtimony of Bolron and Mowbray, was not to be regarded.

Mr. Baron Atkyns obſerved, There was one Witneſs which deposed, that Preſſicks confeſſed ſhe was privy to the Plot: And for Thwyng, there were two poſitive Witneſſes againſt him; and did not ſeem to give any Credit to the Witneſſes Thwyng produced to prove it a malicious Proſecution: Whereupon the Jury acquitted Mary Preſſicks; but brought in Thwyng GUILTY, and Sentence was paſſed on him as a Traytor: He was reprived from Time to Time, till the 23d of October, and then executed

Preſſicks acquitted.

Thwyng convicted, and executed.

It ſeems a little ſtrange, that Thwyng ſhould be convicted, on the Teſtimony of Witneſſes that were not believed at the Trial of Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, who was charged with being at the ſame Treaſonable Conſults, and made the ſame Defence that Thwyng did. This is aſcribed, in a great Meaſure, to the Credulity of the Judges that tried the unfortunate Thwyng: Mr. Juſtice Dolben was yet a Believer of the Plot; and Mr. Baron Atkyns a zealous Promoter of the Belief of it, and of every Thing elſe that might advance the Intereſt of the Faction: But the Government were ſo little ſatisfied of Thwyng's Guilt, that they ſuſpended his Execution for three Months: However, the Parliament meeting in October, and a prevailing Faction ſeeming determined not to enter upon Buſineſs, unleſs the Perſons accuſed of the Popiſh Plot were proſecuted with the ſame Heat they were at firſt; the Miniſtry found themſelves under a kind of Neceſſity of ſuffering Thwyng to be executed, according to his Sentence, two or three Days after the Parliament met; though this Compliance was far from having the Effect the Court expected from it; and indeed it was the greateſt Blemiſh on that Adminiſtration, that they ſuffered Men to be put to Death, of whoſe Innocence they were but too well ſatisfied.

The Trial of ELIZABETH CELLIER, for a Miſdemeanor, in publiſhing a Libel. 11 Sept. 1680. 32 Car. II.

1680. 32 Car. II.

Cellier's Trial.

The Charge.

THE Indictment charges, that the ſaid Elizabeth Cellier, being a Papiſt, and deſigning to bring his Majeſty, and his Government, and the Proteſtant Religion into Contempt; and to aſperſe the Witneſſes that had teſtified againſt her, and others, indicted of High-Treaſon, did, on the firſt of September, in the 32d Year of the King, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, falſly, maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly, write and publiſh a ſcandalous Libel, entitled, Malice Defeated, &c. wherein are contained many ſcandalous Expreſſions, reflecting on the Adminiſtration; particularly for ſuffering Prance, Corral, and others, to be threatned and tortured, to make them Witneſſes of the Popiſh Plot.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, it was unanſwerably proved, that Mrs. Cellier had acknowledged herſelf the Author of the Book, and had ſold and delivered them to ſeveral People, at her own Houſe.

To confute the Story of Prance's being tortured in Newgate, Prance himſelf was called as a Witneſs at this Trial, who declared that he was never tortured; but Mr. Richardſon, the Keeper of Newgate, took great Care of him.

Corral, the Coachman, alſo was called; but he not appearing, his Wife was examined, and deposed, That ſhe carried her Husband Proviſion when he was in Newgate; but was not permitted to ſee him while he was on the Maſter's Side: That about a Fortnight after, ſhe ſaw him with great Fetters on, which made her imagine he had murdered ſome Body; and the Jaylors ſaid they put on thoſe Irons to keep his Legs warm; and that there were many Holes in his Legs, as others could teſtify, who furniſhed her with Plaiſters for him: And Baron Weſton obſerving, that it was reported Richardſon had Irons, they called Sheers, that weighed forty Pounds, he anſwered, he had not one that weighed twelve Pounds;

1680. 32 Car. II.

Pounds; but did not contradict the Evidence Corral's Wife gave: However, the Lord Mayor ſaid, Corral had denied all before him upon Oath.

Her Defence.

Mrs. Cellier's Counſel deſerted her Cauſe, and ſaid nothing for her; but ſhe urg'd in her Defence, that ſhe was told what ſhe had wrote, and thought ſhe might juſtify the publiſhing it, ſince ſhe did not make the Story. She urged alſo, that her Family had been very Loyal, her Father and her Brother were both killed in one Day, in the Service of his Majeſty; and ſhe herſelf had ventured her Life by Sea and Land, to ſerve him, as his Majeſty had acknowledged.

To which Mr. Baron Weſton anſwered, No Doubt his Majeſty had recompenced her, according to her Deſerts; but they muſt act by the Rules of Law: That the torturing Criminals was illegal, and he did not know it had been practiſed ſince the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, when Campion, the Jeſuit, was examined upon the Rack.

She is convicted.

The Jury finding her Guilty, Sir George Jeffries, the Recorder, pronounced the following Sentence on her, (Viz.) That ſhe ſhould pay a Fine of 1000 l. be committed till Payment, ſtand three Times in the Pillory, and find Sureties for her good Behaviour for Life: That part of the Books ſhould be burnt by the common Hangman in her View, and a Paper, containing her Offence, affixed to the Pillory; which Sentence was afterwards executed.

Her Sentence.

Remarks.

Mrs. Cellier, it ſeems, was not able to prove all the Stories ſhe had heard, in relation to the threatening and torturing Prance and Corral, to make them Witneſſes of the Popiſh Plot; but Mr. Echard, to whom I refer the Reader, has given us a very full and particular Account of that Matter: And here we find Corral's Wife atteſting, that ſhe was not permitted to ſee her Husband, in Newgate, a great while, and when ſhe was, ſhe found him loaded with Irons, and great Sores in his Legs, occaſioned by them; which is ſomething extraordinary, when the Man was neither charged with Treaſon or Felony. Prance alſo was diſtracted with the Uſage he met with, ſometimes ſwearing one Thing, and then another; now confeſſing, and then denying what he had teſtified, in the moſt ſolemn Manner: But what puts the Matter beyond all Doubt, was, the voluntary Confeſſion of Prance in the next Reign, when he declared, that all the material Parts of his Evidence, at the Trials of Green, Berry, and Hill, were abſolutely falſe, and the Effects of his Cowardiſe, having been tortured and threatened with Death, to make him accuſe thoſe innocent Men.

Stafford's Trial.

The Trial of WILLIAM Viſcount STAFFORD, for High-Treaſon, before the Houſe of Lords, in Weſtminſter-Hall, (HENEAGE Lord FINCH, Lord Chancellor of England, being conſtituted Lord High Steward on this Occaſion) the 30th of November, 1680. 32 Car. II.

The Articles againſt him.

THE Articles were entitled, Articles of Impeachment, of High-Treaſon, and other Crimes and Offences, againſt William Earl of Powis, William Viſcount Stafford, and Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, William Lord Petre, and John Lord Bellaſis, now Priſoners in the Tower of London.

1. The firſt Article charges, That there had been for many Years a traitorous and execrable Conſpiracy carried on by the Papiſts, to ſubvert the ancient Government and Laws of this Kingdom, and to ſuppreſs the true Religion therein eſtabliſhed.

2. That the ſaid five Lords, together with Philip Howard, commonly called Cardinal of Norfolk, Thomas White, alias Whitebread, Provincial of the Jeſuits, and divers other Jeſuits, Prieſts, Friers, and other Perſons, had traitorouſly agreed, conſpired, and reſolved to depoſe and murder his preſent Majeſty, and by malicious and adviſed Speaking, Writing, and otherwiſe, had declared ſuch their Purpoſes and Intentions: That they had alſo conſpired and contrived to ſubject this Kingdom to the Pope, and ſhare among themſelves the Eſtates of his Majeſties Proteſtant Subjects; to reſtore Religious Houſes and the Lands belonging to them, and to erect others, and to deprive all Proteſtant Biſhops and other Eccleſiaſtical Perſons of their Offices and Preferments.

3. That the ſaid Conſpirators and their Accomplices had held ſeveral Conſultations concerning the Inſtruments they ſhould uſe to murder his Majeſty, and had reſolved to effect it by poiſoning, ſhooting, ſtabbing or ſuch like Means, and actually hired ſeveral Perſons to go to Windſor, and other Places where his Majeſty reſided, to murder him; and the Aſſaſins had accepted the Rewards offered them, undertaken to do the Deed, and gone to thoſe Places for that Purpoſe.

4. That they had procured Forces to be raiſed, and made Application to the Pope, his Cardinals, Nuncios, and others, to obtain Supplies of Men, Money, Arms and Ammunition, to levy War, and raiſe a Rebellion within this Kingdom, and to ſeize his Majeſty's Navy and Forts; whereupon the Calamities of War, Murders of innocent Subjects, Men, Women and Children, Burnings, Rapines, Devaſtations,

vaſtations, and other dreadful Miſeries muſt have enſued.

5. That the Conſpirators had procured and accepted Commiſſions, granted by or under the Pope, or other uſurped Authority, to raiſe Men, Money, Arms, and other Things neceſſary for their wicked and traitorous Deſigns, particularly, a Commiſſion for the ſaid Henry Lord Arundel of Wardour, to be Lord Chancellor; a Commiſſion to the ſaid William Earl of Powis, to be Lord Treaſurer; a Commiſſion to the ſaid John Lord Bellaſis to be General; another to the ſaid William Lord Petre, to be Lieutenant-General; and a Power to the ſaid William Viſcount Stafford to be Pay-maſter of the Army intended to be raiſed.

6. In order to conceal the Diſcovery of their Plots and Conſpiracies, and ſecure themſelves from Juſtice, the ſaid Conſpirators had uſed many wicked and diabolical Arts, cauſing their Prieſts to adminiſter Oaths of Secrecy together with the Sacrament, and upon Confeſſions, to give Abſolutions on concealing the ſaid Conſpiracy. That they cauſed Sir Edmundbury Godfrey, who had taken ſeveral Examinations relating to the ſaid Conſpiracy, to be murdered, giving out that he was alive, and privately married: And after his Body was found, maliciouſly reported that he murdered himſelf: Which murder was committed with Deſign to ſtifle and ſuppreſs the Evidence, and to deter all other Magiſtrates from making further Enquiries into their Plots and Conſpiracies.

And laſtly, That they had contrived, by many falſe Suggeſtions, to lay the Imputation and Guilt of the aforeſaid horrid and deteſtable Crimes upon the Proteſtants, that thereby they might eſcape the Puniſhments they juſtly deſerved; expoſe the Proteſtants to great Scandal, and ſubject them to Perſecution and Oppreſſion in all Countries, were the Romiſh Religion was profeſſed.

Of all which Treaſons and Crimes, the Knights, Citizens, and Burgeſſes in Parliament aſſembled, did impeach the ſaid Lords, and every of them, in the Name of all the Commons of England, praying they might be put to anſwer the Premiſſes, and ſuch Trials and Judgments might be had thereupon, as was agreeable to Law and Juſtice, and the Courſe of Parliaments.

To which the Lord Stafford anſwered generally, that he was not Guilty, and the Commons replied, and joined Iſſue thereupon.

On the 30th of November, the Lords being come down from their Houſe to the Court erected in Weſtminſter-Hall; the Commons ſeated on each ſide of them, all bare, and the Managers in the Rooms appointed for them; the Lord Viſcount Stafford was brought to the Bar, to whom the Lord High Steward made a Speech, wherein he told his Lordſhip, that he was proſecuted on the loud and dreadful Complaints of the Commons, and was to be tried by the whole Body of Peers, where he might be ſure no falſe Weights or Meaſures ever were, or could be found, but the Balance would he exactly kept, and all the Grains of Allowance his Caſe would bear, certainly put into the Scales; but as it was impoſſible their Lordſhips ſhould condemn the Innocent, ſo it was equally impoſſible they ſhould clear the Guilty: If therefore he had been agitated by a reſtleſs Zeal, to promote what they called the Catholick Cauſe, and had engaged [illegible]ch black and deep deſigns he was charged with, and this ſhould be fully proved, he muſt expect to reap what he had ſown: And as he muſt hear with Patience what ſhould be ſaid againſt him, ſo he ſhould have Time to anſwer it, and have a very fair and equal hearing.

d High ward's ch, at Opening e Trial.

The Charge being read, during which Time his Lordſhip was allowed to ſit, Mr. Serjeant Maynard, one of the Managers for the Commons, opened the Impeachment and Evidence. He obſerved that the Impeachment conſiſted of two Parts, a general and particular Charge: And accordingly they ſhould firſt prove a Plot in general, and then ſhew the Share the Lord at the Bar had in it: That great and wicked were the Deſigns of the Conſpirators: To deſtroy the King, in Hopes of better Times under his Succeſſor: To deſtroy and maſſacre all that ſtood in their Way, the whole Body of Proteſtants in England: That an Army at Home was in a Manner formed, Commanders appointed, and Aid from France invited and promiſed: They thought it meritorious, to deſtroy a Heretick King, and the Papiſts at home and abroad had broke through all the Bonds of Nature, and other Obligations, to obtain their Ends. The Hiſtories of all Times and Countries, afforded Inſtances of ſuch Catholick Plots, and therefore there was no Improbability they ſhould be in one now, to propagate their Religion. Another Thing, that might induce a Belief of the Plot, he obſerved, was, the Murder of Godfrey, who had taken the Examinations of the Plot; and the many Endeavours to ſeduce and tamper with the Witneſſes, and blaſt their Characters, was a further Confirmation of it.

The King's Counſel open the Charge.

Sir Francis Winnington, another of the Managers, ſeconded Serjeant Maynard, and ſaid, he looked upon the Cauſe of that Day, to be the Cauſe of the Proteſtant Religion: That the Papiſts had great Advantages and Encouragements at that Time, to enter into this Conſpiracy: They had crept into the King's Councils; and though ſome of them had been detected and diſcharged, as ill Men had ſucceeded them.

Men were grown too eaſy and favourable to the Papiſts Projects for; reconciling them to us had been lately ſet on Foot.

The Miniſtry prevented the Execution of the Penal Laws againſt Papiſts, and turned them upon the Proteſtant Diſſenters, and by that means weakened and divided the Proteſtant Intereſt.

But the greateſt Encouragement they had to enter on this Conſpiracy, was, the Proſpect of a Popiſh Succeſſor: His preſent Majeſty's Firmneſs to the Proteſtant Religion, fruſtrated all their Hopes of re-eſtabliſhing their Religion while he lived; and therefore, like true Papiſts, they would throw off all Obligations of Loyalty and Allegiance, and deſtroy him.

As to the Proof of the Plot in general, he thought the ſeveral Attainders of the Jeſuits, and the Convictions of Reading, and others, of tampering with the Witneſſes, a ſufficient Evidence of it: And as their Lordſhips Anceſtors had, by their Honour and Juſtice, preſerved the Anceſtors of the Commons, They did not doubt but their Lordſhips would tread in their Steps. They had now in their Hands an Opportunity of making their Zeal for Truth, and the Proteſtant Religion, famous to Poſterity; and no Artifice could create the leaſt Jealouſy in them, that their Lordſhips would ſhew any Injuſtice to the Commons of England: To their Judgment, therefore, this Cauſe was ſubmitted, and when they had their Lordſhips Judgment, they did not doubt but they ſhould drive Popery out of this Engliſh World.

Mr Treby, another of the Managers, obſerved, That their Evidence conſiſted of two Parts, 1. To ſhew the general Conſpiracy, and 2. The particular Share the Lord at the Bar had in it.

They had laid it in their Articles, That there was an execrable Plot carried on by Papiſts, and that the Conſpirators acted divers Parts, and in divers Places, beyond Sea as well as here; That this was an Enterprize too extenſive to be managed by a ſingle Nobleman, and therefore they would ſhew, firſt, That there was ſuch a grand and univerſal Deſign of Papiſts, in which this Lord was to co-operate his diſtinct Share; though, when they deſcended to Particulars, it would appear, that his Part had been great, and managed with Malice as great as any.

Smith's Evidence.

Then the Managers called their Witneſſes; and firſt one Smith, who gave a general Account of the Plot: he depoſed, That he had been a Popiſh Prieſt, but was now turned Proteſtant; That he had lived in the College of the Engliſh Jeſuits at Rome five Years; and the Jeſuits in their Sermons and private Diſcourſes maintained, That the King of England was an Heretick, and that whoever would take him out of the Way, would do a Meritorious Act; that he underſtood at Rome, there was a Plot going forward to murder the King, and when he came to England he obſerved there was the ſame Deſign here; and That it was common Talk all over the Country.

Dugdale's Evidence of the Plot in general.

Dugdale depoſed, That for fifteen or ſixteen Years paſt, there had been a Deſign to introduce Popery by Force of Arms upon the King's Death; but he heard nothing till of late of killing the King: That he had been at ſeveral Conſultations for taking off the King, and there had been a general Collection of Money for carrying on the Deſign; he had received five hundred Pounds at once, and paid it to Ewers the Jeſuit, for Arms received from beyond Sea: That the Lord Aſton and Sir James Symonds, were ordered to diſpoſe of Arms, which came from beyond Sea, to the Value of thirty thouſand Pounds; and he had heard the French King would furniſh a Body of Troops and other Supplies: That the Jeſuits Letters went through the Deponent's Hands for two Years, and he received one, the 14th of October, 1678, dated the 12th, which ſaid, This Night Godfrey is diſpatched; and the Reaſon he was taken off, Ewers told the Deponent, was, becauſe Coleman ſent the Duke of York Word he had diſcovered the whole Plot to him: That the Deponent himſelf contributed four hundred Pounds towards the Plot, and promiſed a hundred more: That the Lord Stafford was preſent at ſeveral Conſults, where the introducing Popery, the buying Arms, and the King's Death, were under Conſideration; and there was an Indulgence, publiſhed in the Year 1678, That whoever ſhould be active in theſe Deſigns, ſhould have a Pardon for all their Sins: That when the King was killed, Arms were to be put into the Hands of certain Perſons, who were to riſe at an Hour's Warning, and cut the Proteſtants Throats, and if any eſcaped, the Army was to deſtroy them; adding, that Whitebread the Jeſuit wrote Ewers a Letter by the common Poſt, wherein he deſired him, in Words at length, without a Cypher, To provide ſtout Fellows to kill the King.

1680 32 Car. II.

Oates's Evidence.

Oates depoſed, that he was reconciled to the Church of Rome on Aſh-Wedneſday, 1676, and admitted then a Novice of the Order of the Jeſuits: That in April 1677, he was ſent to Spain, where the King's Death was talked of, for that he was an Enemy to God and Man. In November following the Deponent was ordered to England, where he underſtood Grove had been diſappointed in his Deſign of killing the King; but had great Hopes of effecting it the next Year: That in December 1677, the Deponent was ſent to St Omers, where they received an Account of an Attempt that Pickering had made upon the King's Life, which failed by the Flint of his Piſtol being looſe: Then he gave Evidence of the treaſonable Conſult at the White-Horſe in April, 1678, as he had done at the Jeſuits Trials, and of Sir George Wakeman's being employed to poiſon the King; and ſaid, Strange told him how London was fired, and that the Incendiaries who were apprehended, were releaſed by the Duke of York's Order.

Jenniſon's Evidence.

Jenniſon depoſed, That Ireland would have employed him to murder the King; and that he (the Deponent) recommended four ſtout Iriſhmen to him in Auguſt, 1678, for that Service, whoſe Names Ireland took down.

The Managers having given Evidence of the Plot in general, the Witneſſes were directed to teſtify what they knew againſt the Lord Stafford in particular.

Dugdale's Teſtimony againſt Lord Stafford in particular.

Whereupon Dugdale depoſed, That the latter End of Auguſt, or the Beginning of September, 78, he was admitted to a Conſultation at the Lord Aſton's Houſe, where the Lord Stafford, the Lord Aſton, and ſeveral more, came to a Reſolution, upon the Intelligence they had received from beyond Sea: That the ſpeedieſt Way to introduce their Religion was, to kill the King; to which Reſolution the Lord Stafford conſented: That ſoon after, the Lord Stafford ſent for the Deponent into his Chamber, and promiſed him five hundred Pounds, if he would be concerned in murdering the King: He ſaid, the Services of his Family had not been rewarded, which was Reaſon ſufficient for his Enmity to the King,

1680. 32 Car. II.

King, if there was nothing of Religion in the Caſe. And he remembered particularly, that the Day, the Lord Stafford offered him the five hundred Pounds, was on the 20th, or 21ſt of Sept. 78.

Oates's further Evidence.

Oates depoſed, That in June 78, the Lord Stafford received a Commiſſion to be Pay-Maſter General of the Army, at Fenwick's Chamber in Drury-Lane.

Turbervile's Evidence.

Turbervile depoſed, That in the Year 75, his Brother, being a Benedictine Monk, recommended him to the Lord Stafford at Paris, who was then lame of the Gout; and that his Lordſhip propoſed to him his being concerned in the Murder of the King, who was (he ſaid) an Heretick, and a Rebel to God Almighty; ordered the Deponent to go to Diep, and told him he ſhould go with him to England: But his Lordſhip wrote the Deponent Word at Diep, he ſhould go to England by way of Calais, and ordered him to wait on his Lordſhip at London; but he never went near my Lord Stafford, not being willing to be concerned in the Matter: That it was at his Lordſhip's Houſe at Paris, that he propoſed killing the King; the Deponent was at his Houſe there, ſeveral Times, within the Space of a Fortnight. The Houſe was at the Corner of a Street, which faced Luxemburgh-Houſe, and the Prince of Conde lodged in the ſame Street.

This, the Lord Stafford obſerved, was not true, and demanded of Turbervile, What kind of Room his Chamber was, where he came to him? Which Turbervile ſaid he could not remember: And being asked how he came not to diſcover this ſooner? Said, He was afraid of having his Brains beat out; but on the King's Proclamation, and the Perſuaſion of his Friends, who told him he might do it ſafely, he made the Diſcovery.

Lord Stafford's Defence.

The Lord Stafford proceeding in his Defence, ſaid, If ſome Doctors of the Church of Rome held the Doctrine of King-killing, the Doctors of the Sorbonne, and ſeveral other conſiderable Members of that Church, had condemned it, as he did for his Part; and that he had taken the Oath of Allegiance, with which he thought no Power on Earth could diſpenſe: Nor had his Life given any Countenance to the Accuſation of the perjured Villains, who ſwore againſt him: Declaring, that Offers of procuring his Pardon had been made him, by ſeveral Peers, and Members of the Privy-Council, if he would make a Diſcovery: But upon the ſtricteſt Search he could not imagine there was any Foundation for the Charge againſt him; and obſerved, he had Time enough, after the Diſcovery of the Plot, to have made his Eſcape, if he had been guilty.

Then he demanded of Dugdale, What Proviſion of Arms was made to put this pretended Deſign in Execution? To which Dugdale anſwered, He heard there were 30,000 Arms provided beyond Sea; and he underſtood they ſhould have at leaſt 200,000 Men to aſſiſt them: Which his Lordſhip obſerved was very ſtrange, ſince there was not 20,000 Roman Catholicks in England able to bear Arms.

His Lordſhip alſo called ſeveral Witneſſes, who depoſed, That he was at the Marquis of Worceſter's Seat, at Badminton, in Auguſt 78, when Dugdale ſwore he was at Tixall. And Thomas Sawyer depoſed, That Dugdale was forced to leave the Lord Aſton's Service, on account of his Debts; and that being taken up by the Watch, in December 78, he deſired the Parſon of the Town to prevail with the Lord Aſton to own him for his Servant; for he ſhould be undone (he ſaid) if he went to Jail; but the Lord Aſton would not own him: And Dugdale ſwore thereupon, That he would be revenged on the Lord Aſton; which was but two or three Days before he became an Evidence againſt the Lord Aſton, and the reſt of the Popiſh Lords.

1680. 32 Car. II.

His Witneſſes called.

The Miniſter of Tixall depoſed, That he begged of the Lord Aſton to own Dugdale for his Servant, to prevent his being carried to Jail; but his Lordſhip anſwered, he would have nothing to do with him.

Sir Walter Bagott, one of the Juſtices of Peace, before whom Dugdale was brought by the Watch, depoſed, That he waited on the Lord Aſton, to know if Dugdale was his Servant; but he would not own him: Whereupon the Deponent took Dugdale to Stafford with him, where there was a Meeting of Juſtices, and they tendred him the Oaths of Supremacy and Allegiance, which he took; and examining if he knew any thing of the Plot, he denied he had any Knowledge of it: And Mr. Kinnerſley, and Sir Thomas Whitgrave, two more of the Juſtices of Peace, depoſed to the ſame Effect.

The Miniſter of Tixall further depoſed, That whereas Dugdale had ſworn he received a Letter, concerning the Death of Sir Edmondbury Godfrey, dated the 12th of October, and communicated the ſaid Letter to the Deponent, and Mr. Sambridge, the Tueſday following; he, the Deponent, averred, that he never heard of Godfrey's Death, either from Dugdale, or any other Perſon, 'till it was publickly known. And Mr. Sambridge depoſed to the ſame Effect.

Robinſon and Murrel depoſed, That Dugdale would have ſuborned them to have been Witneſſes againſt ſeveral Gentlemen, to prove their being in the Plot; and particularly againſt the Lord Stafford.

Robinſon and Holt alſo depoſed, That Dugdale would have ſuborned them to be Witneſſes.

One of the Lord Stafford's Servants depoſed, That he was with him all the while he reſided at Paris, and that his Lordſhip was never lame, as Turbervile had depoſed; neither did he ever hear that Turbervile was at his Lordſhip's Houſe at Paris.

Weybourne depoſed, That the Lord Stafford came over from France, by way of Diep, in January 75, and not by Calais, as Turbervile had ſworn.

Several Witneſſes alſo depoſed, That Turbervile ſolemnly proteſted he knew nothing of the Plot.

Then his Lordſhip demanded of Oates, Whether he, when he was a Miniſter of the Church of England, did really turn Papiſt, or did did but pretend to turn? To which Oates answered, He did only pretend, and was not really one.

His Lordship also desired that Oates might produce some of the Letters he pretended to have received from his Lordship, or some Notes, or Abstracts, he had taken from them; but Oates answered, he had not kept any of those Letters, neither had he taken any Notes out of them, lest they should endanger his Life.

Whereupon his Lordship observed, That Oates could not be deemed a credible Witness, having acknowledge his Hypocrisy and Dissimulation with God and Man.

That Oates also was so poor and necessitous, that he begged for Six-pence, suggesting that he became an Evidence to save himself from starving: To which Oates replied, He had not received Two-pence since he made the Discovery: Whereupon his Lordship observed, that Oates had sworn at another Trial, that he had been seven hundred Pounds out of Pocket; which could not easily be, if he had received nothing. Oates answered, A noble Peer had made him a Present of an hundred Pounds; he sold his Narrative of the Plot for another hundred Pounds; he had also received an hundred Pounds for taking of Jesuits, and fifty Pounds more he had received for other Copies; all which and more he had spent in the Service. (In promoting the Belief of the Plot.)

His Lordship observed also, That Dugdale was in the Bailiffs Hands when he became an Evidence; and that he probably did it to obtain his Liberty, and entitle himself to the Reward that was offered to Discoverers.

His Lordship also again insisted, That Oates, who had dissembled with God Almighty to such a Degree, as to take the Sacrament after the Manner of the Church of Rome, which their Lordships and the House of Commons had declared to be gross Idolatry, could never be looked upon as a good Witness; and appealed to their Lordships, if one, who pretended to abhor his own Religion, and had engaged to such an Height, in a Way which his Conscience told him was Idolatrous, was not a perjured Fellow, and incapable of being a Witness: He could be no Christian, but a Devil, and a Witness for the Devil. Had he been a Penitent, they should have discovered it, by a pious, sober, and peaceful Behaviour; and it was but last Night, when he abused the Lieutenant of the Tower, and called him Rascal, which the Lieutenant attested to be true.

Witnesses produced to support the Credit of the King's Witnesses.

Then the Managers produced other Evidence, to support the Credit of their Witnesses, and to falsify the Evidence given for the Prisoner.

Ansel deposed, That he had seen Dugdale in the Lord Aston's Parlour with the Lord Stafford; and that Dugdale told him of the Death of a Justice of Peace in London, on Monday the 14th of October 78.

Mr. Booth, a Member of the Commons, deposed, That Robinson, a Witness of the Prisoner's, who pretended he was suborned by Dugdale, was a common Cheat: Whereupon the Lord Stafford observed, he was the more likely to be suborned. 1680. 32 Car. II.

Other Witnesses deposed, That Holt and Murrel, who had deposed they were suborned by Dugdale, were necessitous People: Others deposed, that they had been practised with to destroy Dugdale's Credit. They produced other Witnesses, who deposed that Dugdale lived in good Credit at the Lord Aston's, and transacted most of his Affairs; and some Witnesses deposed, that Turbervile waited at Diep, to come over with the Lord Stafford, and that he was at Paris when the Lord Stafford was there. Others deposed, that the Lord Stafford had been lame several Times within the Space of seven Years; but his Lordship still averred, that he had never been lame.

Other Witnesses of the Lord Stafford's.

In answer to this Evidence, the Lord Stafford proved, that several of the Witnesses produced against him, were active Men in the Grand Rebellion, and disaffected to the Government; and then proceeded to make his Observations on the Evidence that had been given.

He observed, That Dugdale, the first Witness, had deposed his Lordship was at Tixall, in August 78, which appeared to be false; and he thought a Man, who would swear false in one Thing, was not to be credited in any: That his Lordship's Witnesses also had disproved him in several other Parts of his Testimony, and shewed he had endeavoured to suborn People to swear against his Lordship.

That Oates's swearing before the Lords, he had no more to say against any body, and afterwards accusing the Queen, and swearing his Lordship had a Commission, was down-right Perjury. And he observed, Oates was so far from expressing any Repentance, or Concern, for his dissembling so notoriously with God and Man, that he did, the Day before, with a smiling Countenance, and as it were in Derision, own the monstrous Offence; and though a wicked Man might be admitted a Witness, yet never did a wicked Man aver a Piece of Villany, which he might have concealed, and boasted of it, that was ever credited afterwards.

As to Turbervile, the next Witness, he thought it strange, none of his Servants should see him at Paris, if he had conversed with him a Fortnight together: Besides, Turbervile's Knowledge of the Plot was but very lately, two Witnesses having deposed that he swore he knew nothing of it a Year ago.

He observed also, that none of the Witnesses were Men of Quality, or Condition; but gave their Evidence to get Money, rather than for the sake of Truth; and as Oates had dissembled so notoriously with God and Man, no one would hang a Dog upon his Evidence: That the whole Course of his Life gave no Colour to the Charge; he challenged any one to say he had been guilty of one disloyal Word or Act: He attended his Majesty in the late Wars, till his Family was reduced to great Straits thereby; whereas, had he gone over to the Rebels, he might have lived quietly, and saved his Estate, as others did.

Sir

1680. 32 Car. II.

The Managers Observations on the Evidence.

Sir William Jones the Manager, who ſummed up the Evidence for the Commons, ſaid, he thought there were none now who would pretend to disbelieve the Plot, but thoſe who were Conſpirators in it, or wiſhed the Succeſs of it: That the Evidence was ſo ſtrong, it admitted of no Doubt, and the Crimes ſo foul, they needed no Aggravation. They were not only Offences againſt his Majeſty, but againſt the Proteſtant Religion; for the Extirpation of all Proteſtants out of theſe three Kingdoms, at leaſt all that dared to have continued ſo, muſt either have left their Country, or have been burnt in it.

Mr. Powle, another of the Managers, took upon him to anſwer the ſeveral Reaſons given by his Lordſhip of the great Improbability of his being in a Plot: And firſt, as to his Lordſhip's ſolemn Proteſtations of his Innocence, he ſaid, Whatever Regard their Lordſhips might have to the Proteſtations of a Peer in another Caſe; yet, now their Lordſhips ſat in the Seat of Juſtice, they would proceed according to the Evidence; and they hoped their Proofs were ſo clear, as to leave no room to believe his Lordſhip's ſolemn Proteſtations: And as to that Preſumption of his Innocence, that he did not fly for it, that might proceed as well from a Confidence of the Strength of his Party, as from a Confidence of his Innocence; and whether the Power and Prevaleney of the Popiſh Party at that Time, might not reaſonably create ſuch a Confidence in this Noble Lord, he left to their Lordſhips Judgment. That his Lordſhip had raiſed ſome Arguments from the whole Tenour of his Life, and had taken occaſion to mention his Own and his Anceſtors Services to his King and Country; but he deſired their Lordſhips, on the other hand, to conſider that the Lord Stafford was a Roman Catholick; and as a miſguided Conſcience could engage the beſt Men in the worſt Actions, ſo he thought the Principles of that Religion were ſuch as were more likely to pervert Men from their Duty and Allegiance, than any other Religion or Perſuaſion whatever. His Lordſhip had affirmed indeed that the Doctrine of King-killing, and depoſing of Princes, was but a private Opinion: Whereas the moſt celebrated Writers of the Church of Rome, had publickly avowed and maintained that Doctrine. Some private Writers, he acknowledged, did hold the contrary Opinion; but looked upon it as a Piece of Policy and Artifice in that Church, to leave this Point in ſome Meaſure undetermined, that they might make uſe of it as Occaſion ſerved. If it ſucceeded, then it was owned and juſtified; but if it miſcarried, then the Doctrine was ſaid to be a private Opinion, and the Plot, the Contrivance of particular Perſons, that were either deſperate or diſcontented; and concluded deſiring their Lordſhips to take the whole into their Conſideration, and do what ſhould be agreeable to Juſtice.

Exceptions of the Lord Stafford's, in Point of Law.

His Lordſhip then made ſome Objections in Point of Law, (viz.) 1. That there was no Precedent, that Criminal Proceedings ever continued from Parliament to Parliament, and this had continued three Parliaments.

2. That no Man ought to be proceeded againſt Capitally, but upon an Indictment found by ſome Grand Jury. 1680. 32 Car. II.

3. That there was no Overt-act laid in the Impeachment.

4. That the Witneſſes ſwore for Reward, and therefore were not competent Witneſſes.

5. That there were not too Witneſſes to any one Point.

Anſwered. 1. To the firſt it was anſwered, That what was once upon Record in Parliament, might at any Time be proceeded upon.

2. That in Impeachments of the Commons, an Indictment was not neceſſary.

3. To the Third, that it was charged, and had been proved, that he had received a Commiſſion, had been at ſeveral Conſults, and had hired Perſons to kill the King, which were ſufficient Overt-Acts.

4. To the Fourth, that it had been reſolved, That one Witneſs to one Overt-Act, and another Witneſs to another Overt-Act, of the ſame Species of Treaſon, was ſufficient.

5. As to the Objection, that a Maintenance was allowed the Witneſſes; this every Man did, though perhaps he did not give ſo large an Allowance as the King gave; and if his Majeſty had been bountiful to his Witneſſes, what was that to the Commons, who were Proſecutors? He could ſhew no Bribery in them.

Lord Stafford convicted.

The Trial having continued ſix Days, their Lordſhips Votes were taken by the Lord High Steward on the 7th, when his Lordſhip declared, that Thirty-one of the Lords thought the Priſoner Not Guilty, and Fifty-five had found him GUILTY: And the Lieutenant of the Tower being commanded to bring his Priſoner to the Bar, the Lord High Steward acquainted him, that their Lordſhips had found him Guilty of the Treaſons of which he was Impeached: After which, the Lords adjourning to their Houſe, and the Commons withdrawing to theirs, the Speaker of the Commons reſumed the Chair, and with the whole Body of the Houſe of Commons went up to the Lords Bar, and demanded Judgment againſt the Lord Viſcount Stafford.

Motion to alter the Sentence.

The Commons being withdrawn, it was moved, that the Lord Stafford might have Judgement to be beheaded only, but the Opinion of the Judges being demanded as to the Conſequence of ſuch a Sentence: They anſwered that the Judgement in High-Treaſon was to be drawn, hanged, and quartered, and the Courts below could not take Notice of any other Judgment for High-Treaſon. Sir Creſwel Levinz the Attorney General alſo, ſaid, that if any other Judgment was given, it would be prejudicial to his Majeſty, Whereupon the Lords reſolved, that the uſual Sentence in High-Treaſon ſhould be pronounced, and a Meſſage was ſent to the Commons, that their Lordſhips would go forthwith into Weſtminſter-Hall, to give Judgement againſt William Lord Viſcount Stafford.

Lord High Steward's Speech before Sentence.

The Lords and Commons being returned to their Places in Weſtminſter-Hall, and the Priſoner brought to the Bar, the Lord High Steward (Lord Chancellor Finch) made a Speech upon the Occaſion; wherein, having anſwered ſome trifling Objections Lord Staffford made in Arreſt of Judgment, he ſaid: "My Part, therefore, which remains, is a "a very ſad one; for I never yet gave Sentence of Death upon any Man, and am extreamly ſorry that I muſt begin with your "Lordſhip.

"Who would have thought that a Perſon "of your Quality, of ſo noble an Extraction, "of ſo conſiderable an Eſtate and Fortune, "ſo eminent a Sufferer in the late ill Times, "ſo intereſted in the Preſervation of the Government, ſo much obliged to the Moderation of it, and ſo perſonally obliged to "the King and his Royal Father, for their "particular Favours to you, ſhould ever have "entered into ſo infernal a Conſpiracy, as to "contrive the Murder of the King, the Ruin "of the State, the Subverſion of Religion, "and, as much as in you lay, the Deſtruction of all the Souls and Bodies in three "Chriſtian Nations? And yet the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons amounts "to no leſs a Charge; and of this Charge "their Lordſhips have found you guilty.

"That there hath been a general and "deſperate Conſpiracy of the Papiſts, and "that the Death of the King hath been all "along one chief Part of the Conſpirators "Deſign, is now apparent, beyond all Poſſibility of doubting.

"What was the Meaning of all thoſe Treatiſes, publiſhed about two Years ago, a"gainſt the Oath of Allegiance, in a Time, "when no Man dreamt of ſuch a Controverſy? What was the Meaning of Father "Conyers's Sermon, upon the ſame Subject; "but only becauſe there was a Demonſtration of Zeal, as they call it, intended a"gainſt the Perſon of the King, which the "Scruples ariſing from the Oath did ſomewhat hinder?

"To what Purpoſe were all the Correſpondencies with foreign Nations? The "Collections of Money among the Fathers "Abroad and at Home? What was the "Meaning of their governing themſelves "here, by ſuch Advices as came frequently "from Paris, and St. Omers? And how "ſhall we expound that Letter which came "from Ireland, to aſſure the Fathers here, "that all Things were in a Readineſs there "too, as ſoon as the Blow was given?

"Does any Man now doubt how London "came to be burnt? Or by what Ways and "Means poor Juſtice Godfrey fell? Is it not "apparent, by theſe Inſtances, that ſuch is "the frantick Zeal of ſome bigotted Papiſts, "that they reſolve, no Means to advance the "Catholick Cauſe ſhall be unattempted, "though it be by Fire and Sword?

"My Lord, as the Plot in general is moſt "manifeſt, ſo your Lordſhip's Part in it is "but too plain; what you did at Paris, and "continued to do at Tixall, ſhews a ſettled "Mind and Purpoſe againſt the King: And "what you ſaid at London, touching honeſt "Will, ſhews you were concerned in that "Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life, which "was carrying on here too: And in all this "there was a great Degree of Malice; for "your Lordſhip, at one Time, called the "King Heretick, and Traytor to God; and, at "another Time, you reviled him for miſplacing his Bounty, and rewarding none but "Traytors and Rebels.

1680. 32 Car. II.

"And thus you ſee, what the Wiſe Man "forewarned you of, is come upon you, Curſe "not the King, no not in thy Heart; for the "Birds of the Air ſhall reveal, and that which "hath Wings will declare the Matter.

"Three Things I ſhall preſume to recommend to your Lordſhip's Conſideration. In "the firſt Place, your Lordſhip now ſees how "it hath pleaſed Almighty God to leave you "ſo far to yourſelf, that you are fallen into "the Snare, and into the Pit, into that very "Pit, which you were digging for others. "Conſider therefore, that God Almighty never yet left any Man, who did not firſt "leave him.

"In the next Place, think a little better of "it than hitherto you have done; what kind "of Religion that is, in which the blind "Guides have been able to lead you on, into ſo much Ruin and Deſtruction, as is now "like to befall you.

"In the laſt Place, I intreat your Lordſhip to conſider, that true Repentance never comes too late. A devout, penitential Sorrow, joined with an humble and "hearty Confeſſion, is of mighty Power and "Efficacy, both with God and Man.

"There have been ſome, of late, who have "refuſed to give God the Glory of his Juſtice, by acknowledging the Crimes, for "which they were condemned; nay, who have "been taught to believe, that it is a mortal "Sin to confeſs that Crime in publick, for "which they have been abſolved in private; "and ſo have not dared to give God that "Glory, which otherwiſe they would have "done.

"God forbid your Lordſhip ſhould reſt "upon Forms; God forbid your Lordſhip "ſhould be found amongſt the Number "of thoſe poor miſtaken Souls, whom the "firſt Thing that undeceives is Death itſelf.

"Perhaps, your Lordſhip may not much "eſteem the Prayers of thoſe, whom you "have long been taught to miſcall Hereticks: "But, whether you do or no, I am to aſſure "your Lordſhip, That all my Lords here, "even they that have condemned you, will "never ceaſe to pray for you, that the End "of your Life may be Chriſtian and Pious, "how tragical ſoever the Means are that muſt "bring you thither. And now, my Lord, "this is the laſt Time that I can call you my "Lord; for the next Words I am to ſpeak "will attaint you.

"The Judgment of the Law is, and this "Court doth award, That

You go to the Place from whence you came; from thence you muſt be drawn upon a Hurdle to the Place of Execution: When you come there, you muſt be hanged up by the Neck, but not till you are dead; for you muſt be cut down alive, your Privy-Members muſt be cut off, and your Bowels ripped up before your Face, and thrown into the Fire: Then your Head muſt be ſevered from your Body, and your Body di-

His Majesty being pleased to remit all the Punishment but the Beheading, Writs were issued out of Chancery, to the Lieutenant of the Tower, and the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, for the Execution of his Lordship on Tower-Hill, on the 29th of December, 1680, by severing his Head from his Body: But the Lord William Russel, and some other Members of the Commons, questioning his Majesty's Power of remitting any Part of the Punishment, put the Sheriffs upon presenting the following Petition to the Temporal Lords, Viz.

A Petition for Directions as to Lord Stafford's Execution.

To the Right Honourable the Lords Temporal in Parliament assembled, The humble Petition of Slingsby Bethel, Esq; and Henry Cornish, Esq; Sheriffs of London and Middlesex.

Sheweth,

THAT your Petitioners have received a Writ, under the Great Seal of England, reciting, that Judgment had been given by your Lordships, against William Viscount Stafford, for High-Treason, and divers other Crimes and Offences, upon the Impeachment of the Commons in Parliament assembled, and commanding your Petitioners to cause the said Viscount Stafford's Head to be severed from his Body, upon the 29th Day of this instant December, notwithstanding any Judgment, Law, Ordinance, or Command to the contrary.

That your Petitioner have not as yet received any Command from your Lordships for executing the said Judgment.

May it therefore please your Lordships to take the Premises into Consideration, and to make such Order therein, as shall be agreeable to Right and Justice: And your Petitioners shall always pray, &c.

Upon which Petition the Lords made the following Declaration, Viz.

Die Martis, 21 Decembris, 1680.

Upon Application from the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex, making some Scruples concerning the Execution of the late Lord Viscount Stafford, which were found by this House to be unnecessary, This House do declare that the King's Writ ought to be obeyed.

Notwithstanding which Declaration, the Sheriffs applied themselves to the House of Commons, for their Direction; whereupon the Commons passed the following Vote.

Die Jovis, 23 Decembris, 1680.

Resolved, &c. That this House is content, That the Sheriffs of London and Middlesex do execute William late Viscount Stafford, by severing his Head from his Body only.

1680. 32 Car. II. Some Passages while Lord Stafford lay under Sentence of Death.

Bishop Burnet relates, that he attended the Lord Stafford in the Tower, while he lay under Sentence of Condemnation, and that he made solemn Protestations of his Innocence. He had a Mind to live, if it was possible; but said, he could discover nothing relating to the King's Life, and protested, That there was not so much as any Intimation, concerning it, ever passed amongst them. That the Lords Essex and Russel, and Sir William Jones, afterwards sent him (Burnet) to acquaint the Lord Stafford, that if he would discover all he knew of the Papists Designs, and more particularly what he knew concerning the Duke of York, they would not insist on his confessing the Particulars, for which he was condemned: And on the Lord Stafford's promising to discover all he knew, he was brought before the House of Lords, where he gave a long Relation of the Consultations of the Papists, after the Restoration; wherein they agreed, that their Religion could not be better brought in, than by procuring a Toleration; but upon naming the Earl of Shaftesbury among those who had undertaken to procure a Toleration, the Lords would hear no more, but ordered him to withdraw: And being sent back to the Tower, he prepared himself to suffer, which he did with a constant, undisturbed Mind. He supped and slept well the Night before his Execution, and died without any Shew of Fear or Disorder, denying all that the Witnesses had sworn against him. Thus far Bishop Burnet: But because some may desire to see the Speech entire, which the Lord Stafford made at his Execution, I have inserted it verbatim.

The Lord Viscount Stafford's Speech on the Scaffold, the 29th of December, 1680.

By the Permission of Almighty God, I am this Day brought hither to suffer Death, as if I were guilty of High-Treason. I do most truly, in the Presence of the Eternal, Omnipotent, and Allknowing God, protest upon my Salvation, that I am as Innocent, as it is possible for any Man to be, so much as in a Thought, of the Crimes laid to my Charge.

I acknowledge it to be a particular Grace and Favour of the Holy Trinity, to have given me this long Time to prepare myself for Eternity. I have not made so good Use of that Grace, as I ought to have done, partly by my not having so well recollected myself as I might have done, and partly because not only my Friends, but my Wife and Children have for several Days been forbidden to see me, but in the Presence of one of my Wardens. This hath been a great Trouble and Distraction to me; but I hope God of his infinite Mercy will pardon my Defects, and accept of my good Intentions.

Since my long Imprisonment, I have considered often, what could be the original Cause of my being thus accused, since I knew myself not culpable, so much as in a Thought: And I can not believe it to be upon any other Account, than my being of the Church of Rome. I have no Reason to be ashamed of my Religion; for it teacheth nothing but the right Worship

Worſhip of God, Obedience to the King, and due Subordination to the Temporal Laws of this Kingdom. And I do ſubmit to all Articles of Faith, believed and taught in the Catholick Church; believing them to be moſt conſonant to the Word of God: And whereas it hath ſo much, and often, been objected, That the Church holds, that Sovereign Princes, excommunicated by the Pope, may, by their Subjects, be depoſed or murdered. As to the Murder of Princes, I have been taught, as a Matter of Faith in the Catholick Church, that ſuch Doctrine is diabolical, horrid, deteſtable, and contrary the Law of God, Nature, and Nations; and as ſuch, from my Heart, I renounce and abominate it. As for the Doctrine of depoſing Princes, I know ſome Divines of the Catholick Church hold it, but as able and learned as they have written againſt it: But it was not pretended to be the Doctrine of the Church, that is, any Point of Catholick Faith: Wherefore I do here, in my Conſcience, declare, that it is my true and real Judgment, That this ſame Doctrine of depoſing Kings, is contrary to the fundamental Laws of this Kingdom, injurious to Sovereign Power, and conſequently would be in me, or any other of his Majeſty's Subjects, impious and damnable. I believe and profeſs that there is one God, one Saviour, one Holy Catholick Church, of which, through the Mercy, Grace, and Goodneſs of God, I die a Member. To my great and unſpeakable Grief I have offended God in many Things, by many great Offences; but, I give him moſt humble Thanks, not in any of thoſe Crimes of which I was accuſed.

All the Members of either Houſe having Liberty, to propoſe in the Houſe, what they think fit for the Good of the Kingdom, accordingly I propoſed what I thought fit: The Houſe is Judge of the Fitneſs or Unfitneſs of it; and I think I never ſaid any Thing that was unfitting there, or contrary to the Law, and Uſe of Parliament; for certainly if I had, the Lords would, as they might, have puniſhed me: So I am not culpable before God or Man.

It is much reported of Indulgencies, Diſpenſations, and Pardons, to murder, rebel, lie, forſwear, and commit ſuch other Crimes, held and given in the Church. I do here profeſs, in the Preſence of God, I never learnt, believed, or practiſed any ſuch Thing, but the contrary; and I ſpeak this without any Equivocation, or Reſervation whatſoever: And certainly, were I guilty, either myſelf, or knew of any one that were guilty, of any of thoſe Crimes, of which I am accuſed, I were not only the greateſt Fool imaginable, but a perfect Madman, and as wicked as any of thoſe that have ſo falſly accuſed me, if I ſhould not diſcover any ill Deſign, I knew in any kind, and ſo upon Diſcovery ſave my Life; I have ſo often had fair Occaſions propoſed to me, and ſo am guilty of Self-murder, which is a moſt grievous and heinous Sin. And though I was at laſt impeached at the Lords Bar, yet I have great Grounds to believe, that I was firſt brought to Trial, on a Belief that to ſave my Life, I would make ſome great Diſcovery: And truly ſo I would, had I known any thing of an ill Deſign, or dangerous Plot, either of myſelf, or any other Perſon: But had I a thouſand Lives, I would loſe them all, rather than falſly accuſe either myſelf, or any other whatſoever. And if I had known of any Treaſon, and ſhould thus deny it, as I do now upon my Salvation, at this Time, I ſhould have no Hope of Salvation, which now I have, through the Merits of Chriſt Jeſus.

1680. 32 Car. II.

I do beſeech God to bleſs his Majeſty, who is my lawful King and Sovereign, whom I was always, by all Laws, Human and Divine, bound to obey; and I am ſure that no Power upon Earth, either ſingly, or all together, can legally allow me, or any Body elſe, to lift up a Hand againſt him, or his legal Authority. I do hold that the Conſtitution of the Government of this Kingdom, is the only Way to continue Peace and Quietneſs, which God long continue.

Next to Treaſon I hold Murder in Abhorrence, and have ever done, and do; and I do ſincerely profeſs, that if I could at this Time free myſelf immediately, and eſtabliſh what Religion I would, and what Government I would, and make myſelf as great as I could wiſh, and all by the Death of one of theſe Fellows, that by their Perjuries have brought me to the Place where I am, I ſo much abhor to be the Cauſe of any Man's Death, that I would not any ways be the Cauſe of their Murder; how much leſs would I endeavour the Aſſaſſination of his Majeſty, whom I hold to be as gracious a King, as ever this, or any other Nation had, and under whom the People may enjoy their Liberties as much as ever any did: And if it pleaſe God to grant him Life and Happineſs, according as I have always wiſhed and prayed for, I am morally perſuaded that he, and all his Dominions, will be as happy and proſperous, as ever People were; which I beſeech God to grant.

I do moſt humbly ask Pardon of the Almighty, and All-merciful God, for all the great Offences I have committed againſt his Divine Majeſty; and I know he would not have the Death and Confuſion of a Sinner, but that he may repent and live: In that Aſſurance I hope, knowing he never deſpiſeth a contrite Heart; and though I have not ſo feeling a Contrition as I would, yet I have it as well as I can; and I doubt not but that God will accept of the good Will.

I do deſire all People will forgive me any Injury that I have done them, in any Thing, either wilfully, or by Chance; and I do heartily forgive all People in this World, that have injured me: I forgive even thoſe perjured Men, that have ſo falſly brought me hither by their Perjuries.

I do now, upon my Death and Salvation, aver, that I never ſpoke one Word either to Oates or Turbervile, or to my Knowledge ever ſaw them until my Trial: And for Dugdale, I never ſpoke to him of any Thing, but about a Foot-boy, or Foot-man, or Foot-race, and never was then alone with him: All the Puniſhment I wiſh them, is, that they may repent, and acknowledge the Wrong that they have have done me; then it will appear how innocent I am. God forgive them! I have a great Confidence that it will pleaſe Almighty God, in a ſhort time, to bring Truth to Light; then you and all the World will ſee and know what Injury they have done me.

I hope that I have made it appear that I have ſome Conſcience; for if I had none, certainly I would have ſaved my Life by acknowledging myſelf guilty; which I could have done, though I know I am not in the leaſt guilty. And I having ſome Conſcience, make very ill Uſe of it; for I throw my ſelf into eternal Pain, by thus plainly and conſtantly denying at my Death the Knowledge of what I am accuſed of.

I have ſaid thus much to diſcharge my Conſcience; and do aver, upon my Salvation, what I have ſaid to be really true.

I ſhall ſay little of my Trial; and whether it were all according to the known Law, I am too much a Party to ſay much of it: God forgive him or them that were the Cauſe of it.

My Judges were all Perſons of Honour, who were all as much bound to judge rightly, as if they had been upon Oath, upon what was legally proved; and not to vote but as in their Conſciences they were ſatisfied; and if any of them did otherwiſe, upon any Account whatſoever, I beſeech God to forgive him; I do heartily.

I ſhall end with my Prayers for the Happineſs of his Majeſty, That he may enjoy all Happineſs in this World and the World to come; and govern his People according to the Laws of God; and that the People may be ſenſible what a Bleſſing God hath ſo miraculouſly given them, and obey him as they ought. I ask Pardon with a proſtrate Heart of Almighty God, for all the great Offences that I have committed againſt his Divine Majeſty; and hope, through the Merits and Paſſion of Chriſt Jeſus, to obtain everlaſting Happineſs, into whoſe Hands I commend my Spirit, asking Pardon of every Perſon that I have done any Wrong to. I do freely forgive all that have wronged me: I do, with all the Devotion and Repentance that I can, humbly invoke the Mercy of our Bleſſed Saviour.

I beſeech God not to revenge my innocent Blood upon the Nation, or on thoſe that were the Cauſe of it, with my laſt Breath. I do with my laſt Breath truly aſſert my Innocency; and hope the omnipotent, all-ſeeing, juſt God will deal with me accordingly.

The Lord Stafford having ſpent ſome Time in his Devotions, undreſſed himſelf, and ſubmitted to the Block: And the Executioner ſevered his Head from his Body at one Blow. The Head was received into a black Silk Scarf by two of his Friends; but the Sheriffs ordered the Executioner to take it and hold it up to the View of the People, which he did at the four Corners of the Scaffold, crying out, This is the Head of a Traytor.

The Sun (according to one of the Spectators) which before was obſcured, on a ſudden broke out, and diſplayed his illuſtrious Beams; upon which Accident the different Parties made different Reflections. His Adverſaries ſaid, The Sun, which before frowned on Popiſh Guilt, ſeemed pleaſed when Juſtice was done: But the Papiſts would have it, That the Heavens mourned, and were aſhamed at the ſhedding his innocent Blood; but appeared in Joy and Splendour at the Reception of this Saint into the Celeſtial Manſions. But to leave theſe fond Conjectures; the Head being returned to his Relations, was laid in a Coffin with the Body, and carried from the Scaffold to the Tower, to be interred.

Such a Multitude of Witneſſes ſpringing up from all Quarters, and giving Evidence of the Popiſh Plot, enclined moſt Men to believe there was ſomething in it, for a conſiderable Time: But when it became manifeſt, that the Faction only trumped up this Plot to diſtreſs the Government, and conceal one of their own, againſt that very Life, and that very Conſtitution they charged the Papiſts with attempting to deſtroy; when it was conſidered, what extraordinary Rewards were offered to thoſe that would become Witneſſes of it, and what infamous People the Witneſſes in general were; when it was diſcovered how they were inſtructed and managed by Shafteſbury and his Emiſſaries, to deſtroy and aſperſe all that were true Friends to the Government and the Conſtitution; when it was obſerved how they contradicted themſelves, and each other, in their Evidence; and atteſted ſuch improbable and inconſiſtent Relations as the moſt Credulous could not believe: But above all, when it was found that the Party were actually arming themſelves, reviling the King and Royal Family; juſtifying the late Rebellion, and threatning publickly to bring the King to the Block, as they did his Father, (as appeared at the Time of the Oxford Parliament, and at Colledge's Trial, which happened within a Year after this); when the People, I ſay, reflected on theſe Things, the Belief of the Plot vaniſhed at once; and was believed, or pretended to be believed, by none but thoſe whoſe Intereſt it was it ſhould be believed; and who endeavoured, by aſſerting the Truth of the Popiſh Plot, to conceal their own Guilt.

Remarks on Lord Stafford's Trial, and the Popiſh Plot.

Even Biſhop Burnet, in his Poſthumous Work, Vol. II. pag. 509. could ſay in his Remarks on Colledge's Trial: "And now "Dugdale and Turbervile, who had been the "Witneſſes upon whoſe Evidence Lord Staf-"ford was condemned, being within a Year "detected, or at leaſt ſuſpected of this Vil-"lany; I could not but reflect on what he had "ſaid to me, That he was confident I ſhould "ſee within a Year, That the Witneſſes would "be found to be Rogues.

And indeed the Faction themſelves, and the Authors of Rapin, their avowed Advocates, ſeem ſtrangely inconſiſtent in their Accounts of the pretended Popiſh Plot: They firſt repreſent the King uſing all manner of Artifice, and even confederating with the French King to eſtabliſh Popery in England; and then, on a ſudden, make the Engliſh Papiſts, and all the Popiſh Powers in Europe, in a Plot, (even that very French King, by whoſe Means, they told us, King Charles would introduce troduce Popery here) to take away the Life of King Charles II. becauſe was a Heretick, and oppoſed their Schemes of introducing Popery: And when the Abſurdity of this was ſufficiently expoſed, then they turn about again, and tell us, that the King himſelf was more deeply engaged in the Plot than any Man: Not in a Plot to kill himſelf for a Heretick; (This was too abſurd, even for a Fanatick to ſay) but in a Plot to eſtabliſh Popery by a Standing Army, and the Aſſiſtance of the French King again. So that they ſeem contented, at length, that we ſhould believe no more of the Plot than that King Charles II. the Papiſts, and the Members of the Church of England, who are ever repreſented as Popiſhly affected, were in a Plot to bring in Popery: But then they would do well to conſider, what has been obſerved already, that if this laſt Pretence be admitted, all the People that were executed for being in a Plot againſt the King's Life were unjuſtly murdered under a Colour of Law; for they were all condemned for conſpiring the Death of the King. Had they been only charged with Compaſſing and Imagining, or Conſpiring, with or without the King's Concurrence, to alter the Government and the Eſtabliſhed Religion; This was not High-Treaſon by any Law then, or now, in being; provided they had no Deſigns againſt the King's Perſon, as this Scheme admits.

And becauſe it may ſeem impoſſible to Poſterity, that any Party of Men could have the Face, or the Folly, to affirm ſuch palpable Contradictions, I ſhall extract ſome Paſſages from Rapin (whoſe Authority they will never diſpute, his pretended Hiſtory being little elſe but a Collection of all the Lies and Forgeries the Faction have, from Time to Time, advanced to ſerve their Ends) that will ſufficiently manifeſt this Conduct.

Rapin, Vol. 13, Page 381, Tindal's Tranſlation, ſays, "That the Papiſts, (Anno 1667) "had a great Influence in the Court: The "Earl of Arlington, the almoſt declared Pro"tector of the Papiſts, was made Secretary "of State, and in great Favour; while the "Earl of Clarendon, their Enemy, daily de"clined in Credit and Authority. This began "to produce Suſpicions little advantagious "to the King. Page 422, Rapin ſays of the "King, Inſtead of being zealous for the Pro"teſtant Religion (Anno 1670) his Intent "was to overturn it: Inſtead of having any "Thought of deſtroying the Presbyterians, "his Deſign was to be very indulgent to "them, in order to have an Opportunity and "Pretence to be ſo to the Papiſts: He was "impatient to free himſelf from the Reſtraints "put upon him by his Parliament; and the "rather, as by the Augmentation of his Power "he ſhould be more able to countenance the "Papiſts, and introduce their Religion; which "was his own as well as his Brother's.

Page 458, Rapin ſays, "One of the Branches "of the Project formed by the Cabal (Anno "1671) was, to render the King abſolute; "and this Branch comprehended under it "The Extirpation of the Proteſtant, or, at leaſt, "the Introduction of the Popiſh Religion.

Vol. 14, Page 41 and 42, Rapin ſays, "It "ſignified little for the King to proteſt his "Zeal for the Proteſtant Religion, (Anno 1673): "Theſe Proteſtations could not make the "Parliament forget ſo many Steps already "taken, which gave too juſt a Suſpicion of "his Sincerity: And they openly enough ex"preſſed their Fears and Diſcontents of the "Growth of Popery, publickly encouraged by "the Court; of the Management of Affairs "in Ireland, where the Act of Eſtabliſhment "was openly trampled upon, and Papiſts "daily advanced or encouraged; the King's "Proceedings in England, which were clear "Evidences of his Principles and Deſigns; "namely, his raiſing a Land Army without "any Neceſſity; his granting Liberty of "Conſcience by his ſole Authority; his ſhut"ting up the Exchequer; and entering into a "ſtrict Alliance with France, when he ſhould "have uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to oppoſe "the Encreaſe of her Greatneſs: The Pro"feſſion of the Popiſh Religion, in the moſt "open Manner, by the Duke of York; and "his Marriage with a Popiſh Princeſs, aber"ted by the King himſelf, contrary to ſo "many Remonſtrances of the Parliament. "Theſe were Subjects of Complaint, too real "to be ſilenced by Proteſtations from the "King, of his Deſign to maintain their Laws "and Religon.

Page 43, He tells us, "The King had ab"jured the Proteſtant Religion, and had a "ſecret Chapel erected in his Palace, where he "every Day heard Maſs.

Page 81, Rapin affirms, "That in the "Year 1677, the King had no Deſire to be"gin a War with France: His private En"gagements with Lewis XIV. being too ſtrong "to allow him any ſuch Thought.

Page 82, "The more powerful the King "of France rendered himſelf, the greater was "King Charles's private Advantage; as it "was from the Aſſiſtance of France, he pro"miſed himſelf the Conqueſt of his own "Kingdom.

Page 88, Rapin ſays, "I do not think "it poſſible (Anno 1677) to account for the "King's Conduct, in a Manner ſatisfactory "to the Impartial, without ſuppoſing he ex"pected Aſſiſtance from France to make him "abſolute, and change the Eſtabliſhed Re"ligion.

And Page 116, he tells us, That the King's "Conduct (Anno 1678) could only be aſcribed "to his Paſſion, for executing his darling "Scheme of rendering himſelf abſolute, and "introducing the Popiſh Religion in England.

Theſe are ſome of the numerous Inſtances, that Rapin and his Party have given us, of King Charles's repeated Deſigns, and Attempts to extirpate the Proteſtant Religion, and Introduce Popery; and yet in this very Year 1678, do they trump up a Plot, in which they pretend, that not only the Engliſh Papiſts, but all the Popiſh Powers in Europe; even his Ally the French King, as has been obſerved already, were engaged, to deſtroy him, becauſe he was an Heretick, and would not eſtabliſh Popery in England. And to that Degree were the People diſtracted, and infatuated by the 1680. 32 Car II. Remarks on Lord Stafford's Trial and the Popiſh Plot.

Artifices of Shafiesbury and the Faction, that great Numbers of People were executed for this pretended Plot; and though the King ſoon found it was a Sham, the Party had ſuch an Aſcendant, that they compelled him to ſuffer thoſe Executions; and among the reſt, that of the unfortunate Lord Stafford: And when the Forgery became Evident both to King and People, and the Credit of the Plot could be ſupported no longer, the Faction then had recourſe to their old Stratagem again, and very near ſpirited up the People into Rebellion a ſecond Time, under Pretence the King himſelf was in the Plot to introduce Popery.

Indeed Rapin, p. 119, endeavours to explain this Riddle, by making two Plots: He ſays, the King was engaged in a Plot to introduce Popery and Arbitrary Power; and the Jeſuits, and ſome few Deſperadoes of their Religion, were in another Plot, to take away his Life, as the readieſt way to introduce their Religion: But ſurely, if this was the Caſe, the Jeſuits never acted more unjuſtly, more ungratefully, or impolitically; for Rapin takes it for granted, that the King was actually a Papiſt, and heard Maſs every Day in his own Palace: That he encouraged and preferred none but thoſe who were Popiſhly affected at Home; and entered into Foreign Alliances, eſpecially with the French King, on Purpoſe to bring in Popery by Force, if it would not be affected otherwiſe; and continued, with all imaginable Application and Artifice, to labour the eſtabliſhing that Religion here for many Years: Can it then be ſuppoſed, that ever the Jeſuits, or any Papiſts, ſhould conſpire to cut off ſuch a Prince; eſpecially when they knew he did not want Skill and Addreſs, to effect what they ſay he ſo paſſionately deſired, and would loſe no favourable Opportunity for promoting their Superſtition? Would they kill him, becauſe he did not precipitate Matters, and defeat their Hopes, by raſh and unſeaſonable Attempts? This can never be ſuppoſed of that cunning Society of the Jeſuits, if they could be preſumed to have ſo little Juſtice, or Gratitude, as to murder a Prince, who was their Convert, and had left no Stone unturned to ſerve them.

But further, Rapin pretends, that the Deſign of killing the King, was carried on only by ſome few Deſperadoes, and that none elſe were acquainted with it; but, if we are to credit the Witneſſes the Faction produced to prove the Plot, the King's Death was reſolved on by All that were tried for the Plot; by All the Popiſh Lords; by the Engliſh Catholicks in general; and by the Courts of Rome, Spain, and France; and was become the Common Talk in every Roman Catholick Court in Europe, for ſeveral Years; and conſequently, if there was a Deſign to kill the King, it was not confined to a few Deſperadoes: The Papiſts in general were engaged in it, and it could not be concealed from the King himſelf. But it is evident the King never ſuſpected that any one of thoſe that were executed for conſpiring againſt his Life, were Guilty, by his Endeavours to ſave them, which is to me a ſtrong Preſumption of their Innocence; for no Perſon was ſo much concerned to ſee Juſtice executed upon them as his Majeſty, if they were Guilty. We may therefore very reaſonably conclude, that all that were executed for that Plot, were very unjuſtly put to death; and from the Trials that followed the Year after, it is no leſs evident, that the Faction only amuſed the Nation with this Plot, to conceal another of their own againſt the King's Life, and the Conſtitution in Church and State; treading in the Steps of their Fore-fathers, who depoſed and murdered his Father, ſubverted the Government, and eſtabliſhed Presbytery, and a Republican Form of Government by the very ſame Arts; namely, by alarming the Nation, with terrible Apprehenſions of Popery, Arbitrary Power, and a general Maſſacre: It is plain, the Biſhops and the Church of England were ſufficiently convinced of this Deſign, by their adhering to the Court ſo ſtrenuouſly, after the Roguery of the Popiſh Plot was detected, and by their aſſiſting the King in ſubduing that rebellious Spirit, which manifeſted itſelf ſoon after, in fanatick Plots and Conſpiracies to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty: And if the Biſhops and Clergy of the Church of England were of Opinion, that the Fanaticks and Republicans had a View to the ſubverting the Government and Religion eſtabliſhed (as Rapin admits) I ſhall make no Difficulty to believe they underſtood what Deſigns were on Foot, and what was the Intereſt of the Nation, as well as Rapin, or any of their Enemies. But it is remarkable, that this celebrated Writer himſelf, vol. 14, p. 299, acknowledges, that the Preſbyterians and Republicans of thoſe Times, had the Subverſion of the Conſtitution in View, which is ſo conſiderable and deciſive a Conceſſion in this Diſpute, that I ſhall recite his very Words.

"It was inſinuated (ſays Rapin) to the "Epiſcopalians, of whom the Majority were "Tories, that both Church and Monarchy "were in Danger; and that the Scene was "again opening, which had brought on "the Troubles of Forty-one. That the Preſ"byterians, under Colour of providing for "the Preſervation of Liberty, had only in "View the Deſtruction of the Church of "England, and the Introduction of Presby"terianiſm; in order to which they were purſuing the ſame Meaſures, that they had "taken in 1640, and the following Years, "by undermining the Foundations of Mo"narchy, the more eaſily to pull down the "Church. Theſe Inſinuations had the greater Effect, as what had once happened, and "whereof the Memory was ſtill freſh, might "happen again; and I do not know whether it "can be juſtly doubted, that ſome of the Presby"terians had ſuch a Thing in View: And in "the ſame Page, he ſays, The three laſt "Parliaments, compoſed of Men well-affected "to Presb terianiſm, proceeded not with "Caution enough; but diſcovered too haſtily, "or too openly, their Deſigns, with regard to "Religion

Will any Man, after ſuch Conceſſions made by Rapin, the great Advocate of the Presbyterians, doubt whether the King's Life, and the eſtabliſhed Religion, were not in more Danger

Danger at that Time, from the Presbyterians and Republicans, than from the Papiſt? Will he not conclude, that this pretended Popiſh Plot was intended to conceal a real Presbyterian Plot?

So zealous were the Faction that this Artifice ſhould be diſcovered, that we find they made it one of the Articles of Impeachment againſt the Lord Stafford; that he deſigned to throw the Plot upon the Proteſtants, by whom they always mean the Presbyterians, and proſecuted all thoſe with the utmoſt Fury, that durſt ſuſpect their Knavery: And how did they compel the King to act contrary to his own Reaſon and Senſe of Things, when they obliged him to offer extravagant Rewards to Diſcoverers, to careſs thoſe Perjured Wretches and Witneſſes, and lodge them in his own Palace? And laſtly, what a Force did they put upon him, when they executed this Lord, and the reſt of the Sufferers, for this pretended Plot? Every one knows the King would have ſaved them, if he durſt: Which, as has been obſerved, is a ſtrong Inducement to believe they were not Guilty. For is it to be ſuppoſed, when King Charles had ſeen ſo many tried for this Plot, that he had not Penetration enough to diſcern, whether they were really Guilty? and, if he had thought them Guilty, can it be believed he would have endeavoured to ſave Men that had reſolved to Aſſaſſinate him; or have diſcharged thoſe Lords out of the Tower, who were impeached and charged with being in the ſame Conſpiracy?

1680. 32 Car. II. Thompſon's Caſe. Proceedings againſt RICHARD THOMPSON, of Briſtol, Clerk, before the Houſe of Commons, in the Month of December, 1680. Upon Complaint made of ſome Words he had uttered in a Sermon, preached on the 30*th of* January, 1679, at Briſtol, and at other Times and Places.

SOME of the Witneſſes declared, they heard him ſay in the ſaid Sermon, That the Presbyterians were ſuch Perſons, as the very Devil bluſhed at them: That the Villain Hampden, made it more ſcruple of Conſcience, to give Twenty Shillings to the King for Ship-Money, which was his Right by Law, than to raiſe a Rebellion againſt him; and that the Presbyterians were far worſe (and far more intolerable) than either Prieſts or Jeſuits.

That he inveighed bitterly againſt the ſigning Petitions for the Sitting of a Parliament; ſaid it was the Seed of Rebellion, and likened it to Forty-one.

That he ſaid Henry VIII, did more Hurt in robbing the Abby-Lands, than he did Good by the Reformation.

That he ſaid, there was a great Noiſe of a Popiſh Plot, but there was nothing in it, but a Presbyterian Plot; and in the End they would bring the King's Head to the Block, as they had done his Father's.

Others depoſed, That Thomſon had uttered ſeveral Speeches, whereby he ſhewed he was Popiſhly Affected: That he commended the Romiſh Clergy for their ſingle Life, and was himſelf unmarried.

Said, That the King was of a ſoft Temper, might be led to any thing; but a Solomon in his Vices: The Duke of York was a Prince of a brave Spirit, and it was their own Faults he was a Roman Catholick; they forced him to fly into France, where he embraced that Religion.

Being examined before a Committee of the Houſe, as to his having ſpoken theſe, and Words of the like Import, ſome he confeſſed, and others he denied, or ſoftned, and the Committee making their Report thereupon to the Houſe, it was Reſolved, Nemine contradicente, That he had publickly defamed his Majeſty, vilified the Reformation, aſſerted Popiſh Principles, denied the Popiſh Plot, and turning the ſame upon the Proteſtants, endeavoured to ſubvert Liberty and Property, and was a Scandal to his Function.

And it was further Reſolved, to impeach the ſaid Richard Thompſon, on the Report of the ſaid Committee: However, upon his Petition, they ordered the Serjeant at Arms to take Security for his Appearance, to anſwer the ſaid Impeachment; and the Houſe being prorogued, the Matter was dropped.

1680. 32 Car. II. Thompſon's Caſe.

It is eaſy to diſcern what Stamp this Houſe of Commons were of, to prefer an Impeachment againſt a Perſon, chiefly for reflecting on the Presbyterians, and the Popiſh Plot: This extraordinary Reſolution ſeems to be made to terrify the People from ſpeaking, or thinking, otherwiſe than the Faction were pleaſed to preſcribe. They charged him indeed with reflecting on the King, but that was only to give them a Colour for the Proſecution; for it is evident the Faction did, at the ſame Time, publiſh all manner of ſeditious and ſcandalous Libels, reflecting on his Majeſty and the Royal Family, without any Animadverſion or Notice taken of them by the Houſe.

It ſeems to me alſo, a very great Hardſhip, and not agreeable to the good old Laws of this Land, (which requires that, in ordinary Caſes, every Man ſhould be tried by his Peers, or Equals) That a Perſon ſhould be Im-

1680. Car. II. impeached and tried before the Lords, when he is forth-coming, and ſubmits to be tried by the ordinary Courts of Juſtice; and this only for ſome looſe and unguarded Expreſſions, that were not agreeable to the Taſte of a prevailing Party. If the Words were criminal, they had Witneſſes that could have proved them in Weſtminſter-Hall, as well as at the Lords Bar; and if they were not, it was hard they ſhould be made the Foundation of an Impeachment. 1680. 32 Car. 1681. Car. II. # The Trial of EDWARD FITZHARRIS, Eſq; for High-Treaſon, before the Court of King's-Bench, in Eaſter and Trinity-Terms. 1681. 33 Car. II. 1681. 33 Car. II.

Fitzharris's Trial. EDWARD FITZHARRIS, being committed for a Treaſonable Libel, reflecting on the King and Government, on the 28th of February, 1680; and the Parliament meeting at Oxford, on the 21ſt of March following, the Commons impeached Fitzharris of High-Treaſon, in general Terms: But the Lords finding no Reaſon for this extraordinary Way of proceeding, when he might be tried in the ordinary Courts of Law, rejected the Impeachment: Whereupon the Commons Reſolved, That it was the undoubted Right of the Commons to impeach any Peer, or Commoner, before the Lords; and that the Lords refuſing to proceed on this Impeachment of Fitzharris, was a Denial of Juſtice, and a Violation of the Conſtitution of Parliaments; an Obſtruction to the further Diſcovery of the Plot, and of great Danger to his Majeſty's Perſon, and the Proteſtant Religion: And that if any inferior Court ſhould proceed againſt Edward Fitzharris, or any other Perſon, lying under an Impeachment of Parliament, it would be a high Breach of Privilege: But the King diſſolving the Parliament the ſame Day, being the 28th of March, 1681, the Miniſtry directed Fitzharris to be tried at the King's-Bench Bar.

is impeached generally. Impeachment voted. Reſolutions of Commons thereon.

On Wedneſday, the 27th of April, Mr. Attorney-General moved the Court of King's-Bench, that ſome of the Grand Jury for the County of Middleſex might be preſent at the ſwearing the Witneſſes on the Indictment to be preferred againſt Fitzharris, then a Priſoner in the Tower, which was granted: And the Grand Jury having ſome Scruples about finding the Bill, Mr. Juſtice Jones ordered them to attend, and offer them the next Day, when the Court would be full.

Accordingly the 28th of April, the Grand Jury came to the Bar, and Mr. Michael Godfrey (Brother to Sir Edmondbury Godfrey) who was Foreman, deſired, before they proceeded on the Indictment, that Fitzharris might be examined about his Brother's Death, and then delivered in a Paper, in behalf of himſelf and the reſt of the Grand Jury, importing, That the Day before they had heard Sir William Waller, and others ſworn in Court, to give Evidence againſt Fitzharris, who, in the late Parliament at Oxford, was impeached by the Commons: And deſired the Opinion of the Court, whether it were lawful and ſafe for them to proceed to examine Witneſſes in relation to Fitzharris, or to meddle in that Matter, after the ſaid Impeachment, and Votes of the Commons.

The Grand Jury doubt, whether they may proceed on Indictment next againſt him.

To which the Lord Chief Juſtice anſwered, It was their Opinions, That notwithſtanding what they ſuggeſted, they were bound to enquire, by Vertue of their Oaths, if an Indictment ſhould be exhibited to them: They could not, nor ought to take any Notice of ſuch an Impeachment offered to the Lords, or of any ſuch Votes of the Houſe of Commons afterwards, if ſuch there were; for they would not excuſe them: Therefore, if they had Evidence enough given them, to ſatisfy them that the Indictment was true, they were to find it. And this, he declared, was the Opinion of all the Judges of England: Whereupon the Grand Jury withdrew, and having examined the Witneſſes, found the Bill. They find the Bill.

Fitzharris being brought to the Bar, from the Tower, by Habeas Corpus, on Saturday the 30th of April, and arraigned, exhibited a written Plea, which the Court ordered to be read, though they did not allow it; the Tenor whereof follows, Viz. That he ought not to be compelled to anſwer to this Indictment, becauſe, before the Indictment was found, at a Parliament held at Oxford, the 21ſt of March laſt, he was impeached by the Commons of High-Treaſon; and that this Impeachment remained in full Force before the Lords in Parliament, as appeared by the Records: And then avers, that the High-Treaſon mentioned in the Indictment, and the High-Treaſon in the Impeachment, are one and the ſame; and that he is the ſame Fitzharris, named in the Indictment, and mentioned in the Impeachment; and concludes to the Juriſdiction of the Court, whether upon the whole they will proceed further againſt him, on this Indictment. Fitzharris arraigned. Pleads to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

The Chief Juſtice acquainting the Priſoner, that ſuch a Plea muſt have a Counſel's Hand to it, he deſired they would aſſign Sir Francis Winnington, Mr. Williams, Mr. Pollexfen, and Mr. Wallop, for his Counſel, who were aſſigned accordingly, and Time was allowed him till the Wedneſday following, to put in his Plea; and a Rule was made, that his Wife, and his Counſel, ſhould have Acceſs to him. Counſel aſſigned to argue it.

On Monday the 2d of May, the Priſoner's Counſel moved, that the Time for putting in his Plea might be enlarged, and that they might have a Copy of the Indictment: But the Court refuſed to give further Time, and ſaid, a Copy of the Indictment, in Caſes of Treaſon and Felony, was never granted: But at the Priſoner's Requeſt, they added Sir George Treby, and Mr. Smith, to the Number of his Counſel, and allowed him a Solicitor.

Fitzharris being brought to the Bar again, on Wedneſday the 4th of May, produced the aboveſaid Plea, ſigned by Counſel, which the King's Counſel inſiſted was a frivolous Plea, only for Delay, and ought to be rejected immediately; but the Court declaring they would take Time to conſider of it, Mr. Attorney demurred to the Plea, and the Priſoner's Counſel joined in the Demurrer; after which, Mr. Attorney deſired the Judgment of the Court, That the Plea might ſtand over-ruled, for a plain fatal Error in it; for this he inſiſted was a particular Indictment, for framing a moſt pernicious and ſcandalous Libel againſt the King and Government; and they had pleaded generally, That the Priſoner was impeached of High-Treaſon: They ought to be ready with the Record, to juſtify their Plea: That to out the Court of their Juriſdiction, for a particular Treaſon, it was not a good Plea to ſay he was impeached or indicted generally of High-Treaſon: Nor could any Averment help it; and therefore he prayed the Judgment of the Court upon it.

The Plea demurred to.

The Priſoner's Counſel, on the other Hand, deſired Time to maintain their Plea, and were indulged till the Saturday following; but were again refuſed a Copy of the Indictment.

The Priſoner being brought to the Bar again, on Saturday the 7th of May, Mr. Attorney ſaid, he would lay his Finger upon the Points that would be the Queſtions between them, and 1. He inſiſted, That the general Allegation, that he was impeached of High-Treaſon, was too uncertain and general, and not helped by the Averment. 2. There was no Impeachment alledged to be upon Record; and as to the Matter, it was a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court; and the Point would be, Whether a Suit, depending in a ſuperior Court, can take away the Juriſdiction of an inferior Court, which had an original Juriſdiction of the Cauſe, of the Perſon, and of the Fact.

Arguments to maintain the Plea.

To this the Priſoner's Counſel anſwered, That by the Demurrer, theſe Things were admitted; 1. That the Priſoner was impeached by the Commons of High-Treaſon. 2. That this Impeachment was ſtill in being. 3. That this was according to the Law, and Cuſtom of Parliament; and 4. That the Treaſon, for which Fitzharris was impeached, and the Treaſon, for which he was indicted, was the ſame: That Fitzharris, who was indicted, was the ſame Perſon that was impeached, and that the Impeachment was before the Indictment.

And as to what Mr. Attorney ſaid, That an inferior Court, having original Juriſdiction of the Perſon and Cauſe, might proceed, notwithſtanding an Indictment in a ſuperior Court; they took the Caſe of an Impeachment to be different from that of an Indictment: An Impeachment was rather like an Appeal: As an Appeal was at the Suit of the Party, ſo an Impeachment was at the Suit of the Commons: The Commons were Proſecutors on an Impeachment, and not the King's Attorney; and it did not become the Juſtice of that Court, to weaken the Methods of proceeding in Parliament, as they would certainly do, if, after there was an Impeachment depending in Parliament, they admitted an Indictment here: This was to ſubject the Proceedings in Parliament to this Court, which did not ſtand with the Wiſdom of the Law, or the Conſtitution of the Government: That this was without Precedent alſo, and conſequently, according to Sir Edward Coke, there was no Law for it.

Another Miſchief, that would follow upon this was, That in Caſe of an Indictment, it was in the Power of the Prince to pardon; but in the Caſe of an Impeachment he could not, any more than in the Caſe of an Appeal.

That if this Court intermeddled in it, a Man might be put twice in Danger of his Life, for one Thing; for, if he was acquitted here upon this Indictment, that Acquittal would not bind the Lords in Parliament; he might ſtill be tried there for the ſame Fact.

And by the ſame Reaſon, that this Court proceeds, His Majeſty might appoint a High Steward, to try the Lords in the Tower, by a Jury of Peers; and had this been practiſed, the Lord Stafford had been ſtill alive: If Fitzharris ſhould be found guilty here, the Power of the Commons, in impeaching, and the Juriſdiction of the Lords, in Trial and Judgment, were taken away by an inferior Court.

As to the Objection of Mr. Attorney, That this Plea did not ſet forth any Record of an Impeachment, or the particular Matter of it, ſo as the Court might judge of the Reaſon of it, the Truth was in this Caſe, there was no Record to plead, and they muſt be governed here by the Rules and Methods of Parliament. The Commons had carried up an Impeachment to the Lords in general Terms, and were at Liberty to preſent their Articles in due Time. This was no Record, ſuch as might be had in the Caſe of auter foriz convict; for it was only entered in the Lords Journal, That ſuch a Day, ſuch a Perſon came from the Houſe of Commons, and impeached ſuch a one; here was not the ſame ſtrict Method, and Form of Proceeding, as in the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall; and they had ſaid enough, and as much as could be ſaid in this Caſe, That there was an Impeachment of the Commons before the Lords, which was in full Force, and according to the Law and Cuſtom of Parliaments, as appeared by their Rolls. Which was as much, as if they had ſet forth the Record itſelf; and, as they took it, was a very full Plea, though it was not pleaded particularly; for in Parliamentary Matters, that Court was to judge according to the Methods of Parliament.

In the Caſe of the Lord Shaftesbury, who was committed for an high Contempt in the Houſe of Lords, the Reaſon given by the Judges, why they could not bail him, was, That as this Court takes Notice of the Courts in Weſtminſter-Hall, ſo they ought to take Notice

1681. 33 Car. II. Notice of the Law and Courſe of Parliaments, and of the Houſe of Lords: And if they were bound to do ſo in other Caſes, they ought to do ſo in this.

As to that Exception, that the King might chuſe his Court, there was no Doubt of it, in his own Action, or Suit; but this was an Impeachment of the Commons, and their Suit was to be tried no where but in Parliament.

It was urged further, as to the Plea being ſo general, that the Court could not judge of it; That Fitzharris had avered by his Plea, that he was impeached for the ſame Treaſon, for which he was indicted; and this Averment made the Matter as clear to the Court, as if the Impeachment had mentioned the particular Treaſon; and that Averments, conſiſtent with the Record, were good, and of Neceſſity, to clear the Fact to the Court: That Mr. Attorney might have pleaded Nul. tiel Record. and then they muſt have produced it; but he had demurred, and thereby confeſſed there was ſuch a Record, that the Averment was true, that he was impeached for the ſame Crime, and that he was the ſame Perſon.

That it ſeemed againſt natural Juſtice, That when the Commons, in the Name of themſelves, and of all the Commons of England, had lodged an Impeachment againſt a Man, any Commoners ſhould afterwards try or judge that Man for that Fact; every Commoner being a Party to the Accuſation, and conſequently could not be deemed indifferent. That Indictments were found againſt the Popiſh Lords, before there were any Impeachments againſt them; and yet there never was any Attempt to try them on the Indictments, though there had been ſeveral Intervals of Parliament ſince thoſe Impeachments, and the Parliament, wherein they were impeached, was diſſolved. They underſtood it was the Opinion of all the Judges, That, thoſe Impeachments being lodged in Parliament, no other Proſecution could be againſt them, till the Proſecution of the Commons was determined.

It was obſerved alſo, how ſcrupulous the Judges had ever been of meddling, where they had any Jealouſy, that either the Parliament had, or pretended to have, a Juriſdiction, That they would always worſhip afar off, and never come near the Mount. That if the Court retained that Cauſe, they would in Conſequence charge themſelves with the Blood of that Man, through which they muſt wade to come at the Cauſe.

That where there was as much Certainty ſet forth as the Caſe would admit, and was poſſible to be had, the Party was at Liberty to plead as he could, and help himſelf by Averment. Here was a General Impeachment; they could not make that Particular which was not; they had pleaded it as it was in the Record, from which they could not vary: They had avered it was the ſame Matter, and it was confeſſed ſo by the Demurrer: And if the Court would meddle with Proceedings in Parliament, they muſt take Notice of their Method of Proceeding, as they did of other Courts: That had they gone about to particularize the Treaſon, when the Impeachment was general, the other Side would have ſaid, Nul. tiel Record: And they ſhould have been condemned for failing in their Record; but having done according to the Fact, if that Fact was ſuch as would out this Court of its Juriſdiction, they did not ſee how it was poſſible they ſhould plead otherwiſe, or what Anſwer could be given to it. 1681. 33 Car. II.

Arguments againſt the Plea.

Mr. Attorney-General, and the reſt of the King's Counſel, anſwered, That this was a naughty Plea, as a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court; for there was no Matter diſcloſed therein that they could take Iſſue upon: They urged, indeed, that by their Demurrer it was admitted an Impeachment was depending; that the Impeachment was for the ſame Matter; and that they had admitted the Parliament was ſtill in Being; but no Fact was admitted that was not well pleaded. Indeed, had they admitted the Parliament was then in Being, it might have gone hard with them; but if this was not admitted, the whole Force of their Argument fell to the Ground; and affirmed, that the Beginning, Continuance, Prorogation, Adjournments, and Diſſolution of Parliaments, were of publick Cognizance, and the Court would, ex Officio, take Notice of them; they need not be avered. And, notwithſtanding thoſe many Cautions that had been given, no Conſideration-whatever ought to put Courts of Juſtice out of their ſteady Courſe; but they ought to proceed according to the Law of the Land.

Admitting there was a good Impeachment, and the Priſoner had been tried and acquitted upon it; if he had been afterwards indicted in this Court, and would not have pleaded this in Bar, but to the Juriſdiction of the Court, it would not have been a good Plea; but he had loſt his Advantage by miſ-pleading. If then an Acquittal, or Conviction on an Impeachment, was not a good Plea to the Juriſdiction; an Impeachment alone, wherein nothing was done, could not be a good Plea to the Juriſdiction. All the Caſes that had been cited, were of Matters not cognizable in that Court, and therefore did not affect the Matter in Queſtion: But where the Crime and the Perſon were abſolutely within the Juriſdiction of the Court, and the Court might originally take Cognizance of it, as was the preſent Caſe; nothing leſs than an Act of Parliament could out them of their Juriſdiction.

As to the Caſe of the five Popiſh Lords, they took Care that the Indictments againſt them ſhould be removed into the Houſe of Lords, foreſeeing that the King might have proceeded on thoſe Indictments, if they had not been removed thither. Beſides, the Lords had pleaded in full Parliament, where, by the Law of Parliament all the Peers were to be Judges, and could not be ouſted of that Right.

And as it was urged, They had pleaded according to the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament, they ought to have diſcloſed what that Law and Cuſtom was. Indeed, as to their Legiſlative Power, and Matters of Privilege, both Houſes proceeded according to the Law and Cuſtom of Parliament: But as to the Judicial Power, they had always been guided by the

1681. 33 Car. II.

Laws of the Land: And in all Writs of Error, and Matters of Judgment, proceed ſecundum legem terræ; for there was not one Law in Weſtminſter-hall, as to Matters of Judgment, and another in the Court of the Lords above.

As to the Allegation being too general, the Books were expreſs, That when a Record was pleaded in Bar, or in Abatement, the Crimes ought to be ſet out ſo as to appear the ſame: The Record was not to be tried per pais, but by itſelf: The Court muſt judge of it: The particular Treaſon muſt appear in the Record, and no Averment could enlarge it: Should a Jury judge upon the Debates of the Houſe of Commons, Whether it was the ſame Treaſon or not?

They ſhould not inſiſt at this Time, That by Magna Charta, every Man ought to be tried by his Peers, or on the Stat. 4 Ed. 3. which ſaid, that the Lords ſhall not be compelled, or have Power, to give Judgment on a Commoner, and that thereby the Subject was ſecured from Impeachments; but obſerved that there was a wide Difference between an Appeal and an Impeachment; for an Impeachment concludes, contra ligeantiæ ſuæ debitum, & Coronam & Dignitatem Domini Regis: So it was in reality the King's Suit, and the King may pardon part of the Sentence, as was done in Richard IId's Time, and lately in Lord Stafford's Caſe: But were it admitted to be done at the Suit of the People, that could not preclude the King from his Suit: Nor is an Acquittal, or Attainder upon an Indictment, a Bar to an Appeal; ſo that a Man is twice in Danger of his Life, in that Caſe as well as this. But this is not like the Caſe of an Appeal; for though formerly it was uſual to ſtay the Suit of the King, and prefer the Suit of the Subject, it was becauſe the Subject had the neareſt Concern, as the Son in the Death of his Father, and it moſt concerned him to proſecute it. But in the Caſe of an Impeachment, the Treaſon turned quite another way; for there was no Treaſon, but againſt the King, and the King himſelf has the neareſt Concern; the Wrong was primarily and originally to himſelf; the Subjects Danger was but a Conſequence of that, as all Hurt to the King tends to the Hurt of the People. The King's Suit therefore ought to be preferred here, as the Subjects was in the other Caſe of an Appeal.

Nor was this ſo dangerous a Caſe to determine, as was pretended. Much better would it be for the Court to anſwer, if ever they ſhould be required, that they had performed their Duty, and done Juſtice according to their Conſciences, and their Oaths, than to be afraid of any Threats, or Bug-bears from the Bar: How was it poſſible to judge, whether the Priſoner was impeached for the ſame Treaſon? It might be for Clipping or Coining, for ought appeared. The Intention of the Houſe of Commons could not be proved, when they were come to no Reſolution. The Queſtion was not, whether an Impeachment in the Houſe of Lords ſuperſeded an Indictment in the King's-Bench, but whether they had pleaded it ſo ſubſtantially, as to enable the Court to judge upon the Queſtion: But further, if upon ſuch a Plea pleaded, the Commons ſhould carry up Articles very different from what the Plea ſuggeſted, then the Plea would appear to be falſe, and the pleading, and allowing it, an apparent Delay of Juſtice: The Intention of the Houſe of Commons could never be averred, or tried, before they had declared it themſelves. 1681. 33 Car. II.

The Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, As to thoſe Queſtions, whether the Commons could Impeach a Commoner for Treaſon in the Houſe of Lords, and whether an Impeachment, when the Lords were poſſeſſed fully of it, hindered the Proceeding of an inferior Court, did not concern them: But they had a Caſe that aroſe purely upon the Pleadings, and whether they had brought before them a ſufficient Plea, to take away the Juriſdiction of the Court, as they had pleaded it, was the ſole Point before them. They would give them Time to amend their Plea, he ſaid they ſhould not be ſurprized, but if they thought fit to abide by that Plea, they ſhould take a reaſonable Time to give them Judgment.

Fitzharris being brought to the Bar again, the 11th of May, and Mr. Attorney praying Judgment upon the Plea, the Chief Juſtice ſaid, That upon full Conſideration, and Deliberation of this Caſe, and upon Conference with other Judges, Mr. Juſtice Jones, Mr. Juſtice Raymond, and himſelf, were of Opinion, that the Plea was inſufficient (Mr. Juſtice Dolben doubting concerning it) and therefore the Court did order and award, that he ſhould anſwer over to the Treaſon. The Plea over-ruled.

Then the Priſoner deſired he might adviſe with his Counſel, before he pleaded; and being told he could have no Counſel as to Matter of Fact, he deſired he might finiſh his Confeſſion before the Lord Chief Juſtice, and ſome of the Counſel, before he pleaded: To which the Chief Juſtice anſwered, He had trifled with them ſo often, that he had nothing to ſay to that Matter at preſent, and again directed him to plead: Whereupon Fitzharris pleaded Not Guilty; and deſiring he might have Time to ſend for a Witneſs from Holland, before his Trial, the Court were pleaſed to put off the Trial till next Term; and a Rule was made, that in the mean Time his Wife, and his Solicitor, might come to him with his Papers (provided the Papers were firſt inſpected by the Lieutenant of the Tower) and Subpœna's were ordered to bring in his Witneſſes. He pleads Not guilty.

The Priſoner was brought to the Bar again, the 9th of June 1681, being the firſt Thurſday in Trinity-Term, in order to his Trial, when Mr. Thompſon moved, that before his Trial he might give Evidence againſt Sir John Arundel, and Sir Richard Bealing, concerning the Murder of Juſtice Godfrey, for that there was an Attempt to prove the Murder himſelf. The Chief Juſtice anſwered, that what had been moved ſome Days before, had ſome Reaſon in it, namely, that he might give Evidence to a Grand Jury; but there being no Grand Jury ſworn, there was nobody to give Evidence to, unleſs they would have the The Trial begins.

the Court take his Examination, and afterwards give it in Evidence to the Grand Jury.

Then the Priſoner moved, That his Wife and his Sollicitor might ſtand by him, with ſuch Papers as he had prepared to help his Memory: And it was granted, his Wife only ſhould; but ordered, If ſhe brought Papers drawn by Counſel for him, it ſhould not be allowed.

The King's Counſel informed the Court, that the Priſoner's Wife had brought him a Copy of the Pannel, with Directions whom he ſhould challenge; and that there were three Anabaptiſt-Preachers, and ſeveral other Fanaticks, returned upon the Jury; and inſiſted, that the Priſoner's Wife ſhould be removed farther from him: But the Priſoner returning the Papers, ſhe was permitted to remain where ſhe was.

A great many of the Jurors deſired to be excuſed ſerving, and ſeveral more were challenged, ſome by the Priſoner, and others for the King. Sir Michael Heneage ſaid, He was ill; Major Wildman ſaid, He had voted the Impeachment, and therefore thought he ought not to ſerve: Mr. Beard ſaid, he was ſeventy-five Years of Age; but was told, Since he had appeared, he muſt ſerve, if there were not enough; but if he had not appeared, he might have had a Writ of Privilege for his Diſcharge, in regard of his Age.

Two of the Jurors being challenged peremptorily for the King, the Priſoner inſiſted, That the King's Counſel ought to ſhew Cauſe: To which the Chief Juſtice anſwered, The King need not ſhew Cauſe till the Pannel was gone through; and at length the following Gentlemen were ſworn: viz.

Thomas Johnſon,	William Withers,
Lucy Knightley,	William Cleeve,
Edward Wilford,	Thomas Goffe,
Alexander Hoſey,	Ralph Farr,
Martin James,	Samuel Freebody, and
John Vyner,	John Lockyer.

Indict-ment.

Pen, Ink, and Paper, being allowed the Priſoner on his Requeſt, the Indictment was read; which charged the Priſoner with High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; and inciting one Edmond Everard, and others, to aſſiſt him therein: And that, the better to effect his traitorous Purpoſes, he did frame and make a treaſonable Libel; entitled, The true Engliſhman ſpeaking plain Engliſh. In which were the following Words: "If James (meaning the Duke of York) be conſcious and guilty, Charles (meaning the King) is "ſo too: Believe me, both theſe are Brethren in "Iniquity: They are in Confederacy with the "Pope and the French, to introduce Popery and "arbitrary Government, as their Actions demonſtrate. The Parliament's Magna Charta, and "the Liberty of the Subjects, are heavy Yokes, "they would willingly caſt off, to make themſelves as abſolute as their Brother of France: "And if it can be proved to be their Aim and "main Endeavour, why ſhould not every true "Briton be a Quaker thus far, and let the Engliſh "Spirit be up and move, as one Man, to Self-"Defence? Nay, and if need be, to open Action, "and fling off theſe intolerable Riders?" And, in another Place, "J. and C. (meaning the King "and Duke) both Brethren in Iniquity, corrupt "both in Root and Branch, as you have ſeen, "ſtudy to enſlave you to a Romiſh and French-"like Yoke. Is it not plain? Have you not "Eyes, Senſe, or Feeling? Where is that old "Engliſh noble Spirit? Are you become French "Aſſes, to ſuffer any Load to be laid upon you? "And if you can get no Remedy from the next "Parliament, as certainly you will not; and that "the King repents not, complies not with your "Advice; then up, all as one Man. O brave Engliſhmen, look to your own Defence, ere it be too "late! Rouſe up your Spirits!" In another Place, he ſays, "I will only add, that, as it is the un-"doubted Right of Parliaments to make a Law "againſt a Popiſh Succeſſor, who would prove "deſtructive to our Laws and Liberties; ſo it is "their undoubted Right to dethrone any Poſſeſ-"ſor, that follows evil Counſellors, to the De-"ſtruction of our Government." In another Place, "Then let all be ready: Then let the City "of London ſtand by the Parliament, with Offers "of any Money for maintaining their Liberties "and Religion, in any extreme Way, if Parliamen-"tary Courſes be not complied with by the King."

1681. 33 Car. II.

Everard's Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Mr. Everard depoſed, That he came acquainted with the Priſoner Fitzharris in the French Service abroad; and renewing his Acquaintance with the Priſoner in February laſt, he told the Deponent, if he would re-ingratiate himſelf with the French and Popiſh Intereſt, he might be ſerviceable to himſelf and others: That there were ſeveral Parliament Men, and others, that did adhere to the French Intereſt, and gave the French Ambaſſador an Account of every Day's Proceedings. That the Priſoner deſired the Deponent to write another Pamphlet, reflecting on the King; to alienate the King from his People, and his People from him: (The Deponent being ſuppoſed the Author of a Pamphlet, called, An Anſwer to the King's Declaration, concerning the Duke of Monmouth.) That on Monday the twenty firſt of February, the Priſoner came to the Deponent, and gave him ſome Inſtructions for drawing up the Pamphlet; and appointing to come again, the Deponent concealed Mr. Smith in his Chamber, ſo as to over-hear their Converſation: That accordingly Mr. Smith came, and was concealed in the Deponent's Study; and Fitzharris, coming in ſoon after, aſked the Deponent what he had done in the Matter: Whereupon he ſhewed him ſomething he had drawn up, which he approved, and gave him further Inſtructions, appointing to come again the next Day, againſt which Time the Deponent got both Mr. Smith and Sir William Waller concealed in his Chamber; and a little while after, Fitzharris came in, and the Deponent gave him a Copy of what he had drawn up; and the Deponent read another Copy, and Fitzharris added ſome Things, and put out others; and ſaid it muſt be written over fair, becauſe it was not fit for the French Ambaſſador's Confeſſor to read, who was to preſent it to the Ambaſſador: That the Deponent ſaid, It ſhould be done; but theſe were very treaſonable Things, and Fitzharris anſwered, The more treaſonable the better: It would ſet the People together by the Ears, and keep them claſhing and miſtruſting one another, while the French King would gain Flanders; and then he would would make no Bones of England. That he bid the Deponent not be discouraged by the Danger; for when this was done, he should have forty Guineas, and a Pension afterwards of some thousand Crowns; for his Master the French King was not such a Niggard as the Spaniard.

Fitzharris demanded, If the Witness was not put upon this to trepan other People? To which Everard answered, He was put upon it by no body but Fitzharris; and that the Libel was drawn up in the Name of the Nonconformists, and to be put upon them.

Smith's Evidence.

Smith deposed, That he was concealed in Everard's Chamber in Grays-Inn; and Fitzharris coming in, Everard produced a Paper, and read it to Fitzharris, who said, there must be some Things added: That he must represent the King a Papist, and might demonstrate it from several Instances; as his espousing the Duke of York's Interest, and preferring his Creatures by Sea and Land, some of whom were known Papists: That it might be deduced also, from that Act the King procured, That it should be Treason to call him Papist; which he did, that he might the more easily introduce Popery. He directed Mr. Everard to charge King Charles I. with promoting the Irish Rebellion, and Charles II. with furthering of it: Said, The Oxford Parliament was but a Sham; and such a King was not to be trusted with the Lives, Liberties, or Religion, of a People; but the People ought to provide for themselves, and blow the Trumpet boldly: And, as it was the People's Right to make Laws, and oppose a Popish Successor, so they might depose a Popish Possessor. That he directed Everard to get an Interest in the Common Council, to put them upon addressing the Parliament; and promising to stand by them, with their Lives and Fortunes, against Popery, and arbitrary Power: And that if Parliamentary Ways failed, they would assist them any other Way; and if the King hindered the Duke of York's coming to a Trial, they would take other Courses. That Everard promised to pursue his Instructions; but said he was in great Danger: Fitzharris answered, So was he and a great many more; and mentioned something of a Reward.

Sir William Waller's Evidence.

Sir William Waller deposed, That he also was concealed in Everard's Chamber, and heard the Conversation between him and Fitzharris, being of much the same Tenor as Smith had deposed; adding, that Fitzharris told Everard he should be preferred, and have a Pension of three thousand Crowns from the French Ambassador; and that they had employed a great many more in Businesses of this Nature, to create Misunderstandings between the King and his People; by which Means the French would have an Opportunity of over-running Flanders, and then England would become an easy Morsel. Fitzharris demanding, If Sir William thought he had any treasonable Design in this; he answered, He could say nothing to that; he only spoke to Matter of Fact. Then Fitzharris demanded, If this was the same Paper (the Libel) for which he was impeached in Parliament? To which Sir William answered, Yes; it was a Copy of it: He read it in the House; and as soon as he had made his Report in the House of these treasonable Tranfactions, they immediately proceeded to the Impeachment.

1681. 33 Car. II.

Mr. Solicitor replied, This Libel was spoken of in the House; but it did not appear upon the Impeachment, That he was impeached upon that Libel.

The Prisoner said, Had not Sir William Waller a Design to trepan me in this Matter? For I always looked upon him as my Enemy. Sir William answered, No indeed, not I.

Then the Libel was read, and the obnoxious Words compared with those laid in the Indictment, and appeared to agree.

Sir Philip Lloyd, and Mr. Bridgman deposed, That Fitzharris acknowledged Part of the Instructions he gave Mr. Everard to be his own Hand-writing.

Oates's Evidence for the Prisoner.

The Prisoner calling Mr. Oates as a Witness for him, Oates deposed, That discoursing with Everard about the Libel, he acknowledged he wrote it, and took a great deal out of the intercepted Letter to Sir Roger L'Estrange: And asking what the Design of the Book was, Everard said, It was to be sent by the Penny-Post to the protesting Lords, and the leading Men in the House of Commons, that they might be taken up and searched, and have it found upon them; and added, That the Court had a Hand in it; the King had given Fitzharris Money, and would give him more, if he had Success.

Cornish's Evidence.

Sheriff Cornish deposed, That acquainting his Majesty, the Prisoner Fitzharris was enclined to make a Discovery, his Majesty said, He had often had him before him and his Secretaries, and could discover nothing from him: That about three Months before, the Prisoner pretended he was in Pursuit of a Plot, and making great Protestations of Zeal for his Service, his Majesty said, He did countenance him, and gave him Money.

Mansel's Evidence.

Colonel Mansel deposed, That he was at the Dog-Tavern with Sir William Waller, and some other Company; and Sir William said, When he acquainted the King with the Discovery, his Majesty told him, he had done him the greatest piece of Service that ever he had done him in his Life; and gave Sir William a great many Thanks; but soon after he left the King, two worthy Gentlemen told him, that the King said, He (Sir William) had broken all his Measures, and he would have him taken off one way or other; and that Sir William said, The Design was against the Protestant Party.

Lord Howard's Evidence.

Mr. Hunt deposed to the same Effect; adding, that the King said, Sir William Waller was an insufferable Vexation to him.

Bethel's

Sheriff Bethel deposed, That Everard informed him he wrote the Libel himself.

Mrs. Wall's Evidence.

Mrs. Wall, Woman to the Dutchess of Portsmouth, being called as a Witness by Fitzharris, he demanded of her, If he had not conveyed treasonable Papers to the King by her Means; and if he did not receive two hundred and fifty Pounds upon that Account about Christmas was Twelve-month, when he gave her the Libel about the King and her Lady?

Mrs. Wall answered, Some such Sum was paid the Prisoner, but not for a Libel: He was a Kinsman of the Deponent's, and she took him for

for an honeſt Man, and was willing to do him what Kindneſs ſhe could, his Family having ſuffered much for the King: That Mr. Fitzharris telling her he could bring over ſome conſiderable People to the King's Intereſt, ſhe ſpoke to the Secretaries of State, and to the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth for him; and within about ſix Months Time, ſhe did get the Money he mentioned.

The Priſoner demanding, If he did not come to her the Wedneſday before he was taken, and tell her he deſired to ſpeak with the King, for he had a Libel to preſent him; Mrs Wall anſwered, He came to her the Thurſday before he was taken, at nine at Night; and ſaid, He believed, if he might ſee the King, he could do him Service; but mentioned no Libel: That he was a Roman Catholick, and therefore they thought it dangerous to let him go near the King.

Mr. Attorney demanding if he was ever admitted to the King, Mrs. Wall anſwered, Never: He had indeed been with her in a Room when the King paſſed by; but his Majeſty never took any Notice of him, or ſpoke with him; nor did the King, or the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, give him any other Money than that already mentioned.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, On what Account that Money was paid; Mrs. Wall anſwered, Since they preſſed her to declare it, it was for bringing in the Lord Howard of Eſcrick: That, and his Poverty, together.

Mr. Serjeant Jeffries demanding, What Character the Priſoner gave Everard; Mrs. Wall anſwered, He ſaid he was an honeſt Man, and asked if ſhe would be acquainted with him? but ſhe ſaid No; he was an Informer, and had a Knaviſh Reputation. That the Priſoner deſiring her to tell the Duke, he would firſt bring the Lord Howard to him, and then to the King; the Duke anſwered, the Priſoner was a Raſcal, and he would not meddle with him.

Then the Priſoner appealed to Lord Howard, if he did not ſpeak to the Lady Portſmouth for Money for him; and the Lord Howard anſwered, he did; and Mrs. Wall ſaid, My Lord did indeed ſecond her Lady, to get him ſome Charity.

Cowling depoſed, That Mrs Wall told him Fitzharris came to her, two or three Nights before he was taken up, and deſired Admiſſion to the King; and ſhe deſired he would write down what he had to ſay; which he would not, and ſhe perſiſted to refuſe him Admiſſion: Her Blood chilled; ſhe was afraid he was come to do the King ſome Miſchief.

Lord Howard's Evidence.

The Lord Howard depoſed, That in the Beginning of October laſt, Fitzharris applied himſelf to his Lordſhip in the Name of his Majeſty, deſiring he would wait on the King; but he declined it, leſt he ſhould be put upon declaring his Sentiments, which were not agreeable to his Majeſty's: That the Priſoner then deſired he would wait on the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, who would be a good Inſtrument to the King, in perſuading him to a good Opinion of the approaching Parliament; and the Priſoner ſaid, He could aſſure him, ſhe was in the ſame Intereſt he looked towards; ſhe was no Friend to the Duke of York: And the Deponent was prevailed on to wait on the Dutcheſs, where he found his Majeſty; but if the 250 Pounds were given the Priſoner, for bringing him thither, his Majeſty, he believed, did not think he deſerved it at that Time: That he had an Opportunity of ſeeing the King again, about ten Days after, by Fitzharris's Means; and after the Parliament, he waited on the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth, and told her, he was ſenſible ſhe had endeavoured, as much as lay in her Power, to perſuade the King to a good Opinion of the Parliament; and to give them Time for ſitting, and an Opportunity of explaining their Intentions for his Service: And when he took his Leave, he requeſted the Dutcheſs to repreſent the Priſoner's Condition to the King, ſince by his Means he had the Honour to be ſhewed the Way to her Grace's Lodgings.

1681. 33 Car. II.

That the Night before the Lord Stafford was condemned, the Priſoner came to his Lordſhip, as from the King; and ſaid, His Majeſty would take it as a great Inſtance of his Reſignation to his Pleaſure, and he might promiſe himſelf all the Kindneſs a Prince could ſhew his Subject, if he would give his Vote next Day for the Lord Stafford: To which he (his Lordſhip) anſwered, He had all the Obligations of Blood and Nature, to diſpoſe him to favour the Lord Stafford; but, though he was wavering in his Thoughts before, now by the Grace of God he would go, though he was carried on Men's Backs, to the Houſe: He ſaw it was the Concern of the Proteſtant Cauſe; and if all the Relations he had were melted down into my Lord Stafford, if he had but Breath enough to pronounce his Doom, he ſhould die.

The Secretary's Evidence.

Mr. Secretary Jenkins appearing as a Witneſs for the Priſoner, he demanded, If the King did not own he had employed him: To which the Secretary anſwered, He did not remember the King ever owned he had made uſe of him: Then he aſked the Lord Conway, If he did not remember it: The Lord Conway anſwered, No; but he had heard his Majeſty ſay, he formerly employed him in ſome trifling Things: That the King never ſpoke to him, till the Day after he was taken up.

Dutcheſs of Portſmouth's Evidence.

The Dutcheſs of Portſmouth appearing, Fitzharris demanded of her, If he was not employed to bring ſeveral Papers to the King, particularly the Impeachment againſt her Grace; and if ſhe did not tell him, it was a great Piece of Service to bring ſuch Papers; and if he could find Men fit for that Purpoſe, he would do the King good Service; and if he did not acquaint her Grace, he knew one Everard, who knew all the Clubs in the City, and could tell the Deſigns of the Lord Shaftesbury and all his Party, and if her Grace did not encourage him to go on; and by her Means he came to ſpeak to the King about it.

The Dutcheſs anſwered, She was concerned in no Sort of Buſineſs with him; only he deſired her to give his Majeſty a Petition to get his Eſtate in Ireland; and ſhe did ſpeak to the King three or four Times about it: That ſhe never had any Papers from him; but the Money was given him in Charity: To which the Priſoner replied, He was ſorry her Grace was ſo much under the Influence of Mrs. Wall: The Dutcheſs ſaid, She did not come there to wrangle with him: If ſhe could do him any Good ſhe would; but ſhe did not ſee how ſhe could be further ſerviceable to him; and then went out of Court.

Fitzharris

1681. 33 Car. II. Fitzharris proceeds in his Defence.

Fitzharris proceeding in his Defence, ſaid, He could not forbear complaining of the hard Uſage he had received; greater Oppreſſions had not been known: He had been a cloſe Priſoner, and no manner of Helps allowed him to make his Defence: And though Lady Portſmouth, Mrs. Wall, and the reſt, were pleaſed to ſay, he was not employed, or received Money for ſecret Services, it was well known he did ſo: And though Mr. Everard would make a French Story of it now, he knew it was otherwiſe. He affirmed he was well acquainted with the Lords Shaftesbury and Howard, and knew all their Clubs and Intrigues in the City: And he (Fitzharris) told him, it would be of the greateſt Conſequence to continue his Diſcoveries: That he (Fitzharris) never was in the French Intereſt, though he humoured Everard's Diſcourſe, that he might reduce the Paper he accuſed him of under ſome Heads; and he no ſooner had it, but he carried it to White-Hall: And whereas Everard ſaid, He was to have forty Guineas, it was but forty Shillings he deſired, in regard to his Poverty: That when he came to White-Hall, he ſhewed the Paper to a Gentleman, who was to have given it to the Lord Clarendon; but before that Lord had it, he was taken up. What he had done, was with a Deſign to ſerve the King, in diſcovering the Deſigns againſt him; and he was employed, though both the Secretaries were ſo unkind as to deny it: He was not aſhamed to ſay it, though his Life were loſt upon it: He hoped the Jury would conſider, theſe were great Perſons he had to do with; and in Matters of State, it was hard to get any thing out of them, but what was for their Advantage; and thus he was left in a ſad Condition: He ſaid, He muſt inſiſt upon it, if the Jury brought him in guilty, they ſhed his Blood, and overthrew the Law and Courſe of Parliaments; and deſired, he might deliver a Copy of the Impeachment, and of the Votes of the Houſe of Commons, to the Jury; but the Chief Juſtice told him, That could not be.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice, in ſumming up the Evidence, obſerved, That the Libel contained treaſonable Matter: That a more virulent and villanous Book was never written; which tended to defame the King and his Anceſtors, to blaſt all that came after him, and incite the People to Sedition and Rebellion: That this was a Piece of Art of the Jeſuits, which exceeded all they had done before; and they had found an apt Inſtrument, an Iriſh Papiſt, one who had been concerned with them in ſeveral Plots and Conſpiracies of this Nature: That the Evidence againſt the Priſoner, was as ſtrong as ever was given againſt a Traitor: It appeared by the Priſoner's Witneſſes, that the King had given him Money in Charity; and he inſinuated by way of Defence, That the King gave it him to trepan his Subjects againſt himſelf; to endanger his Crown, and all he had in the World; for which no colourable Deſign could be imagined: That as to the Impeachment, which the Priſoner ſo much inſiſted upon, that Matter had been pleaded to their Juriſdiction, and was over-ruled; they were to have no Conſideration of it now: They were ſworn to one Point, namely, Whether the Priſoner was guilty of this Treaſon, or not; and as to what he fondly talked of, concerning his Blood lying at their Doors, he thought ſuch Inſinuations would not weigh with Men of Underſtanding. 1681. 33 Car. II.

Some Scruples of the Jury.

Mr. Johnſon, the Foreman, ſaid, My Lord, there is a Vote of the Houſe of Commons, that ſays he ſhall not be tried by an inferior Court: We take ourſelves to be Judges of this Man: It is the Office of the Jury to acquit or condemn him according to the Evidence: Now, if we ſhould acquit him in this Caſe, what Aſſurance have we he ſhall be acquitted? We ſhall but forejudge a Parliamentary Cauſe; therefore I do not know how far we are compellable by Law, to give a Verdict in this Caſe.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, As to the Juriſdiction of the Court, it is not at all before you; and as to the Vote of the Houſe of Commons, if there be any ſuch, That cannot alter the Laws of the Land, or juſtify any of us, in departing from our Duties, any more than a Letter or Mandate from the Prince; we are to take no more Notice of the one, than of the other: Beſides, this Doubt was moved to us by the Grand Jury: And, to take away all Scruples, all the Judges of England debated the Matter; and it was our unanimous Opinion, We had a Juriſdiction to try this Man.

The reſt of the Judges declared, that this was their Opinion.

Practices to terrify them.

While this Cauſe was trying, Papers were continually put into the Hands of the Jury, diſſuading them from finding the Priſoner guilty; threatning them if they did, and telling them they muſt anſwer it in Parliament; and, that the Nation would never deſiſt, till they had ruined them and their Families: And as they withdrew, ſome that ſtood by ſaid, Find him guilty if you dare.

The Priſoner convicted,

However, the Jury, having withdrawn about half an Hour, returned with their Verdict, That the Priſoner was GUILTY. Whereupon Mr. Attorney moved for Judgment; but the Court bid him move it another Day.

Fitzharris being brought to the Bar again the 15th of June, to receive Sentence, deſired he might be tranſported; but the Court acquainted him, they could not order that; and the Chief Juſtice pronounced the uſual Sentence in Caſes of High-Treaſon: And on the twenty-ſecond of June, a Writ was iſſued out of the King's-Bench to the Lieutenant of the Tower, reciting the Judgment, and commanding the Lieutenant to deliver the Priſoner to the Sheriff of Middleſex, the firſt of July following; and another Writ to the Sheriff to receive him, and cauſe him to be executed according to the Sentence: And in the mean time the Priſoner made the following Confeſſion, viz.

" I do alſo confeſs and declare, As to the " Crimes which I die for, I was no farther " concerned in the Libel, than as employed " to give the King Notice of what Libels, " or other Accuſations, there were againſt him; " and, to this Intent, and no other, I endea- " voured to get this Libel; which, at length, " I did from Mr. Everard, all written under " his own Hand, and carried it to Mrs. Wall, " by whoſe Means I conveyed all Matters of " this, or the like Nature, to the King. At the firſt I made a " formal Story concerning the Plot, which was " not prejudicial to any Body; but moſt re- " lating to general Heads, known publickly: " Upon which Mr. Corniſh told me, Theſe " were Things cried about the Streets two " Years ago. " I do hereby declare, That Mr. Fitzharris, be- " fore he began to write any Part of this Nar- " rative, was more than once aſſured by me, " that there was no Hope of his Life, that I " knew of, whatever he ſhould ſay; nor of his " Salvation, if he ſhould ſay any thing he " knew to be falſe; of which he being tho- " roughly ſenſible, and perfectly convinced, " proceeded to write the Narrative aforeſaid: " And I continuing to admoniſh him upon e- " very Point that was material, not to ſay a- " ny Thing but what was exactly true; he " took occaſion at ſeveral Periods of this Nar- " rative to kneel down, and ſolemnly proteſt " the Truth of every Word therein contained: " And this I again declare, upon the Faith of " a Chriſtian, and the Word of a Miniſter of " the Goſpel.

FRANCIS HAWKINS."

The ſame Morning this Confeſſion was ſigned, viz. on July 1. 1681. the Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, Slingsby Bethel, and Henry Corniſh, re-ceived the Priſoner Fitzharris from the Lieutenant of the Tower; and having ſet him on a Sledge, he was drawn from the Tower to Newgate, where he overtook Dr. Plunket in another Sledge; and they were drawn both together, from thence to the Gallows at Tyburn, where when they were arrived, the Sheriffs demanded of Fitzharris, What he knew of the Popiſh Plot? But he referred them to the Paper he had left with Dr. Hawkins. Then they enquired of the Doctor, who attended the Execution, What Paper that was? But the Doctor, having an Intimation, they deſigned to ſuppreſs his Confeſſion, did not produce it: On the contra-ry, he deſired the dying Man to declare, If all that he had left with him was true? Whereupon the Sheriffs ſaid, He had nothing to do, to put Queſtions there: Dr. Hawkins replied, Shall I not bid the dying Man ſpeak the Truth? And Fitzharris turning to the People, ſaid, Yes, it is true; and then addreſſing himſelf to the People, ſaid, Fitzhar-ris's Speech at his Exe-cution.

" GOOD People, this infamous Kind of " Death is more irkſome to me than " Death itſelf: Such Judgments as theſe, my " Sins againſt God may juſtly bring upon me; " and I do moſt humbly ſubmit to it: But as to " the Crimes which I now die for, I take God to " witneſs, I was no further concerned in that " Libel, than to diſcover to the King, what " Practices of that Kind were againſt him; " being employed to that End, though thoſe " that employed me, refuſed to do me Juſtice " at my Trial: And I call God to witneſs, I " never had a Farthing of Money of the " King in my Life, but on the Account of " the like Service: And as to the Witneſſes " that have ſworn againſt me, I do here ſolemnly " declare now at my Death, that I have not ſeen " the French Ambaſſador ſince the breaking out of " the Plot; neither have I had any Acquaintance " with him: And as to his Confeſſor, I never " ſpoke to him in my Life; neither have I had " any Dealings, either directly or indirectly, " in my Life, with them; though Sir William " Waller, and the reſt, ſwore moſt falſly to the "contrary: And how likely it is, the French "Ambaſſador would give 3000 Crowns for "writing that Libel, I leave the World to "judge. What I may further declare, I have "left with Dr. Hawkins. I forgive all the "World, and hope God will forgive me: I "beg the Prayers of all good People, for a "happy Paſſage into the other World."

Then having finiſhed his Devotions, in which he was aſſiſted by Dr. Hawkins, the Executioner did his Office.

Remarks on Fitzharris's Trial.

The Proceedings againſt Fitzharris, are generally looked upon as very myſterious, which is not to be wondered at; when Shaftesbury, and his Emiſſaries Lord Howard, Clayton, Treby, Bethel, Corniſh, and many more of that ſubtil Faction, uſed every Artifice to render them ſo. Upon due Conſideration of the whole, it appears to me, that Fitzharris was employed by the Court, to diſcover what Deſigns were carrying on againſt the Government; and more particularly by the City of London; and to bring the King ſuch ſeditious and traitorous Libels as they diſperſed, to render him odious to the People, and incite an Inſurrection; which Fitzharris found an Opportunity of doing, by renewing his Acquaintance with Everard, who had been with him in the French Service, and was at this Time employed by Shaftesbury and the Faction, in writing and diſperſing ſcandalous and treaſonable Papers, reflecting on the King and the Adminiſtration: And I make no Doubt, but Fitzharris, in order to inſinuate himſelf into the good Opinion of Everard and his Maſters, pretended to be no leſs diſaffected than they were; ſuggeſting that the Court neglected to reſtore him his Father's Eſtate, and had no Regard to the Sufferings of his Family for the Crown; and there is as little Doubt to be made, that they did for ſome Time confide in him, and make uſe of his Aſſiſtance in framing their Libels; and this gained him an Opportunity of diſcovering many of their dark Intrigues; but it being obſerved, that he was often at the Dutcheſs of Portſmouth's Lodgings, they took the Alarm, and at length diſcovered he was a Court-Emiſſary: Whereupon they reſolved to be before-hand with him; and leſt he ſhould be made a Witneſs againſt them, cauſed him to be taken up, and charged with compoſing thoſe very treaſonable Libels, which they themſelves had framed; having firſt trepanned him, as he obſerved at his Trial, by placing ſome of their own Creatures in Everard's Cloſet, to be Witneſſes of their Converſation, which might be treaſonable enough; as it was Fitzharris's Buſineſs to perſonate the Malcontent, and pretend to be one of their Party, he might offer his Opinion of the Libel, the better to conceal his Intentions. But I am fully convinced, that the Libel was, in the main, drawn by Lord Shaftesbury, Howard, or ſome of the Faction; becauſe it contained little elſe but ſuch ſcandalous Reflections on the Government, as they had inculcated and publiſhed in their Writings and Converſation, for ſeveral Years paſt.

By charging Fitzharris with being the Author of this Libel, they did not only prevent his giving Evidence againſt their Party; but, by throwing him into Newgate, of which their Friends, Bethel and Corniſh the two Sheriffs, were Governors, they had an Opportunity of practiſing upon this unhappy Wretch, and ſuborning him to be a Witneſs of the Popiſh Plot, and Godfrey's Murder; and hoped to prevail on him to accuſe the King himſelf, as well as the Queen and Duke; which, if they could have done, they would probably have ſpirited up the People immediately into another Rebellion, and depoſed the then preſent Poſſeſſor of the Throne: They would not have contented themſelves with excluding the Succeſſor; which appears evidently to be their Deſign, by that Part of the Libel recited in the Indictment; and by the Practices of that Party afterwards, ſeveral of whom were convicted and executed, within leſs than two Yerrs, for being in ſuch a Conſpiracy; and this very Lord Howard, ſuppoſed to be principally concerned in drawing up this Libel, only ſaved his Life by impeaching his Accomplices, and acknowledging his own Guilt.

Some People have been pleaſed to doubt, Whether Lord Shaftesbury and his Emiſſaries, ever practiſed upon Prance and Corral in Newgate, to ſuborn them to be Witneſſes of the Popiſh Plot, and Godfrey's Murder: But it ſeems to be a ſtrong Confirmation of the Truth of that Relation, that Shaftesbury, Treby, Clayton, and the Whig Sheriffs Bethel and Corniſh, uſed much the ſame Arts with Fitzharris, to make him an Evidence of the Plot and the Murder, while he lay in Newgate; and actually got an Indictment found againſt the Earl of Danby upon his Evidence; though Fitzharris retracted it before he died, which put an End to that Proſecution; and I believe there was ſcarce a Man condemned for the Popiſh Plot, who was not thus practiſed upon, and told he ſhould have his Pardon, if he would confeſs the Plot, and accuſe ſuch innocent People as they had marked out for Deſtruction; and yet it is certain, every one of them refuſed the Offer of Life, upon ſuch infamous Terms; and denied the Plot with their laſt Breath, as this Man alſo did, to the Confuſion of the Faction: But his Majeſty being apprized of the villanous Attempts, to make Fitzharris a Witneſs againſt himſelf and his Family, very prudently cauſed him to be removed from Newgate to the Tower, where thoſe two Saints, Bethel and Corniſh the Sheriffs, had not ſuch an Influence, as they had on the Keepers of Newgate; and thereby prevented their farther Deſigns againſt the Government, and the ſhedding more innocent Blood; for Fitzharris being removed from his Suborners, proved honeſt, and retracted all he had ſaid againſt the Queen, the Duke, the Earl of Danby, and the reſt, whom the Party had determined to ſacrifice to their Rage, if they could not reach the King himſelf.

But it may be objected, If Fitzharris was one of the Court-Emiſſaries, and acted in this Matter with a Deſign to ſerve them, how came the King not to give him a Pardon? To which I anſwer, Had he remained true to his Truſt, it is very probable he would have been pardoned and protected; but when the King found he would be made a Tool of, to murder his neareſt Relations, the Queen and the Duke, there is no Wonder he had but little Regard for him. Had he been discharged, he might have been wrought upon again to destroy his Friends, and distress his Government; and therefore, since it was proved he had some Hand in the treasonable Libel, he suffered the Law to take its Course; though I must say he had not Justice done him in this Point, as he himself observed at his Trial, since he had then no treasonable Design, but intended to serve the Government: And it should make all Men cautious, how they become Court Spies, lest they fall into the Snares they lay for others. Everard only got the Start of him, and by that Means procured Fitzharris to be condemned, for what he was innocent of, and for what he himself would have been hanged, if Fitzharris had impeached him first. As to the Struggle between the King and the Commons, about the Trial; it is evident there was a Faction in that House, that intended to make a Tool of Fitzharris, to distress the Government; and this was the only Reason for their impeaching him; which the Lords were apprized of, and therefore thought fit to dismiss the Impeachment. And, though in extraordinary Cases, where a great Offender cannot easily be come at in the ordinary Courts of Justice, it is admitted, the Commons may impeach such a one before the Lords; yet it is certainly against Magna Charta, and the Laws and Statutes of the Kingdom in general, to try a Commoner, in a common Case, before the House of Lords: And if a Vote of the House of Commons, in such Cases, could alter the Law, all the Causes in Westminster Hall, and the inferior Courts, might be superseded; and an intire Stop put to the Proceedings of the Courts of Justice, by the Vote of a Majority in that House, without, and even against the Consent, both of the King, and the House of Lords.

1681. 33 Car. II. Plunket's Trial.

The Trial of Dr. OLIVER PLUNKET, Titular Primate of Ireland, for High-Treason committed in Ireland, at the King's-Bench Bar, 8 June, 1681. Trin. 33 Car. II.

1681. 33 Car. II.

DR. Plunket, the Prisoner, being arraigned at the King's-Bench Bar in England, the third of May, 1681. objected, that he had been arraigned for the same Treason in Ireland; and on the Day appointed for his Trial there, no Witnesses appearing, he ought to have been discharged; and made a Question, Whether he could be tried for the same Fact in England. But the Court informed him, That by an English Statute, he might be tried in England, for Facts committed in Ireland; and that an Indictment and Arraignment, whereon there was no Conviction or Acquittal, could not be pleaded in Bar of an Indictment for the same Treason: Whereupon he pleaded Not guilty; and desiring Time to send for his Witnesses from Ireland, his Trial was put off, to the first Wednesday in Trinity-Term, being five Weeks after his Arraignment.

Facts committed in Ireland tried in England.

The Prisoner being brought to the Bar again, on Wednesday the eighth of June, said, That he had sent to Ireland for several Records, but the proper Officers had refused him Copies of them; and several of his Witnesses were afraid to come over, without the Protection of the Court; so that he was yet very much unprepared for his Trial; and desired he might have the Assistance of the Court, to bring over his Records and Witnesses, and the Trial put off some Time longer.

The Court answered, He had more Time than usual allowed him, to prepare for his Defence, already; and directed the Jury to be sworn: After which, the Indictment was read in English; setting forth, That the Prisoner, on the first Day of December, in the thirty-second Year of the King, and divers other Days and Times, at Dublin, in the Kingdom of Ireland, did traitorously compass and imagine the Death of the King, the Subversion of the Protestant Religion, and of the Government established there; and that the Prisoner, to accomplish his said traitorous Intentions, did assemble, consult, and agree, with divers other Traitors, to depose and murder his Majesty, levy War, and introduce the Romish Religion into the Kingdom of Ireland; and did agree with others, to contribute and pay divers Sums of Money to certain Persons, to kill the King, and introduce the Romish Religion; and did collect and pay several Sums of Money, for the traitorous Purposes aforesaid.

The Indictment.

The Witnesses being called, deposed, That the Prisoner was made Primate of Ireland by the Pope; and, that he sent O Neale his Page, to Monsieur Baldeschi, the Pope's Secretary, to the Bishop of Aix, and to Prince Colonna, to obtain foreign Forces to invade Ireland: That he employed Captain O Neale to the French King, on the like Errand: That he levied and exacted Money of the Clergy of Ireland, to bring in the French, and raise an Army of seventy thousand Men there: That he had caused Lists to be made of these Men; and particularly Friar Duffey had made a List of 250 Men for him, in the Parish of Foghart: That he had visited and viewed all the Forts and Harbours of Ireland; and fixed upon Carlingford Harbour, for the French to land at: That he had several Consults and Meetings with others, where Money was assessed and allotted, for bringing in the French: And lastly, that at an Assembly of 300 Gentlemen, in the County of Monaghan, ten or twelve Years before, he exhorted them to take Arms, to recover their Estates out of the Hands of the English.

The Evidence.

Dr.

1681. 33 Car. II.

Dr. Plunket's Defence.

Dr. Plunket, in his Defence, ſaid, That he never ſent any Letter or Agent to the Pope, or to any Prince or Prelate, concerning any Plot or Conſpiracy againſt his King or Country: That he never raiſed any Sum of Money, great or ſmall, to maintain Soldiers; or ever heard the French were to land at Carlingford; and never knew of any Plot or Conſpiracy in Ireland.

That it was all Malice, and particularly in one of the Witneſſes, whom he had excommunicated; as he could have made appear eaſily, if he could have brought over his Records and Witneſſes; or if he had been tried in Ireland, where both he, and his Accuſers, were known: That he never received more than ſixty Pounds a Year in Ireland, which was for his own Maintenance: That the Roman Catholick Clergy in Ireland, were ſo poor, that they could not keep Clothes to their Backs; nor were able to raiſe Money enough, to maintain half a Regiment, much leſs 70,000 Men: That ſhould he have confeſſed the Charge, no Man of any Underſtanding in Ireland, would have believed the Thing poſſible; for all the Revenues of Ireland, ſpiritual and temporal, were not ſufficient to maintain ſuch an Army.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice, in his Directions to the Jury, ſaid, That he thought it very plain, that the Priſoner had a Commiſſion, or Grant, from the Pope, to be Primate of Ireland: That he had taken upon him to make Laws, as Provincial; and endeavoured to ſettle the Popiſh Religion in that Kingdom; and, in order to it, had invited over a French Army, and viewed the moſt convenient Places for their landing; and had ſet a Tax on the Clergy of his Province, for facilitating all this; and, if they believed the Witneſſes, That he had a Deſign to bring in a French Army, to eſtabliſh the Romiſh Religion; that he took upon him, to raiſe Money for that Purpoſe, and ſurveyed the Ports; and made ſuch other Proviſions as the Witneſſes ſpoke of; they muſt find him guilty: It was a pretty ſtrong Evidence, to which he only anſwered, his Witneſſes were not come over.

Plunket replied, He could only make his own Proteſtation, That there was not one Word of the Charge againſt him true; it was all Romance: He had never any Communication with any French Miniſter, Cardinal, or any other Perſon, about theſe Matters: However, the Jury, after a quarter of an Hour's Receſs, brought in the Priſoner GUILTY.

He is convicted.

He ſhews the Improbability of his being guilty.

The Priſoner being brought to the Bar again, on Wedneſday the fifteenth of June, and it being demanded, What he had to ſay, why Judgment of Death ſhould not paſs upon him; he anſwered, He had been arraigned for this Fact in Ireland, and brought to his Trial there; but all the Witneſſes voluntarily abſented themſelves, when they found he had Records and Witneſſes to convict them, and ſhew what Men they were, and the prepenſe Malice they bore him; and they had ſince procured him to be brought to England, where he could not have a Jury that knew them, or him, or the Circumſtances of Places and Times: A Jury in Ireland would have known how impracticable it was for the French to land at Carlingford; how impoſſible it was to raiſe 70,000 Men there, or collect Money, ſufficient for that Utopian Army.

1681. 33 Car. II.

That he could not get over his Witneſſes, within the Time allowed him; or the Records, without an Order from hence; which would have ſhewn, that ſome of the Witneſſes were convicted of notorious Crimes, others impriſoned for Robberies, and the reſt of them infamous People: And that now his Witneſſes were come over, and actually upon the Road; for Want of whom, he could not make a proper Defence; but was expoſed to the Malice of his Adverſaries, who were ſome of them his own Clergy, that for their debauched Lives he had corrected: That he had begged only for twelve Days Time more; when it would have appeared as plain as the Sun, what Kind of Men the Witneſſes againſt him were: That he had an Atteſtation, under the Earl of Eſſex's Hand, of his good Behaviour in Ireland; and another under the Lord Berkley's Hand, who was alſo Governor there; which he had ſhewn to Mr. Attorney: So that, if ever there was a Cauſe in the World that deſerved Compaſſion, he thought his did: It was never known, that one arraigned in Ireland, was tried here for the ſame Fact; and if his Petition for Time had been granted, he could have ſhewn the Malice of the Proſecution, and manifeſted his Innocence: But as it was, he muſt ſubmit to their Mercy.

Certificates of his good Behaviour, from the Lords Eſſex and Berkley.

The Chief Juſtice told him, He had been proved guilty, by ſuch Evidence, as there was no Room to doubt his Guilt; and had been allowed more Time to prepare for his Trial, than was uſual: That there were Precedents of trying Men here, for Offences committed in Ireland, and he had no Reaſon to complain of Hardſhips; and ſeemed to bear hard upon his Principles.

Offered a Pardon, he would diſcover others.

The Doctor anſwered, If he had been a Man of as little Conſcience as he had been repreſented, he might have ſaved his Life; for Offers had been made him, to procure him a Pardon, if he would have confeſſed his Guilt, and accuſed others; but he had rather die a thouſand Deaths, than accuſe any Man wrongfully.

Then the Chief Juſtice paſſed Sentence on him as a Traitor; and affording him ſome good Wiſhes afterwards, the Doctor ſaid, God Almighty bleſs your Lordſhip: And now, my Lord, as I am a dead Man to this World, and as I hope for Mercy in another, I was never guilty of any of the Treaſons laid to my Charge, as you will hear in Time. My Character you may have from my Lord Chancellor of Ireland, my Lord Berkley, my Lord Eſſex, and the Duke of Ormonde. But he was executed at Tyburn, according to his Sentence, on Friday the firſt of July; at the ſame Time that Fitzharris was executed there.

Appeals to the Iriſh Miniſtry for his Character.

His Speech at Tyburn.

Dr. Plunket being drawn to Tyburn with Fitzharris, on the firſt of July, 1681, made a Speech to the People, wherein he denied every Article he was charged with; and again declared, That a certain great Peer ſent him Word, that he would ſave his Life, if he would accuſe others; but he anſwered, He never knew of any Conſpiracy in Ireland; and that he would not falſly accuſe any one, to ſave his own Life: And having prayed for the King and Royal Family, proteſted upon his Salvation, that what he ſaid was true, without any Equivocation, Mental Reſervation, or ſecret Evaſion whatever, he was turned off.

I could never learn, for what Reaſon Dr. Plunket was brought over from Ireland, to be tried here; unleſs it was to ſupport the Credit of the pretended Popiſh Plot, and terrify him into ſuch a Confeſſion, as the Faction were pleaſed to preſcribe to him: For thus theypractiſed upon almoſt every Man, they got condemned for that pretended Conſpiracy. But here alſo they met with a Man of more Fortitude than they expected, who ſcorned to purchaſe his Life on ſuch baſe Terms. Even Biſhop Burnet is ready to grant, that the Doctor was perfectly innocent of what he was accuſed; for, ſpeaking of this Trial, he ſays, "Some leud Prieſts, and "other Iriſh Evidence, finding how good a "Trade Swearing was in England, came over, "and gave Evidence of a Plot in Ireland, to "bring over a French Army, and maſſacre all "the Engliſh there. That theſe Men were "much cheriſhed by the Lords Shaftesbury "and Eſſex; but that the latter told him (Bur-net) That Plunket was a wiſe, ſober Man, "choſe a quiet Life, and to live in due Sub-"miſſion to the Government: And that an In-"dictment having been preferred againſt Plun-"ket the Year before, in England, the Fore-"man of the Jury, a zealous Proteſtant, told "him, (Burnet) That the Witneſſes contradict-"ed one another ſo notoriouſly, they could not "find the Bill: But now (ſays Burnet) They "had laid their Story better together; and hav-"ing nothing but Plunket's Denial to contend "with, he was condemned and executed."

1681. 33 Car. II.

While he lay under Sentence of Death, the Earl of Eſſex, it is ſaid, informed the King, That the Evidence againſt Plunket, could not be true: To whom the King anſwered, Why did not you atteſt this at his Trial? It would have done him Good then: I durſt pardon no Body: His Blood muſt lie upon your Head, and not upon mine.

Stapleton's Trial.

The Trial of Sir MILES STAPLETON, Bart. for High-Treaſon, at the Aſſizes for the County of York, the 18th of June, 1681. 33 Car. II.

1681. 33 Car. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges him with High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; and that to accompliſh the ſame, the ſaid Sir Miles, with other falſe Traitors, did, on the thirtieth of May, in the 31ſt Year of the King, at the Pariſh of Barwick, in the Weſt-Riding of the County of York, aſſemble, conſult, and agree, to depoſe the King, to put him to Death, and introduce the Romiſh Religion; and did agree to pay certain Sums, to divers other falſe Traitors, to procure them to kill his Majeſty.

The Priſoner, and the King's Counſel, having challenged ſo many of the Jurors at the preceding Lent Aſſizes, that there were not left enough to try him, occaſioned the Trial to be put off to this Aſſizes; and it ſeems, Mr. Juſtice Dolben held it to be a good Exception, that the King's Counſel made to one of the Jurors, That he had diſparaged the Evidence of the Popiſh Plot, and given two of his Dogs the Names of Oates and Bedloe, the King's Witneſſes.

An odd Challenge to ſome Jurymen.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Smith firſt depoſed, what he had heard of a Plot at Rome, and elſewhere; and that he had heard, Money was raiſed in Yorkſhire, for killing the King, and extirpating the Proteſtant Religion.

Bolron depoſed, That Sir Miles Stapleton, Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, and others, held a Conſultation at Barmbow-Hall in Yorkſhire, about Whitſuntide 1677, for killing the King: That Sir Miles ſaid, He would give two hundred Pounds towards it; and, if the Duke of York did not pleaſe them, the Conſpirators ſaid, they would uſe him like his Brother; and that they would obtain the Duke's Conſent, to make Sir Miles a Privy-Councillor: And, that at another Conſult, the 13th of June, 1678, It was agreed to ſecure Hull, as the fitteſt Place for the French to land at.

Mowbray depoſed, That he was preſent, in the Year 1676, when Ruſhton gave the Oath of Secrecy to Sir Miles Stapleton, Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, and others; and they diſcourſed of killing the King, and ſubverting the Government, bringing in Popery, and firing the City of London: And Sir Miles ſaid, he would venture his Life and Fortune for killing the King. He depoſed alſo, That he ſaw a Liſt of the Actors and Contributors, for killing the King, and Sir Miles's Name was amongſt them.

Then Sir Miles called his Witneſſes, to invalidate the Teſtimony of the King's Witneſſes.

The Priſoner's Witneſſes.

Mr. Lowther depoſed, That Bolron came before him, and charged Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne, and others, with being in the Plot; and he asked him, if he knew any thing againſt Sir Miles Stapleton: To which Bolron anſwered, No: He believed he was very clear; but that Mowbray and others would ſwear he was at the Conſult.

Sir Thomas Yarborough, another Juſtice of Peace, depoſed, That aſking Bolron if he knew any thing againſt Sir Miles Stapleton, he anſwered, No: He only knew he had made a colluſive Conveyance of his Eſtate, as moſt Catholicks had, to ſecure them; but he believed he was innocent, and not any Ways concerned.

The Lady Yarborough alſo depoſed, That Sir Thomas ordering Bolron to be brought into his Chamber, when ſhe was in Bed, ſhe heard the Diſcourſe between Bolron and her Husband; which was to the Effect Sir Thomas had declared: And, that the Day following, ſhe heard Bolron ſay, He had nothing againſt Sir Miles; he was an honeſt Gentleman.

Thompſon

1681. 33 Car. II.

Thompſon depoſed, That he was bound, with Bolron, to Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne; and that Bolron ſaid, if Sir Thomas was not kind to him, he would do him an ill Turn: And that he had heard Bolron ſay, there was never a Catholick in Yorkſhire concerned in the Plot.

Leggat depoſed, That he was at the George at York, when Bolron read his Information againſt Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne; and that he aſked Mowbray, if he knew any Thing of it; and he ſaid, he did not: That he had heard Bolron ſay, he knew nothing againſt Sir Miles.

Elizabeth Holmes depoſed, That ſhe had heard Bolron ſay, If he had known he ſhould have been no better rewarded, the Devil ſhould have been a Witneſs for him.

Cooper depoſed, That being intimate with Mowbray, he aſked him, if what Bolron had ſworn againſt Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne was true; and Mowbray anſwered, he might as well have ſworn it againſt any Man elſe; for that he, being in the Houſe, muſt have known it as well as Bolron; and he knew nothing of it.

Mrs. Sherbourn depoſed, That Bolron and Mowbray, under Pretence of ſearching for Prieſts, took ſeveral Pieces of Silver out of her Houſe; and Mr. Juſtice Dolben anſwered, They knew they had been bad Men.

Then the King's Counſel produced ſome Witneſſes, who depoſed, that they were tampered with, not to give Evidence againſt Sir Miles.

Sir Miles then concluded his Defence, and ſaid, He deſired the Jury would conſider what little Credit was given to the Witneſſes againſt him at other Trials; and proteſted, that he was never at any Conſult about theſe Things: He believed none that knew him would think ſo: He never thought any ill of the King, or had any Reaſon to do ſo.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben then ſummed up the Evidence, and gave his Directions to the Jury, informing them, that the Teſtimony of Smith, concerning what he had heard at Rome, or elſewhere, of the general Deſign, was no Evidence againſt Sir Miles: But Bolron and Mowbray had ſworn the Treaſon poſitively againſt him: And though Sir Miles had produced ſome Witneſſes that impeached their Credit, he had ſhewn no Record of any Conviction againſt them; and therefore they ſtill remained legal Witneſſes.

1681. 33 Car. II.

Mr. Baron Gregory added, That there was nothing material proved againſt the King's Witneſſes: That, as to their concealing their Knowledge of Sir Miles's being in the Plot, that was before they became Proteſtants; and beſides, a Man was not bound in Diſcourſe to tell his Neighbour all that he knew; and it was poſſible they might forget, when they were before the Juſtices of Peace, that Sir Miles was concerned in the Plot: Nor did they come before them as Magiſtrates, when thoſe Queſtions were aſked them: But notwithſtanding the Judges Directions, the Jury, after half an Hour's Receſs, brought in Sir Miles, Not Guilty.

He is acquitted.

The Credit of the Plot, it ſeems, was now fallen ſo very low, that the Witneſſes were no longer believed, though they had the Directions of the Judges to ſupport their Teſtimony: And, indeed, Mr. Baron Gregory ſeems extremely partial; whether it were that he was prejudiced in favour of the Faction, or was afraid of their Reſentment.

Remarks on Stapleton's Trial.

This, I think, was the laſt Perſon brought to his Trial for that pretended Conſpiracy; for the Miniſtry now began to reſume their Courage, and would no longer ſuffer themſelves to be made inſtrumental in deſtroying innocent Men: They would no longer connive at the offering Rewards and Protection to raſcally Knights of the Poſt to revile his Majeſty, and the Royal Family, and incite another Rebellion, by rendring them odious to the People; and the King, awakened out of his Slumber, by the frequent and formidable Attacks of the Faction, at length took the Reins of Government into his Hands, and ſhewed his Enemies, that when he was pleaſed to uſe Application, he had a ſuperior Genius, and knew how to defeat the Schemes of their moſt artful Leaders, who ſaw, not long after, that their Flight alone could ſecure them againſt his juſt Reſentment.

The Trial of GEORGE BUSBY, Clerk, for High Treaſon, at the Aſſizes for the County of Derby, 25 July, 1681. 33 Car. II.

1681. 33 Car. II.

THE Indictment charges him with High Treaſon; for that, being a Subject of England, he remained at Weſt-Hallam in the ſaid County of Derby, after having accepted Popiſh Orders, contrary to the Statute of 1 Eliz.

The King's Council, in opening the Indictment, ſuggeſted, that the Priſoner was concerned in the Popiſh Plot; and, that they would do their Country more Service, by convicting one Prieſt, than twenty Felons.

The King's Witneſſes being called, five or ſix of them poſitively ſwore, they had ſeen the Priſoner ſay Maſs, give the Sacrament, chriſten, marry, give Abſolution, and perform other Parts of the Prieſtly Office.

The Priſoner, in his Defence, ſaid, That he was not born in England, but at Bruſſels, his Father and Mother going over thither at the Beginning of the Grand Rebellion; and produced Witneſſes, who depoſed, that they had ſearched the Regiſter of Hallam, and found ſeveral of the Priſoner's Brothers and Siſters born there; but his Name was not in the Regiſter.

The Priſoner's Defence.

In Anſwer to which, the Court obſerved, If it ſhould be admitted he was born at Bruſſels, that would not avail him, becauſe of the Statute that had naturalized all that were born of Engliſh Parents, beyond Sea, during the late Rebellion.

The

1681. 33 Car. II.

The reſt of his Defence conſiſted in obſerving, That there was no poſitive Proof of his being a Prieſt, or of his officiating as ſuch; becauſe the Witneſſes did not underſtand Latin, and conſequently, could not tell whether he ſaid Maſs, or not. To which it was replied, That he had given no Anſwer to his Chriſtening and Marrying People, and ſeveral other Acts, which could be done only by Prieſts. And the Jury thereupon found him Guilty, as Mr. Baron Street had directed them; and the Judge afterwards pronounced Sentence on him as a Traitor: But informed him at the ſame Time, that he was commanded to reprieve him; and accordingly Mr. Busby was reprieved from Time to Time, and never executed.

He is convicted;

but reprieved.

Remarks on Busby's Trial.

The Popiſh Prieſts, in Queen Elizabeth's Reign, having been very buſy in promoting and encouraging Conſpiracies againſt her, it was thought fit to make a Statute, That it ſhould be Treaſon for an Engliſh Prieſt to remain in the Queen's Dominions, after he had accepted Popiſh Orders; but this is generally agreed to be made in terrorem, and never deſign'd to be put in Execution, where they behaved themſelves loyally and peaceably. But we find the Saints in King Charles's Reign endeavouring, directly contrary to the true Intent of the Act, to put it in Execution againſt thoſe who had been moſt eminent for their Loyalty, and the greateſt Sufferers for him and his Father; and though the King could not prevent their being tried, we find he ſkreened this Gentleman, and all thoſe that were tried at London upon this Act, from their Fury, by granting them Pardons, or at leaſt indefinite Reprieves: But ſome there were, in the more remote Parts of the Kingdom, that ſuffered purely for being Popiſh Prieſts, as it appears by ſome former Proceedings.

1681. 33 Car. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges, that the Priſoner did, on the 10th of March, in the 33d Year of the King, at Oxford, maliciouſly, and traitorouſly, compaſs and imagine the Death of his Majeſty: To incite a Rebellion, levy War againſt him, and ſubvert the Government: And that, to effect his ſaid traitorous Purpoſes, he did, on the ſaid 10th of March, at Oxford aforeſaid, prepare Arms, arm himſelf, and adviſed, and incited, one Edward Turbervile, and others, to arm themſelves againſt the King; declaring, he deſigned to ſeize the King's Perſon, at Oxford, aforeſaid: And, at the Time and Place aforeſaid, in the hearing of many of the King's Subjects, maliciouſly and traitorouſly declared, That nothing of Good was to be expected from the King; and that the King minded nothing but Beaſtlineſs, and the Deſtruction of his People, and to eſtabliſh Popery and Arbitrary Power.

A Diſpute about his Papers.

The Priſoner refuſed to plead, till his Papers were delivered him, which were taken from him as he came into Court; for this, he ſaid, rendered him incapable of making his Defence: But the Court inſiſting on his pleading, before they made any Order in the Matter, he, at length, pleaded, he was not guilty, in Manner and Form as it was laid in the Indictment.

Then the Chief Juſtice ſaid, If there were any Thing in thoſe Papers, that was neceſſary for his Defence, it would be hard to deny him them. Mr. Attorney anſwered, when he came to Priſon, he had no Papers; and, he was informed, Aaron Smith, the Solicitor, had delivered them to him.

The Priſoner replied, There were Directions in the Papers, how to govern himſelf in his Defence; and Inſtructions, to tell him what the Law allowed him.

Mr. Attorney informed the Court, That there was a Liſt of the Jurors among the Papers, with Marks ſet upon them, who were good Men, who were bad, and who were moderate Men; and there was a Liſt of the Witneſſes the Party had picked up for him: Then the Chief Juſtice ordered, that the laſt Paper ſhould be delivered him immediately; and he thought the reſt of the Papers ſhould be put into ſome ſafe Hand, that the Priſoner might make uſe of them.

Mr. Attorney ſaid, That was the ſame Thing as to allow him Counſel, if his buſy Solicitor had procured the Advice of Counſel, and then communicated it to him.

Colledge replied, If they took away all his Helps, they might as well condemn him without a Trial.

Then Mr. Attorney deſired his Lordſhip would look upon the Papers, which he did; and there was one, called the Speech, which, the Chief Juſtice ſaid, ought to be ſuppreſſed, and Enquiry made, how it came to his Hands: And Aaron Smith being called, it was demanded of him, if he delivered thoſe Papers to the Priſoner? To which Smith anſwered, No-body was bound to accuſe himſelf: Whereupon the Chief Juſtice ordered him to enter into a Recognizance, to be forth-coming during the Seſſion. Whereupon Smith ſaid, It was Time to have a Care, when their Lives, their Eſtates, and all were beſet; which the Court reſented, and ſaid, he reflected on the Juſtice of the Nation.

Colledge inſiſting ſtill, that he might have his Papers, the Chief Juſtice ſaid, they had ordered dered him the Liſt of the Witneſſes; and, as for the Inſtructions in Point of Law, he might have had them, if they had been written in his own Name, in the firſt Perſon; but when they appeared to be written by another, and directed him what to do, This was to allow him Counſel in an indirect Way, which the Law did not allow: However, they had rather allow him too much, than too little; and the Chief Juſtice ordered him a Copy of the Inſtructions, leaving out what was ſcandalous.

The King's Counſel calling their Witneſſes, Mr. Dugdale was firſt ſworn, who had been one of the principal Witneſſes againſt Lord Stafford; and whoſe Credit Colledge endeavoured to ſupport at that Trial, by teſtifying, he was an honeſt Man.

Dugdale's Evidence againſt him.

Dugdale depoſed, That the Priſoner ſeemed, at ſome Times, to be mightily bent againſt Popery; and would ſay, when the King did not proſecute Papiſts according to his Mind, That the King was a Papiſt himſelf, and as deep in the Plot as any of them all, and had a Hand in Godfrey's Death: And that he told the Deponent, at Oxford, That there was nothing to be expected from the King, but the introducing Popery, and Arbitrary Government: And that, preſently after the King went out of Oxford, Colledge went to a Barber's Shop, within the Angel-Inn, and, as he was charging his Piſtols, ſaid, Rowley is gone: The Rogue was afraid of himſelf, and has ſhirked away: And that Rowley was the Name he uſually gave the King: That the Priſoner ſaid, at other Times, There was no Truſt to be put in the King; it was the People they muſt truſt to: They muſt look to arm themſelves; he would arm himſelf: And in Oxford, he ſaid, he had ſeveral ſtout Men that would ſtand by him in it: Their Intention was to root out Popery; by which he always meant the Eſtabliſhed Church. And, when Dr. Tongue was at his Houſe, he ſaid, he was forced to be at great Charges, and to neglect his Buſineſs, to keep him in Order; for, if he had not, the Rogue had a Mind to fling all upon the Proteſtants, that is, the Diſſenters; for he did not count the Church of England ſo.

It being demanded, who was to be concerned with Colledge? Dugdale anſwered, That Colledge told him, he brought Capt. Clinton, Capt. Brown, and Don Lewis, to Town with him, expecting there would be a Riſing: That they would defend the Proteſtant Religion againſt the King, and all his Adherents: That, if the King did not yield to the Parliament, he ſhould be forced to it. This he ſaid at Oxford: And, at London, he heard him ſay, he expected there would be ſomething done at Oxford; and he would go thither with his Horſe and Arms; and the Gentlemen he already mentioned would go with him; and, let them begin when they would; he did not care how ſoon his Party was the greateſt Party.

That the Priſoner gave the Deponent as much Ribbon, at London, as came to forty Shillings, with the Words, No Popery, No Slavery, wrought in it, to diſtribute among their Friends, the Diſſenters, in the Country, that they might know one another: That the Deponent promiſed to come to Oxford with the Priſoner, and did ſo: And being with ſome Members of the Commons at London, a little before the Parliament met at Oxford, who were talking of ſome Diſturbance that might happen there, it was agreed, that in every County where the Parliament had the beſt Intereſt, a Member ſhould be left to manage the People.

That the Priſoner gave him the intercepted Letter to Sir Roger L'Eſtrange, and told him, he was the Author of it; (which, Mr. Attorney obſerved, was the Libel out of which Fitzharris took great Part of his:) That he received another Libel of the Priſoner, with Pictures in it, where all the Biſhops were changing their Hats for Cardinals Caps. It was entitled, The Raree-Show. This Dugdale produced in Court, and depoſed, he heard Colledge ſing it at Oxford, and at Lord Lovelace's in the Country; where Sir Robert Clayton, Sir Thomas Player, and Mr. Rouſe were in Company.

Here the Chief Juſtice obſerved, that Lord Lovelace was in Court; but his Lordſhip did not think fit to contradict the Witneſs.

Then Mr. Attorney demanded, how Colledge deſcribed the Cutt to him? Dugdale anſwered, the Figure with the Pack was the King, and the Pack were the Parliament, and all the King's Retinue; and then, there was the King in the Mire again: Mr. Serjeant Jeffries obſerved, that one Part of the Cutt repreſented the Biſhops, whom they thruſt into the Pack, when they had got him down in the Mire; and then they hooted them all the Way, as it is in the Song.

The Chief Juſtice demanded, if Colledge explained it thus? Dugdale anſwered, Yes, he did, at London: Theſe were the King and the Clergy; and by Louſe-Hall was meant White-Hall, becauſe of its Poverty.

Here the Clerk of the Crown read the Ballad, Raree-Show, &c. to the Tune of, I am a Senſeleſs Thing——

Mr. Serjeant Jeffries demanded, what Colledge meant by the two Faces? Dugdale anſwered, that the King was half Proteſtant, and half Papiſt.

And when he found the King would not yield to the Demands of the Commons, at Oxford, he ſaid, Let him begin as ſoon as he would, he did not care; for their Party (meaning the King and his Party) was but a Handful to him and his Party, who were the true Proteſtants; the other were but Proteſtants in Maſquerade: He hoped the Deponent would be true to his Side, and deſired, he would get Arms for himſelf; for the King had a Deſign to introduce Popery and Arbitrary Power: He expected they would begin; the ſooner the better.

The Priſoner told him, at London, that Captain Brown, (who had been an Officer in the Rebels Army) and the other Gentlemen, intended to come down: And he told him, at Oxford, that Captain Brown, and about forty more were come down; and the Deponent was with Captain Brown, Don Lewis, and ſeveral others of that Gang, at Oxford.

Here Colledge obſerved, that Dugdale ſwore before Sir Leoline Jenkins, that theſe Words were ſpoken at London; but the Grand Jury there were ſo wiſe and honeſt, that they would not find the Bill; and, the Deſign againſt him failing there, they changed the Scene to Oxford. Then he demanded, where he ſaid the Words, The King was a Papiſt, and deſigned Arbitrary Government? Dugdale anſwered, He ſaid them at Combes's Coffee-Houſe, in Oxford, when no Body was by; and at the Angel-Inn, there, when there were ſeveral; and there were many People by, when he ſpoke them at London; particularly, Starkey, Boſom, and Baldwin; and they all reproved him for it. The Priſoner then demanded, what Arms he had at Oxford? Dugdale anſwered, he had a Pair of Piſtols before him, and ſome Pocket-Piſtols: Colledge replied, he did not deny he had a Pair of Piſtols in his Holſters; but he had no more than one Pocket-Piſtol, which he borrowed of Dugdale. Mr. Serj. Jeffries thereupon obſerved, that Chiſſels had been more proper Tools for a Joyner, than Piſtols.

Dugdale depoſed farther, That Colledge told him, Captain Brown had a good Allowance; and he would ſpeak, that he might have a better; for he was able to do good Service, when the Time came.

Colledge demanded, from whom was that Allowance? Dugdale anſwered, there were ſeveral Gatherings among them, that he was privy to; but they did not tell him how the Money was diſtributed: And Mr. Attorney obſerved, that the Priſoner confeſſed, at his Examination, he gave a Guinea; which Colledge did not deny.

Dugdale depoſed alſo, That the Priſoner ſhewed him another Libel, which he produced in Court, with Cuts, that was entitled, The Character of a Popiſh Succeſſor, &c. and, in explaining it, he pointed at a Parcel of Tantivy-Men riding to Rome, and the Duke of York, half Man, half Devil, trumpeting before them: That in one Place of the Raree-Show, it was in the Manuſcript, Now, now, the Rogue is down; but Serjeant Jeffries obſerved, it was in the Print, Now, now, the Giant is down. The Priſoner then demanded, If the Song, he ſung at Lord Lovelace's, was the ſame as that in the Raree-Show? Dugdale anſwered, Generally it was: He ſung it half a dozen Times, and the Muſick played to him. Colledge demanded, If any Body was by at the explaining the Pictures? Dugdale anſwered, Yes, Mr. Baldwin; and reproved him for being ſo open.

Mr. Attorney demanded, If Colledge did not endeavour to ſupport his Credit at Lord Stafford's Trial?

The Priſoner anſwered, He acknowledged, he was examined there upon Oath; but what he ſaid was by Hear-ſay; he knew nothing of him of his own Knowledge; but he believed him another Man than he found him.

Mr. Stevens, the Meſſenger, depoſed, That ſearching the Priſoner's Houſe, by Order of Council, with Mr. Atterbury, they found the Original of the Raree-Show in his Bed-Chamber, and alſo thoſe that were printed.

Atterbury depoſed, They found the Original, drawn with a Pencil on Dutch Paper, on a Table in Colledge's Chamber.

Sewell depoſed, They found the Papers, produced in Court, in a Bag, in the Poſſeſſion of Colledge's Wife.

Smith's Evidence.

Mr. John Smith, (another of the Witneſſes againſt the Lord Stafford) depoſed at this Trial, That going with Colledge to dine at Alderman Wilcox's, Colledge told him, that Wilcox was as true as Steel, and was a Man that would endeavour to root out Popery: And the Deponent anſwering, That may eaſily be done, if the King could be prevailed upon to paſs the Bill againſt the Duke of York: Colledge replied, No, You are miſtaken; Rowley (the King) is as great a Papiſt as the Duke of York, and every way as dangerous to the Proteſtant Intereſt; as is too apparent, by his arbitrary Ruling: That the Alderman not being come home, the Deponent asked Colledge, what kind of Man he was? Who anſwered, He was one that lived at his Country-Houſe, and gave freely to ſeveral People, to buy Arms and Ammunition, in order to bring the King to Submiſſion to his People: And he wondered Old Rowley did not conſider, how eaſily his Father's Head came to the Block; which, he doubted not, would be the End of Rowley at laſt: That Colledge afterwards ſhewed him his Arms, his Piſtols, Blunderbuſs, Great Sword, and his Armour, Back, Breaſt, and Head-piece, and ſaid, theſe were the Things that would deſtroy Rowley's pitiful Guards, which were kept up, contrary to Law and Juſtice, to ſet up Popery and Arbitrary Power: That a little before the Parliament met at Oxford, Colledge and the Deponent fell into Diſcourſe, concerning the Preparations the City were making; and how they were provided with Powder and Bullets; and Colledge ſaid, for his Part, he would go down to Oxford; for he expected a little Sport there, upon the Diviſions that were like to be between the King and Parliament: Adding, We expect the King will ſeize on ſome of the Members; and we are as ready as he: And, for my Part, I will be there, and be one that ſhall ſeize him, if he ſecure any Members.

1681. 33 Car. II.

That after Colledge returned from Oxford, he told the Deponent, he went down in Expectation of ſome Sport; but Old Rowley was afraid, like his Grandfather Jamy, and ſo ran away, like to beſhit himſelf. He ſaid alſo, he had a Quarrel with Fitzgerald at the Door of the Houſe of Lords, at Oxford: That Fitzgerald called him Rogue, and made his Noſe bleed; but before long, he hoped to ſee a great deal more Blood ſhed for the Cauſe. And when there was a Diſcourſe of Lord Feverſham's diſarming the City, Colledge ſaid, he was well provided; and if Feverſham, or any Man, nay, if Rowley himſelf, ſhould attempt any ſuch Thing, he would be the Death of him, before any ſhould Man ſeize his Arms.

That he deſired the Deponent would get Arms; he did not know how ſoon he might make uſe of them, he ſaid; and the Deponent had Armour from him; but it being too big, he returned it, and bought new.

That the Priſoner alſo ſaid, The Parliament had agreed to ſecure the King; and, in order to it, the Parliament-Men were to come down with their Servants armed. Colledge demanding what Religion he was of? Smith anſwered, He was a Proteſtant, and in Orders: Colledge replied, He was a Prieſt, and had his Orders from the Church of Rome.

Mr. Attorney demanded, if he was not a Witneſs at Lord Stafford's Trial? Smith anſwered, he gave a general Account of the Deſign of the Papiſts; and his Reputation was not then queſtioned. Colledge replied, He was the falſeſt Man that ever ſpoke with a Tongue.

Bryan Haynes depoſed, That there being a Warrant out againſt him, he came to adviſe with Colledge, the Priſoner, about it; and he told him, The Parliament would ſit at Oxford ſoon, and he need not value the King of a Pin, for the King was in a worſe Condition than he (the Deponent); and he ſhould ſee him called to an Account for his Actions: That the World ſaw he reſolved to bring in Arbitrary Power and Popery; and, unleſs he let the Parliament ſit at Oxford, they would ſeize him there, and bring him to the Block, as they did the Logger-head his Father: The Parliament ſhould ſit at Guild-Hall, and redreſs the Subjects Grievances; and they ſhould ſee, that no King of his Race, ſhould ever reign in England after him.

And demanding of Colledge, How this was poſſible, though the Duke of Monmouth was a fine Prince, and ſtood up for the Proteſtant Religion; Colledge anſwered, They made but an Idol of him, to cover their real Deſigns: Did he ever think, the wiſe People of England, would ever make a Baſtard upon Record, King of England? No; though they praiſed his Actions, they could not endure him, becauſe he was againſt his own Father: And Colledge added, Unleſs the King expelled from his Council; the Earl of Clarendon, cunning Lory Hyde and the Earl of Halifax, that great Turn-coat Rogue, who was once ſo much againſt Papiſts, they would make England too hot for him.

Colledge obſerving, It was impoſſible he ſhould ſay theſe Things, to a Man he had ſcarce any Acquaintance with; Haynes anſwered, Colledge knew his Principles, and his Circumſtances; he was at this Time, as much for Treaſon and Villany, as the Priſoner was: And when he objected, there were no Preparations equal to ſuch a Deſign, and that Gentlemen would hardly quit their Eaſe for a Civil War; Colledge replied, You are miſtaken; we have 1500 Barrels of Powder, and 100,000 Men, ready at an Hour's Warning; we have prepared every Thing, againſt the ſitting of the Parliament at Oxford, and you ſhall ſee England the moſt glorious Nation in the World, when we have cut off that beaſtly Fellow Rowley; he came of a Race of Buggerers, for his Grandfather, King James, buggered the old Duke of Buckingham: Then he railed at Judge Pemberton, and ſaid, Let him try Fitzharris if he durſt; he ſhould ſee him go to Tyburn for it, he hoped, a Turn-coat Rogue.

That at another Time, Colledge put the Deponent upon charging the King with firing the City, and murdering Godfrey; and ſpeaking of the Libel Fitzharris was condemned for, ſaid, The Devil take me, every individual Word is as true as God is in Heaven; and if you do not join with Fitzharris, and charge the King home, you are a baſe Fellow, for he makes you Slaves and Beggars; and it is Charity to charge him home, that we may be rid of ſuch a Tyrant.

That Colledge gave him, and others of the Party, blue Ribbons, to diſtinguiſh them, and ſhew that they were Proteſtants, and not Biſhop's Men; which they were to wear when the King was ſeized.

That when Colledge returned from Oxford, the Deponent told him, The King had made a Fool of them; and he anſwered, They had not done with him yet; that no Body ſuſpected he would have diſſolved the Parliament that Day, as he did; he took Coach, and went away, before the Parliament could get down, otherwiſe they ſhould have been too hard for him; for there was not a Parliament-Man, but had ſeveral armed Men to wait on him, and he himſelf had a Blunderbuſs, and a Man to wait on him: And, upon cloſing his Evidence, Haynes produced the Ribbon College gave him, as a Mark of Diſtinction, to know their Party by. 1681. 33 Car. II.

Turbervile's Evidence.

Then Turbervile (who had alſo been a Witneſs againſt Lord Stafford,) was ſworn, and depoſed, That when the Parliament ſat at Oxford, he dined with Colledge, Captain Brown, and Don Lewis, at the Chequer-Inn there; and that after Dinner, Don Lewis being gone out, and Brown aſleep on the Bed, Colledge and the Deponent fell to diſcourſing of the Times; and the Deponent ſaying, he thought it would not be a long-lived Parliament, Colledge anſwered, There was no Good to be expected from the King; he and all his Family were Papiſts, and had ever been ſuch: To which the Deponent replying, Perhaps the King would ſurprize the Parliament, or uſe ſome Stratagem to bring them to his Terms; Colledge ſaid, he wiſhed he would begin; but if he did not, they would ſecure him, till he came to their Terms; for there were ſeveral brave Fellows about Town, and many more were coming, that would join them: That he had got a Pair of Piſtols, and a very good Sword; and the Deponent believed he had Armour on, but he could not be poſitive. Mr. Attorney demanding, if Colledge told him he came down on purpoſe to ſeize the King, Turbervile anſwered, Yes; and gave them blue Ribbons, to put in their Hats to diſtinguiſh them, if there ſhould be any Diſturbance; and when the Deponent ſaid, He had never a Horſe, and nothing but a Caſe of Piſtols, Colledge bid him not trouble himſelf; he would get him an Horſe.

Colledge demanding, Why the Deponent did not inform againſt him ſooner; Turbervile anſwered, That Dugdale told him, The Grand Jury of London would not find the firſt Bill, which he wondered at; for every one that converſed with Colledge, might have been an Evidence againſt him, he was ſo laviſh of his Tongue, againſt the King and Government.

Then Mr. Maſters was ſworn, who depoſed, He had been acquainted with Colledge many Years, and often reproved him for being ſo violent; but a little before the Parliament met at Oxford, they were diſcourſing of the Government, and he juſtified the Actions of the long Parliament in 1640; and the Deponent aſking him, how he could have the Impudence to juſtify their Proceedings, who raiſed that Rebellion againſt the King, and cut off his Head; Colledge anſwered, They did nothing, but what they had juſt Cauſe for, and the laſt Parliament that ſat at Weſtminſter was of the ſame Opinion; and ſeeing him very buſy afterwards at Guild-Hall, when a Common-Council was held there, the 13th of May, the Deponent ſaid to him, Colonel College, what do you make all this

1681. 33 Car. II.

Buſtle for? To which he anſwered, Mock not; I may be a Colonel in a little Time.

Sir William Jennings depoſed, He had only a Coffee-Houſe Acquaintance with the Priſoner, before he came to Oxford; but obſerving a great many People looking at a Picture, he crouded in among the reſt; and after the Crowd was gone, Colledge took a Picture out of his Pocket, and ſaid, he would give him one, and there was written Mac a Top on it. Here the Picture was produced in Court.——That at another Time, he ſaw Colledge bring a Parcel of Ribbons into a Coffee-Houſe, with the Words, No Popery, No Slavery, wrought twice in every Quarter of a Yard; and ſaw him ſell a Yard of it for two Shillings, to one, he took to be a Member of Parliament, who tied it upon his Sword.

That the Day the Oxford Parliament was diſſolved, Colledge came to the Deponent, and told him, He had been in a Quarrel; Mr. Fitzgerrald had ſpit in his Face, and he ſpit in his Face again, and ſo they went to Loggerheads; and the Deponent telling him, his Noſe bled, he anſwered, He had loſt the firſt Blood in the Cauſe; but it would not be long, before more was loſt: And he obſerved, he never met the Priſoner, but he had been in ſome Quarrel.

Here Colledge deſired Sir William to recollect himſelf, as to the above-ſaid Words: He ſaid, He acknowledged, he had been vindicating the Commons, and Dr. Oates, whom Fitzgerald had abuſed, and upon that the Quarrel began; and meeting Sir William, who told him, his Noſe bled; he ſaid, He had loſt the firſt Blood for the Parliament, and he wiſhed it might be the laſt: Sir William replied, That to the beſt of his Memory, the Words were as he firſt related them, and nothing of the Parliament mentioned.

Col-ledge's Defence.

Then the Chief Juſtice telling Colledge he might enter upon his Defence, he deſired to know, if there had been any Conſpiracy proved againſt him; or any thing, but Words.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, If the Witneſſes ſpoke true, there was plain Proof of a Conſpiracy: As his making, and publiſhing Libels and Pictures, to render the King odious and contemptible to the People: His preparing Arms, and ſhewing of them; declaring at the ſame Time, He would go down to Oxford, and if there ſhould be a Diſturbance, he would ſecure the King: And he did come to Oxford accordingly, and behaved himſelf there, in the Manner Dugdale and Turbervile had atteſted; which was a ſtrong Evidence againſt him. And he informed the Priſoner, that an Endeavour to ſeize the King's Perſon, had been always held to be Treaſon, by 25 Edw. III: For King's were never made Priſoners, but in order to their Death. That the Statute of the 13th of this King, was ſtill ſtronger againſt him; which ſays, If a Man ſhall, by any Words, or malicious ſpeaking, ſhew the Imagination of his Heart, that he hath ſuch an Intention, That was Treaſon.

The Priſoner demanded, If there ought not to be two Witneſſes to the ſame Words?

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, If there was one Witneſs to prove one Fact, and another to another Fact, being an Evidence of the ſame Treaſon, they were two Witneſſes ſufficient, to ſupport the Indictment, as was held in Lord Stafford's Caſe; and, if one Witneſs proved what was ſaid at Oxford, and another proved what was ſaid at London, if they related to the ſame Treaſon, it was ſufficient: But in his Caſe, there were two Witneſſes, beſides Sir William Jennings, who ſpoke fully to the Facts at Oxford.

1681. 33 Car. II.

Colledge then proceeded in his Defence, and ſaid, He ſhould prove this to be a moſt helliſh Conſpiracy, to deſtroy all the Proteſtants in England, that had the Courage to oppoſe the Popiſh Plot, in which he had ſignalized himſelf: It was highly improbable, he ſhould talk ſuch Things with Papiſts, Prieſts, and Iriſhmen, who had broke their Faith with their own Party, and been concerned in Plots and Treaſons, to cut the Throats of Proteſtants: He confeſſed, he did hear there was a Deſign of deſtroying the Parliament at Oxford, and all Proteſtants; and he was reſolved, if he lived, to come along with the Parliament, and if there was any ſuch Deſign, to live and die with them; but his Arms were only a Sword, and a Caſe of Piſtols: That before the laſt Parliament at Weſtminſter, he began to be popular, and called, The Proteſtant Joyner; and the Duke of Monmouth, and ſome other Lords, employed him to ſearch under the Parliament-Houſe, that there might be no Tricks played them by the Papiſts; and the Lord Lovelace went with him, and ſome of the Houſe of Commons, to ſearch; and he received their Thanks: That there was not only an Oath made, of a Deſign to deſtroy the Parliament at Oxford, but it was the general Belief, ſome Evil was intended them; and People generally armed themſelves with Sword and Piſtol, leſt they ſhould be attacked by the Papiſts; and he came down, two Days after the Parliament ſat, with the Lords Howard, Clare, Huntingdon, and Paget; and went to Town again with the Lord Lovelace, Sir Thomas Player, and Sir Robert Clayton, who were in great Fear, that London would be ſurprized by the Papiſts; but no one ever heard of ſeizing the King, till theſe Witneſſes came, and atteſted it; and it was a moſt wicked Falſhood: He knew of no Man that would have ſtood by him in ſuch a Deſign; and it could not be ſuppoſed, he ſhould have made ſuch an Attempt alone: He declared, he never knew of any Deſign againſt the Government, or ſpoke one of the treaſonable Words he was charged with: This, indeed, was not the firſt Time the Papiſts had a Deſign againſt his Life; but this was the firſt Time they went about to take it away by Law.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, He did not know there was one Papiſt, a Witneſs againſt him.

Colledge anſwered, Every Man of them had been Papiſts, except Sir William Jennings: Mr. Attorney demanded, If Mr. Maſters was? Colledge ſaid, He only teſtified ſome merry Diſcourſe: The Court demanded, If he made merry with the blackeſt Tragedy, the horrid Rebellion, and Murder of the King?

Then Colledge called his Witneſſes, and ſome of them depoſed, That the Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner had ſaid, they were tampered with, to throw the Plot on the Proteſtant Diſſenters; but his principal Witneſs was Oates, who had ſomething to teſtify againſt every one of the King's Witneſſes, particularly, That Turbervile told him, He had nothing to ſay againſt Colledge; but meeting him afterwards at Oxford, he ſaid, He had; for the Proteſtant Citizens had deſerted them, and God damn him, he would not ſtarve.

Oates's Evidence for Colledge

To this Turbervile anſwered, That he did meet Oates indeed, who invited him to come over to his old Friends, and told him, he ſhould be received with abundance of Kindneſs; but abſolutely denied he ever ſaid any thing to him about his Evidence; for he always looked upon Oates as an ill Man, and never converſed much with him.

Oates depoſed further, That ſome provoking Language, having paſſed between Smith and Colledge at a Coffee-Houſe, Smith ſaid, God damn him, he would have his Blood; and, when Oates ſaid, Theſe Words did not become a Miniſter of the Goſpel, Smith replied, God damn the Goſpel.

He alſo depoſed, That converſing with Dugdale, he ſaid, there was great Talk of his being an Evidence againſt Lord Shaftesbury, and other Proteſtants; but he took God to witneſs, he knew nothing againſt any Proteſtant in England: And Oates telling him, he doubted he had gone againſt his Conſcience, Dugdale replied, It was all along of Colonel Warcup; for he could get no Money elſe. Whereupon Mr. Attorney obſerved, That Oates was a thorough-paced Witneſs, againſt all the King's Evidence; and Serjeant Jeffries took notice, that Oates had ſtood alone, in ſome Matters, if it had not been for theſe Witneſſes.

Oates proceeded in his Evidence, and ſaid, That Dugdale had an old Clap, and gave out he was poiſoned; and this Sham paſſed through the Kingdom in the weekly Papers; but he could make it appear, by the Phyſician that cured him. (And ſo ſaid Biſhop Burnet, it ſeems.)

Dugdale however denied it, upon his Salvation; and ſaid, If any one would come and ſay, he cured him of a Clap, he would own himſelf guilty of what was imputed to him.

Mr. Attorney obſerved again, That it was very unhappy, that Oates ſhould come in againſt theſe Men, who ſupported his Evidence at other Trials.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, It was improbable that theſe three Men ſhould come to Oates, and own themſelves Rogues and Villains; and obſerved, That all three of them denied upon their Oaths, what this one Man affirmed on his bare Word.

Then a Witneſs for Colledge depoſed, That he had known him three Years, and he uſually rode with a Brace of Piſtols before him: He had borrowed his Horſe and his Piſtols ſeveral Times, and ſeen a Suit of Silk Armour of his, which he ſaid, he provided againſt the Papiſts; for he expected a Bruſh with them.

Colledge alſo proteſted, They were only intended againſt the Papiſts; and truly, by the Grace of God, he ſaid, He ſhould not have been the laſt Man againſt them; but he perceived, whatever was provided for that Purpoſe, was believed to be provided againſt the King and Government: But he hoped the Jury would obſerve, there were no new Arms provided; only thoſe he had a great while ago.

Then Bolron and Mowbray depoſed, That Smith would have ſuborned them to ſwear a Proteſtant Plot; and Colledge obſerved thereupon, That there was a Deſign of the Papiſts, to turn the Plot upon the Proteſtants: That they had begun with him; and, if they had his Blood, who might feel the Effects of it next, he could not tell.

1681. 33 Car. II.

The Priſoner calling ſome Witneſſes to his Reputation, they ſaid, He was a Native of Watford, in Hertfordſhire; and that about eighteen Years before, he lived at that Town, and uſed to go to Church, and had a good Character there, and at Black-friars, in London, where he lived when he was taken up.

Peter Norreys depoſed, That he was at the Hercules' Pillars, in London, with Sir William Waller, Macnamarra, Mr. Lewis, and Mr. Smith; and ſpeaking of the Parliament to be held at Oxford, Sir William Waller ſaid, Moſt Parliament-Men were afraid to go to the Parliament; and Mr. Smith replied, He hoped they would be provided to go, if they did go: Whereupon Sir William Waller ſaid, He and his Friends ſhould be provided; and Colledge anſwered, He would be provided too, and would go with them.

Then Colledge ſaid, As to the Pictures and Papers he was charged with, he knew nothing of them, nor ever drew a Picture in his Life; and called his Servant, Elizabeth Hunt, to prove how the Paper called, The Raree-Show, came to his Houſe.

Elizabeth Hunt depoſed, That a Porter brought three Bundles of Papers to her Maſter's, when he was abroad, and ſhe paid the Porter Sixpence for bringing them; and they were in the Houſe ſeven or eight Weeks before they were ſeized by the Meſſengers. She depoſed further, That being ſent to Mr. Dugdale for ſome Money he borrowed of her Maſter, ſhe told Dugdale, ſhe thought it was hard he ſhould keep her Maſter's Money, and ſwear againſt his Life too. And Dugdale anſwered, there was a great deal to do about his ſwearing againſt her Maſter; but, as he hoped for Salvation, he did not believe Mr. Colledge had any more hand in the Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty, than the Child unborn.

Dugdale appearing again, anſwered, He could not ſay he had nothing againſt her Maſter: She aſked him to write down what he had ſaid; but he told her, He knew not what was Treaſon; That muſt be referred to the Court.

Then Mr. Colledge made his Obſervations on the Evidence, and ſaid, My Lord, I have nothing but Innocence to plead; no Flouriſhes to ſet off my Defence: I cannot take the Jury or the Court with Oratory: But I declare, in the Preſence of God Almighty, That what is ſworn againſt me, concerning providing Arms, or a Deſign to ſeize his Majeſty, or to rebel againſt the eſtabliſhed Government, is all a Fiction; I never had ſuch a Thought: It is true, they have ſworn againſt me deſperately; but I think it appears, they have contradicted one another: It has been proved, this was a Deſign; and that they have been tampered withal: That they complained of their Poverty, and wanted a Maintenance; and confeſſed they were tempted to come over, and ſwear againſt Proteſtants, and they have begun with me; but I hope the Jury obſerve, I have ſufficiently contradicted their Evidence: Is it poſſible to imagine, if I had a Grain of Senſe, that I ſhould diſcover myſelf to ſuch a one as Haynes, an Iriſhman, Colledge's further Defence, and Obſervations on the Evidence.

and ſpeak all that Treaſon, he has gallopped through, the firſt Time I ſaw him? Every Witneſs, I think, has been confuted by Men of Principles, Perſons of Integrity and Honeſty; (though moſt of them were unknown to me,) and who have offered their Teſtimony voluntarily. There is no Probability they ſhould come and atteſt a Falſhood for me, who am a Stranger to them, for nothing. My Lord, I am a Proteſtant, and have been a Lover of the Church of England, and profeſs the ſame Faith; and never had a Prejudice againſt any Churchman, but ſuch as promote the Intereſt of the Papiſts; for ſuch there are among them. I confeſs, I have heard ſome Diſſenters, and have found them honeſt, juſt, and pious, free from Oaths and Debauchery, and unlike ſome, who call themſelves of the Church of England; and lead ſuch Lives, that no Credit can be gained to the Church by them. My Lord, I have been a hearty Man againſt the Papiſts, and for the Parliament, and am ſorry any Man ſhould create Miſunderſtandings between the King and Parliament: I always thought I ſerved my King, when I ſerved the Parliament; I had the Honour to be entruſted by them, and upon that Account, I came voluntarily down hither, at my own Expence; and ever ſince the Diſcovery of the Plot, have done my utmoſt to come at the Bottom of it; and have encouraged thoſe that diſcovered theſe Villanies, againſt the Life of the King, and againſt our Religion and Government: And, Theſe Men who ſwear againſt me, are thoſe that uſed to follow me for Bread: They uſed to ſay, they thought it hard, when they came to ſave our Lives, we ſhould let them want Bread; and I have collected Money for them; and ſometimes they thought fit to petition the Common-Council for Relief; and pretended to me, they would make further Diſcoveries of the Popiſh Plot.

The firſt Time I ſaw Haynes, was upon ſuch an Account, in March laſt: He ſaid, He would diſcover a Piece of Roguery, againſt Lord Shaftesbury's Life; and I went with him and Captain Brown, from Richard's Coffee-Houſe to the Hercules' Pillars; where he told us of the Deſign to deſtroy the Parliament at Oxford, and of an Army that was to land in the North, and another in Ireland, and the Duke of York was to head them. At another Time, Haynes came to me, under Pretence of diſcovering the whole Deſign, concerning Godfrey's Murder; and ſaid, If Lord Shaftesbury would engage to get his Pardon, he would diſcover the whole Truth. When I acquainted Lord Shaftesbury with it, ſays he, Theſe Iriſhmen have confounded all our Buſineſs: Thou and I muſt have a Care, they do not put a Trick upon us: This may be a Trick of the Papiſts to ruin us. Afterwards they brought Mrs. Fitzharris to my Houſe, to confirm what they had told me; and Haynes ſaid in my Yard, that he ſaw Lord Danby come to the Chappel of Somerſet-Houſe, when Godfrey's Body lay under the Altar.

Here the Court told him, He rambled from the Matter, and told long Stories, of what there was not a Jot proved, and was not at all pertinent.

Colledge anſwered, He thought it was to the Point, when that Man pretended a Familiarity with him, to ſhew how their Acquaintance began.

The Court bid him apply himſelf to ſum up the Evidence, and anſwer what had been proved againſt him; but ſaid, He muſt not be allowed to tell Stories, to amuſe the Jury, that were not proved. 1681. 33 Car. II.

Colledge ſaid, He did not know why his Oath, being an Engliſhman and a Proteſtant, ſhould not be taken, as well as his, that was an Iriſhman and a Papiſt.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, He went upon a wrong Ground; that his Word was to be taken, but no Juſtice could be had againſt Malefactors, if their Words were to go for Proof of their Innocence.

Colledge demanded, How Dugdale knew, that by the Word Rowley he meant the King?

Whereupon Dugdale ſtood up again, and ſaid, That the firſt Time he heard what Rowley meant, was from the Priſoner, who told him, Rowley was the King, and Mac the Duke of York.

Colledge aſked, upon what Picture it was he explained Rowley to him? Dugdale anſwered, He had ſo many Pictures he could not remember; he received Pictures from him at Richard's Coffee-Houſe, and at the Green-Dragon he thruſt one into his Pocket. Colledge demanding, What Picture it was he gave him then? Dugdale anſwered, He ſuppoſed, it was one about the Biſhops, where he made Biſhop Mew kiſſing the Pope's Toe; and told him, That was Biſhop Mew that had the Patch on.

Colledge denying he made the Libel, Dugdale avered, he told him, he was the Author of it.

Colledge then proceeded in his Defence; and ſaid, He denied he had that Diſcourſe with Smith, that he teſtified: And, as for his being in Company with Captain Brown and Don Lewis, they were Friends of the Lord Howard's, with whom he came down to Oxford, and they lay at the Chequer where he did; and it had not been ſhewn they were in a Conſpiracy. His Defence continued.

The Court anſwered, He told the Witneſs at London they were ſuch Perſons. Colledge replied, He was not acquainted with either of them, a Fortnight before he came down: However, he deſired the Opinion of the Court, Whether what was done at London, could maintain an Indictment at Oxford?

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, That what he ſaid in London, was Evidence to maintain the Indictment at Oxford, and proved what his Intention was in coming down.

Colledge ſtill inſiſted, That what was done at Oxford, was ſupported only by a ſingle Teſtimony. The Court anſwered, That Dugdale and Turbervile both ſwore the ſame Thing; namely, That they had a Deſign to ſeize the King at Oxford: But if it was neceſſary, the ſame Thing ſhould be proved to be ſaid at the ſame Time, before two Witneſſes, the King would be very unſafe; for a Conſpirator would take Care, not to ſay the ſame Thing, before two Witneſſes, at the ſame Time.

Colledge replied, If the King was not ſafe in that Caſe, no private Man could be ſafe the other Way; all Society and Converſation was at an End: However, he thought the Teſtimony of theſe Witneſſes was invalidated, by ſubſtantial Perſons. He deſired the Jury would do him Right, as they would anſwer it at the great Day; and and conſider, whether there had not been ſome Occaſion for talking of late; and, whether, a Slip of the Tongue ought to be conſtrued a malicious and adviſed Speaking: He expected a Storm of Thunder from the learned Counſel, he ſaid: He was unlearned, and muſt defend himſelf without any Counſel; and queſtioned, whether this was the Practice of any other Nation: It was hard, that he, an illiterate Man, ſhould ſtand there alone all Day, and they, being many, and learned in the Law, ſhould take all Advantages againſt him: He took God to Witneſs, he was innocent, and hoped the Jury would neither be frightned nor flattered, but act according to their Conſciences: They were Judges, both of Law and Fact, and might acquit or condemn him; but his Blood would be required at their Hands: Concluding with a Prayer, that God Almighty would direct them to do him Juſtice.

Mr. Solicitor's Reply to his Defence.

To this Defence Mr. Solicitor replied, That the Fact charged upon Mr. Colledge was, a Deſign to kill the King: The Manifeſtation of that Deſign was, his preparing Arms for that Purpoſe; and coming down to Oxford to ſeize the King.——Then Mr. Solicitor having ſummed up the Evidence, proceeded, and ſaid: As to that Objection of the Priſoner's, that he had his Arms long before; they were not provided for this Purpoſe; Gentlemen, we do not pretend to know when this traitorous Deſign began, and how long it has been hatching: But, whether he prepared them againſt the Time, or not, is not material; for, if he had them firſt innocently, if he afterwards deſigned them for ſuch a Purpoſe, and ſhewed them in a Readineſs for it, That is Evidence ſufficient to prove the Treaſon. And it is proved, he ſaid, He came down in Expectation ſomething would be done; and came down accordingly, in an Equipage not ſuitable to his Profeſſion, armed, on Horſeback, with a Brace of Piſtols; Things that did not become a Carpenter or Joyner to travel with.

Here Colledge interrupted the Solicitor, and deſired he might not be overborne; for that there was ſcarce a Carpenter, or Poulterer, in London, but had Piſtols when he rode out.

But the Court telling him, he muſt not interrupt the Counſel, Mr. Solicitor proceeded, and ſaid,

As Colledge came down with an Intent to ſeize the King, and expected, what he called, ſome Sport; ſo he did endeavour to begin the Sport, by that Quarrel in the Lobby of the Houſe of Lords with Fitzgerald; for, from little Matters ſometimes great Things ariſe: And when Men, (as he himſelf ſaid,) were poſſeſſed with an Expectation, that the Parliament would be attacked, a little Matter might have begun the Commotion; and what End it might have had, no Man knew. As to that Objection, that this was a Popiſh Deſign to throw the Plot upon the Proteſtants; the Witneſſes who proved this Treaſon, were the Witneſſes that proved the Popiſh Plot; and ſtill ſtood to that Evidence: They were Men the whole Nation had given Credit to. Upon the Credit of Dugdale and Turbervile, the Commons impeached the Lord Stafford; and after a moſt ſolemn Trial, where all the Objections that could poſſibly be made, were made, the Lord Stafford was found guilty by his Peers, and died upon the Credit of theſe Men: And the Priſoner muſt not pretend to blow all off with that frivolous Objection, that theſe Perſons were engaged in a Deſign to throw the Plot upon the Proteſtants: And what ſort of a Proteſtant he was, (though he would have it believed he was ſo popular as to have obtained the Name of The Proteſtant Joyner for his Zeal) his Actions beſt diſcovered. If the Proteſtant Religion allowed a Man to vilify the King, to arraign the Government, and throw of all manner of Allegiance; then was the Priſoner a Proteſtant: But if Papiſts could wiſh no greater Infamy to the Proteſtant Religion, than that its Diſciples ſhould juſtify the late horrid Rebellion, and ſuch Principles as this Man, in his many ſcurrilous Libels, ſeemed to do; and wiſhed nothing more than to ſee this Kingdom in Confuſion, and the Church of England deſtroyed; Mr. Colledge, while he was acting this Part, had no Pretence to call himſelf a Proteſtant.

1681. 33 Car. II.

As to Oates's Teſtimony, who came to vilify the Credit of thoſe Men who ſupported his own Credit, by the Teſtimony they gave of the Popiſh Plot, that He ſhould urge theſe Calumnies, and take up thoſe very Arguments the Papiſts had maliciouſly made uſe off, and were never able to make out, looked as if the Doctor was returning to St. Omers again. Mr. Solicitor obſerved further, That the Priſoner, to prove himſelf a Proteſtant, had produced ſome Witneſſes to teſtify he went to Church ſixteen or eighteen Years ago; but he had not brought any of his Neighbours at London, to ſhew he went to Church there: But if he had ſhewn his Conformableneſs to the Church never ſo fully, yet, if he had been guilty of ſuch Practices, they muſt take leave to ſuſpect his Profeſſion; for they were ſuch as all good Men abhorred; and he could not but reflect upon his Condition, whoſe only Hopes were, that the Jury would now forget themſelves, and become as ill Men as he was: But, as that could not be preſumed, he ſhould only ſay, They were Men of that Conſideration, that they could judge between Things and the Appearances of them; and knew very well how to give the due Weight to the Evidence they had heard, as well as to the Objections that had been made by the Priſoner; and therefore left it to them.

Mr. Serjeant Jeffries's Obſervations.

Mr. Serjeant Jeffries, in his Obſervations on the Evidence, ſaid, That notwithſtanding what the Priſoner had ſuggeſted to the contrary, the Judges were Judges of the Law, as the Jury were of the Fact: And the Judges had told them, where Treaſon was committed in ſeveral Counties, if their Teſtimony concerned the ſame Treaſon, it was ſufficient; as had been reſolved in the Caſe of Gavan, who was tried in London, and Evidence given of Facts both in London and the Country: And, he left it to their Conſciences, Whether, upon the bare Affirmation of Mr. Oates, they would convict three Men of Perjury, upon whoſe Teſtimony ſo many Lives had been taken away; and juſtly too, as Proteſtants believed: That they had not only the poſitive Teſtimony of thoſe three Men to encounter, but the higheſt Improbabilities: For, it could never be be ſuppoſed, theſe Men ſhould all come voluntarily to Mr. Oates, and tell him, that they were forſworn, and ſuborned, to throw the Plot upon the Proteſtants, as Colledge would have them believe.

He hoped, the whole Proteſtant Intereſt was not involved in the Fortune of the Priſoner at the Bar: The Queſtion was not, Whether there was a Preſbyterian, or Proteſtant Plot; (they declared they knew of none:) But the Queſtion was, whether the Priſoner at the Bar had ſpoken ſuch Words, and done ſuch Things, as were ſworn againſt him.

And though ſuch a Stir had been made about Popiſh Witneſſes, and Iriſh Witneſſes, there had been but one Iriſh Man, and not one Papiſt, examined in the Cauſe; but if there had, God forbid, that the Country ſhould be any Objection to any Man's Teſtimony; or Truth confined to Places and Perſons.

The reſt of the Serjeant's Arguments, being much the ſame with thoſe of the Solicitors, are deſignedly omitted; it being intended to avoid Repetitions, as much as poſſible.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

Then the Chief Juſtice directed the Jury, and told them, That the Charge againſt the Priſoner was, his compaſſing the Death of the King, and conſpiring to ſeize his Perſon; which was the ſame Thing in Effect: For, even by the Common Law, and upon the Interpretation of the Statute of 25 Edw. III. whoever ſhould imagine to depoſe the King, or to impriſon him, was guilty of imagining the Death of the King; for, never was any King depoſed, or impriſoned, but with an Intention to be put to Death.

That, as to the Proof of this Treaſon, there had been ſix Witneſſes: As to two of them, Sir William Jennings and Mr. Maſters, though they did not ſpeak directly to the Treaſon, yet their Teſtimony inferred a Probability of it: For Sir Will. Jennings telling him, he bled at the Noſe, after his Quarrel with Fitzgerald, the Priſoner ſaid, He had loſt the firſt Blood, and it would not be long ere there would be more loſt: Which ſhewed, there were ſome extraordinary Thoughts in his Heart, concerning ſome Quarrels and Fighting that he expected: And that which Mr. Maſters depoſed, concerning his juſtifying the Long Parliament; and, when he called him Colonel, ſaying, he might be a Colonel in Time, ſhewed there were ſome extraordinary Thoughts in his Heart.

Here Colledge demanded, If thoſe Words could not bear a more favourable Conſtruction?

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, He would have done well to have explained which way he expected to be a Colonel.

Colledge replied, He thought he had called him Couſin; and his Anſwer was, that Mocking was catching.

The Chief Juſtice proceeded, and ſaid, As to the other four Witneſſes, they were all of them very full, as to the Treaſon, if what they ſaid was true: And, he thought, the Queſtion would lie purely upon the Credit of theſe Witneſſes: And, as to Dugdale and Turbervile, who were the two moſt material Witneſſes of what was ſpoken and done in Oxfordſhire, he thought there was not any Thing material proved againſt them; and both they, and Smith, denied upon their Oaths, all that Oates had affirmed of them; and inſiſted ſtrongly on the Improbability, that theſe three Men, without any Inducement, ſhould come to Oates, and acknowledge themſelves perjured.

1681. 33 Car. II.

Colledge then deſired his Lordſhip to look in his Notes, and he would find much more Evidence againſt Dugdale and Turbervile, than he had repeated: But the Chief Juſtice ſaid, he could remember no more; he muſt refer it to the Memory of the Jury.

Then Colledge deſired, that Nobody might be with the Jury; and was anſwered, Nobody ſhould come near them, till they were agreed on their Verdict; and a Bailiff was ordered to keep them; but before they went out of Court, they were ordered two Bottles of Sack for their Refreſhment, in the Preſence of the Priſoner: And after half an Hour's Receſs, the Jury returned with their Verdict, that he was GUILTY. At which there was a great Shout; and one Perſon was committed for hollowing, but diſcharged next Morning on his Submiſſion.

He is convicted.

It being about three in the Morning when the Court broke up, it was adjourned till ten the ſame Morning, when Aaron Smith, Colledge's Solicitor, was bound in a Recognizance of 500*l.* to appear in the King's-Bench the next Term: After which, Colledge being asked, what he could ſay, why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon him, he ſtill made great Profeſſions of his Innocence.

The Chief Juſtice's Speech, before ten.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, It was now too late to inſiſt upon his Innocence: But, becauſe he perſiſted in it, he thought it was neceſſary to ſay ſomething in Vindication of the Verdict. He obſerved, there were ſufficient Proofs to warrant it; and that the Jury had done juſtly: That, as the Priſoner had managed his Defence, a ſmall Proof would have ſerved to induce the Jury to believe him guilty: He thought it ſtrange, when he had called ſo many Witneſſes to his Religion and Reputation, that none of them gave an Account of his receiving the Sacrament for many Years; or had ſeen him at Church; or what kind of Proteſtant he was: If they obſerved his Words, indeed, they ſhewed, that he was mighty violent and zealous in crying out againſt Popery, and the Papiſts; but if they looked into his Actions, they promoted the Deſigns of the Papiſts. For the Papiſts were beſt extirpated, and ſuppreſſed, by a ſteady Execution of the Laws againſt them: Not by violent Outcries; by inflaming the People; by Tumults and Confuſions; for this was what the Papiſts drove at: They had no Hopes of creeping into the Kingdom any other way than by ſuch Confuſions; and after that Church ſhould be deſtroyed, which was, next under God, the beſt Bulwark againſt them.

In his loud Outcries againſt Papiſts, it had been proved alſo, who he meant by Papiſts: He had the Boldneſs to ſay, The King was a Papiſt, the Biſhops were Papiſts, and the Church of England Papiſts; which ſhewed, what kind of Proteſtant he was; and, if they ſhould look into his Politicks, it was proved, by unexception-

1681. 33 Car. II. able Witneſſes, that he juſtified the late horrid Rebellion, and the Conſequence of that was, the Murder of the beſt King in the World: He that would juſtify the Proceedings of that Parliament, and affirm, they did nothing but what they had juſt Cauſe to do, would do the ſame Thing, in the ſame Circumſtances.

And how had he managed his Defence, as to that Part of the Charge, of his coming down armed to Oxford to ſeize the King? He expected he would have ſaid, he only wore thoſe Things for his own Defence, upon the Road, as a Gentleman travelling; or, that he went with his Friends, to accompany them out of Town, and defend them from Robberies; but to ſay, as he did in his Defence, That he went to guard the Parliament, he did not underſtand what he meant by it. He did not believe the Parliament ſent for a Guard, or intended to have a Guard: He did not believe, any of them in their Hearts thought they needed a Guard; for they ſaw, when the King diſmiſſed the two Houſes, on Account of their Differences, they all departed quietly; not a Man of them was diſturbed: And how it ſhould come into the Priſoner's Head, who was but a private Man, to go and guard the Parliament, he much wondered. If all Men of his Condition, ſhould have gone down to guard the Parliament, what an Aſſembly had there been? What Confuſion might have happened on a ſudden? He had urged indeed, that he was not a Man of Quality, nor was it likely, he ſhould be able to attack the King or his Guards; yet, if all of his Quality had gone upon the ſame Deſign, he did not know, what might have been the Conſequence; for Maſſaniello, a mean Man in another Country, had effected ſtrange Things, as Wat Tyler and Jack Straw had in our own.

When he obſerved theſe Things therefore, (he ſaid) and conſidered the Complexion of his Defence, it made a ſlender Proof have Credit: And though there was full Proof in this Caſe; yet, if there had been a great deal leſs, the Jury might, with Juſtice, have found him guilty: And, becauſe the Priſoner yet declared himſelf innocent of all he was charged with, he thought himſelf bound to take notice, in Vindication of the Country, and of the Juſtice of the Court, That it was a Verdict well-given, and to the Satisfaction of all the Judges on the Bench. This he ſaid out of Charity, that the Priſoner might incline his Mind to a Submiſſion to the Juſtice that had overtaken him, be in Charity with all Men, and prepare himſelf for another Life.

Then the Chief Juſtice pronounced the uſual Sentence in High-Treaſon; and he was drawn to the Place of Execution, before the Gate of the Caſtle at Oxford, on Wedneſday the 31ſt of Auguſt, 1681; where he made a very long Speech to the People: In which, he told them, He was a Proteſtant of the Church of England, according to the beſt Reformation of it, from all Idolatry and Superſtition, or any thing that was contrary to the Goſpel of our Bleſſed Saviour.

As to what he died for, he ſaid, He was never in any Plot, or knew of any, but the Popiſh Plot; nor had he any Deſign to have ſeized his Majeſty, either at London or Oxford, as had been ſworn againſt him; neither did he know any one Man, that would have ſtood by him, in ſuch an Attempt: He complained, he had been cloſe confined in the Tower, no one ſuffered to come at him, (though the Popiſh Lords had that Favour ſhewn them); and thus was rendered incapable of making a proper Defence.

He took God to witneſs, he had ſought him ſeveral Times with Tears, to inform him, if he had tranſgreſſed at any Time, but in Word; declaring, That he had never heard of the Things ſworn againſt him, till he heard them from the Witneſſes Mouths at the Bar.

Then he took great Pains, to convince the World he was no Papiſt in Diſguiſe, as ſome had ſuggeſted; and ſaid, That Haynes the Witneſs, and ſome other Iriſhmen, did diſcover to him, That the Parliament was to be deſtroyed at Oxford; and, That there was a Deſign to murder the Lord Shafteſbury, by Fitzgerald and his Party: He wiſhed the Commons of England as well as he wiſhed his own Heart; and he did not underſtand but, when he ſerved the Parliament, he ſerved his Majeſty too; and let them be miſerable, that made the Difference between them; for his Part, he never did: He came to Oxford with Lord Howard, whom he looked upon to be a very honeſt worthy Gentleman, with Lord Clare, Lord Paget, and Lord Huntingdon; and Captain Brown and Don Lewis were in their Company, being Lord Howard's Friends.

He took God to witneſs, he never had the Value of Six-pence to carry on any Deſign; nor could he charge any Man living with a Deſign againſt the Government, his Majeſty, or any other Perſon.

As to what Arms he and others had, they were for their own Defence, in caſe the Papiſts ſhould attempt a Maſſacre, or any Invaſion, or Rebellion. If this was a Plot, he was in one; but in no other; nor did he ever know of any Numbers, or Times, appointed for meeting; but they ſaid one to another, that the Papiſts had a Deſign againſt the Proteſtants, when they did meet, and in caſe they did riſe, they were ready: This was his Buſineſs, and this was the Buſineſs of every good Subject, that loved the Laws of his Country and his King.

The Sheriff demanding, What he meant by being of the beſt reformed Church in the World, the Church of England? and, Whether he died a Preſbyterian, an Independant, or a Churchman? He anſwered, He was under a Preſbyterian Miniſtry for twenty Years; namely, till the Reſtoration, and then he conformed; but afterwards ſeeing the Diſſenters hardly uſed, he went over to them again: However, he ſometimes went to Church.

The Priſoner having concluded his Speech and his Prayers, forgiven his Enemies, and eſpecially the Witneſſes, was executed according to the Sentence.

Remarks on Colledge's Trial.

The ſeizing a Priſoner's Papers, and denying him Counſel, I always held to be very great Hardſhips, very great Injuſtice: But it ſeems, all that were neceſſary for his Defence were returned, or put into a third Hand, by the Direction of the Court, that he might have the Benefit of them at his Trial; only a Speech that had been drawn up for him, and repleniſhed with Sedition and Slander, was ſuppreſſed.

1681. 33 Car. II.

The Law, indeed, did not allow him the Advice of Counſel, either oral or written; and yet, it ſeems, the Court indulged him the Uſe of thoſe Papers, which directed him how to manage his Defence; a Favour, that I believe the Faction never allowed their Adverſaries, when they had any Influence on Affairs.

I muſt confeſs, I ſee no Reaſon, why a Priſoner ſhould not be allowed Counſel, Sollicitors, and all the Aſſiſtance imaginable, to defend himſelf; when the greateſt Lawyers are always employed to run him down, and make him appear as black as Hell, be he never ſo innocent.

The Preamble to the Act, which allows a Priſoner Counſel at this Day, obſerves, that this was reaſonable; and, as one obſerved, who was tried the Day before the Act took Place, If it would be reaſonable the next Day, it was reaſonable then; and indeed, if it was once reaſonable, it was always ſo: Nor could it be any more the Intereſt of the King and Government, that an innocent Man ſhould be put to Death, than that a Traitor ſhould be acquitted. All poſſible Means ought to be allowed, to come at the Truth, whether it make for, or againſt the Priſoner; and as the King's Council are ever employed to ſet the Priſoner's Words and Actions in the worſt Light; unleſs he be allowed Counſel, on the other hand, to put the beſt Conſtruction upon them, and prevent the Laws being ſtretched and wreſted to his Ruin, he ſeems to have but an indifferent Chance for his Life.

I am very ready to admit, that all thoſe Witneſſes againſt Colledge, who had been Witneſſes of the pretended Popiſh Plot, were a Pack of mercenary Raſcals, as well as Oates, Bolron, Mowbray, and ſeveral others, who appeared for the Priſoner at this Trial: But as their Teſtimony was confirmed by other Gentlemen, of unqueſtionable Credit; as Colledge actually came down to Oxford with others, who had armed themſelves, to defend the Parliament, as the Priſoner himſelf declared; as thoſe ſcandalous Ballads, Pictures, and Libels, were ſeized in his Houſe; and as he ſung thoſe Ballads, and explained the Deſign of the Pictures, in the moſt publick Places: As he diſtributed Ribbons, with the Motto, No Popery, No Slavery; plainly intimating, that the King and Court were about to ſubvert the eſtabliſhed Religion and Government: As he declared, that they armed themſelves againſt the Papiſts; and in the Pictures and Ballads, evidently ſhewed, that by Papiſts, they meant the King, the Miniſtry, the Biſhops, and all the Members of the eſtabliſhed Church: As the Witneſſes that ſwore againſt the Priſoner, had been his moſt intimate Acquaintance; Men, whom he had ſuborned to ſupport the Credit of the Popiſh Plot; and to ſupport whoſe Evidence, he actually appeared, as a Witneſs at Lord Stafford's Trial: If all this be conſidered, no Man can make any Doubt of his Guilt; though many Particulars, the Witneſſes ſwore, ſhould be admitted to be falſe.

Far be it from me, to traduce any Man's Memory, or load him with Guilt, where his Crimes are not manifeſt to every impartial Man; nor would I endeavour to make him more criminal, than he really was: I am ready to admit, in Favour of this Man, that it is a Queſtion, Whether he knew himſelf guilty of High-Treaſon? He could not be ignorant indeed, of his ſaying and doing many Things, which the Law conſtrues Treaſon; but his Maſters, who ſet him to work, had furniſhed him with a Set of Notions for their Purpoſe, which proved the Ruin of the unhappy Priſoner: As, that it was lawful, nay, the Buſineſs and Duty of all private Men, to arm themſelves in Defence of the Parliament, againſt the King, even without their Orders, and before they declared themſelves to be in any Danger; notwithſtanding a late Act of Parliament then in Force, which declared, That if any one ſhould compaſs, imagine, or intend, the Death of the King, his Deſtruction, or any bodily Harm, any Reſtraint of his Liberty, or Impriſonment of him; or, if any ſhould deſign to levy War againſt him, and ſignify, and declare this, by writing, preaching, printing, or adviſed malicious ſpeaking; this ſhould be adjudged High-Treaſon: And, notwithſtanding another Act of Parliament, which declared, That it was not lawful for both, or either of the Houſes of Parliament; nor for the People, collectively or repreſentaively, to take up Arms againſt the King: And, if theſe Arms were not intended againſt the King, the Adminiſtration, and the eſtabliſhed Religion and Government; I muſt confeſs, I am at a Loſs to know, againſt whom they were intended; for all theſe were declared, by Colledge and the Faction, to be Popiſhly affected. The Preſbyterians, and other Sectaries, were deemed the only true Proteſtants; nay, the only true Church of England: All the reſt were but Proteſtants in Maſquerade, according to the frequent and publick Declarations of Colledge and the Faction. And as to that Objection of the Priſoner's, What could he, a ſingle Man of no Figure, do towards ſeizing the King's Perſon, or attacking his Guards? He has, in a great Meaſure, anſwered the Objection himſelf, when he acknowledges, many more armed themſelves, and came down to Oxford, with the very ſame View he did, namely, to guard and defend the Parliament, againſt the Encroachments of the Crown; nay, he avers at his Trial, that almoſt all Men had furniſhed themſelves with Arms at that Time; and that ſcarce a Carpenter or a Poulterer rode out of London, without a Caſe of Piſtols before him: And though he enlarged a little here, few Mechanicks riding with Piſtols before them; yet, this I can ſay, That, the Faction having alarmed the Nation with an Expectation of a general Maſſacre by the Papiſts; the Diſſenters, and a great many others, that did not ſee through the Artifice, had furniſhed themſelves with Pocket-Piſtols, and Bayonets, or Daggers; and even carried them to Church with them, to defend themſelves, in caſe of an Attack: And one of theſe deluded Men, when the Fright was over, actually preſented the Writer of theſe Sheets with a Brace of Pocket-Piſtols, which he had provided on this Occaſion; inſomuch, that I queſtion whether there were leſs than an hundred thouſand Men thus armed, as ſome of the Witneſſes depoſed. Let me add further, that it was the Opinion of Colledge and the Faction, That if his Majeſty refuſed to model his Miniſtry, as they directed, and make Laws for the Excluſion of a Popiſh Succeſſor, and ſecuring what they called the Proteſ-

Proteſtant Religion; they might ſeize the King's Perſon, and compel him to ſubmit to their Demands.

And, ſuppoſing ſome thouſands of theſe Men, thus armed, and thus principled, had come down to Oxford, under Pretence of defending the Parliament, and the Proteſtant Religion, againſt Papiſts; and who had been taught, that the King, the Adminiſtration, and all the Friends of the Government, were of that Number; and in that Situation any Tumult, or Quarrel, had happened, and the Whig-Leaders had given out, that the Papiſts were about to fall upon them, and cut their Throats; whether the King's Life and the Government, had not been in imminent Danger; and whether any Thing leſs could have been expected, than another general Rebellion, equal at leaſt to that of 41. wherein many innocent People muſt have been involved, who did not yet ſee through the traitorous Deſigns of the Faction; and who, having drawn their Swords againſt the King, would have found it impracticable to deſert the Rebels, and return to their Allegiance with Safety; as was the Caſe of many in the former Rebellion.

It is not, therefore, only the Laws of this Realm, which make it High-Treaſon, in private Men, to aſſemble in Arms, to ſecure and reform the State, without the King's Authority, (much leſs againſt his Conſent); but it is impoſſible for any Government to ſubſiſt, if this be allowed: Nor is there a Republick in Chriſtendom, but would have condemned ſuch Subjects as Traitors, who ſhould have taken Arms with ſuch Views as theſe.

If it be ſaid, It was hard to hang a Man for ſuch Facts, when he did not know them to be Treaſon; it may be anſwered, If this were an Excuſe, then no Man could ever be convicted of Treaſon: Every Man might pretend, that he did not know what Treaſon was. Here were Acts of Parliament lately made, declaring, That no Perſons whatſoever, had any Coercive Power over the King; and his not knowing it, did not make the Fact ever the leſs treaſonable. That very Perſuaſion, that he acted according to Law and Goſpel, in compelling the King to yield to the Demands of the Faction, rendered it neceſſary to make an Example of him: If ſuch Attempts had been ſuffered to go unpuniſhed, it would have been impoſſible to preſerve the Government, or prevent another Rebellion. And I make no manner of Doubt, but the ſteady Proſecution of this Man, and thoſe of his Principles, at that Time, did actually prevent their breaking out into open Rebellion; for the Malcontents were never better prepared for one; no, not in 41.

I ſhall conclude with obſerving, that even the Uſurpers, in the Year 1649, made it High-Treaſon to traduce and arraign their Adminiſtration: And if ſo, ſurely the Faction can never have the Face to ſay, That their Champion, Colledge, had hard Meaſure in being condemned for High-Treaſon, who made it his Buſineſs to calumniate and aſperſe his lawful Sovereign, in order to render him odious and contemptible to his People, and incite another Rebellion; and actually took up Arms againſt him.

The Words of the Uſurper's Ordinance, which paſſed in the Year 1649, were, That "Whereas "the Parliament had aboliſhed Kingly Govern- "ment, and reſolved that the People ſhould be "governed by their own Repreſentatives; It was thereby enacted, That whoſoever ſhould maliciouſly publiſh, by writing, printing &c. that the ſaid Government was tyrannical, uſurped, or unlawful, and not the Supreme Authority; or ſhould plot, or endeavour to ſtir up, or raiſe Forces againſt the preſent Government, for the Subverſion thereof, or againſt the Keepers of the Liberties of England, or the Council of State, or any of them, ſhould be deemed guilty of High-Treaſon."

1681. 33 Car. II. Bethel's Trial.

The Trial of SLINGSBY BETHEL, Eſq; for an Aſſault and Battery on ROBERT MASON, at the Bridge-Houſe in Southwark, October the 5th, 1681, 33 Car. II.

1681 33 Car. II

The Charge.

THE Indictment charged the Defendant, Slingsby Bethel, Eſq; with an Aſſault and Battery on the ſaid Robert Maſon, on the 12th of March laſt, and with uſing theſe threatening Words to the ſaid Maſon, (viz.) Sirrah, I will have your Coat pulled off your Back.

Opened by the King's Counſel.

The King's Counſel, Mr. Holt, in opening the Indictment, obſerved, That in March laſt there was an Election for two Burgeſſes to ſerve in Parliament for this Borough of Southwark; and, that the ſaid Robert Maſon was deſired to come from Lambeth, to ſee if any of that Pariſh came to poll, who had not a Right to vote: That the Candidates were Sir Richard Howe, Capt. Rich, the ſaid Slingsby Bethel, and Edw. Smith, Eſq; That Bethel ſtruck ſeveral Perſons that acted againſt him, and particularly this Maſon; and knowing him to be the King's Waterman, ſaid, He deſerved to have his Coat plucked over his Ears; and had the Waterman ſtruck him again, a great Tumult had enſued; but he prudently refrained, and had taken his Courſe in a legal way: And though Bethel was a great Man, lately Sheriff of London, and Robert Maſon but a poor Waterman, he did not queſtion, but an Engliſh Jury would do him Right.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Robert Maſon depoſed, That as he was ſtanding on the Stairs, going up to the Poll, the Defendant ſtruck him twenty Blows, at leaſt, with his Cane, and told him, he would pluck his Coat over his Ears; and that he replied, ſo he would his Maſter's if he could: That he afterwards ſtruck him (Maſon) ſeveral Blows with his Fiſt, on the Breaſt.

Adams,

1681. 33 Car. II.

Adams, a Conſtable, alſo depoſed, That he ſaw the Defendant ſtrike Maſon three Shugs (or Blows) on the Breaſt, and heard him ſay, Sirrah, I will have your Coat off your Back; and that Maſon anſwered, Ay; and ſo you would my Maſter's, if you could: And that, when Bethel's Party came in, they cried out, No Abhorrers, No Abhorrers.

Walbroke, a third Witneſs, made Oath, That he ſaw Bethel thruſt the ſaid Maſon down the Stairs, and give him two or three Puſhes on the Breaſt.

Smith, another Witneſs, depoſed, That Bethel brought a Multitude of People with him; bid Maſon come down the Steps, and puſhed him on the Breaſt: And two or three Witneſſes more depoſed to the ſame Effect.

Bethel's Defence.

Bethel, the Defendant, on the other Hand, brought ſeven or eight Witneſſes, who depoſed, That they were at the Election, and ſaw no Blows given by Mr. Bethel; but that he ſaid to Maſon, Friend, what haſt thou to do here? Haſt thou any Right to poll? Pray go about your Buſineſs; and gently led him down the Steps: Which the Defendant's Counſel inſiſted, was lawful; Maſon having no Right to poll; and only coming to hollow, and make a Diſturbance, in Behalf of the other Candidates. But the Court obſerving to the Jury, that the Battery was well proved, they found the Defendant Guilty.

1681. 33 Car. II.

Bethel's Counſel afterwards moving in Arreſt of Judgment, That no Indictment lay for the Words; the Court ſtayed the Judgment, as to that Part of the Indictment: And as to the Aſſault and Battery, fined the Defendant five Marks, which he paid before he went out of Court: The King's Counſel moving, that he ſhould be taken into Cuſtody, till it was paid.

He is convicted, and fined.

1681. 33 Car. II.

Lord Shaftesbury's Caſe.

Proceedings againſt ANTHONY Earl of Shaftesbury, for High Treaſon, at the Seſſions at the Old Baily, Nov. 24th, 1681. 33 Car. II.

1681. 33 Car. II.

THE Grand Jury being ſworn, among whom were Sir Sam. Barnardiſton (Foreman) Tho. Papillon, John Dubois, Humphry Edwyn, Michael Godfrey (Brother to Sir E. Godfrey) Thomas Shepherd, and ſeveral more of the ſame Stamp, the Lord Chief Juſtice Pemberton gave them their Charge. Wherein he obſerved, That the Statute of 25 Edw. III. had aſcertained what ſhould be deemed Treaſon: But that the Statute of the 13th of his preſent Majeſty, had gone ſomething farther, being levelled particularly againſt the Principles and Practices of ſuch Perſons as had cut off his Father's Head, and maintained a dangerous War againſt himſelf, to the utter Ruin and Extirpation almoſt of his Majeſty, the Royal Family, and his faithful Subjects.

The Charge of the Chief Juſtice to the Grand Jury.

That, by this laſt Act, the very Intention of levying War was made Treaſon; which was not ſo before: And the very Deſigning to deſtroy the King, to put a Force upon him, or reſtrain him of his Liberty, though not manifeſted by Overt-Acts, were made High-Treaſon, if this was evident from Words only; which was not held to be ſo before: And this was done, to prevent ſuch ſeditious and licentious Diſcourſes, as were the Occaſion of the late Confuſions.

That, as to the Bills to be brought before them, they were to conſider, if the Matter in them were Treaſon within either of the aboveſaid Statutes: And if there were two Witneſſes to treaſonable Words, ſpoken at one, or different Times; and if, by the Evidence produced, there was probable Grounds, to call the Perſons accuſed to an Account, That was as much as the Law required, to induce them to find the Bill.

That it was equally a Crime to acquit the Guilty, as to charge the Innocent: That they were under a double Obligation of doing Right, 1. As they were Members of one great Body, or Society, of which the King was the Head: And 2. as they were under an Oath, to go according to their Evidence.

Then a Bill of High Treaſon being exhibited againſt the Earl of Shaftesbury, the King's Counſel moved, that the Evidence to the Grand Jury might be given publickly in Court.

Moved, That the Evidence might be given openly in Court.

To which the Chief Juſtice anſwered, That this, being deſired to prevent any falſe Reports concerning the Evidence for the King, could not be denied: Whereupon the Jury deſired a Copy of their Oath, and withdrew; and being returned, the Foreman inſiſted, that it was their Right to examine the Witneſſes in private: And beſides, they were ſworn to keep the King's Secrets; which, he obſerv'd, they could not do, if the Examination was publick.

Oppoſed by the Grand Jury.

The Chief Juſtice replied, This was not their Right: The original Practice was otherwiſe; and it was ſtill every Day's Practice in Term Time: The Evidence to the Grand Jury was heard in Court, if deſired: He never knew it denied. As to their keeping their Counſels, that related to their Debates; and, where the King himſelf diſpenſed with the Privacy, and deſired the Examination might be publick, they could be under no Manner of Obligation to conceal it.

Their Objection answered.

The Jury ſtill objecting, That a publick Examination might prejudice the King's Affairs, and give Delinquents an Opportunity of getting out of the Way; the Court anſwered, The King's Counſel, who had already examined the Witneſſes, beſt knew that; and if they were not ſatisfied, it could be no Prejudice to the King's Affairs, they would not have deſired the Examination to be publick.

Laſtly, the Jury deſiring, that it might be recorded, that they inſiſted on their Right of Examining 1681. Car. II. mining Witneſſes privately; the Court anſwered, they were not to record what every Man deſired. However, they need not fear but there would be Witneſſes enough of their Demand.

Mr. Sheriff Pilkington then deſiring, that the Witneſſes might be kept out of Court, and called in one by one; the Court told him, A Sheriff had nothing to do to move Things of that Nature: However, the King's Counſel were not afraid of having their Witneſſes ſeparately examined.

The Bill of Indictment. Then the Indictment was read in Engliſh, which ſet forth, That Anthony Earl of Shafteſbury, late of St. Martin's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, did, on the 18th of March, in the 33d Year of his preſent Majeſty, and at divers other Days and Times, at the Pariſh of St. Mary le Bow, in the Ward of Cheap, London, traitorouſly compaſs and imagine the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government, and to levy War againſt his Majeſty; and, to effect the ſame, did provide and prepare ſeveral armed Men; and did traitorouſly meet and conſult with John Booth, and others, the King's Subjects, how to effect the ſame; and did adviſe and perſuade them, to be aiding and aſſiſting to him in his ſaid traitorous Purpoſes: And that, he did, at the Day and Place aforeſaid, traitorouſly and maliciouſly, aſſert and declare, That in a ſhort Time the Parliament was to meet at Oxford; and he, having inſpected the Elections, and conſidered the Diſpoſitions of the Generality of the Members, was ſatisfied the Parliament would inſiſt upon three Matters; namely, The Bill of Excluſion againſt the Duke of York; the aboliſhing the 35th of Elizabeth; and the paſſing a New Bill, for the uniting Proteſtants; with divers other good Bills: To which he, the ſaid Earl, ſaid, he was certain the King would refuſe his Aſſent; and, therefore, he expected there would be a Diviſion between the King and Parliament: and, that many Noble Lords, and worthy Members of the Lower Houſe, did concur in the ſame Opinion; and were reſolved to inſiſt on paſſing thoſe Bills: And, if the King refuſed, they had provided a Strength to compel the King to grant them. And, for his Part, he (the ſaid Earl) had provided ſtout Men to be commanded by Capt. Wilkinſon (of whom the ſaid John Booth was to be one): And, that the ſaid Earl did, at the Time and Place aforeſaid, declare, That the King was a Man of no Faith; there was no truſting him; he deſerved to be depoſed, as well as Richard II. And, that he, the ſaid Earl, would never deſiſt, till he had brought this Kingdom of England to a Commonwealth, without a King: They would live as in Holland; and the King and all his Family ſhould be rooted out: Adding, That the King was falſe, unjuſt, and cruel to his People; and if he would not be governed by his People, he, the ſaid Earl, and the ſaid other falſe Traitors, would depoſe him.

The Witneſſes being called, The Clerks of the Council, and the Secretaries of State, firſt proved, that an Aſſociation was found, locked up in the Earl of Shaftesbury's Study, of the following Tenor (viz.)

" I A. B. do, in the Preſence of God, ſolemn-

The aboveſaid Aſſociation having been read in open Court, Mr. Booth was called, and depoſed,

Booth's Evidence againſt Lord Shafteſbury. That he was introduced to the Lord Shafteſbury, in January laſt, by his Friend, Capt. Henry Wilkinſon. The Captain had been an old Royaliſt, and ſerved his Majeſty, and his Father, in the late Wars; but miſſing the Preferments and Rewards he expected from the King, was become a Malcontent, as he (the Witneſs) alſo was; and they often diſcourſed, at Lord Shaftesbury's, of the proroguing of the Parliament, the Diſappointments of the People, and their Fears of Popery, and Arbitrary Power: And that they had a continual Club; and converſed together near three quarters of a Year: That his Lordſhip uſed to inveigh ſharply againſt the Times; and did not think himſelf regarded and preferred, as he ought to have been; and expreſſed his Fears of Popery, and Arbitrary Power.

That, when the Elections came on, they had a weekly account of ſuch Members as were choſen, and conſidered their Inclinations, and Diſpoſitions: And his Lordſhip ſaid, The Parliament that was to ſit at Oxford, would inſiſt on the ſame Things the other Parliaments had done; particularly, they would never grant the King Money, or aſſiſt him, unleſs he gave the People Satisfaction in thoſe Things they inſiſted on before, (viz.) The Bill of Excluſion: The Repeal of the 35th of Elizabeth (againſt Conventicles); and paſſed a new Act, to exempt Diſſenters from the Penal Laws.

If the King would paſs ſuch Acts, and ſome other wholeſome Laws for their Security, he believed they would grant him Money for his neceſſary Occaſions: But, if he refuſed this, his

1681. 33 Car. II.

Lordſhip believed there would be a Breach between the King and Parliament.

That the Reaſon of appointing the Parliament to meet at Oxford, was, that the Court might over-awe them: That his Lordſhip and ſeveral other Peers, judged it dangerous to go to Oxford, where the Guards, the Retinue of the Court, and the Scholars, who uſually inclined to the Crown, might over-awe them; and therefore they thought it was fit they (the Parliament) ſhould have Guards ſent down thither; and accordingly, his Lordſhip had eſtabliſhed about fifty Men, Perſons of Quality, that he believed would have Men along with them: That he had entruſted Captain Wilkinſon with the Command of theſe Men, and they were to be at Oxford at a certain Time; and, if there happened to be a Breach between the King and Parliament, or any Violence offered to the Members, theſe Men, and others that were provided by other Lords, were to repel Force by Force, and purge the Guards of all the Papiſts and Tories: They were likewiſe purge the King's Council; and particularly to remove the Earl of Worceſter, the Lords Clarendon, Halifax, and Feverſham, and Mr. Hyde, as dangerous Perſons, who were ſuppoſed to adviſe the King againſt what the Parliament urged him to: And it was reſolved to bring the King to London, and have Things ſo eſtabliſhed, as might preſerve them from Popery and Arbitrary Power.

That after theſe Debates, Captain Wilkinſon deſired the Deponent to be one under his Command, and to provide himſelf, and his Man, with Horſe and Arms, which the Deponent did in March laſt, before the Parliament met at Oxford: That enquiring at London afterwards, how Things went on at Oxford, they found it to be as Lord Shaftesbury had foretold; but did not imagine, they would have been ſo ſoon diſſolved: That on the Thurſday before the Parliament was diſſolved, Captain Wilkinſon told the Deponent, he expected a Summons that very Week, to go to Oxford, with thoſe Men that were liſted under him: But News coming to Town on Saturday, of the Diſſolution of the Parliament, nothing was done.

The King's Counſel demanding, If he had any Diſcourſe with Lord Shaftesbury, after Captain Wilkinſon ſpoke to him; Mr. Booth anſwered, That the firſt Motion for fifty Men to be Lord Shaftesbury's Guard, came from Captain Wilkinſon; but afterwards, he heard the Lord Shaftesbury diſcourſe of it himſelf, at his own Houſe.

Turbervile's Evidence.

Turbervile depoſed, He heard Lord Shaftesbury ſay, There was little Good to be had of the King, while his Guards were about him: That if it was not for them, they would ſoon go down to White-Hall, and obtain what Terms they ſaw fit.

Smith's Evidence.

Smith depoſed, He had been often at Lord Shaftesbury's, and frequently heard him ſpeak irreverently of the King; ſaying, He was a weak, inconſtant Man, and led by the Noſe, as his Father was, by a Popiſh Queen: That his Lordſhip once ſent Captain Manley for the Deponent, and the Captain found him at Mr. Bethel's Club, at the Queen's-Arms in Newgate-Street; and that he, (the Deponent) immediately attended my Lord, who deſired him to manage the Iriſh Witneſſes, and perſuade them not to go near that Rogue Fitzgerald, who was maintained by the King; and that he went accordingly to thoſe Witneſſes, who promiſed they would not go near Fitzgerald.

1681. 33 Car. II.

That a little before the Parliament met at Oxford, he heard Lord Shaftesbury ſay, They were more reſolute than ever; for they ſaw plainly, the King aimed at bringing in Popery; and they had this Advantage, if he offered them any Violence, (as they expected he would,) that they had the Nation for them: They might lawfully oppoſe him, and he would meet with a very ſtrong Oppoſition; for all that came out of the Country, would be well horſed, and armed; and that, old as he was, he would oppoſe it to his Power: That the Deponent obſerving, this would engage the Nation in another Civil War; and that they ſhould either make an End of Monarchy, or enſlave the Nation to Popery for ever; his Lordſhip anſwered, No Doubt of one; but they were ſure the Nation was on their Side: Adding, That the Deponent knew how the City were; and wherever they ſtruck, he were ſure the Nation would. Some other Witneſſes depoſed, They had heard Lord Shaftesbury ſpeak ſcandalouſly of the King: That he took the ſame Courſes, which brought his Father's Head to the Block; and they would bring his thither: That he deſerved to be depoſed, as much as ever King Richard II. did, &c. Theſe laſt Witneſſes were Iriſhmen, who depoſed, they had been a great while maintained and ſupported by the Lord Shaftesbury, (who would have made them Witneſſes of the Popiſh Plot, and Godfrey's Murder.)

Queſtions put by the Grand Jury, to the Court and the Witneſſes.

The Evidence for the King being concluded, the Grand Jury withdrew, to conſider what Queſtions they ſhould ask the Witneſſes: And being returned, demanded, on what Statute the Indictment was founded; and were told, that it was founded both on the 25 Edw. III. and the Thirteenth of his preſent Majeſty; and upon all other Statutes that made it High-Treaſon to conſpire againſt the King; for it concluded contra formam Statut', which might be underſtood, Statuti, or Statutorum.

Then the Jury demanded, If the Witneſſes were indicted; but were told, the Proofs concerning the Credibility of the Witneſſes, were not properly before them: That was to be conſidered by the Petty Jury, at the Trial; where the King might be heard, to defend the Credit of his Witneſſes, if any thing was objected againſt them: They were only to conſider, whether there was treaſonable Matter atteſted by two Witneſſes, who, prima facie, were to be deemed credible; unleſs they, of their own Knowledge, knew the contrary.

The Jury afterwards endeavoured to confound the Witneſſes, by putting ſeveral captious Queſtions to them; but they ſtood to their Teſtimony, and anſwered very clearly and pertinently: Whereupon they were ſo inſulted and abuſed by the factious Mob, that they were ſeveral Times forced to deſire the Protection of the Court; and the Chief Juſtice let Sheriff Pilkington know, that if they received any Hurt, he ſhould be anſwerable for it; but he did not ſeem very ready to afford them any Aſſiſtance.

At length Papillon, and the reſt of the Malcontents upon the Grand Jury, having browbeaten and baited the King's Witneſſes, as long as they ſaw fit; the Lord Chief Juſtice North told them, They had beſt go and conſider of their Evidence, Whether it was fitting for the King to call the Lord Shaftesbury to Account for Treaſon? Obſerving, that one of the Ends of the Aſſociation, found in his Study, was, to deſtroy the mercenary Forces about London and Weſtminſter, and to put the Government into the Hands of a Majority of the Members of Parliament, without the King: Nor was this to be done by Act of Parliament, according to the Tenor of that Paper.

The Jury return Ignoramus.

The Jury withdrawing, returned ſome time afterwards into Court, with an IGNORAMUS; at which the factious Mob hollowed and ſhouted, as if they had gained a notable Victory. The ſame Night, Bonfires were made in the City, and the Air rung with the Cries of, A MONMOUTH, A SHAFTESBURY, A BUCKINGHAM.

Remarks.

The Sheriffs, being of Lord Shaftesbury's Faction, had taken care to have a Grand Jury of their own Party; Men, they were morally ſure, would ſcreen and favour the Earl, if they were not Accomplices in his Treaſons.

The Chief Juſtice ſeems to have forgot himſelf, when he ſays, a Conſpiracy to levy War, or to impriſon the King, and put Reſtraints upon him, were not Treaſon, before 13. Car. II; for the Reader will obſerve, that at ſeveral Trials in this Work, the Judges have been of Opinion, That a Conſultation or a Conſpiracy to levy War, or put any Reſtraint upon the King, are, either of them, an Overt-Act of compaſſing and imagining the King's Death, by 25 Edw. III.

The true Reaſon why the Grand Jury would have examined the Witneſſes privately, it is evident, was, to cover their own Diſaffection; and that the World might not ſee what Grounds there were for charging the Earl and his Faction with High-Treaſon: The Aſſociation found in his Study, in which the Party agree to ſeize on the King's Guards; to transfer their Allegiance to others, and compel the King to model both Church and State, as the Faction ſhould direct, was certainly Foundation ſufficient for them to have found the Indictment, and put the Earl upon his Trial, had the Jury themſelves been entirely innocent; but what could be expected from Men that were involved in the ſame Crimes?

Booth's Evidence, who had been a Malcontent, and engaged in the Conſpiracy, to ſeize and put a Force upon the King, was unanſwerable; and ſhews, that the Deſigns of the Party were conformable to what had been vowed in the Aſſociation found in the Earl's Study. And we find there were five or ſix Witneſſes more, which charge him home with levying Forces, and appointing them to rendezvous at Oxford; and of his threatning to depoſe his Majeſty, if he refuſed to be governed by them, which was Treaſon, by the Thirteenth of this King, if it was not by the Statute of 25 Edw. III: And all this Evidence is a ſtrong Confirmation of Colledge's Guilt, who was convicted and executed for the ſame Treaſons.

As to that Objection, that ſome of the Witneſſes were of the Iriſh Nation, it may be anſwered, that ſeveral of them were not: And moſt of the Witneſſes, even thoſe of Ireland, were ſuch as the Lord Shaftesbury himſelf had picked up, ſubſiſted and maintained, to make them Evidence againſt other Men, of their being concerned in the Popiſh Plot and Godfrey's Murder; in which Service, their being of the Iriſh Nation was no Objection to their Credit; and if the Party did really think they ought not to be credited, they can never excuſe their putting to Death Dr. Plunket, and ſeveral more upon the like Evidence: But further, as theſe Men were Dependants and Agents of Lord Shaftesbury, no Wonder they ſhould have heard him talk freely of the King and Government: He muſt uſe ſome Freedoms with them, in order to debauch them from their Allegiance, and form them for the ſeditious and traitorous Purpoſes he deſigned them. And, would any Grand Jury at this Day, refuſe to find a Bill, where Treaſon was poſitively ſworn by ſeven or eight Men, Engliſh as well as Iriſh, becauſe ſome of the Witneſſes were of the Iriſh Nation? Is Truth confined to any one Nation or Set of People? Or could the Faction lay a better Claim to our Belief, than the Iriſh? If the Saints had any Reaſon to reject the Teſtimony of thoſe Gentlemen, it muſt be, becauſe they knew they had ſuborned them to ſwear falſly againſt other Men they knew to be innocent; at leaſt, much more innocent than they knew their Friend the Earl to be. And, as the Court rightly inſiſted, if the Evidence had not been ſufficient to have induced his Peers to have convicted him upon Trial, it was however abundantly ſufficient to put him upon his Trial, and ſee what he could ſay in his Defence: And indeed we find, his Lordſhip, after his Friends the Whig Sherriffs, were out of Office, and he could not expect another packed Grand Jury, durſt not abide a freſh Enquiry into his Conduct; but fled to Holland, from the Hand of Juſtice.

1681. 33 Car. II.

Nor were the City, or the Nation in general, even at that Time, entirely ſatisfied of the Earl's Innocence, notwithſtanding this Grand Jury had returned an Ignoramus; for, it appears, that Addreſſes immediately came from all Parts, expreſſing their Deteſtation of this Aſſociation; and promiſing to ſtand by his Majeſty, with their Lives and Fortunes, againſt theſe Enemies of Monarchy and the Conſtitution.

The Juſtices of Peace for Middleſex particularly take Notice, That his Majeſty's Enemies were neither ſo numerous, or ſo formidable, as they were by ſome pretended to be; and deſired his Majeſty, ſince he had now no Cauſe to fear them, he would never be prevailed on to truſt them again.

In the Addreſs from the Lawyers of the Temple, they ſay, They thought themſelves obliged by their Profeſſion, to declare their Senſe of that execrable Paper (found in Lord Shaftesbury's Study,) purporting a traitorous Aſſociation: That it was their Opinion, it contained groſs and apparent Treaſons, more manifeſtly tending to the Ruin of his Majeſty's Dominions, than the old hypocritical SOLEMN LEAGUE AND COVENANT.

The City of Briſtol, in their Addreſs, declare their Abhorrence of all Covenants and Aſſociations whatever, without his Majeſty's Approbation; eſpecially that Treaſonable one found in the

I shall conclude my Remarks on this Proceeding, with observing, That the Whigs of those Days thought the King's Guards alone, though not near so numerous as they were in succeeding Reigns, an unlawful Force, and destructive to the Constitution; as appears by the abovesaid Association, and their repeated Conspiracies about that Time, to disband and break them, in Defiance of their Sovereign.

1681. 33 Car. II.

A Test having been established in Scotland, to be taken by all Persons on their Admission to any Office or Place in the Government, the Earl of Argyle took it as a Privy-Councillor, the third of November, having first declared his Sense, and given this Explanation of it, (viz.) "That he had considered the Test, "and was very desirous to give Obedience as "far as he could. He was confident the Par-"liament never intended to impose contradic-"tory Oaths; therefore he thought, no Man "could explain it, but for himself; and ac-"cordingly he took it, as far as it was "consistent with itself, and the Protestant Re-"ligion: But he meant not to bind up himself "in his Station, and in a lawful Way to wish "and endeavour any Alteration, he thought to "the Advantage of Church and State, or re-"pugnant to the Protestant Religion, or his "Loyalty. And this I understand as a Part of "my Oath.

His Explanation of the Test.

The Earl coming the next Day, to take the Test again, as one of the Commissioners of the Treasury, produced a Paper; containing the Explanation, with which he had taken the Test the Day before; and refusing to take it simply, without that Explanation, he was committed to the Castle of Edinburgh, and ordered to be prosecuted, as the Author of that Paper, by his Majesty's Advocate: And an Indictment was preferred against him; setting forth, That notwithstanding his Majesty had bestowed on the said Earl a vast Estate, which was forfeited to his Majesty by the Earl's Father; and also had pardoned and remitted to the present Earl, the Crimes of Leasing-making, and misconstruing his Majesty's and the Parliament's Proceedings, for which he had been condemned to die; raised him to the Dignity of an Earl, &c. yet he had not only refused to take the Test in the genuine Sense, but had declared against and defamed the Act that required the taking of it; and to corrupt others, had drawn up his Sense of it in a Libel, and dispersed Copies thereof, in order to make ill Impressions on the People: That by his declaring in that Libel, He had considered the Test, and was desirous to give Obedience, as far as he could; he insinuated, he was not able to give full Obedience: By his saying, He was confident, the Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths, he would induce the People to believe the Parliament had been so impious and ridiculous as to impose contradictory Oaths: That by affirming, Every Man must explain it for himself, and take it in his own Sense, all Oaths and Laws were rendered useless. And by his saying, He took the Test so far only, as it was consistent with itself, and the Protestant Religion, he maliciously intimated to the People, That the Oath was inconsistent with itself, and the Protestant Religion; thereby misrepresenting his Majesty and the Parliament, in the highest Degree: And by declaring, That he did not mean, by taking the said Test, to bind up himself from wishing and endeavouring any Alteration in a lawful Way, that he should think fit, for advancing of Church and State, he did, by his Example, invite others to think themselves loosed from that Obligation, and teach them to make any Alteration, either in Church or State, as they should think fit. And, that by his Conclusion, (viz.) This I understand as a Part of my Oath; he invaded the Royal Legislative Power, making an Act of Parliament to himself; for he who could make any Part, might make the Whole.

The Charge against him.

The Earl being brought to his Trial, before the Earl of Queensberry, Lord Justice-General, and the Lords Nairn, Collingtoun, Forret, Newtoun, and Kirkhouse, Lords of the Justiciary, on the 12th of December, Sir George Lockhart, his Advocate, entered upon his Defence, and said, The Words laid in the Indictment, being offered before a publick Judicature, only to explain the Earl's Meaning, could not be interpreted a Leasing-making with any seditious Intent; or infer any Crime, although he was mistaken in his Opinion concerning the Act of Parliament; whether his Scruples were just, or groundless, they cast no Reflection on the Act of Parliament: That, in the Explication, he did no where directly charge the Oath and Test with Inconsistency and Contradiction; this was made out only by Implication and Inference, and violently wresting his Words: That his asserting, The Parliament never intended to impose contradictory Oaths, was an high Vindication of the Honour and Justice of the Parliament: And these Words, He was ready to give Obedience as far as he could, did not import, the Parliament had imposed an unlawful Oath; but only shewed the Earl's Doubtfulness and Scrupulosity in the Matter. As to those Words, I think Nobody can explain it but for himself; they imported no more than, that every Man ought to take it in that Sense,

His Defence by Counsel.

1681. 33 Car. II. Senſe he apprehended to be the genuine Senſe of the Parliament: And, as to his ſaying, He takes it, as far as it is conſiſtent with itſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion, he neither intended or expreſſed more than, that he took it as a true Proteſtant. As to that Expreſſion, He does not bind up himſelf in a lawful Way, to endeavour any Alteration he thinks for the Advantage of Church or State, he thought it could never be inferred from the Oath, but that Perſons might, notwithſtanding, concur in their Stations, in a lawful Way, in any Law, to the Advantage of Church and State; and, it would be contrary to his Allegiance, to take the Oath upon other Terms. And laſtly, by theſe Words, this I underſtand as a Part of my Oath; he could not be ſaid to aſſume a Legiſlative Power: His plain Meaning was, that his Senſe and Explication was a Part of his Oath, not of the Law which impoſed the Oath: And, upon the whole, infers, That the ſaid Explication cannot import all, or any of the Crimes libelled.

The King's Advocate's Anſwer to it. His Majeſty's Advocate, in Anſwer to this Plea, ſaid, That to ſecure the Government againſt the Rebellious Principles of the laſt Age, and the unjuſt Pretext of this; and to ſecure the Proteſtant Religion, and the Crown, the King had called a Paliament, wherein this excellent Teſt was made, as a Security againſt the old juggling Principles of the COVENANT; wherein they ſtill ſwore to ſerve the King in their own Way. But the Earl, by his Paper, had diſcovered a Way to evade the Teſt, ſo as no Man ſhould be bound by it: For, if a Man ſhould ſwear to obey only as far as he could, and as far as he conceived it conſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, and with itſelf, and reſerved to himſelf a Power of making any Alteration he ſhould think conſiſtent with his Loyalty, what Man could be bound? The Government muſt be as inſecure as before the Act was made: The Taker was no farther obliged than he pleaſed; but every Man's Conſcience (which in this Age included Humour and Intereſt) muſt be the Rule of the Taker's Obedience.

It was the Opinion of all Lawyers, and Divines, That every Oath was to be taken according to the Intention of him to whom it was made; nor was there any Danger to a tender Conſcience, in this Caſe, ſince there was no Force put upon the Earl: He took it to qualify him for a Place; and might have abſtained.

That the Earl was plainly guilty of contravening the Act of the 10th of James VI. which prohibited the writing of any Thing whereby his Majeſty's Government might be reproached, or his Proceedings miſconſtrued, ſo as to create a Diſlike between the King and his People. For, by ſaying, He took the Oath only, as far as it was conſiſtent with itſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion; it muſt neceſſarily be concluded, that in ſeveral Inſtances, it was inconſiſtent with itſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion; and nothing could be a greater Reproach to the Parliament, or a greater Ground of Miſlike among the People: And, whereas, it was ſaid, theſe were only Inferences; it was anſwered, There were ſome Offences, which the Law could only forbid in general; and there were many Inferences as ſtrong and natural, and which reproached more effectually than the plaineſt Defamations in the World. Direct Reproaches had not wounded the King ſo deep, as the many ſeditious Inſinuations of this Age and the laſt. 1681. 33 Car. II.

From the Earl's Paper, it muſt be inferred, That the Parliament had made a very ridiculous Oath, inconſiſtent with itſelf, and the Proteſtant Religion: That was the natural Tendency of the Words; they would admit of no other Senſe. And ſhould a Man be permitted, under Pretence of exonerating his Conſcience, to defame the Government? Had they not ſeen the King moſt defamed by COVENANTS, entered into on Pretence to make him A GREAT AND GLORIOUS KING? by Remonſtrances, on Pretence of preſerving the Proteſtant Religion, and his ſacred Perſon? Thoſe of the laſt Age declared, They thought themſelves bound in Duty to obey the King, as far as that could conſiſt with their Regard for the Proteſtant Religion, and their Laws and Liberties: Which rendered all the reſt ineffectual.

And, as it was Treaſon to endeavour any Alteration of the Government, either in Church or State, by a private Perſon; This the Earl was juſtly charged with: For he did not ſay, ſuch Alterations as the King ſhould think fit; or were conſiſtent with the Laws and Statutes of the Realm; but, ſuch as he ſhould conceive to be lawful: So that he was the ſole Judge, and his Loyalty to be the Standard. Nor did the Covenanters of the laſt Age, or the Rebels executed in this, deny they ought to obey the King: But they inſiſted, they ought to obey him no farther, than as his Commands were conſiſtent with the Laws of God and Nature, and with the COVENANT: And, when they were aſked, Who ſhould be Judge of this? They ſtill made themſelves the Judges; and there lay the Treaſon. They ſeemed to tread in the Steps of their rebellious Progenitors; whoſe great Error was, that they thought themſelves, and not the King, Judges of what Reformation was wanting in Church and State.

Reply of the Earl's Counſel. Sir John Dalrymple, another of the Earl's Advocates, replied, Where a Man was bound to take an Oath, if he gave in an Explication of the Senſe which he in his private Judgment apprehended to be the genuine Meaning; if his private Senſe did not agree with the Legiſlator's Senſe, then he that had Power to adminiſter the Oath, ought to reject him, as not fulfilling the Intent of the Law: But the Party could incur no other Penalty, than what was impoſed on the Refuſer; which, in this Caſe, was no more than the Loſs of his Office. It was admitted, that the aſſuming a Power to make Laws, was treaſonable; but though the Earl declared his Explanation to be Part of his Oath, he never meant to impoſe it as Part of the Law.

As to thoſe Words, I do not mean to bind up my ſelf in my Station, and in a lawful way to wiſh and endeavour any Alteration, &c. This Clauſe was ſo far from being treaſonable, that every good Subject ought to ſay as much. The Words, lawful Way, ſhewed, that by Alterations could not be underſtood treaſonable Alterations; but ſuch Alterations as the Frailty of 1681. 33 Car. II. human Affairs and Conſtitutions, and the Viciſſitude of Things conſtantly require in the moſt complete Forms of Government.

It was a rational Proſpect; for, if every Thing were done, at preſent, that could be done for the Security of Religion, or Government, there might occur Caſes hereafter that might require new Remedies, and Alterations.

And what Affront was it to the Government, that the Parliament had impoſed an Oath which the Earl was not able to take ſimply? He had not written or ſpoken againſt it; but only was not able to diſcern the Grounds on which it might be ſimply taken; which rather implied want of Senſe, than any Crime: As to the laſt Words, So far as it is conſiſtent &c. he meant no more, than that the Parliament did not deſign to impoſe Contradictions; and therefore ſaid, I take the Teſt as conſiſtent: And it muſt be conſiſtent, if the Parliament did not impoſe Contradictions; as certainly they did not.

King's Advocate rejoins.

The King's Advocate replying again upon the Earl's Counſel, ſaid, He was not to be puniſhed for refuſing, but for defaming the Oath: If he had ſimply refuſed it, the Government had been in no Hazard: But he would retain his Places, and take the Teſt in ſuch Words as gave the Government no Security: It was his defaming the Law, as ridiculous and inconſiſtent with the Proteſtant Religion, and creating Miſunderſtandings between the King and his People, that put the Earl in a worſe Condition than he that ſimply refuſed. Had the Earl only reſerved a Power of propoſing to his Majeſty any Alterations, or of concurring with his Majeſty in any Alterations, he might have done this very innocently; but giving himſelf that general Liberty, of wiſhing and endeavouring any Alteration he ſhould think fit, was the Crime: Nor, would the Word lawful make the Matter better; for the greateſt Rebel in Scotland would bind himſelf to a lawful Obedience, provided he might be judge of the Lawfulneſs. The Covenant itſelf had not only the Words above-cited; but they called the World to be the Witneſſes of their Loyalty and Sincerity.

As to riſing in Arms, or oppoſing a lawful Succeſſor, not a Covenanter in Scotland but would ſay, He would not do either, but in a lawful Way; and in his Station; and as it was conſiſtent with his Loyalty: But when they came to explain this, they would only do it as they thought fit: They would be Judges themſelves; declaring, that defenſive Arms were lawful; and, that no Prince ought to ſucceed to the Throne, unleſs he ſubſcribed the Covenant.

And whereas it was ſaid, the Earl did not deſign to add to the Law, but to his Oath only; he anſwered, Since the Oath was Part of the Law, adding to the Oath was adding to the Law.

The Court agree the Fact to be Treaſon. A Jury ſworn.

The Court ſuſtaining the Libel, or Indictment, as to the Treaſon, the Jury were ſworn, conſiſting of the Marquis of Montroſe, (Foreman) the Earls of Middleton, Airlie, Perth, Dalhouſie, Roxburgh, Dumfries, Linlithgow; the Lords Lindoors, Sinclair, Bruntiſland; and the Lairds of Goosford, Claverhouſe, Balnamoon, and Park-Gordon.

The Witneſſes being called, depoſed, that they ſaw the Earl give in the aboveſaid Explanation of the Teſt in Writing, which he refuſed to ſubſcribe: And then the Aſſiſe, or Jury, withdrawing, to conſider of the Evidence, returned ſoon after, and unanimouſly (or with one Voice, according to the Scots) found the Earl GUILTY of the Crimes of Treaſon, Leaſing-making, and Leaſing-telling. 1681. 33 Car. II. The Evidence. The Earl convicted.

The Sentence, however, being deferred till his Majeſty's Pleaſure was known; the Earl made his Eſcape in the mean Time, and went up to London incognito; and from thence into Holland; from whence returning to Scotland in a hoſtile Manner, in the next Reign, he was taken in the Field in actual Rebellion, and beheaded: For the Lords of Juſticiary had paſſed Sentence of High-Treaſon on him ſoon after he fled, viz. on the 23d of December 1681. And he was executed, in purſuance of that Sentence, on the 30th of June, 1685, at Edinburgh. He makes his Eſcape. Sentence paſſed on him in his Abſence.

Inſtead of any Remarks of my own, I ſhall entertain the Reader with the Account Doctor Sprat, late Biſhop of Rocheſter, gives of this Tranſaction, in his Narrative of the Rye-Houſe Plot; who ſays, "No ſooner was the Parliament of Scotland adjourned, but the Earl of Argyle, firſt at Edinburgh, next in traverſing ſeveral Shires, made it his chief Buſineſs to inſinuate every where, the moſt malicious Prejudices imaginable, againſt the whole Tenor of the Teſt; and, on his Return to Edinburgh again, declared, he would either not take it at all, or, with a Reſerve of his own Explanation, which he put in Writing, and diſperſed: The Contrivance of it being ſuch, as diſſolved all the Obligations of the Oath; and made his own preſent Fancy, and private Opinion, the only Standard whereby he meant to be guided, in all the publick Duties of his Loyalty and Allegiance. Remarks on Lord Argyle's Trial, by Biſhop Sprat.

"At length, his Majeſty's High Commiſſioner, the Duke, and the Privy Council of that Kingdom, having been well informed of the Earl's ſeditious Carriage, in City and Country, and being fully confirmed, in their Judgments and Conſciences, of his traitorous Purpoſes, in that fallacious and equivocating Paraphraſe on the Teſt, which he owned in their Preſence, perverting thereby the ſound Senſe, and eluding the Force of his Majeſty's Laws, in order to ſet the Subjects looſe from their Obedience; and to perpetuate Schiſm in the Church, and Faction in the State: Upon theſe Grounds he was deſervedly proſecuted before the Sovereign Juſtice Court; and, after a full and equal Trial, found guilty of Treaſon by the learned Judges, and a Jury, not only of his Peers, but many of them his neareſt Relations: And, although the King was far from any Thought of taking away his Life; and no farther Prejudice was deſigned him, but the Forfeiture of ſome Juriſdictions, and Superiorities, which he and his Predeceſſors had ſurreptitiouſly acquired, and moſt tyrannically exerciſed; beſides the Diſpoſal of Part of his Eſtate to pay his Creditors, and ſome few Donatives to thoſe, he and his Father had formerly ruined for their Fidelity to his Majeſty; the Surpluſage was de-

The Trial of CHARLES-GEORGE BOROSKI, CHRISTOPHER VRATZ, JOHN STERN, and CHARLES-JOHN Count CONINGSMARK, for Murder, at the Old Baily, London, Feb. the 28th, 1681. 34 Car. II.

1681. 34 Car. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charged the three firſt, with making an Aſſault on Thomas Thynn, Eſq; on the 12th of that inſtant February, when the ſaid Boroski ſhot the ſaid Thynn with a Blunderbuſs, loaded with four Bullets, giving him thereby four mortal Wounds in his Body, of which he languiſhed till the 13th inſtant, and then died ; and the ſaid Count was charged, with procuring the ſaid three Perſons to commit the ſaid Murder.

A Jury of Aliens and Denizens.

The Priſoners, being all Foreigners, were tried by a Jury, half Engliſh and half Foreigners ; and the Indictment and Evidence interpreted to them.

The Evidence againſt the Principals.

The Evidence being called, William Cole, Mr. Thynn's Footman, was ſworn, and depoſed, That as his Maſter was riding in his Coach from the Counteſs of Northumberland's, on Sunday, about eight in the Evening, being the 11th or 12th of this Inſtant February, he (the Deponent) ran before the Coach with a Flambeaux in his Hand ; and, at the lower End of St. Alban's-Street, hearing a Blunderbuſs go of, he looked back, and ſaw a great Smoke ; and heard his Maſter, Mr. Thynn, cry out, he was murdered ; and ſeeing three Horſemen riding away from the Right Side of the Coach, he (the Deponent) purſued them, crying out Murder, to the upper End of the Hay-Market.

William Ellers, Mr. Thynn's Coachman, depoſed, That driving his Maſter from the Lady Northumberland's, in St. James's-Street, three Men came riding by the Right Side of the Coach, at the End of St. Alban's-Street, and one of them turned about, and ſaid, Stop, you Dog : And as the Deponent was looking about, the Fire was let into the Coach, upon his Maſter ; and the Men ran away.

Hobbs, the Surgeon, depoſed, He was ſent for to Mr. Thynn, about nine on Sunday the 12th of February in the Evening, and found him ſhot with four Bullets, which entered his Body, tore his Guts, wounded his Liver, Stomach, and Gall, broke one of his Ribs, and the great Bone below ; and that he died of thoſe Wounds, every one of them, as he believed, being mortal.

The Coroner alſo depoſed, That he ſat on the Body of Mr. Thynn, and found it wounded with Bullets, as the Surgeon had ſworn.

The three Principals confeſs the Fact.

This Evidence being interpreted to the Priſoners, Boroski ſaid, he could not tell how many Bullets were in the Blunderbuſs ; he did not charge it, though he fired it ; he received it from Capt. Vratz.

Vratz acknowledged his giving the Blunderbuſs to Boroski, and Stern confeſſed he bought it by the Order of Vratz : That they both aſſiſted in loading it, and were preſent when Boroski fired at Mr. Thynn.

Vratz being aſked, What Affront Mr. Thynn had given him ; he ſaid, He heard he had ſpoken ſcandalouſly of the Count, who was his Friend, and a Man he had many Obligations to ; and therefore he (Vratz) took the Quarrel upon himſelf, and challenged Mr. Thynn to fight, which he refuſed ſeveral Times ; whereupon he (Vratz) took the other two Men with him, to oblige him to fight ; and to make his Eſcape afterwards : He confeſſed alſo, he ſtopped the Coach ; but ſaid, Boroſki fired by Miſtake ; for he bid him not fire, unleſs he ſhould be hindered from fighting, or making his Eſcape.

Boroſki, on the other hand, ſaid, Vratz ordered him to fire, as ſoon as he ſtopped the Coach.

Stern

1681. 33 Car. II.

Stern confeſſed Vratz told him, he had a Quarrel with a Gentleman, and if he would aſſiſt him, he would make his Fortune: That the Captain told him alſo, he would give two or three hundred Crowns, to find a Man that would kill Mr. Thynn; and before Boroſki came over, the Captain deſired him to get an Italian to ſtab a Man.

The Evidence againſt the Count.

Then the Witneſſes againſt Count Coningſmark were called: And firſt Hanſon, Tutor to the young Count, depoſed, That the Count (the Priſoner) came into England about a Month before, and lodged firſt at a Corner-Houſe in the Hay-Market; where he ſtaid a Week, keeping his Chamber all the Time: Nor was he known to the Family where he lodged; but went by the Name of The Stranger: That he took a ſecond Lodging, two or three Streets from the former, where he ſtaid but two Days, becauſe the Chimnies ſmoked; and removed from thence to St. Martin's-Lane, where he kept himſelf private, as in his other Lodgings: That he ſaw Captain Vratz at the Count's Lodgings ſometimes, who came into England with him.

The Counſel demanding, If he did not carry a Meſſage from the Count, to the Swediſh Envoy? Hanſon anſwered, No direct Meſſage: But the Count having told him, he heard Eſq; Thynn had ſpoken abuſively of him, he would fain know, what would be the Conſequence, if he ſhould call him to an Account; and ſeemed deſirous to have the Opinion of the Swediſh Envoy; whereupon he, (the Deponent) mentioned it to the Swediſh Envoy; who anſwered, If the Count meddled with Mr. Thynn, he would have but bad Living in England; but what the Law was, in that Caſe, he could not ſay.

The Counſel then aſked him, If there was any thing in that Meſſage, about marrying my Lady Ogle: Hanſon anſwered, The Count enquired, If he ſhould call Mr. Thynn to an Account, and have an Advantage of him; whether the Laws of England would be any Bar to his or Pretenſions on my Lady Ogle.

Then the Counſel aſked Hanſon, when he ſaw Boroſki firſt? He anſwered, He came to him at the French Academy, to enquire for Count Coningſmark, the Friday before the Accident happened: That the Count expected him ſometime before, and thought he had been caſt away in a Storm: He ſaid, he was an able Man, and underſtood Horſes; and he had a Mind to buy Engliſh Horſes, and deſigned this Boroſki, the Polander, ſhould look after them, and dreſs them after the German Way.——That Boroſki came to the Deponent again the next Day, being Saturday, and he went with him to the Count's Lodgings; who aſking him where he had been, Boroſki anſwered, He had been toſſed about upon the Sea; and the Deponent left him at the Count's Lodgings.

The Counſel demanded, What Directions he had about providing Boroſki with a Sword? Hanſon anſwered, He had Directions the ſame Day, to get him a great Coat and a Sword; and he provided them accordingly.

John Wright being ſworn, the Counſel aſked him, When Boroſki the Polander came to England? He anſwered, On Friday, the Tenth of this Month; and that he went with him to the young Count (Brother of the Priſoner)'s Lodgings at the Academy, where Boroski delivered a Letter to Mr. Hanſon; and he was ordered to have the Polander thither again next Morning, which he did, and never ſaw him afterwards. 1681. 33 Car.

Dr. Frederick Harder being ſworn, depoſed, That Captain Vratz lived with Count Coningſmark, and came over to England with him; and that, about a Month ago, Vratz came to the Deponent, and told him, The Count want-to ſpeak with him; and he went to him at his firſt Lodgings, the Corner of the Hay-Market. The Counſel demanding, if the Count went by his own Name, or was in a Diſguiſe; the Doctor anſwered, He deſired to be private, becauſe he was taking Medicines, and would not have it known: He deſired therefore, to be called by the Name of Carlo Cuski; and as for a Diſguiſe, he had a black Whig on. (I think the Count uſually wore his own Hair.)

Several Witneſſes depoſed, That the Count lived privately in his Lodgings: That Captain Vratz lodged with him ſometimes; and Dr. Harder uſed to viſit him.

Watts, a Boy, depoſed, That he came to live with the Count ten Days before the Death of Mr. Thynn: And that Sunday Evening the Fact was done, Captain Vratz came to his Lord's Lodgings, as he was waiting below Stairs, and did not come down again, before he, (the Deponent) went Home, for he lay at his Father's

That the Polander was at his Lord's Lodgings, on Saturday before the Murder, and dined with the other Servants; and on Sunday a Sword was delivered to him, and he went away that Morning, with a Pair of Boots and the Sword under his Arm, having a new Coat on; and it appeared, the Polander had a Buff Coat under his Great Coat.

Watts the Boy farther depoſed, That he came to his Lord's Lodgings, the Monday Morning after Mr. Thynn was killed, and he was packing up his Things; and his Father, who was a Porter, carried away two Portmanteaus for him; and that the Count had a black Peruke on, when he went away.

Watts, the Father, depoſed, That he carried two Portmanteaus to the Windſor Coach for the Count, about nine on Monday Morning, being the Day after Mr. Thynn was killed.

Raynes a Swede, depoſed, That the Count lay at his Houſe at Redriff, from the Monday after Mr. Thynn was killed, to the Thurſday following; when he was carried by a Skuller to Deptford, the next Day to Greenwich, and the Day after to Graveſend.

Then two of the King's Meſſengers were ſworn, who depoſed, That they took the Count as he was landing at Graveſend, the Sunday after the Murder; and that, when they ſeized him, he gave a ſudden Start, and his Whig fell off: That they carried him before the Mayor of Graveſend, and afterwards to an Inn in the Town; where he ſhewed himſelf under great Concern, when he was told, the Captain and the Polander had confeſſed ſome Particulars; and ſaid, It was a Stain upon his Blood; but one good Action in the Wars, or lodging on a Counterſcarp, would waſh all that away.

Count

1681. 34 Car. II.

The Count's Defence.

Count Coningsmark ſaid in his Defence, That he came into England with a Deſign to raiſe a Regiment to ſerve the King againſt the French: That he had already ſerved the King at Tangier, when this Polander attended him; and that he deſigned, at that Time, to bring him to England, to dreſs his Horſes after the German Way; and had actually ſent over a thouſand Piſtoles to buy Horſes, which the young Count atteſted.

That he had a Diſtemper broke out in his Arms and Breaſt, which obliged him to live privately, till he was cured: And beſides, his Equipage was not come over, and he could not appear like a Man of Quality, till it arrived.

That he never had any Quarrel with Mr Thynn; or ever ſaw him, to the beſt of his Remembrance: That he provided the Polander with a Coat, becauſe he was in Rags; and the broad Sword was no more than what Servants of his Bulk and Make uſually wore: And for his Buff Coat, he had it before.

That the Reaſon he withdrew, was, becauſe he was afraid the People would pull him to Pieces; they ſeeming to ſuſpect he was concerned in the Fact.

Obſervations of the Counſel on the Evidence.

Sir Francis Wimington then made his Obſervations on the Evidence for the King, and ſaid; As to the Principals, they had confeſſed the Fact: But could any rational Man believe, from the Account they gave themſelves, that they had any Delight in killing that innocent Gentleman? There muſt be ſome other Reaſon for committing that barbarous Murder: And the Count was a very unhappy Man to have ſuch a Relation to the Principals; two of whom, Vratz and the Polander, were of his Lordſhip's Family; and Vratz was with him on that very Evening the Fact was committed, even after it was done. And it made it the more ſuſpicious, that the Count ſhould provide Boroski with a Sword and Boots that very Sunday Morning he murdered Mr. Thynn; and that the Polander ſhould go from the Count's Lodgings with a Buff Coat under his Great Coat, and never return till the Fact was committed.

The Court and the Jury might obſerve what a kind of Creature Boroski was; how likely to do any thing of that kind, being at the Command of ſo great a Perſon. It was obſervable alſo, the Witneſſes were moſt of them the Count's Friends, unwilling to declare the Truth, till it was with Difficulty drawn from them: And where ſhould a Man go for the Original of this Buſineſs? Could any one think it was contrived by the three Principals? To what End or Purpoſe? What Advantage could it be to them? He muſt ſay, he knew no where to go for the Author of this villainous Fact; nor whom to accuſe as the prime Contriver of it, but the Count. At which the People ſhouted.

Mr. Williams alſo made his Obſervations on the Evidence; and, beſides the Remarks made by Sir Francis, took Notice, That Hanſon, his Brother's Tutor, acknowledged that the Count talked of requiring Satisfaction of Mr. Thynn on the Lady Ogle's Account; and enquired what might be the Conſequence of it: Nor had the Count given any rational Anſwer, as to his lurking and hiding himſelf, ever ſince he came to England. He pretended, indeed, to labour under a Diſtemper which he would not have diſcovered; and yet, the next Morning after the Fact was done, he valued neither Diſeaſe nor Phyſick, but went by Water, and attempted to fly beyond Sea. And could any Man believe, when Vratz came over with him, lodged with him, and was every Day in familiar Converſation with him; and came the Morning before, and in the Evening immediately after the Murder, and ſtaid with the Count a conſiderable Time, that his Lordſhip could be perfectly innocent? Would not any Man conclude him acceſſary to the Murder? And as to his pretended Fears of the People to excuſe his Flight, he knew he might, without Danger, have ſurrendered himſelf to a Magiſtrate, and been protected, if he had been innocent.

1681. 34 Car. II.

Directions of the Chief Juſtice to the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice then gave his Directions to the Jury; and obſerved, That where one Man ſhoots another, and two are with him, who came on Purpoſe to countenance the Fact, it was Murder in them all. That Vratz and Stern acknowledged themſelves to be at the Murder; but ſaid they only came to fight a Duel with Mr. Thynn: For Vratz made that his Excuſe, That he intended to kill him fairly; and the other two were to ſtand by to ſee him make the beſt of it. So that they all came with a murderous Intent, and a Murder followed, and conſequently the three Principals were all guilty of Murder.

As to Count Coningsmark, the Queſtion was, Whether he commanded, or gave any Direction, to have the Murder committed? for without that he could not be an Acceſſary.

If a Gentleman has an Affront given him, which he ſeems to reſent; and any of his Servants officiouſly, without acquainting him with it, will go and kill the Perſon they apprehend has affronted their Maſter, without his Knowledge, he is not guilty: And if they believe he did not know of it, till after it was done, they muſt acquit him.

The Principals convicted.

Whereupon the Jury, after half an Hour's Receſs, brought in the three Principals GUILTY; but acquitted the Count, who was ordered, however, to enter into a Recognizance with three Sureties, to appear the next Seſſions, and anſwer any Appeal that might be brought by Mr. Thynn's Relations.

The Count acquitted.

The Principals condemned, and executed.

The other three being brought to the Bar again, and asked what they had to ſay why Sentence of Death ſhould not be paſſed upon them; Vratz inſiſted, he had not had a fair Trial: And Stern ſaid, it was for Captain Vratz's Sake he was concerned in the Fact. And as to Boroski, he did not pretend to make any Apology for the Murder, looking upon himſelf to be under an Obligation of obeying his Superiors without reſerve. Whereupon Sentence of Death was pronounced upon the Principals by the Recorder, the Judges being gone off the Bench. They were all three hanged in Pall-Mall, the tenth of March following: And Boroski, who fired the Blunderbuſs, was afterwards hanged in Chains near Mile-End.

1681. 34 Car. II. Remarks.

As Mr. Thynn was looked upon to be of Lord Shaftesbury's Party, they gave out, at first, that this was another Branch of the Popish Plot, and that a general Massacre was still to be expected from the Papists: But the Matter soon appeared to be no more than a Love-Affair; and that Mr. Thynn had been murdered by some of the Servants or Dependants of Count Coningsmark, who had been his Rival when he courted the Lady Ogle, of which Mr. Echard gives us the following Account, (viz.)

Joscelin late Earl of Northumberland, of the Family of Percy, dying in the Year 1670, left no Issue but the Lady Elizabeth, his Daughter and sole Heir (at the time of his Death, about four Years of Age) who being a great Fortune, was, in her Minority, married to Henry Earl of Ogle, Son and Heir to the Duke of Newcastle; who dying soon after, left her a Virgin Widow. After which, many People of the first Quality made their Addresses to her; and among the rest Count Coningsmark, whose Pretensions, it is said, were countenanced by the King: But the young Lady, by her Grandmother's Contrivance, was married privately, the Summer before this Accident happened, to Mr. Thynn, a Gentleman of ten thousand Pounds a Year Estate; who had been a Member of several Parliaments, and made some Figure both within the House, and out of it: But, whether the Lady herself did not approve of the Match, or was put upon it by others, she privately went over to Holland in Michaelmas Term, 1681, before Mr. Thynn had ever been in a Bed with her.

Whereupon it was said a Suit would be commenced, concerning the Validity of the Marriage; and that the best Civilians were retained in the Cause, on one Side or other. And in the mean time Count Coningsmark came over incognito into England (as appears by the preceding Trial) and Mr. Thynn was murdered by his Servants, in the Manner above related, about a Month after his Arrival: And the King ordering the Ports to be stopped, and strict Search made for the Murderers, the three Principals were traced to their respective Lodgings, and apprehended there; and six Days after the Count was taken at Gravesend; and they were all tried, in the Manner above related. 1681. 34 Car. II.

The Historian adds, That Stern and the Polander died very penitent, though their Notion had for some time been, That Obedience to the Orders of their Superiors would clear any Man from Guilt: But Capt. Vratz seemed to continue in his first Opinion, that God had a greater Regard to Gentlemen than to require Punctilio's of Humiliation at their Hands: And that it was absurd to think, that so many thousand Gentlemen in the World, who stood upon their Honour and Reputation as well as he, should be for ever damned, because they could not stoop to Things that would spoil the Figure they made.

Some however, according to this Historian, who deals pretty much in Judgments, looked upon this Misfortune as a Judgment on Mr. Thynn, for his treacherous Behaviour to another Lady, remarkable for her Modesty and Vertue, who had bravely resisted the Duke of Monmouth's Attacks, as being a married Man. Whereupon the Duke, to revenge this Disappointment, applied himself to Mr. Thynn to effect what he himself despaired of accomplishing; and Thynn found Means, under Pretence of making honourable Love to the Lady, to debauch her, and then shamefully abandoned her; which was reflected on after his Death: And it became a common Saying, If he had married the Lady he had bedded; or bedded the Lady he had married, he had never come to that untimely End. As to the Lady Ogle, she was afterwards married to the Duke of Somerset; and soon shewed the World (says the same Author) that her Worth and Reputation was above all Blemish.

The Trial of NATHANIEL THOMPSON, WILLIAM PAIN, and JOHN FARWELL, for printing and publiſhing ſeveral Libels, June 20, 1682. 34 Car. II.

Trial of Thompſon, &c.

The Charge.

THE Attorney-General preferred an Information againſt them, wherein he ſet forth, That the Defendants, to reflect on the Juſtice of the Nation, and ſcandalize the Witneſſes who gave Evidence at the Trial of Green, Berry, and Hill, of Godfrey's Murder, had written and printed ſeveral ſcandalous Libels; one whereof was entitled, A Letter to Miles Prance, concerning the Murder of Sir Edmundbury Godfrey: Wherein it was ſuggeſted, That the ſaid Godfrey was Felo de ſe, and did reflect on the Witneſſes and the Coroner, as though he had bribed the Jury. And that in another Libel, printed by Thompſon, called his Proteſtant Intelligence, he ſaid, He would make it out, by a Cloud of Witneſſes, that Godfrey murdered himſelf; whereby they had defamed the Juſtice of the Nation, &c.

Confeſſed.

The Defendants confeſſing themſelves guilty of the Charge, and ſubmitting to the Mercy of the Court,

Sentenced to be pilloried, and fined.

Thompſon and Farwell were ſentenced to ſtand in the Pillory in the Palace-Yard, and to pay each of them a Fine of One hundred Pounds: And Pain was only adjudged to pay a Fine of One hundred Pounds, and to be impriſoned till paid.

The Trial of FORD Lord GREY of Werk, ROBERT CHARNOCK, ANNE CHARNOCK, DAVID JONES, FRANCES JONES, and REBECCA JONES, for certain Miſdemeanors, at the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench, November 23, 1682. 34 Car. II.

Lord Grey's Trial.

The Charge.

AN Information was brought againſt the Defendants, in the Name of the Attorney-General, Sir Robert Sawyer, ſetting forth, That the Defendants, the 20th of Auguſt then laſt paſt, at Epſom, in the County of Surrey, did conſpire the Ruin and Deſtruction of the Lady Henrietta Berkeley, Daughter of the Right Honourable George Earl of Berkeley, and to that End did ſeduce her from her Father's Houſe, being then under the Age of 18 Years, and in the Cuſtody and Government of her ſaid Father; ſoliciting her to commit Whoredom and Adultery with the ſaid Lord Grey, who was before married to the Lady Mary, her Siſter: And that, after they had carried the ſaid Lady Henrietta from her Father's, they obſcured her in ſecret Places, ſhifting her from Place to Place, and continued that Courſe of Life ever ſince; to the Ruin of the young Lady, and Grief of her Friends.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, the Lady Arabella Berkeley depoſed, That ſhe intercepted a Letter from her Siſter Harriet, to the Lord Grey; wherein ſhe ſaid, My Siſter Bell did not ſuſpect our being together laſt Night, for ſhe did not hear the Noiſe. Pray come again on Sunday, or Monday: If the laſt, I ſhall be very impatient. That my Lord Grey afterwards, told the Deponent, He had no Love, no Conſideration for any Thing upon Earth, but for the dear Lady Henrietta: And that he would be revenged on all the Family, if they expoſed her.

The Lady Berkeley depoſed, That when ſhe firſt diſcovered the Lord Grey, her Son-in-Law, was in Love with his Siſter, ſhe ſent to ſpeak with him; and told him, he had done baſely and treacherouſly, in holding an Intrigue of Criminal Love with his Siſter: He had better have murdered her. To which he anſwered, He confeſſed he had been falſe and baſe; but deſired her to conſider (and then ſhed abundance of Tears) what it was that made him guilty: And ſhe demanding, Whether he was, indeed, in Love with his Siſter-in-Law? He fell a weeping again, and ſaid he was unfortunate; and if ſhe told my Lord, her Father, and his Wife of it, it might make him deſperate, and put ſuch Thoughts into his Wife's Head, as might occaſion their parting; and he being deſperate, he knew not what he might do; he might neither conſider Family or Relation. She replying, this would make him look very black in Story, he ſaid, That was true; but he could not help it: He was miſerable; and if ſhe knew how miſerable, ſhe would pity him; and was very importunate ſhe would keep it ſecret.

That when ſhe acquainted her Daughter Harriet, that my Lord Grey had confeſſed the Intrigue, ſhe fell into Tears, begged Pardon for what ſhe had done, and promiſed never never to have any Converſation with her Brother-in-Law any more; but Lord Grey coming down to Durdans, my Lord Berkeley's Houſe, in Surrey, afterwards, on Pretence of a Viſit, and going away again on Saturday in the Afternoon, her Daughter ran away after him the ſucceeding Night.

Then ſeveral Witneſſes proved, That Charnock and his Wife aſſiſted the Lady Harriet in her Flight, and took Lodgings for her, &c. That ſhe lodged at Jones's at Charing-Croſs; and was attended and taken care of by Jones and his Wife: And that my Lord Grey came to viſit the Lady Harriet there, and at other Lodgings, in a Diſguiſe.

Mr. Craven depoſed, That my Lord Grey ſaid, he would acquaint him with the whole Intrigue between him and the Lady Harriet (as they were a Shooting), and acknowledged he had a great Affection for her, ever ſince ſhe was a Child: That when he firſt wrote to her about it, ſhe was very angry, and threatned to diſcloſe it to her Father and Mother: But one Day, when they were walking together, ſhe took his (Lord Grey's) Hand, and ſqueezed it to her Breaſt, which was the firſt time he perceived ſhe loved him; and from that Time, for a Twelvemonth before ſhe went away, he ſaw her almoſt every Night: Though my Lady Berkeley put a French Woman to lie with her, yet ſhe roſe from the French Woman, and came to him. That it was not to be imagined what he ſuffered, to come into her Company: He had been two Days locked up in her Cloſet, without Meat or Drink, but only ſome Sweetmeats. That he had done all he could to divert his Paſſion, and would fain have avoided the bringing ſo much Infamy on his Family and his Lady's. He endeavoured to cool his Flame, by making Love to two other Ladies, whom he courted and enjoyed; but all ſignified nothing, he could not ſubdue it. And when the Deponent ſuggeſted the Danger he might be in from the Law; he ſaid, he had conſidered of that, and they could not do any thing againſt him for it, if they examined the Caſe of Mrs. Heneage and Lord Cavendiſh. He ſaid he could not perſuade her, and he would not betray her; he owned he had her in his Power; but he would not part with her never to ſee her again.

Lord Cavendiſh being in Court, ſaid, Mr. Craven had very impertinently mentioned his Name; and deſired to know, Why his Name was mentioned any more than the two Ladies? Craven replied, My Lord Grey did not mention the two Ladies Names to him.

Lord Grey thereupon ſaid, No, nor Lord Cavendiſh's neither: It was all a Lie; and deſired he might ſpeak for himſelf. He proceeded, and ſaid, No Man ever lay under a more infamous Accuſation: His Honour was at Stake; and if his Life was ſo too, he ſhould not be more concerned to ſave it, than he was to clear his Reputation. Was he guilty of the Villany laid to his Charge, he needed no other Puniſhment; he was ſure he could not have a worſe than the Reflection of his own Conſcience for it; and he ought to be baniſhed the Society of Mankind. He confeſſed he was ſo unhappy as to have a very great Kindneſs for the unfortunate Lady, though not a Criminal one, as the Witneſſes would have it believed. He proteſted he was no way aſſiſting to her Eſcape or privy to it: Nor had he ever detained her from her Father, though he had ſuffered a Fortnight's cloſe Confinement for it. That one Day, when he was at a Coffee-houſe in Covent-Garden, indeed, the young Lady called in a Coach at the Door, and ſent for him; and when he came to the Coach ſide, ſhe gave him a tedious Hiſtory of her ill Uſage at home, which made her come away. He obſerved, That he acquainted his Lordſhip (the Chief Juſtice) when the Warrants were out to ſearch for her, that ſhe ſought only for Protection, and was willing to return home, if ſhe might be ſecured ſhe ſhould not be ill treated again: And then, when his Lordſhip ſaid, he (Lord Grey) could not protect her againſt her Father; he anſwered, She was not in his Houſe, or in his Cuſtody; and his only Crime was, that he knew where ſhe was: And if he deſerved Puniſhment for keeping his Word and Faith with her, which he gave her upon her Importunity in a Letter, That he would not betray her, he muſt ſubmit to it, he could not do otherwiſe in Honour.

The Lady Harriet herſelf, being ſworn, at the Deſire of Lord Grey's Counſel, depoſed, That my Lord Grey had no Hand in her Eſcape; ſhe had no Advice from him, or any Body about him, to go away; nor did he ſo much as know of it: Nor did ſhe ſee Lord Grey till a great while after ſhe went from her Father's; the firſt time was in a Hackney-Coach, at a Coffee-houſe Door in Covent-Garden: Nor did any of thoſe mentioned in the Information, aſſiſt her to eſcape from Durdans. Lady Harriet herſelf allowed to give Evidence.

Then ſhe deſired to clear her Reputation, and tell the Reaſon of her coming away from her Father's: But the Chief Juſtice ſaid, he ſaw no Reaſon to indulge her ſo far, unleſs ſhe had appeared more ingenuous in her Evidence. She had injured her own Reputation, and proſtituted her Body and her Honour, and was not to be believed. (For ſeveral Witneſſes had proved that Charnock aſſiſted her in her Eſcape: That he and his Wife took Lodgings for her; and that ſhe lodged at Jones's at Charing-Croſs, where the Lord Grey came to ſee her in Diſguiſe. The Chief Juſtice's Reflections on her.

The Lord Chief Juſtice proceeding to give his Directions to the Jury, ſaid, The Queſtion before you is, Whether there was any ſuch unlawful Solicitation of this Lady's Love, as is laid in the Information? And whether ſhe was inveigled to withdraw herſelf, and run away from her Father's Houſe? And whether my Lord Grey did frequent her Company afterwards? The Evidence that has been given you is very plain, if you believe thoſe Witneſſes that ſpeak from my Lord's own Mouth; That he hath a long time ſolicited her to unlawful Luſt: There is nothing elſe in it, Gentlemen (that is the plain Engliſh of it all) He has enticed her to unlawful Luſt: And the Queſtion is, Whether my Lord Grey had any Hand in carrying her away? As to that, it is pretty manifeſt He directs the Jury.

1682. 34 Car. II. manifeſt, that his Coachman Charnock did carry her away, who was in his Company that Night, and pretended to go to Up-Park with his Lord; but was ſeen in London next Morning at Nine o'Clock: There is full Evidence of the Guilt of Charnock and his Wife, who were the Solicitors in this Buſineſs, and took Lodgings for her. Jones and his Wife are as guilty as the reſt, who contrived to keep her ſecret, eſpecially after Jones had promiſed Captain Fitzgerrard to let him ſee her: And whether Lord Grey was not as guilty as Charnock, or any of the reſt; nay, indeed, the chief Mover of this ill thing, they were to conſider. If they believed the Evidence for the King, moſt certainly they were all guilty of the Charge, unleſs Rebecca Jones, againſt whom there is no Evidence.

She declares ſhe is married.

The Jury being about to withdraw, the Lord Berkeley deſired he might have his Daughter again: And the Chief Juſtice ſaid he muſt have her: But ſhe ſaid ſhe would not go to her Father; ſhe was married to one Mr. Turner, Son to Sir William Turner, the Advocate, who was there in Court: And thereupon Mr. Turner declared he was married to her. Serjeant Jeffries then repreſented, That this was all a Trick, and one of the fouleſt Practices that ever was uſed: They could prove that Mr. Turner was married to another Perſon before, who was ſtill alive, and had Children by her. Mr. Turner denying this, Serjeant Jeffries demanded, If he did not live at Bromley with a Woman as her Husband, and had Children by her; and being queſtioned for it, they did not own themſelves to be Man and Wife? Turner again denied it, and averred, that the Lady Harriet was his Wife; and he had Witneſſes in Court to prove it.

The Lord Berkeley anſwered, This Court had not the Cognizance of Marriages; they would not determine that, how ready ſoever he was to make it out by Witneſſes; and deſired his Daughter to be delivered to him, and they might take their Remedy.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, He ſaw no Reaſon why Lord Berkeley might not take his Daughter: But Judge Dolben anſwered, They could not diſpoſe of another Man's Wife: They ſaid they were married, and the Court had nothing to do with it. 1682. 34 Car. II.

The Lady Harriet inſiſting ſtill ſhe would go with her Husband, the Earl of Berkeley ſaid, Huſwife, you ſhall go with me; and deſired again he might have his Daughter. The Chief Juſtice ſaid, they did not hinder him; he might take her: But ſhe anſwering ſhe would go with her Husband, the Earl ſaid, Then all that are my Friends ſeize her, I charge you: And there was a great Scuffle about the Lady, and Swords drawn in the Hall: Whereupon the Lord Chief Juſtice coming by, ordered his Tipſtaff to take the Lady Harriet into Cuſtody, and carry her to the King's-Bench: And Turner deſiring to be committed with her, they were both carried over to the King's-Bench Priſon. It was reported, Turner lay with the Lady that Night at the Marſhal's Houſe; but ſhe was releaſed out of Priſon by Order of the Court, the laſt Day of the Term.

A great Conteſt about the Lady, in the Hall.

She and her pretended Husband ſent to the King's-Bench.

The Lord Grey's Counſel moving the Court that his Lordſhip might be diſcharged from his Confinement, now the Lady was produced,

The Attorney-General anſwered, They deſired the Lord Grey might be forth-coming, in Caſe he ſhould be convicted, to receive the Judgment of the Court.

Mr. Juſtice Dolben ſaid, The King's Counſel did not do well, to preſs them to do what could not be done: They had, perhaps, gone further than ordinary in committing him, as he was a Peer; but they did it to reſtore the young Lady to her Liberty: And now ſhe appeared, and ſaid ſhe was under no Reſtraint, they could do no more. She was properly the Plaintiff in the Writ de Homine replegiando, which had been brought; and they could not now detain his Lordſhip in Cuſtody: Whereupon the Lord Grey was admitted to Bail, at the Suit of the Lady Henrietta Berkeley.

Lord Grey admitted to Bail.

The Jury having given a private Verdict the over Night, (viz.) That all the Defendants were guilty, except Rebecca Jones, whom they acquitted, confirmed their Verdict in open Court the next Morning. But the Matter being amicably compromiſed the next Vacation, no Judgment was ever prayed, or given, againſt any of the Defendants.

Lord Grey, and three more of the Defendants, convicted.

1683. 35 Car. II. Trial of Pilkington, &c.

The Trial of THOMAS PILKINGTON and SAMUEL SHUTE, Sheriffs, HENRY CORNISH, Alderman, FORD Lord GREY of Werk, Sir THOMAS PLAYER, Knt. Chamberlain of London, SLINGSBY BETHEL, Esq; FRANCIS JENKS, JOHN DEAGLE, RICHARD FREEMAN, RICHARD GOODENOUGH, ROBERT KEY, JOHN WICKHAM, SAMUEL SWINNOCK, and JOHN JEKYLL, Sen. for a Riot, &c. at Guild-Hall, London. 8 May 1683. 35 Car. II.

The Charge AN Information was preferred againſt the Defendants, by Sir Robert Sawyer, Attorney-General, ſetting forth, That on the 24th of June then laſt paſt, a Common-Hall was ſummoned by Sir John Moore, Knt. Lord Mayor of London, and thereupon held for the Election of Sheriffs, for the Year enſuing; and that on the ſaid 24th of June, the ſaid Sir John Moore adjourned the ſaid Court, till the Tueſday following, by Proclamation, and commanded all Perſons to depart: But the Defendants, intending to diſturb the Peace, after the ſaid Adjournment, did unlawfully, with many other Perſons, continue together, and riotouſly aſſault the Lord Mayor: And the ſaid Pilkington and Shute, by Colour of their Office, as Sheriffs, with the reſt of the Defendants, did continue the Poll, declaring to the People, that Sir John Moore, the Lord Mayor, had no Power to adjourn the Poll, and continued this great Tumult for two Hours, to the Terror of the King's Subjects, &c.

The Evidence. The great Queſtion being, Whether the Sheriffs had a Right to call, or adjourn the Common-Hall? it appeared, even by Sir Robert Clayton and the Defendants own Witneſſes, that the Lord Mayor always called thoſe Halls, for the Election of Sheriffs, and adjourned them; and that no Sheriffs had ever done either.

Proof alſo was made, that the Lord Mayor actually adjourned the ſaid Court, held on the 24th of June laſt, from Saturday to Tueſday following; and when the Cryer ſaid, God ſave the King, the diſaffected Mob hiſſed: And as the Lord Mayor came out of the Hall, he was thrown down by them, and his Hat ſtruck off; and that he was in great Danger of his Life. That when he was got out, he commanded the People to go Home; but Shute and Pilkington, and the other Rioters, continued the Poll a great while after, notwithſtanding: And ſome of their Aſſociates cried out, No God bleſs the King; Down with the Sword; No Lord Mayor; Preſs on, preſs on; God ſave the Sheriffs. And all the Defendants, above-named, were proved to be among the Rioters.

The Defence made by the Defendant's Counſel. The Counſel for the Defendants, Mr. Williams and Sir Francis Winnington, obſerved, That it was not proved, any of the Defendants ſpoke the Words mentioned; and ſhould it be admitted that the Lord Mayor had the Right of adjourning the Poll, and the Sheriffs had not, but were in the Wrong in continuing the Poll after his Lordſhip had adjourned it; yet it would be hard to make a Riot of it, ſince they only proceeded on a Miſtake of their Right.

Mr. Attorney's Reply. Mr. Attorney-General obſerved on the other Side, That now the Right of the Lord Mayor, to call and adjourn theſe Aſſemblies, evidently appeared: And that it was as much a Riot to continue the Multitude together, after they were legally diſmiſſed, as it would have been to call them together, when they had no Authority to do it: It was uſurping an Authority in the City, contrary to the King's Charter. As the chief Magiſtrate made a Proclamation for them to depart, and they ſtaid together afterwards, and Diſorders happened, this was a Riot; and if no Diſorder had happened, it would have been a Rout, and unlawful Aſſembly, if they had continued together: And ſhould it be admitted, the Defendants themſelves committed no particular Outrage; yet their being there, and countenancing the Riot, made them guilty of it.

The Chief Juſtice's Direction to the Jury. The Chief Juſtice, in his Directions to the Jury, ſaid, It was no Excuſe to ſay they were ignorant of the Law; it was never the leſs a Riot: If the Defendants were really ignorant, that was to be conſidered when they came to ſet the Fines; but theſe Gentlemen could not be ignorant of this, becauſe it was the conſtant Practice, before their Eyes, for the Lord Mayor to adjourn theſe Aſſemblies: But though it was ſo before, they would not have it ſo now. They would have No Tory Mayor, No God Bleſs the King; but would bleſs only their Proteſtant Sheriffs. The King muſt be put out of his Throne, to put the two Sheriffs into it. And though it was not proved that any of the Defendants ſaid theſe Words, yet they were the Men that kept this Rabble together three Hours.

The Jury's Verdict. The Jury withdrawing, after a ſhort Receſs, found all the Defendants, above-named, guilty of the Riot: Whereupon Pilkington was fined 500 l. Shute 1000 Marks, Lord Grey 1000 Marks, Player 500 Marks, Bethel 1000 Marks, Corniſh 1000 Marks, Jenks 300 Marks, 1683. 35 Car. II. fined.

Marks, Freeman 300 Marks, Goodenough 500 Marks, Deagle 400 Marks, Key 100 Marks, Wickham 100 Marks, Swinnock 500 Marks, and Jekyll 200 Marks.

The Judgment reverſed at the Revolution.

As many of the Defendants, as were living at the Revolution, and the Executors of thoſe that were dead, procured this Judgment to be reverſed by Writ of Error in Parliament: They alſo preſented a Petition to King William, ſuggeſting that they were convicted of this pretended Riot, by the Contrivance of Sir John Moore Lord Mayor, Sir Dudley North, Sir Peter Rich, and Sir Edmond Saunders, late Chief Juſtice of the King's-Bench; and prayed they might be excepted out of the Act of Grace. 1683. 35 Car. II.

The greateſt Inducement for reverſing this Judgment, poſſibly, was the pretended Zeal of the Defendants for the Revolution.

1683. 35 Car. II. Ward's Trial.

The Trial of Sir PATIENCE WARD, for Perjury, in the Court of King's-Bench, the 19th of May, 1683. 35 Car. II.

1683. 35 Car. II.

The Charge.

AN Information was brought by Mr. Attorney-General, Sir Rober Sawyer, againſt Sir Patience Ward, ſetting forth, That whereas the moſt illuſtrious James Duke of York, the King's only Brother, had brought an Action de Scandalis Magnatum againſt Thomas Pilkington, for ſpeaking the following ſcandalous Words, Viz. He (meaning the Duke) hath burnt the City, and is come to cut our Throats. The ſaid Sir Patience did falſly and corruptly ſwear, at the Trial between the Duke and the ſaid Pilkington, That there was no mention of the Duke of York, or of cutting of Throats, while the ſaid Pilkington was in the Room, where thoſe Words were charged to have been ſpoken: That the Diſcourſe about the Duke of York was over, before Pilkington came in, and that the Duke of York was not named. Whereas in Truth there was mention made of the Duke of York, and of cutting of Throats; and the Diſcourſe concerning the Duke of York, was not over, when the ſaid Pilkington came into the ſaid Room.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Mr. Hatch depoſed, That Sir Patience did poſitively affirm, upon his Oath, at the ſaid Trial between the Duke and Pilkington, That Pilkington did not come in, till all the Diſcourſe was over about the Duke: And did further depoſe, That there was a Diſcourſe about burning the City by the Papiſts; and Pilkington ſaid, He hath burnt the City: Whereupon he (Sir Patience) took him by the Shoulder, ſaying, explain yourſelf: You mean Hubert (the Perſon that was hanged for firing the City); and Pilkington anſwered, Yes: And that Sir Patience did poſitively depoſe further, That there was no Mention made of cutting of Throats.

Mr. Wood depoſed, That Sir Patience, at the ſaid Trial, did affirm poſitively, or upon his Oath, That the Diſcourſe concerning the Duke of York was over, before Pilkington came in; and that there was no Mention of cutting of Throats.

Sir James Smith, Alderman, depoſed, That Sir Patience did poſitively, or upon his Oath, ſay, at the aforeſaid Trial, That Mr. Pilkington was not there, while they were diſcourſing concerning going to St. James's (the Reſidence of the Duke); declaring the Duke was not talk'd of: Whereupon the Chief Juſtice Pemberton applying himſelf to Sir Harry Tulſe, Sir Harry made anſwer, I am very ſorry to ſay it; he was there all the while.

Sir John Peake depoſed, That Sir Patience affirmed, either poſitively, or upon his Oath, That Mr. Pilkington was not by, while the Duke of York was mentioned.

Sir Thomas Field depoſed, That Sir Patience did ſay, That Mr. Pilkington was not in the Room, when any Thing was ſpoken relating to the Duke of York.

Sir Francis Butler, who was Foreman of the Jury, at the Trial between the Duke and Pilkington, depoſed, That the great Queſtion at that Trial was, Whether the Words (firing the City) related to the Duke of York, or not? And Sir Patience depoſed, They did not relate to the Duke of York, and would prove that Alderman Pilkington was not in the Room, while they diſcourſed of the Duke of York; that this he ſwore poſitively, to the beſt of his Remembrance; he heard no Qualification: That after the Jury went out of Court, they debated the Matter among themſelves; and they ſhould have laid a little more Weight on the Evidence of Sir Patience, if he had not ſworn, That when Sir William Hooker took ſome Exceptions at Pilkington's Words, and asked, What do you mean? He (Sir Patience) laid one Hand upon Pilkington's Mouth, and the other upon his Breaſt, and demanded alſo, What do you mean? And Anſwer was made, Hubert. This made the Jury believe his Evidence ought to be ſet aſide.

Sir Harry Tulſe, Alderman, depoſed, That on the 10th of April, according to an Order of Court made the Day before, they (the Aldermen) met at Guildhall, where were preſent Sir William Hooker, Sir Patience Ward, Sheriff Pilkington, and himſelf: And Alderman Pilkington ſaid, He burnt our City, and is come (or will come) to cut our Throats. This Evidence he (Sir William Tulſe) gave at the Trial between the Duke and Pilkington; and now averred that it was true. He teſtified further, That he was asked at that Trial, What was the preceding Diſcourſe? He anſwered, It was concerning an Order for going

1683. 35 Car. II. to St. James's, or to the Duke of York; ſome complained of that Order, and would have had it re-debated: Whereupon he (Sir Harry) anſwered, It was too late now, for the Court had agreed it; and then Pilkington ſaid thoſe Words, He hath burnt our City, and is come, or will come, to cut our Throats.

It being demanded of Sir Harry, if the Duke was named? He anſwered, he could not poſitively ſay he was named at that Time; for the Debate was about the Order made, to congratulate the Duke of York, or of going to St. James's; one of them he was ſure was named.

The Chief Juſtice demanding of Sir Harry, who he underſtood Pilkington meant, when he ſaid, He is, or will, come to cut our Throats? Sir Harry anſwered, In his Opinion it was the Duke of York.

Sir William Hooker depoſed, That Pilkington, ſtanding at the End of the Table, in the Room where the Aldermen were met, did ſay, Hath he burnt the City? and is he come to cut our Throats?

It being demanded, If the Duke of York was named? Sir William anſwered, he (Sir William) did name the Duke of York to Pilkington, after thoſe Words were ſpoken: And being further asked, If it was plain, Pilkington meant the Duke of York, when he ſaid thoſe Words? Sir William anſwered, Nothing could appear more plain; for the Diſcourſe was about that Matter, and nothing elſe; and that Sir Patience Ward was there all the Time.

The Defence. The Defendant's Counſel urged in his Behalf, That Sir Patience did not ſwear any Thing poſitively, at the Trial between the Duke and Pilkington; but qualified his Evidence, by ſwearing, As he believed, or according to the beſt of his Memory, and conſequently could not be perjured; and brought ſeveral Witneſſes, and ſome that took Notes at that Trial, who teſtified, That Sir Patience frequently made uſe of qualifying Expreſſions at that Trial, (Viz.) As he believed, or remembered.——They brought alſo a great many Witneſſes to ſwear, That Sir Patience was a Gentleman of a fair Character, and not likely to perjure himſelf. 1683. 35 Car.

Evidence for the Defendant.

But after the Defendant's Counſel had produced all their Witneſſes, the King's Counſel called Sir Francis Lee, who was upon the Jury between the Duke and Pilkington; and Sir Francis being ſworn, gave the following Account of the Matter, (Viz.) That Sir Patience did ſwear at that Trial, That Mr. Pilkington was not in the Room, when the Diſcourſe concerning the Duke of York was mentioned: And did afterwards ſwear, That when Mr. Pilkington ſaid, he hath burnt the City, he (Sir Patience) clap'd one Hand on his Mouth, and the other on his Breaſt, and bid him explain himſelf, who he meant? Hubert? That Sir Francis Butler, the Foreman, thereupon jogged him (Lee), and bid him take Notice of that: And that they did infer Mr. Pilkington muſt mean the Duke of York; for elſe why would Sir Patience have ſtopped his Mouth?

The Chief Juſtice having ſummed up the Evidence, the Jury withdrew, and, after ſome Time, brought the Defendant in GUILTY; He is convicted. who, having ſome Intimation that it was intended to ſet him in the Pillory, thought fit to abſcond.

Remarks. I ſhall make no other Obſervations on this Trial; but that Sir Patience was evidently perjured, in the Teſtimony he gave at the Trial between the Duke and Pilkington; by depoſing, in one Part of that Trial, That Pilkington did not come in, till the Diſcourſe concerning the Duke was over; and in another, that he ſtopped his Mouth for reflecting on the Duke, and asked what he meant?.

The Trial between the King and the City of London; on an Information in the Nature of a Quo Warranto, in the Court of King's-Bench, in the Years 1682 and 1683. 35 Car. II.

1682-3. 35 Car. II. The King and the City.

THIS Cauſe was argued firſt in Hillary-Term, 1682-3, by Mr. Solicitor Finch, (afterwards Earl of Aylesford) for the King; and by Sir George Treby, Recorder of London, for the City. And in Eaſter-Term, 1683, by Sir Robert Sawyer, Attorney-General, for the King; and by Mr. Pollexfen, for the City. And in Trinity-Term, 1683, 35 Car. II. Judgment was given againſt the City.

The Information. The Information ſets forth, That the Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London, by the Space of a Month, and more, before the Information preferred, uſed, and yet did claim to have and uſe, without any lawful Warrant or Regal Grant within the ſaid City of London and Liberties, the Liberties and Privileges following: 1*ſt*, To be of themſelves a Body Corporate and Politick, by the Name of Mayor and Commonalty, and Citizens of the City of London. 2*dly*, To conſtitute Sheriffs of the ſaid City and County of Middleſex: And 3*dly*, That the Mayor and Aldermen of the ſaid City ſhould be Juſtices of Peace there: All which Liberties, Privileges, and Franchiſes, the ſaid Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, did uſurp on the King.

Plea. To which the ſaid Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens appear by their Attorney, and plead. 1*ſt*, That the ſaid City hath been a Body Corporate and Politick time out of Mind; and that their Liberties and Franchiſes have been 1682-3. 35 Car. II. been confirmed by the Statute of Magna Charta, and many ſubſequent Statutes there enumerated: And by this Warrant they claim to be, and are, a Body Politick, &c. and traverſe their uſurping on the King. 2dly, As to their conſtituting Sheriffs, they plead, That King John, on the 5th of July, in the firſt Year of his Reign, granted them the Power of electing and conſtituing Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, in perpetuum. 3dly, As to the Mayor and Aldermens being Juſtices of Peace, they plead, That King Charles I. by his Letters Patents, dated 18 Oct. 14 Car. I. granted, that the Mayor and ſuch Aldermen as had been Mayors, ſhould be Juſtices of Peace.

Reply. To this Plea Mr Attorney-General replied: And as to their being a Body Politick and Corporate, takes Iſſue, that they never were a Body Corporate —— And then pleads over, That the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, aſſuming to themſelves to be a Body Politick and Corporate; and by Reaſon thereof, to have Power to aſſemble, and make Laws and Ordinances, not contrary to the Laws of the Kingdom, for the better Government of the City and Citizens, and for preſerving the King's Peace under Colour thereof; but reſpecting only their private Gain, and againſt the Truſt in a Body Corporate, aſſumed an unlawful Authority to levy Money on the King's Subjects, to their own Uſe, by Colour of Laws, by them de facto made; and in Proſecution of ſuch unjuſt Power, did, on the 17th of September, 26 Car. II. make a certain Law for levying ſeveral Sums of Money on all the King's Subjects, coming to the publick Markets within the City, to ſell their Proviſions, viz. For every Horſe Load of Proviſions brought to be ſold, 2 d. per Day: For every Dorſer of Proviſions, 6 d. per Day: For every Cart Load, drawn with three Horſes, 4 d. per Day; and if drawn with more than three Horſes, 6 d. per Day: And that theſe Sums ſhould be paid to the Uſe of the City. And if any refuſed to pay, to be removed from his Place in the Market: And that by Colour of this Law, the Mayor, &c. had, for ſeven Years after the making it, received divers great Sums, amounting to 5000 l. in Oppreſſion of the King's Subjects.

And further, Whereas a Seſſion of Parliament was holden by Prorogation, and continued to the 10th of January, 32 Car. II. and then prorogued to the 20th of January then next; the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, 13 January, 32 Car. II. in their Common-Council, unlawfully, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and ſeditiouſly, and without any lawful Authority, aſſumed to themſelves an Authority of Cenſuring and Judging of our ſaid Lord the King, and the Prorogation of Parliament, ſo made by him; and did vote and order a Petition to be preferred to the King, ſetting forth, That by the ſaid Prorogation, the Proſecution of the publick Juſtice of the Kingdom, and the making neceſſary Proviſion for the Preſervation of the King, and of his Proteſtant Subjects, had received Interruption: And that the ſaid Mayor, &c. in Common-Council aſſembled, did unlawfully, maliciouſly, adviſedly, and ſeditiouſly, and with Intention that the ſaid Petition ſhould be diſperſed among the King's Subjects, to induce an Opinion in them, that the King, by proroguing the Parliament, had obſtructed the publick Juſtice; and to incite the King's Subjects to a Hatred of his Perſon and Government, and to diſturb the Peace of the Kingdom, did order the ſaid Petition to be printed; and the ſame was printed accordingly, to the Intent and Purpoſe aforeſaid. 1682-3. 35 Car. II.

By which the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens aforeſaid, the Privilege, Liberty, and Franchiſe of being a Body Politick and Corporate, did forfeit: And afterwards, for the Time in the Information ſpecified, that Liberty and Franchiſe of being a Body Politick, did uſurp upon the King, &c. And as to the other two Pleas, (viz.) The having Sheriffs, and Juſtices of Peace, the Attorney-General imparles to Michaelmas Term. Nor did he ever proceed on this Part of the Information.

Rejoinder. The Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, thereupon rejoin, and ſay, That the Pleas by the Attorney pleaded, are inſufficient to exclude them from being a Corporation.

That no Act, or By-Law of the Common-Council, is the Act of the Body Corporate.

That they never took upon them, by any unlawful Authority, to tax the King's Subjects.

That there have been, Time out of Mind, publick Markets in the ſaid City, of which the Mayor and Commonalty were ſeized in Fee; and have at all times, at their own Coſts, provided Stalls, Standings, and other Accommodations for the Market-People; and received reaſonable Tolls and Rates of Perſons reſorting to the ſaid Markets, for their Stalls, Standings, &c. That theſe Cuſtoms, Liberties and Privileges, have been confirmed to them by Magna Charta, and other ſubſequent Statutes.

That by Reaſon of the burning the City in 1666; and the Alterations in the Market-places occaſioned thereby, for the eſtabliſhing and re-ſettling the Markets within the ſaid City, the Common-Council did, 17 September, 26 Car. II. make an Ordinance, That the Rates and Sums in the Replication mentioned, ſhould be paid to the Uſe of the ſaid Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens; or, upon Refuſal, to be removed out of the Market: And aver, that theſe are all the Rates and Duties paid, and were reaſonable Sums; and theſe they had demanded and received, to defray the Charges of erecting Stalls, Shelters, and other Neceſſaries, for the Market-People; and the Amendment, Paving and Cleanſing the ſaid Market-places, as was lawful for them to do.

As to the other Matter alledged by Mr. Attorney, That there had been an helliſh and execrable Plot proſecuted by the Papiſts, to deſtroy the King and Government, and the Proteſtant Religion: That Juſtice Godfrey, who took the Examination of the Witneſſes, and of the burning the City, had been murdered by the Conſpirators, for which Murder Green and others had been hanged: That Coleman had been executed for the Conſpiracy; and five Popiſh Lords impeached, and ſent to the Tower for the ſame: That the King, in his Speech to the Parliament, had recommended 1683. 35 Car. II. to them the further Examination of that Conſpiracy, declaring, He thought neither himſelf or them ſafe, till that Matter was gone through; and therefore, that it was neceſſary that the ſaid Lords in the Tower ſhould be brought to their Trials, that Juſtice might be done. And the Parliament had addreſſed the King, declaring their deep Senſe of the ſad Condition of the Realm, occaſioned by the Conſpiracies of the Papiſts; and that a ſolemn Faſt might be kept thereupon, which was kept accordingly, by Virtue of his Majeſty's Proclamation. And divers Bills were prepared for Preſervation of his Majeſty's Subjects.

That theſe Impeachments and Bills being thus depending, the Parliament was prorogued the ſaid 10th of January; by Reaſon whereof the Citizens were much diſquieted with the Senſe of the Danger threatning the King and Government, by Reaſon of the Conſpiracies aforeſaid, affirmed and declared both by the King and Parliament: And conceiving no better Means to prevent them, than by the Sitting of the Parliament; and it being lawful to petition his Majeſty.

The Mayor, Sir Patience Ward, and the Aldermen and Commons in Common-Council aſſembled, did cauſe the Petition mentioned, to be drawn; and after it was preſented to the King, cauſed it to be printed, for the Satisfaction of the troubled Minds of the Citizens; and traverſe the Writing, or making any other Petition; or making this to any other End or Intent than they had pleaded.

Sur rejoinder. Mr. Attorney ſur-rejoins, and ſays, That the Mayor, &c. were not ſeized of the Markets; nor provided Stalls, &c. at their Charges: And that the ſaid Rates were not reaſonable.

And for Plea, ſays, That by a Statute of 22 Car. II. it was enacted, That Places for Markets ſhould be ſet out, and 2 d. per Chaldron upon Coals, for the Charges of that, and many other Things, was given; and they received great Sums out of that Duty, for the Purpoſes aforeſaid; and yet, for their own private Lucre, they took the Money impoſed by the ſaid Ordinance: And traverſes, that the Mayor and Citizens have, Time out of Mind, taken Tolls, Rates, &c.

As to the Plea of the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens, pleaded to the Reſidue of the Attorney's Matter, aſſigned for a Forfeiture; the Attorney, by Proteſtation, ſaith, That the aforeſaid Prorogation of the Parliament was for urgent Cauſes, concerning the Good of the Kingdon; and that the Proſecution of publick Juſtice was not interrupted thereby — And demurrs to the ſaid Plea of the Mayor, &c. pleaded to the Petition.

Rejutter. The Mayor and Commonalty, as to the making the ſaid Ordinance, for the Payment of Money by thoſe that come to the ſaid Markets, ſay, as before, That they had, Time out of Mind, been accuſtomed to receive reaſonable Tolls, &c. And for this they put themſelves upon the County, &c.

And as to the Plea pleaded by the Mayor, &c. to the Reſidue of the Matter, by the Attorney-General, and aſſigned for a Forfeiture, they join in Demurrer.

The firſt Argument was in Hillary-Term, 1682-3, 35 Car. II. by Mr. Solicitor, who obſerved, That there were theſe four Queſtions in the Caſe, 1. Whether any Corporation could be forfeited? And he held it might. 1683. 35 Car. II. Argued by the Solicitor.

2. Whether the City of London differed from other Corporations, as to Point of Forfeiture? And he held it did not.

3. Whether any Act of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, be ſo much the Act of the Corporation, as it could make a Forfeiture? And he held it might.

4. Whether the Acts by them done, in making the By-Law, and receiving Money by it: Or in making the Petition, and cauſing it to be printed and publiſhed, be ſuch Acts as would make a Forfeiture of the Corporation? And he held they were.

The Recorder, Sir George Treby, who argued for the City, endeavoured to ſhew, 1. That a Corporation could not be forfeited, and that London had greater Privileges than any other Corporation. 2. That no Act of the Mayor, Aldermen, and Common-Council, could occaſion a Forfeiture; and 3. That neither by levying Tolls and Rates on the Market-People; nor by their petitioning the King, had they incurred a Forfeiture. Sir George Treby.

Theſe Points were argued again in Eaſter-Term, 1683, 35 Car. II. by Mr. Attorney for the King, and by Mr. Pollexfen for the City; but the Arguments being drawn out to an immoderate Length, I ſhall only recite the Judges Opinion of them, when they gave Judgment for the King, in Trinity-Term following. Mr. Attorney. Mr. Pollexfen.

Mr. Juſtice Jones, Mr. Juſtice Raymond, and Mr. Juſtice Wythens, being in Court, Mr. Juſtice Jones pronounced the Judgment, declaring that the Lord Chief Juſtice Saunders (who was then ill) and the whole Bench were of the ſame Opinion, and had all agreed. The Judges Opinion.

1. That a Corporation, Aggregate, might be ſeized. That the Statute of 28 Edw. III. Cap. 10. was expreſs, That the Franchiſes and Liberties of the City, upon ſuch Defaults, ſhould be taken into the King's Hands. And that Bodies politick may offend, and be pardoned, appeared by the general Article of Pardon, 12 Car. II. Whereby Corporations are pardoned all Crimes and Offences. And the Act for regulating Corporations, 13 Car. II. which provides, That no Corporation ſhall be avoided, for any Thing by them miſdone, or omitted to be done; ſhews alſo, that their Charters may be avoided for Things by them miſdone, or omitted to be done.

2. That the Exacting, and taking Money, by the pretended By-Law, was Extortion, and a Forfeiture of the Franchiſe of being a Corporation.

3. That the Petition was ſcandalous and libellous, and the making and publiſhing it, a Forfeiture.

4. That the Act of the Common-Council, was the Act of the Corporation.

5. That the Matter ſet forth in the Record, did not excuſe, or void thoſe Forfeitures, ſet forth in the Replication.

6. That the Information was well founded.

And

1683. 35 Car II. Judgment against the City.

And gave Judgment, THAT THE FRANCHISE SHOULD BE SEIZED INTO THE KING'S HANDS; but the Entry thereof reſpited, till the King's Pleaſure was known.

And as to the Iſſue joined, to be tried by the Country, (Viz.) The claiming to have and conſtitute Sheriffs; and as to the Mayor and Aldermen's being Juſtices of the Peace, the Attorney-General declared, he would not proſecute that Part of the Charge.

Proceedings ſubſequent to the Judgment.

Some few Days after Judgment was given againſt the City, a Common-Council aſſembled, and drew up a Petition to his Majeſty; in which they expreſſed their hearty Sorrow for the Miſgovernment of the City, of late Years; whereby the Citizens had fallen into his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, which had occaſioned a Quo Warranto, and Judgment againſt them; and that they were thankful the Judgment was not yet entered up, and begged his Majeſty's Pardon for all their Offences, promiſing conſtant Loyalty, and a regular Adminiſtration of the Government of the City for the Future.

This Petition, being preſented to his Majeſty, at a Council held at Windſor, the 18th of June, by the Lord Mayor, Sir William Pritchard, attended by ſome other Loyal Aldermen and Citizens, they were anſwered, That for the ſake of ſo many of the preſent Magiſtrates, and other eminent Citizens, that were of undoubted Loyalty, his Majeſty would ſhew the City all the Favour they could reaſonably deſire; and, though Judgment had been obtained on a Quo Warranto, he did not intend to prejudice them in their real Properties, or Cuſtoms; and ſhould not reject their Suit, if they agreed to the following Terms, (Viz.) That no Lord Mayor, Sheriff, Recorder, Common Serjeant, Town-Clerk, Coroner, or Steward of the Borough of Southwark, ſhould be admitted to exerciſe their reſpective Offices, before his Majeſty approved them; and if they were diſapproved, the City ſhould proceed to another Choice; which if the King diſliked, he might appoint the ſaid Officers himſelf; with ſome other leſs material Alterations: That theſe Regulations being ſubmitted to, his Majeſty would not only pardon the City, but confirm their Charter. And on the other Hand, if they did not acquieſce in this, his Majeſty had ordered the Attorney-General to enter the Judgment on the Saturday following.

A Common-Council being called at Guild-hall, two Days after, the Queſtion was put, Whether they ſhould comply with his Majeſty's Regulations? And upon a Diviſion, 108 were for it, and 86 againſt it: Whereupon the Sheriffs attended his Majeſty the next Day, and acquainted him, that they ſubmitted to his Regulations. However, the City neglecting to ſign the ſaid Submiſſion, and Regulations; and a great many Citizens being found deeply engaged in the Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty; and that the Malcontents relied chiefly on their Aſſiſtance, the King was in a Manner compelled, in his own Defence, and to preſerve himſelf upon the Throne, to take Advantage of the Judgment on the Quo Warranto, and cauſe it to be entered up: After which the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and other Officers, received their Commiſſions from the King, without an Election; and his Majeſty, by his ſole Authority, changed the Magiſtrates of the City, whenever he ſaw fit: And in this Situation the Magiſtracy of the City remained, till the Year 1688; when King James II. being alarmed by the Preparations made by the Dutch, to invade the Kingdom, thought fit to reſtore them their Charter, and the Liberty of electing their Officers, and Magiſtrates, as formerly; and thereupon Sir George Treby, the Recorder, and the reſt of the Officers, were reſtored.

1683. 34 Car. II.

The Judgment entered.

Lord Mayor, &c. appointed by the King.

The Charter reſtored.

By a Statute of 2 W. and M. Cap. 3. Reciting that a Judgment had been given in the King's-Bench, in Trinity-Term, 35 Car. II. on a Quo Warranto, againſt the City of London, That the Franchiſe of the ſaid City ſhould be ſeized into the King's Hand, as forfeited: It is thereby declared, that the ſaid Proceedings were illegal and arbitrary; and enacted, that the ſaid Judgment ſhould be Reverſed, and made Void.

An Act for Reverſing the Judgment.

And that the Mayor, Commonalty, and Citizens of London, ſhould remain a Body politick, by the Name of the Mayor, &c. without any Seizure, or Forejudger, of the ſaid Franchiſe, upon Pretence of any Forfeiture, or Miſdemeanor; and ſhould enjoy all their Rights, Charters, &c. which they had at the Time of Recording the ſaid Judgment. And that the City-Officers ſhould be reſtored, that were diſplaced after the ſaid Judgment.

The

1683. 35 Car. II. Walcot's Trial.

The Trial of Captain THOMAS WALCOT, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, July 12, 1683. 35 Car. II.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charged the Priſoner with High-Treaſon, in compaſſing, and conſpiring the Death of the King, to raiſe a Rebellion, and to ſubvert the Government; and to that End, meeting and conſulting with divers other Traitors, to accompliſh the ſaid Treaſons, promiſing to be aiding and aſſiſting to them, and providing Arms for that End.

Col Rumſey's Evidence. The Witneſſes being called, Colonel Rumſey was ſworn, who depoſed, That the latter End of October, or the Beginning of November laſt, he was with Lord Shaftesbury late at Night, who told him, that the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruſſel, Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, were at Mr. Shepherd's, a Merchant, near Lombard-Street, and he deſired this Witneſs to go to them, and know what they had done about the Riſing at Taunton: That he went accordingly, and Mr. Shepherd carried him up to them: And they told him Mr. Trenchard had failed them about the Men, and they could proceed no farther at that Time: That he returned to Lord Shafteſbury next Day, and told him what they ſaid; whereupon he prepared to go for Holland, ſaying, There was no Dependance on thoſe Gentlemen that met, and he would leave England.

A Fortnight after, there was a Meeting at Mr. Weſt's Chamber in the Temple, (Captain Walcot was in Holland then) and there it was ſaid, nothing could be done by a general Riſing: There was no ſurer Way than to take off the King and the Duke; and that could not be carried on without Mr. Ferguſon, who was then in Holland: Whereupon a Letter was ſent him, and he came over with Capt. Walcot: And there was a Meeting ſoon after, at which it was concluded, That nothing could be effected without taking off the King and the Duke: And there were two or three Meetings to find out a Number of Men, without which, Rumbold would not undertake it; at which Meetings Mr. Walcot was not preſent; but to the third or fourth Meeting Mr. Walcot came, and reſolved, at laſt, to join in the Matter: He would not, indeed, have a Hand in attacking the Coach; but would command a Party that ſhould charge the Guards. There were to be ſeveral Parties; one ſmall Party was to have killed the Poſtilion and the Horſes; Mr. Rumbold, with a certain Number, was to ſet upon the Coach; and Capt. Walcot on the Guards: And this was to have been executed at Mr. Rumbold's Houſe, commonly call'd the Rye-Houſe, near Hodſdon in Hertfordſhire, as the King came laſt from New-market: Mr. Rumbold, and thoſe who attacked the Coach, were to fire Blunderbuſſes into it; and, if they had miſſed, they were to have done it with their Swords.

This Reſolution was taken laſt Spring, at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, before the King came from New-market; and was the firſt Meeting Capt. Walcot was at. There were ſeveral Meetings afterwards at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, to conſult whether they could raiſe the Number reſolved upon; and Notes were brought by Goodenough and Rumbold, that they might not be deceived in their Number: And at that Time Capt. Walcot was there, and undertook to go to Rumbold's Houſe (the Rye) and he thought did go down to that Place: And Rumbold inſiſted on having fifty Men for this Enterprize.

That he was alſo at the Salutation Tavern in Lombard-ſtreet, and at the Green-Dragon on Snow-Hill, with Capt. Walcot, and other Conſpirators; where they diſcourſed of dividing the City into twenty Parts; and how many Men could be raiſed out of every Part; and they were to be divided into Fifteenths, and every Man to lead a Fifteenth. Goodenough, Wade, and Weſt, were entruſted with this: Goodenough gave an Account of ſeven Parts of the twenty; and ſaid, out of theſe would be raiſed 2900 Men; but that the other thirteen, as he computed, would not raiſe as many more.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, Why the Deſign was not executed as the King came from New-market? Rumſey anſwered, The Fire happened there, and brought the King from New-market before the Men could be got ready: They talked of doing it the Saturday before Eaſter; but he came back the Tueſday before. The News coming to Town on Friday, of the Fire at New-market, they were all in Confuſion, and could not get their Men ready by Tueſday. Ferguſon then lodged in Covent-Garden, and ſent for ſeveral of the Men to come to him, to ſee if they could be got together before Tueſday, when the King was to come back; but it could not be done, and it was laid aſide for that Time: But there was a Meeting immediately after, where Walcot, Weſt, Rumbold, and Goodenough were preſent; and it was reſolved, that Money ſhould be raiſed to buy Arms, that they might not be diſappointed again; and Rumbold undertook to provide them.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, If they had any further Deſign upon the King at this Meeting? Rumſey anſwered, Yes, it was to be done at his coming from Windſor to London; or from Windſor to Hampton-Court, or at the Playhouſe; and theſe Arms were to be in Readineſs againſt any Opportunity that ſhould happen: That Mr. Weſt alſo undertook to provide Arms; and told the Deponent he had bought them; but did not get his Money in ſix or ſeven Weeks after, and then he was paid an hundred Pounds by Ferguſon.

1683. 35 Car. II.

Mr. Solicitor demanding when their laſt Meeting was? Rumſey anſwered, He thought it was the very Thurſday before the Diſcovery, at the Salutation-Tavern in Lombard-ſtreet, where were preſent Walcot, Weſt, Wade, the two Goodenoughs, Nelthrop, and himſelf. They had ſome Intimations it was diſcovered, the Friday or Saturday before; and did meet at the George on Ludgate-hill: They went thither to know of Goodenough, what was done about the other thirteen Parts, being reſolved to carry on the Deſign ſtill. He told them he had no Account; but thought they ſhould have a Meeting on Saturday in the Afternoon, at the George on Ludgate-hill, where they ſhould have an Anſwer; but the Diſcovery happening in the mean time, but few of them met there. The Monday after, there was a Meeting at Capt. Tracy's; where were preſent Capt. Walcot, Mr. Weſt, Wade, Nelthrop, the two Goodenoughs, and Ferguſon; and they exclaimed againſt Keeling, who made the Diſcovery, and took Reſolutions to be gone.

Capt. Walcot demanding, If he ever met at Mr. Weſt's Chamber till his Majeſty's Return from New-market? Rumſey anſwered, There was one Meeting at the Five Bells in the Strand; where only Ferguſon, Rumbold, Weſt, Goodenough, and himſelf, were preſent; but Ferguſon had informed them Capt. Walcot would be there: However, Capt. Walcot came to their next Meeting at Mr. Weſt's Chamber, at the time the King was at New-market: The King was at New-market when Captain Walcot and Mr. Ferguſon came from Holland.

Keeling's Evidence.

Then Keeling was ſworn, and depoſed, That meeting Rumbold and Goodenough at the Sun-Tavern, ſome time before the King went to New-market, Goodenough enquired of him then, and ſeveral times afterwards, What Men he could procure to go down to New-market to kill the King? That he had ſome Diſcourſe with Burton and Thompſon on the ſame Subject; and that Burton told him, Barber and Thompſon would be concerned in it: That the Friday after the Fire happened at New-market, Rumbold came to the Deponent's Houſe, to ſee what Men he could procure; and deſired to ſee them next Day: That the Deponent, Rumbold, Burton, Thompſon and Barber, met at the Mitre-Tavern, without Aldgate, next Day, and diſcourſed of going down to Rumbold's Houſe, called the Rye; and Rumbold ſaid, there could not be a better Place for executing their Deſign, it ſtanding remote from Neighbours: And as an Argument to prevail with them, he ſaid, It would be keeping one of the Commandments to kill the King and the Duke of York, for it would ſave abundance of Bloodſhed; and acquainted them with the Manner they deſigned to effect it. That they afterwards went to the Dolphin in Bartholomew-lane, (where were preſent Rumbold, Weſt, Goodenough, and Hone the Joyner) and diſcourſed of the Time the King was expected home: And Weſt asked how many Swan-quills, Gooſe-quills, and Crow-quills, and what Sand and Ink were wanting? And it was anſwered, Six Swan-quills; twenty Gooſe-quills; and twenty or thirty Crow-quills. That Swan-quills were Blunderbuſſes; Gooſe-quills, Muskets; Crow-quills, Piſtols; and Sand and Ink, Powder and Bullets. That as to Capt. Walcot, the Priſoner, he was at the Salutation-Tavern with them when Weſt called him Culing; and ſaid, He hoped to ſee him at the Head of as good an Army at Wapping, as Culing was at Cullen; which he ſuppoſed Capt. Walcot remembered very well.

1683. 35 Car. II.

That ſome time before the Deſign was diſcovered, Goodenough gave the Deponent a Paper, wherein he told him, he had divided the City into twenty Parts, and one of them was for himſelf; and bid him to communicate it to nine or ten Perſons he could truſt; and direct them to go to ſeveral other Perſons, and ask them, Suppoſing the Papiſts ſhould riſe, or there ſhould be a French Invaſion, Are you in a Poſture of Defence? This was all we were to communicate; and this was to feel them, and ſee how many Men they could raiſe. That Goodenough ſaid, they had a Deſign to kill the King at the Bull-Feaſt, and would have theſe Men in Readineſs: That it was to be laid upon the Papiſts; and to draw in the poor People, they were to declare they ſhould be eaſed of Chimney-Money. The Deponent underſtood, he was intended to go down to Rumbold's Houſe with the Men he raiſed; but he did not remember he was asked the Queſtion. He confeſſed alſo, he ſuffered himſelf to be made a Special Bailiff, and actually arreſted the Lord Mayor; but ſaid he was put upon it by Goodenough, the Under-Sheriff.

Bourn's Evidence.

Zachary Bourn being ſworn, depoſed, That Ferguſon lodged at his Houſe; and Capt. Walcot, the Priſoner, uſed to come thither. That he met Capt. Walcot, and ſeveral more of the Conſpirators, at the Dragon on Snow-Hill; and their Buſineſs was to raiſe Men, and divide the City into twenty Diviſions, in order to the ſecuring his Majeſty and the Duke of York, and ſetting up the Duke of Monmouth; he thought they never expreſſed it, Killing them, at thoſe Meetings. That they were to raiſe as many Men as they could in their Diviſions, but were not to tell them their direct Buſineſs; but only ſay, If there ſhould be Occaſion; or, If the Papiſts ſhould riſe? That they might know their Strength. That Goodenough brought an Account of about four thouſand he could raiſe, when Capt. Walcot was preſent: And the Captain was at three of their Meetings, if not at all.

That they were to have ſeized the Lord Mayor, the two Sheriffs, the Chief Miniſters of State, and ſome of the Aldermen: And Weſt ſaid, it ſhould be his Buſineſs to ſecure the Lord Keeper; he would call him to Account, and put him in mind of Colledge.

That the Conſpirators met at Capt. Tracy's the Saturday before the Diſcovery; and that Evening they had ſome Intimation of it. That on Monday Morning following, he was at a Meeting with Capt. Walcot, Mr. Ferguſon, Goodenough, Weſt, Norton, Rumſey, and one Capt. Pottle. They reſolved on nothing then; but he left them debating on killing of Keeling, becauſe he had made a Diſcovery. And they ſaid, they thought they had better ſtand to 1683. 35 Car. II. it with their Swords in their Hands, than be hanged.

Capt. Walcot demanding, If the Witneſs ever heard him ſay any thing of aſſaſſinating the King? Bourn anſwered, He never did; but the Diſcourſe was about ſecuring the King when Capt. Walcot was there; though it was ſaid, at ſeveral Meetings, There was no Way like lopping them; by which they underſtood, the taking off the King and Duke of York: That was the uſual Phraſe; and he ſuppoſed the Captain had heard it.

West's Evidence. Mr. Weſt being ſworn, depoſed, That one Morning Capt. Walcot came to his Chamber, and diſcourſing of the Election of the Sheriffs in the City, carried on contrary to Juſtice, as they thought, the Captain ſaid, Will People do nothing to ſecure themſelves? Adding, There was an Inſurrection deſigned within three Weeks or a Month, that would make us free, or worſe. A little after, the Captain told him that he was engaged in ſuch a Deſign; and Lord Shaftesbury had engaged him in it: That he expected to be a Colonel of Horſe; and asked the Deponent, If he would have a Command under him? And that he told him then, to the beſt of his Remembrance, that Lord Shaftesbury had another Deſign upon the King and Duke, as they came from New-market in October; but he abhorred any ſuch Thing; and would only be concerned in the general Inſurrection: And he asked the Deponent to lend him a Suit of Silk Armour he bought about four or five Years before, when the Popiſh Plot broke out. That he deſired the Deponent alſo to provide him a good ſtiff Tuck, which he did.

That he underſtood the Deſign was put off by the Failure of Mr. Trenchard, who had, about a Fortnight before, talked of great Forces he could raiſe in the Weſt; but the Duke of Monmouth ſending for him, his Heart failed him, and he ſaid he could not raiſe any Men; upon which my Lord Grey called him Coxcomb. This was about the 19th of November.

That after this he underſtood, by Captain Walcot, that Ferguſon had the Conduct of the Aſſaſſination intended in October; and when that Deſign had miſcarried, to the beſt of his Remembrance, Capt. Walcot told him, there was another Deſign of attacking the King and the Duke at my Lord Mayor's Feaſt in the Hall, or in their Return home in Paul's Church-Yard, or at Ludgate; and Mr. Ferguſon told him the ſame thing: But the King not dining there, they were diſappointed. At other times it was propoſed to do it as the King and Duke went down the River; or at the Play-houſe; or coming from thence: And Colonel Rumſey ſaid, He wondered the Lords and Great Men who were ſo fond of the Thing, did not raiſe a Purſe, and buy ſomebody an Office, who ſhould rail at the Duke of Monmouth and the Whigs, and by that Means find an Opportunity of getting Acceſs to the King's Perſon. After theſe Diſcourſes, when Lord Shaftesbury retired to Holland, Mr. Ferguſon did ſo too, and Capt. Walcot with them. After Capt. Walcot and Ferguſon returned from Holland, the Captain did ſay, at the Deponent's Chamber, he was to command the Party of Horſe that were to attack the Guards at Rumbold's Houſe: They were to lie there perdue, till the King came juſt down upon them; and there being a Gate to paſs through, it was to be ſhut upon the Horſe-Guards, that they could not come to his Relief; and Rumbold ſaid he would bring them off over the Meadows by Hackney-Marſh: But the Method the Captain approved of was, to retire within the Wall, and there remain till Night, it being a Place they could defend againſt any Force for a Day's time. And here he remembered, that at his firſt Diſcourſe with Capt. Walcot in November, the Captain told him Lord Shaftesbury was preparing a Declaration to be publiſhed in Caſe of an Aſſaſſination or Inſurrection; and would have ſeveral People employed in drawing it, that they might pick one good one out of them all: And that the Captain ſhewed him a Paper, which was a Collection of all the Paſſages in the Reign of King James I. Charles I. and his preſent Majeſty's, which he called, Attempts to introduce arbitrary Power; and concluded with charging them with ſome perſonal Vices; declaring, that the Government was diſſolved, and they were free to ſettle another Government.

That after their Diſappointment by the Fire at New-market, the Conſpirators, among whom was Capt. Walcot, met at the Deponent's Chamber, and conſulted how it might be done another Day: But it being ſaid the King would be at home next Day, it was laid aſide. That they met next Week (not at his Chamber, Colonel Rumſey was miſtaken in that) but at the George and Vulture; and diſcourſing of the late Diſappointment, it was obſerved, one Reaſon of it was, becauſe they had not Arms in Readineſs; and they agreed, that ten Blunderbuſſes, twenty or twenty-two Inches in the Barrel; thirty Carabines, twenty-eight Inches; and thirty Caſes of Piſtols, fourteen Inches, ſhould be bought; and the Deponent was put upon providing them, becauſe he had a Pretence for it, having a Plantation in Carolina: That he bought the Arms accordingly, and Mr. Ferguſon paid him for them a great while after. That it was agreed, the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs, and as many of the Lieutenancy as they could take, ſhould be killed; and the principal Miniſters of State, particularly the Lords Halifax and Rocheſter, and the Lord Keeper: Theſe they would hang for the Murder of Colledge, on the ſame Poſt he was hanged. That Sir John Moore was to be hung up in Guild-Hall: Their Lordſhips the Judges were to be flead and ſtuffed, and hung up in Weſtminſter-Hall; and ſeveral of the Penſionary Parliament were to be hanged, as Betrayers of the Peoples Rights.

The Attorney-General demanding, If Walcot was preſent at theſe Diſcourſes? Weſt anſwered, He was not at his Chamber ſo often as the reſt; but he was there ſometimes, when theſe Things were diſcourſed of: And that upon the News of the Fire at New-market, the Captain ſaid, I believe God ſhews his Diſapprobation of the Thing: And Ferguſon anſwered, I believe he reſerves them for worſe Puniſh-

Puniſhment: And the Captain ſaying, he deſired his Name might be concealed; Ferguſon anſwered, Why ſhould you be aſhamed? It is a glorious Action; ſuch an Action as I hope to ſee publickly rewarded by Parliament. I queſtion not but you will be famed for it; and Statues erected for you, with the Title of LIBERATORES PATRIÆ.

That Ferguſon, who was an Independent Parſon, ſaid, He had told ſome Nonconformiſt Miniſters of it, and they deſired him to forbear; they were a ſilly Sort of People, he ſaid, and did not know how to diſtinguiſh between killing a Prince for Difference of Opinion in Religion, and deſtroying a Tyrant for Preſervation of the Rights and Liberties of the People.—— It was an Action, he ſaid, would make all the Princes in the World tremble, and teach them to uſe their Subjects kindly.

It being demanded, What they ſhould do with the King's Natural Sons? Ferguſon anſwered, They were good luſty Lads, they would keep them for Porters and Watermen: And as to the Lady Anne (afterwards Queen Anne) they might marry her to ſome Country Gentleman, for a Breed to keep out Foreign Pretenders.

Weſt further depoſed, That there was a Treaty between the Scots and Chiefs of the Faction in England: And that the Scots inſiſted on ten thouſand Pounds to buy Arms, but came down at laſt to five thouſand; and the Earl of Argyle was to command them: But this Treaty was broke off, becauſe the Scots would not declare at firſt for a Commonwealth, the extirpating of Monarchy, and the Family of the Stuarts. That at a Meeting at the Young Devil-Tavern, where Walcot, the Priſoner, was preſent, Holloway propoſed, ſince the Scotch Buſineſs was at a Stand, they ſhould try what Forces they could raiſe in England: And Ferguſon ſaid, He believed, if three thouſand Men could be had, the Duke of Monmouth and Lord Ruſſel would appear at the Head of them. That the City was to be divided into twenty Parts, as the other Witneſſes had depoſed: And that Lobb (an Independant Preacher) ſaid, he would try what his Congregation would do. That after they had an Intimation of the Diſcovery of the Conſpiracy, they procured Keeling to come to one of their Meetings in the City, and there Rumbold charged him with betraying them; and he uſed a great many Imprecations, denying he had made any Diſcovery: Then they had ſome Diſcourſe of killing him, and others propoſed his going out of Town; but he refuſed to go. And had not Keeling deceived them by his Proteſtations at the Tavern, he had been killed there. Wade ſaid at this time, If the Duke of Monmouth would go into the Weſt, they might try a Puſh for it: Walcot anſwered, He was ſatisfied God would deliver the Nation, though he did not approve of the preſent Inſtruments.

Walcot confeſſes, and offers to be an Evidence.

Mr. Blathwait being ſworn, depoſed, That Walcot, the Priſoner, after the Diſcovery of the Conſpiracy, ſent a Letter to Mr. Secretary Jenkins, wherein he acknowledged his Guilt; laid himſelf at his Majeſty's Feet, and promiſed to diſcover all he knew relating to the Plot in England, Scotland, and Ireland: ſaid, That his Intimacy with a Scotch Miniſter occaſioned his knowing very much; and aſſured his Majeſty, the Buſineſs (the Conſpiracy) was laid very broad.

His Defence.

Capt. Walcot, in his Defence, ſaid, That he was not ſuch a Natural and a Fool, to think, that if he charged the Guards, while another killed the King, he was leſs guilty than the Man that killed him: And as to the aſſaſſinating his Majeſty, it never entered into his Thoughts. Here were four Gentlemen, Witneſſes againſt him, who, by their own Confeſſion, were guilty; and to wipe off their own Stains, were reſolved to ſwear him out of his Life: That Mr. Weſt had told a long Story, ſometimes naming one Gentleman, and ſometimes another; and he was afraid the Jury might apply it all to him who was leaſt concerned; for he had the Gout all that Month the King was at Newmarket, and Mr. Weſt came to ſee him ſeveral times: He was not able to draw on a Boot; and was never out of his Lodgings but once, when he went to Stepney to dip his Foot in the Wells there.

Another partial Confeſſion.

He acknowledged he had been at ſome Conſults, and knew of an Inſurrection that was intended; which he held was but Miſpriſon of Treaſon, as he was to have no Hand in it; and abſolutely denied he knew of any Deſign againſt the King's Life.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, What he did in England, when his Dwelling was in Ireland? The Priſoner anſwered, He was invited over by Lord Shaftesbury, to go Governor to Carolina; but that Poſt being diſpoſed of to another before he came, he went with Lord Shaftesbury to Holland; and when that Lord died, he returned to London, where he fell ill of the Gout: And this, and the making ſome Proviſion for his Children, occaſioned his Stay in Town.

The Chief Juſtice directs the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice then proceeded to direct the Jury: And obſerved, That the Priſoner confeſſed his having been at ſeveral treaſonable Conſults; and that the being at ſuch Conſults, and meeting for that Purpoſe, was down-right Treaſon, and not Miſpriſion of Treaſon, as the Priſoner apprehended. There was no Doubt but the meeting ſeveral times upon this Deſign, and concealing it, was Treaſon, though it had not been proved he ſaid any thing there; but that in Truth, the Proof was ſtronger than could have been expected in ſuch a Caſe. Whereupon the Jury, after a very ſhort Receſs, brought in the Priſoner GUILTY.

He is convicted.

The

1683. 35 Car. II. Hone's Trial.

The Trial of WILLIAM HONE, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, the ſame 12th and 13th of July, 1683. 35 Car. II.

1683. 35 Car. II.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charged the Priſoner with Compaſſing and Conſpiring the Death of the King; to ſubvert the Government, and raiſe a Rebellion: And with Meeting and Conſulting with other Traitors; and providing Arms for that Purpoſe.

Hone confeſſes he conſented to murder the King. The Priſoner pleading guilty, The Chief Juſtice demanded, What Part he was to have acted in this Matter? The Priſoner anſwered, Mr. Richard Goodenough deſired him to go with him; and he (Hone) asking, Whither? Goodenough would not tell him the Place; but he underſtood it was to kill the King and the Duke of York.

Mr. Serjeant Jeffries ſaid, Since he did not confeſs fully, he deſired he might be tried; and accordingly the Jury were ſworn: Witneſſes however examined. And Keeling depoſed, That the firſt time he ſaw the Priſoner, was at the Dolphin-Tavern, when Arms were agreed upon; and they diſcourſed of the King's coming from Newmarket: And Rumbold demanded how many Swan-quills, Gooſe-quills, &c. would be wanting: The Priſoner muſt remember the Diſcourſe, for he was by, and heard it all. And that he told this Witneſs, That he was to be one of them that was to go down to the Rye, to aſſaſſinate the King. And afterwards, at a Coffee-Houſe in Swithin's-Alley, the Priſoner ſaid, It would never be well till the Blackbird and Goldfinch were knocked on the Head, by whom he meant the King and Duke of York.

Hone anſwered, As to the Blackbird, he owned it; but he never heard of the Goldfinch till then.

Mr. Weſt depoſed, That the Priſoner was at the Conſult at the Dolphin-Tavern, but did not come in till the Diſcourſe of Arms was over: But that he thought he ſaid, If the Duke of Monmouth would be true, and appear, he could bring fifty or ſixty Men from the other Side the Water, to do the Buſineſs. That he was baſely deluded in this Buſineſs, by Goodenough, being a pretty honeſt Fellow before.

Here the Court reproved Weſt for endeavouring to palliate the Priſoner's Offence: And Serjeant Jeffries ſaid, He was not worthy the Mercy the King had ſhewn him.

Sir Nicholas Butler depoſed, That the Priſoner and others conſpired to kill the King and the Duke with Croſs-Bows, coming to the Lord Mayor's Show, ſome Years ago; and the Deponent acquainting his Majeſty with it, the Priſoner confeſſed their Deſign: And that, ſince he was taken laſt, he had told him, and ſeveral others, He was to be one of thoſe that were to kill the King, and was to have twenty Pounds.

Capt. Richardſon depoſed, That he was preſent when Sir Nicholas examined the Priſoner, concerning his being in the Conſpiracy to kill the King and the Duke; and the Priſoner confeſſed he was to be one of them: And he ſaid he was for killing the King, and ſaving the Duke; but Goodenough was for both. That he told them alſo the whole Buſineſs of the Rye; and ſaid, he did not know the Houſe; but it was the Place where the King was to be murdered. He was not willing at firſt to ſtir in it; but Goodenough promiſed him twenty Pounds; and confeſſed what Sir Nicholas had teſtified of the Croſs-Bows.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, What he had to ſay, as to his undertaking to kill the King? He anſwered, He was drawn into it by Mr. Goodenough. But that he had never any Deſign to kill the King by Croſs-Bows; but was only told another had ſuch a Deſign, with which he acquainted Sir Nicholas.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, What Religion he was of? He anſwered, He heard ſeveral Sorts of Men; ſometimes Baptiſts, ſometimes Independents, and at others, Preſbyterians.

Then the Chief Juſtice obſerving there was full Evidence againſt him, the Jury found him GUILTY, without going from the Bar. Hone is 1683. 35 Car. II. Rouſe's Trial.

The Trial of JOHN ROUSE, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, the 13th of July, 1683. 35 Car. II.

1683. 35 Car. II.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charges the Priſoner with Compaſſing and Conſpiring the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government; and to that End meeting and conſulting with other Traitors to provide Arms, ſeize the Tower, &c.

Leigh's Evidence againſt him. Rouſe being brought upon his Trial, Thomas Leigh, a Dyer, was ſworn as an Evidence againſt him; and depoſed, That in June laſt the Priſoner carried him to a Club of the Conſpirators at the King's-Head Tavern in Swithins-Alley: That Goodenough was there, and acquainted the Deponent with the Deſign to ſet up the Duke of Monmouth, and kill the King and Duke of York: That he (the Witneſs) acquainted the Priſoner with what Goodenough ſaid; but he found he knew it before. And the Priſoner told this Witneſs, he could provide Arms for an hundred Men; but ſaid, nothing was to be done, unleſs the King was ſeized; for they remembred Forty-one, when the King ſet up his Standard: Therefore (ſays the Priſoner) We will ſeize them, that they ſhall not ſet up their Standard: But he was not for ſhedding their Blood.

That the Priſoner alſo propoſed the playing for a Golden Ball upon Black-Heath; and he would engage ten Sea-Captains to manage that Affair; ſo that, when the Play was over, every Captain ſhould take his Party, and go with Long-boats, and Arms, and ſeize the Tower: And ſeveral ſuch Diſcourſes the Priſoner had with ſeveral Men, at the King's-Head Tavern, in the Hearing of the Deponent.

That after Oath was made of the Deponent's being in the Conſpiracy, he lay at the Priſoner's Houſe, who cut off his Hair, and gave him a Wig, to diſguiſe him; and that he, the Priſoner, and Mate Lee, went ſeveral Times to view the Tower; and Mate Lee ſaying, he would undertake to attack the Tower at Traitors-Bridge, with an hundred Grenadiers, Mr. Rouſe ſaid, he had been at Wapping, and ſpoke with ſome Sea-Captains, and they were ready to undertake the Work.

That the Priſoner bid the Deponent not be diſcouraged, becauſe Warrants were out againſt him; and entertained him well, while he was at his Houſe; and they had ſeveral Meetings at Mr. Blague's, and elſewhere: And he was aſſured they had a Thouſand Horſe ready in the Country, and Five Hundred in London; and that they contrived to ſend them Arms in Trunks to private Houſes, and were to arm themſelves in the Night-time, propoſing to ſet upon the King and Duke, as they came from Windſor; for they were both to be taken off. Rouſe ſaid, Take them off, and then no Man can have a Commiſſion to fight for them: Adding, that the King had been ſworn in France and Spain, to bring in Popery and Arbitrary Power, in ſo many Years; and therefore it was no Sin to take him off.

The Priſoner demanded, whether ever he ſpoke to the Witneſs, of a Deſign againſt the King and Government, and where? And whether the Witneſs did not begin the Diſcourſe?

Leigh anſwered, He could not be poſitive, whether Rouſe came to him, or he to Rouſe; or which of them diſcourſed of it firſt: But Rouſe was very zealous to get ten Captains, to have the Ball played for, and the Tower taken.

Mate Lee depoſed, That the Priſoner enquired of him, if he could not get ſome Seamen fit to be Commanders of Ships: And the Deponent demanding, where he would have thoſe Ships? he anſwered, He could have ſome of the King's Men of War, that lay at Deptford and Woolwich; and that they muſt ſecure both the Tower and Whitehall, or they could do nothing. And the Deponent ſaying, Where is your Oath of Allegiance then to the King? The Priſoner anſwered, We will ſecure the King, that he come to no Damage; and he ſhall remain King ſtill: And deſired to know, if Mr. Rouſe had any thing to object to his Evidence; for he ſpoke nothing but Truth: But the Priſoner did not think fit to ſay any thing to it.

Thomas Corbin depoſed, That ſome few Days before the Members of the City of London went to the Parliament at Oxford, the Priſoner ſaid, he foreſaw it would be a very ſhort Seſſions; but theſe frequent Prorogations, and Diſſolutions of the Parliament, would not avail: For whatever the King had, the Parliament gave him, and might take away when they pleaſed. And when one bid him have a Care what he ſaid, he replied, The King hath forfeited his Crown, and has no more Right to it than I have. And this was the ſame Evidence (the Witneſs declared) he gave in Court, in the Year 1681, When Grand Juries returned all Bills IGNORAMUS, that were preferred againſt the Chiefs of the Faction, for High-Treaſon; and particularly one againſt Rouſe the Priſoner.

Rouſe's Defence. The Priſoner in his Defence ſaid, That Leigh the Dyer came to him ſeveral Times about this Buſineſs; but he oppoſed it: That Leigh asking him, whether he would oppoſe a Foreign Invaſion? He (the Priſoner) demanded what he meant? And he ſaid, our Rights and Liberties were invaded, and they only made a Foreign Invaſion a Pretence to hook in People; and asked, if he did not know the Perſons engaged in the Deſign? Whereupon he concluded Leigh was of the Cabal, and was pretty confident there was ſuch a helliſh Deſign; but thanked God he had no Hand 1683. 35 Car. II. in it. That Leigh alſo communicated the Deſign of taking the Tower, &c. to him, and ſaid they did not want Money; Goodenough aſſured him there was 40,000 l.

The Chief Juſtice here obſerved, That the Priſoner only charged the Witneſs with what had been ſworn againſt himſelf; and that Mate Lee was another ſhrewd Evidence againſt him.

Rouſe anſwered, Leigh had turned it upon him; but he had nothing to ſay againſt Mate Lee: He had a Deſign to diſcover the Thing, and only was led to know the Bottom of it.

The Chief Juſtice demanding of Leigh, If he never diſcourſed with Rouſe, the Priſoner, of theſe Things in Company? Leigh anſwered, They uſed to diſcourſe ſingly with one Man at a Time. Rouſe and Goodenough went into a Room, and diſcourſed of theſe Things half an Hour.

The Chief Juſtice asking how he knew what Diſcourſe they had? Leigh anſwered, Rouſe told him. 1683. 35 Car. II.

Rouſe asked Leigh, What he ſaid when he was told one had ſworn againſt him? Leigh anſwered, When he heard Keeling had ſworn againſt him, he ſaid, if he did light of Keeling, he would kill him.

The Chief Juſtice demanded of the Priſoner, What he meant by putting Mate Lee upon enquiring out Men to make Maſters of Ships? Rouſe anſwered, To get at the Bottom of the Deſign, that his Majeſty might come to no Damage.

Then the King's Counſel obſerved, That the Priſoner had confeſſed Treaſon enough to convict him; and the Chief Juſtice having ſummed up the Evidence, the Jury found him GUILTY, without much Deliberation. Rouſe convicted.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment was of the ſame Tenor, as the former againſt Rouſe, charging the Priſoner with compaſſing and conſpiring the King's Death, the Subverſion of the Government, &c.

Leigh, the Dyer, depoſed, That Captain Blague was at ſeveral Conſultations about ſeizing the Tower, and had promiſed to aſſiſt at it with his own Ship: But Mate Lee, the other Witneſs, not atteſting any thing poſitively againſt the Priſoner, he was acquitted, by the Direction of the Chief Juſtice. He is acquitted, there being but one poſitive Witneſs.

1683. 35 Car. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment ſet forth, That William Ruſſel, late of London, Eſq; on the ſecond Day of November, in the 34th Year of his preſent Majeſty King Charles II. and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Michael Baſſiſhaw, in the Ward of Baſſiſhaw, London, did maliciouſly, and traitorouſly, with divers other Traitors, conſpire, compaſs, imagine and intend, not only the ſaid King, his Supreme Lord, of his State, Title, Power and Government, to deprive; but his ſaid Lord the King to kill, and put to Death, and the ancient Government of this his Kingdom of England to change, and wholly ſubvert; and a miſerable Slaughter of the ſaid King's Subjects to cauſe and procure; and Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King, to move and ſtir up: And to accompliſh the ſaid horrible Treaſons, traiterous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes, He, the ſaid William Ruſſel, with other falſe Traitors, did meet, conſult, and conclude, Inſurrection and Rebellion againſt our ſaid Lord the King, within this Kingdom of England, to move and ſtir up: And the Guards for the Preſervation of the King's Perſon, to ſeize and deſtroy.

My Lord Ruſſel being arraigned, and pleading Not Guilty, moved to put off his Trial, alledging, he thought a Priſoner had never been arraigned and tried at the ſame Time; ſuggeſting that he had been a cloſe Priſoner, and had no Opportunity of preparing for his Defence.

The Chief Juſtice, Sir Edmond Saunders, anſwered, It was uſual, for Crimes of this Nature, to arraign and try the Priſoner the ſame Day.

Sir

1683. 35 Car. II.

Sir Robert Sawyer, the Attorney-General, alſo obſerved, That his Lordſhip had no Reaſon to complain for want of Notice; becauſe he had Notice given him of his Trial the Monday Seven-night before, and the Matters he was charged with: That he had had the Liberty of Counſel to adviſe him, and no ſort of Liberty denied him, which was fit for a Subject to have in his Condition. And the Chief Juſtice ſaid, Theſe were Privileges never before granted to any Man in his Lordſhip's Circumſtances.

Lord Ruſſel replied, There were only ſome general Queſtions put to him; and that he had ſome Witneſſes that could not be in Town till Night; and therefore thought it hard he could not have one Day more.

The Attorney-General ſtill averred, The Priſoner did know the Matter, he was charged with, the Monday Seven-night before; for he himſelf, he ſaid, was with his Lordſhip, and heard him examined to thoſe Points.

My Lord Ruſſel then ſaid, He had not had a Copy of the Pannel: To which the Court anſwered, He had had a Copy of the Names of the Perſons intended to appear as Jurors, and there could no other Copy be given him; for the Priſoner might challenge 35, and therefore there was generally a Return of Three or Fourſcore. This was not like a Pannel made up by the Sheriff, in ordinary Caſes, between Man and Man, from whence they could not depart when it was once returned; and if they were to give him a new Liſt of Names, they could only give him ſuch another.

Then the Priſoner deſired that his Trial might be put off till the Afternoon, which the Chief Juſtice ſeemed inclined to; but Mr. Attorney inſiſting that he ſhould be tried immediately, the Chief Juſtice ſaid, He could not put it off, without the Conſent of the King's Counſel.

The Clerk proceeding to call the Jury, his Lordſhip deſired he might have Pen, Ink, and Paper, and that he might make uſe of ſuch Papers as he brought into Court with him; which was granted.

He alſo deſired he might have one to write for him, and aſſiſt his Memory; and the Attorney-General anſwered, he might have two. My Lord ſaid his Wife was there, and would do it: The Chief Juſtice anſwered, his Lady might, if ſhe would give herſelf the Trouble.

Challenge for want of Freehold over-ruled.

John Martin being called to ſerve on the Jury, the Lord Ruſſel challenged him, objecting that he had not Forty Shillings a Year Freehold, and therefore could not ſerve: Which Point his Counſel, Mr. Pollexfen, Mr. Holt, and Mr. Ward, were permitted to argue, and were anſwered by the King's Counſel; and the Challenge was over-ruled by all the Judges on the Bench, being ſeven in Number; for that at Common Law, the want of Freehold was no Exception in a City; and the Statute of 1 Mary declared, that all Trials for Treaſon ſhould be according to the common Law: Nor had this Challenge, for want of Freehold, been ever allowed in the City.

1683. 35 Car. II.

The Lord Ruſſel afterwards challenged one and thirty peremptorily, and the following Jury were ſworn.

The Jury.

John Martin,	William Butler,
William Rouſe,	James Pickering,
Jervis Seaton,	Thomas Jeve,
William Faſhion,	Hugh Noden,
Thomas Short,	Robert Brough,
George Torriano,	Thomas Oneby.

Mr. Attorney opens the Evidence.

Mr. Attorney-General, in opening the Indictment and the Evidence, obſerved, That the Lord Ruſſel, the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and Mr. Ferguſon, were a kind of Council of State, to direct and manage the general Riſing, that was intended on the 17th of November, then laſt paſt: That theſe Gentlemen had frequent Meetings in October and November, and there conſulted how to manage the Inſurrection, and to ſeize the King's Guards: That at ſeveral Meetings they received Meſſages from Lord Shaftesbury, concerning theſe Riſings; but not being able to prepare Matters againſt the Day appointed, Lord Shaftesbury went over to Holland, and Ferguſon with him: Whereupon their Council was new modeled, Sir Thomas Armſtrong was left out, as was alſo the Lord Grey; for they put on the Face of Religion; and my Lord Grey was eſteemed ſo ſcandalous, (on Account of his living in Adultery with his Lady's Siſter) that they were aſſured his being one of them would leſſen their Reputation among the Saints.

The Council of Six.

The Members of this new Council were, the Lord Ruſſel, the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Howard, the Lord Eſſex (who had that Morning prevented the Hand of Juſtice), Colonel Sidney, and Mr. Hampden. This was the great Council, that moved all the reſt; and they met frequently at the Lord Ruſſel's Houſe, to prepare Things for an Inſurrection. There was alſo an inferior Council, or Cabal, conſiſting of Seven, who managed the Buſineſs of the Aſſaſſination.

That it was determined, by the firſt Council, That before they fixed upon a Time for the Inſurrection in England, they ſhould get Intelligence of the Time and Method of the intended Riſing in Scotland; and thereupon Aaron Smith was diſpatched to that Kingdom, to invite the Scots to act in Concert with them; and ſeveral Perſons came from Scotland, to treat with the Conſpirators here, who demanded 30000 l. to enable them to make a Diverſion here: However, they fell in their Demands to 10000 l. and at laſt to 5000 l. But the Treaty was broke off the very Week the Plot was diſcovered.

Colonel Rumſey's Evidence.

Then the Witneſſes were called, and firſt Colonel Rumſey was ſworn, who depoſed, That he was at Lord Shaftesbury's Lodgings in Wapping, the latter End of October, or the Beginning of November laſt, and his Lordſhip told him, there were met at Mr. Shepherd's Houſe, the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruſſel, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and Mr. Ferguſon; and that he deſired him (the Witneſs) to ſpeak to them, and know what Reſolution

1683. 35 Car. II. lution they were come to, about the Riſing at Taunton. That he went to them accordingly; and their Anſwer was, That Mr. Trenchard had failed them, who had promiſed to raiſe a Thouſand Foot, and Three Hundred Horſe, but could not perform it; and his Lordſhip muſt be content. The Chief Juſtice demanding, who gave this Anſwer? he anſwered, Mr. Ferguſon ſpoke moſt of it, though he thought Lord Grey ſaid ſomething to the ſame Purpoſe; the Lord Ruſſel, and Duke of Monmouth, being preſent.

It being demanded of Colonel Rumſey, If there was any Diſcourſe happened, while he was at Mr. Shepherd's? he anſwered, There was ſome Diſcourſe about ſeeing what Poſture the Guards were in, that they might ſurprize them. And being asked, If it was diſcourſed by all the Company? he anſwered, All the Company did debate it: And he thought the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, undertook to view them, it being intended to ſurprize them, if the Riſing went on.

The Attorney-General asked, if he (the Witneſs) was to be concerned in the Riſing? The Colonel anſwered, Yes, he was engaged in it by Lord Shaftesbury, and was to have gone down to Briſtol.

Mr. Serjeant Jeffries demanding, whether the Priſoner was averſe to, or agreeing to their Reſolution? Colonel Rumſey anſwered, agreeing to it. The Court asking, What my Lord Shaftesbury ſaid, when he carried back their Anſwer? the Colonel anſwered, He ſaid he would be gone, and accordingly did go: And that this was about a Fortnight before the Time appointed for the Riſing.

The Court then told the Lord Ruſſel, he might ask the Witneſs any Queſtions.

His Lordſhip anſwered, He knew little of the Matter; it was the greateſt Accident in the World he was there, and when he ſaw what Company was there, he would have been gone again: But there was no Diſcourſe of ſurpriſing the Guards, or undertaking to raiſe an Army: And deſired to know if he gave any Anſwer about the Riſing. And the Chief Juſtice demanded of the Witneſs, If my Lord Ruſſel ſaid any thing there, and What? the Colonel anſwered, The Lord Ruſſel did diſcourſe of the Riſing at Taunton.

The Chief Juſtice then demanded, If Lord Ruſſel gave his Conſent to the Riſing? Colonel Rumſey anſwered, Yes, my Lord, he did.

Then Mr. Shepherd, a Merchant in Abchurch-Lane, at whoſe Houſe the Conſultation was held, was ſworn.

Shepherd's Evidence. He depoſed, That in October laſt, Mr. Ferguſon came to him, in the Duke of Monmouth's Name, and deſired the Conveniency of his Houſe, for him and ſome other Perſons of Quality to meet there: And as ſoon as he had granted it, in the Evening, the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Grey, Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Colonel Rumſey, and Mr. Ferguſon, came in: And Sir Thomas Armſtrong deſired that none of his Servants might come up; but they might be private: So he (the Witneſs) went down for Wine, and what they wanted: That the Subſtance of their Diſcourſe was, to ſurprize the Guards; and in order to that, the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Grey, and Sir Thomas Armſtrong, went one Night to the Mews, or thereabout, to view the Guards, as he remembered. And the next Time they came to his Houſe, he heard Sir Thomas Armſtrong ſay, The Guards were very remiſs, and not like Soldiers; and the Thing was very feaſible, if they had Strength to do it. 1683. 35 Car. II.

It being demanded, if they met by Chance, or the Witneſs had Notice of it? Mr. Shepherd anſwered, He had Notice that the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruſſel, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and Mr. Ferguſon, would be there: That they did not come together, but one after another; and he did not know whether they came in their Coaches, or on Foot.

Mr. Serjeant Jeffries demanding, If my Lord Ruſſel was there both Times? Mr. Shepherd anſwered, Yes, as he remembred. And being asked, If Lord Ruſſel had any particular Buſineſs with him? He anſwered, No, not at that Time; but ſince he had, about the Affairs of Lord Shaftesbury. Being asked, If any Paper was read at that Time? He ſaid Somewhat was read, in the Nature of a Declaration, ſetting forth the Grievances of the Nation, in order to a Riſing. He would not ſay Lord Ruſſel was there then; but he was, when they talked of ſeizing the Guards.—— The Chief Juſtice demanded again, If the Lord Ruſſel was preſent at both the Meetings? Mr. Shepherd anſwered, I think ſo; but it was eight or nine Months ago, and I cannot be poſitive.

The Lord Howard being ſworn next, Mr. Attorney demanded, What he knew of the Riſing deſigned before the Lord Shaftesbury went away; and how it was continued on?

Lord Howard's Evidence. His Lordſhip having obſerved the Ferment the Town was in at the Election of Sheriffs, ſeems to date the Original of the Plot from thence: And then gives an Account of his introducing Capt. Walcot to Lord Shaftesbury, and his attending Lord Shaftesbury when he abſconded; who complained to him, he ſaid, that their Deſigns were much obſtructed by the unhandſome Deportment of the Duke of Monmouth and Lord Ruſſel; who had not only withdrawn themſelves from his Aſſiſtance, but acted contrary to their Engagements; for when he had got ſuch a formed Force in London, and expected to have it anſwered by them in the Country, They told him they were not in a Condition to concur with him; which he looked upon as an Excuſe, and an Inſtance of their Intentions to deſert him. However, there were ſuch Preparations made in London, that if they were willing to loſe the Honour of concurring with him, he ſhould be able to do it himſelf, and intended ſpeedily to put his Deſign in Execution: There were ten thouſand briſk Boys, ready to follow him whenever he held up his Finger.—— That he (Lord Howard) went to Moor-Park to the Duke of Monmouth, and acquainted him with Lord Shaftesbury's Complaints: And the Duke anſwered, answered, He thought he was mad. He was so far from giving him Encouragement, that he told him from the beginning, and so did Lord Russel, There was nothing to be done by them in the Country at that time. That he returned to Lord Shaftesbury, and told him, the Duke disowned they ever gave him any Encouragement: And Shaftesbury answered, It was false; and he had Reason to believe, There was some artificial Bargain between his Father and him, to save one another: They had different Prospects. We, says he, are for a Commonwealth; and he has no Design but his own Personal Interest, and that will not go down with my People. That the Duke of Monmouth afterwards told him (Lord Howard) that the Lord Russel had been with Lord Shaftesbury, and put off the Day of Rendezvous, upon Condition that those Lords, and some others, should be in a Readiness to raise the Country within a Fortnight after: And, That the Duke added, He had been at Wapping all Night, and never saw a Company of bolder and brisker Fellows in his Life. That he had also viewed the Avenues to the Tower, and did not think it difficult to possess themselves of it.

Here the Lord Russel complained he had very hard Measure, that so much Hear-say Evidence was given.

Whereupon the Chief Justice declared to the Jury, That this did not affect his Lordship.

Lord Howard proceeded in his Evidence, and said, About the 17th or 18th of October last, Capt. Walcot told him, they were positively resolved to rise; and did believe, that a smart Party might meet some great Men: Whereupon he acquainted the Duke of Monmouth there was some dark Intimation of an Attempt upon the King's Person: And the Duke thereupon struck his Breast, and with great Emotion, said, God-so, kill the King! I will never suffer them. That the Day the King came from New-market, they had a Notion conveyed amongst them, that there was a Design upon the the King: And Lord Grey said, By God, if they do attempt such a Thing, they cannot fail. And they were in great Anxiety of Mind, till they heard the King's Coach was come in.

This failing, it was next resolved to be done on the Anniversary of Queen Elizabeth, the 17th of November: Which failing also, by their not being ready in the Country, Lord Shaftesbury took Shipping and got away; and from that Time he (Lord Howard) heard no more of Lord Shaftesbury till he died.

After this, they considered they had gone so far, and communicated the Affair to so many, that there was no retreating; and that to manage so great a Design, a general Council was necessary to take care of the Whole: About the Middle of last January therefore they constituted a Cabal, consisting of six Persons; namely, The Duke of Monmouth, Lord Essex, Lord Russel, Mr. Hampden, jun. Algernon Sidney, and himself (Lord Howard), who met about the same time at Mr. Hampden's House, where it was debated, Whether it was most proper to begin the Insurrection in London, or in the Country? And the Duke of Monmouth observed, That it would be impossible to resist a formed Force, with a Rabble hastily got together; and that, whatever Numbers could be gathered in the City, would be dispersed before they could form themselves: Concluding therefore, that it would be better to rise at such a Distance from the Town, as they might have an Opportunity of forming themselves; and not here, where every slight Rumour might intimidate their Friends; and one Half Hour would convey the News to those Forces, that in another Half Hour, would be ready to suppress them: Whereas, if they should begin at a Distance from London, the King would be under this Dilemma, either to send down his Forces, and leave the City naked; or, if he did not send, he would give them an Opportunity of forming themselves into Bodies in the Country. Then they considered, what Towns and Counties were most disposed to Action; and what Arms and Money would be wanting: And the last and greatest Consideration was, How they might draw the Scots in to join them.— That about ten Days after, the same Persons had a Meeting at Lord Russel's House; and there it was resolved to send some Persons to Lord Argyle, to settle a Correspondence with him, and get Intelligence of the State of Scotland, and to invite some Persons hither, that were supposed to understand the Situation of their Affairs: And the Persons agreed to be invited were, Sir John Cockram, Lord Melvile, and, as he thought, one of the Campbels.

The Council of Six.

Their Debates.

That Colonel Sidney had the Care of this Business; who told him (Lord Howard) he had sent Aaron Smith to Scotland, and given him sixty Guineas for his Journey: And they agreed not to meet any more till the Return of that Messenger, who was gone near a Month before they heard any thing of him, and they were afraid their Letter had miscarried: But it could have done no great Hurt, if it had; for it carried only a kind of Cant in it, being under the Disguise of a Plantation in Carolina.

Mr. Attorney demanding, If my Lord Russel was at these Meetings? Lord Howard answered, Yes: He wished he could say he was not: And being asked, If he sat as a Cypher amongst them, and said nothing? Lord Howard answered, Every one knew Lord Russel was a Person of great Judgment, and not very lavish in Discourse. And it being asked, If Lord Russel consented? He answered, They did not put it to the Vote, it went without Contradiction; and he took it, That all there gave their Consent.

Then the Court told the Prisoner, That was his Time, if he would ask the Witness any Questions: Whereupon Lord Russel said, The most this Witness had testified of him, was only Hear-say; The two times they met was upon no formed Design; only to talk of News, and Things in general.

The Court replied, He testified, that after Lord Shaftesbury went off, the Party concerned with him, made Choice of the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Russel, &c. to carry on the Design of an Insurrection, or Rising in the Kingdom.

The Lord Russel asked, By what Party that Council was chosen, for he knew of no Party? Lord Howard answered, They erected themselves into this Society, by mutual Agreement. Lord Russel replied, They were People that did meet very often; and though, he said, they met upon a formed Design, they met about no such Thing.

Then the Chief Justice observed, That Lord Howard had testified, They did consult among themselves about raising Men, and where the Rising should first be; whether in London, or more distant Parts: That they had several Debates about it; and mentioned some of the Duke of Monmouth's Arguments for its being begun in Places distant from the City. That they did all agree, not to do any thing further, till they had considered how to raise Money and Arms, and engage the Kingdom of Scotland in the Business: And that it was agreed amongst them to send a Messenger to Scotland. This Lord Howard testified, of his own Knowledge.

Lord Russel again acknowledged they met; but said, there was no Debate of any such Thing, nor putting any Thing in Method; but Lord Howard was a Man of a voluble Tongue, talked well, was full of Discourse, and they were delighted to hear him.

Evidence that the Agents invited, came up from Scotland.

Here Mr. Attorney called Mr. Atterbury, the Messenger, to prove Sir Hugh Campbell came up from Scotland, to London, in pursuance of the Message sent him: And Atterbury deposed, That Sir Hugh Campbell was in his Custody, both he and his Son being taken as they were making their Escape out of a Woodmonger's House: That Sir Hugh acknowledged he had been in Town four Days, and came up with his Son, and one Bailey.

Mr. Attorney then called Mr. West, and demanded, Whether he, and the rest of those that intended to rise, looked upon any of the Lords, above-mentioned, as concerned in it?

West deposed, That they always said Lord Russel was the Man they most depended on; because he was a Person looked upon as of great Sobriety.

Lord Russel answered, He could not hinder People from making use of his Name; but he thought it hard to have this brought to influence the Jury, and inflame them against him.

Mr. Attorney replied, It was not Evidence to convict a Man, if there was not plain Evidence before; but it confirmed what the rest had sworn.

Then the Chief Justice acquainted the Prisoner, That the King's Counsel had done with their Evidence; and said, he would put him in Mind of the most material Things that had been proved against him.

The Chief Justice puts Lord Russel in Mind of what had been testified against him.

And first; That Colonel Rumsey had deposed, he was sent to them on a traitorous Errand, to know what had been done concerning the designed Insurrection at Taunton: And that he (Lord Russel) being at that Meeting, Answer was made, Mr. Trenchard had failed them; and my Lord Shaftesbury must be contented as to that time. That Mr. Shepherd also deposed, his Lordship was at that Meeting; and that a Paper was read, purporting a Declaration designed to be published on their Rising; setting forth, the Oppressions and Grievances of the Nation. That the Lord Howard, after having given a long Account of the Lord Shaftesbury's Designs, deposed, That six of them did undertake, as a Council, to manage the intended Insurrection, and surprise the King's Guards, which was Rebellion: And deposed they had several Consults concerning it; and had mentioned several Particulars debated at those Consults. 1683. 35 Car. II

Lord Russel's Defence.

The Lord Russel then proceeding in his Defence, said, I think my self mighty unfortunate to stand here, charged with a heinous Crime; and that intermixed with Treasons, and horrid Practices and Speeches of others; the King's Counsel taking all Advantages, improving and heightening Things against me. I am no Lawyer; a very unready Speaker; a Stranger to Things of this Nature; alone, and without Counsel. I am very sensible I am not provided to make a just Defence: But my Lord, you are equal; and the Gentlemen of the Jury, I think, are Men of Conscience: They are Strangers to me, and I hope they value innocent Blood; and will consider, That the Witnesses against me swear to save their own Lives: However they may be accounted legal Witnesses, they cannot be credible. For Colonel Rumsey, who had been so highly obliged by the King and Duke, to be capable of a Design to murder the King; I think, no Body will wonder, if, to save his own Life, he will endeavour to take away mine. Neither does he swear enough to do it; and if he did, the Time, by the 13th of this King, is elapsed; the Prosecution ought to be within six Months. And by the 25th of Edw. III. a Design to levy War was no Treason, unless some Overt-Act appeared: And desired to know what Statute he was tried upon.

The Attorney-General answered, They went upon the 25th of Edw. III. And this has been constantly so adjudged in all Trials since the Revolution, To prepare Forces to fight against the King, was a Design to kill the King within that Statute: That a Design to depose the King, to imprison him, or raise his Subjects against him, were within that Statute, and Evidences of a Design to kill the King.

Lord Russel said, He heard nothing of Col. Rumsey's Message; nor did he say he spoke to him, or that he gave any Answer: And Mr. Shepherd remembered nothing of it; so there was but one Witness, and that would not convict him of Treason: Besides, a Conspiracy to levy War was no Treason; and desired he might have Counsel to argue that Point.

The Chief Justice answered, Thus the Law also is held to be at this Day: That it had been resolved, that there need not be two Witnesses to the same individual Act: If there were several Acts manifesting the same Treason, and one Witness to each of them, they were two Witnesses within the Statute of Edw. VI. And as to the other Point, Whether a Conspiracy to levy War was Treason? The Fact must be admitted, That he had consulted to levy War, before they could speak to it.

Mr.

1683. 35 Car. II.

Mr. Attorney obſerved, That in my Lord Stafford's Caſe, there was but one Witneſs to one Act in England; and another, to another Act in France.

Lord Ruſſel anſwered, It was to the ſame Point.

Mr. Attorney replied— To the general Point, the Lopping Point: (The taking off the King.)

Then Lord Ruſſel demanded again, Whether Colonel Rumſey could ſwear poſitively that he heard the Meſſage, and gave any Anſwer to it?

Colonel Rumſey anſwered, When he came in, they were ſtanding by the Fire-ſide; but they all came from the Fire-ſide to hear what he ſaid.

Lord Ruſſel then averred, That he came in with the Duke of Monmouth, and Rumſey was there before: And called Witneſſes to prove, that Lord Howard ſaid he knew nothing againſt him; or of any Plot.

Lord Ruſſel's Witneſſes.

And firſt, the Lord Angleſey ſtood up and declared, That hearing the Lord Bedford was in ſome Affliction for his Son, he made him a Viſit, when my Lord Howard came in, and began to comfort my Lord, ſaying, You are happy in a wiſe Son, and a worthy Perſon; one that can never, ſure, be in ſuch a Plot as this, or ſuſpected for it: I know nothing againſt him, or any Body elſe, of ſuch a barbarous Deſign; and therefore your Lordſhip may be comforted in it.

Mr. Howard alſo depoſed, That the Lord Howard, upon his Honour, his Faith, and with as much Solemnity as if he had taken an Oath before a Magiſtrate, denied he knew of any Man concerned in the Plot; and particularly of my Lord Ruſſel, whom he vindicated with all the Honour imaginable; ſaying, He did not only ſuffer unjuſtly, but he thought him the worthieſt Perſon in the World.

Doctor Burnet declared, Lord Howard was with him the Night after the Plot broke out; and with his Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, ſaid, That he knew nothing of any Plot, or believed any; and treated it with great Contempt.

Lord Cavendiſh declared, He always thought Lord Ruſſel to be a Man of great Honour; too prudent and wary to be concerned in ſo deſperate a Deſign; and had expreſſed ſo ill an Opinion of Colonel Rumſey, that it was not likely he would truſt him with ſuch a Secret.

Doctor Tillotſon ſaid, He took the Lord Ruſſel to be a Perſon of great Virtue and Integrity; and could not but think him very far from any ſuch wicked Deſign.

Doctor Burnet and Doctor Cox ſaid, They had heard Lord Ruſſel declare himſelf againſt all Inſurrections.

The Duke of Somerſet ſaid, He had known Lord Ruſſel two Years, and never heard any thing from him but what was honourable, loyal, and juſt.

Then the Jury deſired to know, What the Lord Howard ſaid, as to what the Lord Angleſey teſtified.

Lord Howard vindicates himſelf.

Lord Howard anſwered, He confeſſed he did frequently ſay there was nothing of Truth in the Plot: He was at that time to out-face the Thing, both for himſelf and his Party; and he did not intend then to have acted this Part.

1683. 35 Car. I

He did not think that the Religion of an Oath was tied to a Place; but received its Obligation from the Appeal made to God: And if he called God and Angels to witneſs to a Falſhood, he ought not to be believed now: But their Lordſhips knew, Every Man was committed for a Deſign to murder the King. And he laid hold on this; for he was to carry his Knife cloſe between the Paring and the Apple. And he did ſay, If I were an Enemy to my Lord Ruſſel and the Duke of Monmouth, and were called to be a Witneſs, I muſt have declared, in the Preſence of God and Man, that I did not believe either of them had a Deſign to murder the King.

Several other Witneſſes appeared, and gave Lord Ruſſel the Character of a virtuous Man; and good in all Relations.

Lord Ruſſel concludes his Defence.

Then the Lord Ruſſel concluded his Defence, and ſaid, I declare to your Lordſhip, I have always had a Heart ſincerely loyal and affectionate to the King and Government, the beſt Government in the World. I pray as ſincerely for the King's happy and long Life, as any Man alive: And for me to go about to raiſe a Rebellion, which I looked upon as wicked and impracticable, is very unlikely. I was always for the Government; I never deſired any thing to be redreſſed, but in a Parliamentary and Legal Way: Gentlemen, I am now in your Hands eternally, my Honour, my Life, and all; and I hope the Heats and Animoſities amongſt you, will not ſo byas you as to incline you to find an innocent Man guilty. I call Heaven and Earth to witneſs, I never had a Deſign againſt the King's Life; nor ever ſhall have. I think there is nothing at all proved againſt me: I am in your Hands; God direct you.

Mr. Solicitor's Obſervations on the Evidence.

The Solicitor-General then proceeded to ſum up the Evidence, and make his Obſervations on it for the King; wherein he ſhewed, That nothing was more common than to indict a Man for conſpiring the Death of the King; and to aſſign a Conſultation for levying War againſt the King, as an Overt-Act or Evidence of it. And that, a Deſign to bring the King into their Power, till he had conſented to ſuch Things as ſhould be moved in his Parliament, was equally Treaſon, as if they had agreed directly to aſſaſſinate him. But the reſt of his Argument comprehending only what had been already urged in the Courſe of the Trial, is deſignedly omitted.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice, in his Directions to the Jury, ſaid, The Queſtion before you will be, Whether, upon the whole Matter, you do believe my Lord Ruſſel had any Deſign upon the King's Life? To deſtroy the King or take away his Life? for that is the material Part here. Tis uſed, and given you by the King's Counſel, as an Evidence of this, That he did conſpire to raiſe an Inſurrection, and to cauſe a Riſing of the People, to make, as it were, a Rebellion within the Nation, and to ſurprize the King's Guards, which, ſay they, can have no other End than to ſeize and deſtroy the King: And tis a great Evidence (if my 1683. 35 Car. II. my Lord Ruſſel did deſign to ſeize the King's Guards, and make an Inſurrection in the Kingdom) of a Deſign to ſurprize the King's Perſon. It muſt be left to you, upon the whole Matter: You have not Evidence in this Caſe, as there was yeſterday againſt the Conſpirators to kill the King at the Rye: There was direct Evidence of a Conſult to kill the King; that is not given you in this Caſe; This is an Act of contriving Rebellion and an Inſurrection within the Kingdom, and to ſeize his Guards, which is urged as an Evidence: And ſurely it is in itſelf an Evidence, to ſeize and deſtroy the King. Upon this whole Matter, this is left to you: If you believe the Priſoner at the Bar to have conſpired the Death of the King; and in order to that, to have had theſe Conſults that the Witneſſes ſpeak of, then you muſt find him guilty of this Treaſon that is laid to his Charge.

Lord Ruſſel convicted. Then the Court adjourned till Four in the Afternoon; when the Jury brought the Lord Ruſſel in GUILTY of High-Treaſon.

The next Day being Saturday, the 14th of July, the Lord Ruſſel was brought into Court to receive Sentence. And it being demanded of him, What he had to ſay, why Judgment ſhould not paſs upon him? He deſired the Indictment might be read in Engliſh; and the Clerk having read the Words, which charged him with conſpiring the King's Death, He moves in Arreſt of Judgment. He ſaid, he thought he had not been charged with conſpiring the Death of the King; for the Witneſſes had only ſworn a Conſpiracy to levy War againſt him; and therefore he thought Judgment could not paſs upon him for conſpiring the King's Death: To which Mr. Recorder anſwered, That was an Exception proper to be made before Verdict; and he thought he did make it. Whether the Evidence did ſupport the Charge, was proper to be obſerved to the Jury; for if it came ſhort of the Indictment, they could not find it to be a true Charge; but when they had found it, their Verdict paſſed for Truth.

The Lord Ruſſel replied, He thought it very hard he muſt be condemned upon a Point, that there was not one thing of it ſworn; and therefore thought he might legally demand an Arreſt of Judgment.

His Exceptions anſwered. The Recorder ſaid, he hoped his Lordſhip would conſider, it was not the Court that could give a Verdict, it muſt be the Jury; and he believed there was no Body in the Court delighted in giving ſuch Judgments, eſpecially againſt his Lordſhip. The Verdict was found; and the King's Attorney-General, in behalf of the King, did demand it: And thereupon, after a ſhort Preface, the Recorder He is condemned. proceeded to paſs Sentence upon the Lord Ruſſel, as is uſual upon a Conviction of High-Treaſon.

Walcot, &c. called to hear Judgment. Then Capt. Walcot, Hone, and Rouſe, were ſet to the Bar; and it was demanded of them reſpectively, What they could ſay, why Judgment ſhould not be pronounced againſt them?

Rouſe anſwered, That the Words mentioned in the Indictment againſt him, were laid to have been ſpoken the ſecond of March; and by the Evidence, they appeared to be ſpoken in June; and therefore he thought it ſtrange the Jury ſhould find him guilty of them: But neither he, nor either of the other two, offering any thing material in Arreſt of Judgment, the uſual Sentence in High-Treaſon was pronounced on them all three. 1683. 35 Car. II. Sentence pronounced againſt them.

The Execution of Capt. Walcot, John Rouſe, and William Hone, being appointed on Friday the 20th of July, they were that Day drawn on Sledges from Newgate to Tyburn; and there being put into a Cart, Dr. Thomas Cartwright Dean of Rippon, and Mr. Smith Ordinary of Newgate, exhorted them to make an ingenuous Confeſſion of what they knew of the Conſpiracy. Capt. Walcot anſwered, He had ſome Papers in his Pocket, which he had prepared, his Memory being bad, and deſired he might read them; and the Sheriffs conſenting, he looked upon one of his Papers, and began his Speech: Wherein he ſaid, That to the End he might not be thought an Atheiſt, he declared he believed in the Trinity, and hoped to be ſaved by the Merits of Chriſt alone: That he alſo believed the Scriptures to be written by Men inſpired, and ought to be the Rule of Faith: That Chriſt was the Head of the Church, and it was not in the Power of Councils or Cardinals, or any Power on Earth, to ſet up the Traditions of Men, and make them of equal Validity with the Word of God. As to the preſent Occaſion, he ſaid, I do neither blame the Judges, the Jury, or the King's Counſel. I only blame ſome Men, that in Truth were deeper concerned, and more engaged than I, that came in as Witneſſes againſt me; and ſwore me out of my Life to ſave their own. Walcot's Speech at the Place of Execution.

I confeſs I was ſo unfortunate as to be invited by Colonel Rumſey, one of the Witneſſes againſt me, to ſome Meetings, where ſome Things were diſcourſed of, in order to the aſſerting our Liberties and Properties, which we looked upon to be violated and invaded; but it was he and Mr. Weſt, and ſome Gentlemen that are fled, that were the great Promoters of thoſe Meetings. I was near a Quarter of a Year ill of the Gout, and during that Time, Mr. Weſt often viſited me; and ſtill his Diſcourſe would be concerning LOPPING THE TWO SPARKS; that was the Word he uſed, meaning THE KING AND THE DUKE; and propoſed it might be done at a Play; for he ſaid, THEN THEY WOULD DIE IN THEIR CALLING. He bought Arms to do it, without any Direction of mine: I never ſaw the Arms, nor I never ſaw the Men that were to do it, though they ſaid THEY HAD FIFTY EMPLOYED FOR THAT END. I told ſeveral of them, that the killing the King would carry ſuch a Blemiſh and Stain with it, as would deſcend to Poſterity: That I had eight Children that I was loth ſhould be blemiſhed with it: And withal, I was confident the Duke of Monmouth would revenge his Father's Blood, if it were but to vindicate himſelf from having any Hand in it. Mr. Weſt preſently told me, that the Duke of Monmouth did not refuſe to give an Engagement, that he would not puniſh thoſe that ſhould kill the King.

He forgave all the World, and even Mr. Shepherd, who promiſed to carry him to Holland; but inſtead of it, delivered him up, and and brought him into the Condition he was in. He forgave alſo the reſt of the Witneſſes; but begged it might be obſerved, if their End was Peace, and they died the common Death of all Men; for though by the Law of the Land I ought to die, and the King may reaſonably put me to Death, for being at thoſe Meetings, where a War was debated; yet I think thoſe Men are guilty of my Blood, that were as deep in it as I, and have betrayed me, and taken it away. Then he accuſed his Friends, That they would neither hear any Man ſpeak, or ſpeak themſelves, what they would not have repeated; for there was no ſuch thing as Faith in Man to Man, whatever there was in Man to God: Either the Tears of a Wife, or a Family of little helpleſs Children, ſomething or other, would tempt and provoke Men to betray one another.

Dr. Cartwright. You blame the Witneſſes for that which is their Virtue, not their Crime: That they have been Witneſſes for the King.

Walcot. I was not for contriving the King's Death, if you will believe me.

Dr. Cartwright. You blame them for betraying your contriving the War, upon which the Death of the King muſt have followed, if your Treaſon had gone forward; or elſe you could not have defended yourſelf from that Juſtice, to which he has brought you.

Walcot. Sir, I think it was but reaſonable I ſhould ſuffer: That is due from Juſtice, and reaſonable by Law; but theſe Men did not come in againſt me, till they did it to ſave themſelves; and they revealed it with that aggravating Circumſtance, no rational Man could be guilty of.

Dr. Cartwright. That Circumſtance, which you call aggravating, is no Aggravation at all; but rather a Mitigation of your Crime. They would have it believed, that you were tenderer of the King's Perſon, than to ſhoot him when he was not armed: But you confeſs you were conſulting that Crime.

Walcot. I was not to have a Hand in the King's Death.

Dr. Cartwright. But it was propoſed when you was there.

Walcot. It was ſo.

Dr. Cartwright. And it was agreed to be done.

Walcot. Truly, I do not know how far it was agreed; I was there at many Meetings.

Dr. Cartwright. Theſe very Meetings you could not but be ſenſible of.

Walcot. There were ſeveral Meetings, wherein the Buſineſs of the King's Life was never ſpoke of.

Dr. Cartwright. That was agreed at thoſe Meetings; but you had a tenderer Conſcience.

Walcot. I ſay, they were for aſſerting our Liberties and Properties.

Dr. Cartwright. I would fain have you explain that.

Walcot. Truly, Sir, ſince you do preſs me to ſpeak, We were under general Apprehenſions; and ſo were thoſe Lords, that are likely to ſuffer (as I have heard), of Popery and Slavery coming in.

Dr. Cartwright. What Sign was there of it? You had no Perſecution at all: You were allowed by Law to meet, five in a Houſe, beſides the Family. It is true, Conventicles have been diſturbed of late; and I would have you look upon it as a Judgment of God, to bring you to this, for forſaking the Communion of the Church of England, in which Way you were inſtructed from your Youth. 1683. 35 Car. II.

Walcot. I do not come here to diſpute of Religion; but to die religiouſly, if it pleaſe God to enable me.

Dr. Cartwright. I pray God enable you: But I would not have you charge that as a Crime upon the Witneſſes, which was their Duty.

Walcot. I cannot tell how to excuſe the Witneſſes, for aggravating Things againſt me, and making them worſe than really they were: For a Man to invite another to a Meeting; to importune him to this Meeting; to be perpetually ſoliciting him, and then deliver him up to be hanged, as they have done me.——

Dr. Cartwright. It was a Crime to ſolicit you to thoſe Meetings; but when you were in, it was a Duty in you, and in them, to reveal it: If God had given you the Grace to diſcover them, the Turn had been theirs, which is yours. And as you ſay, you cannot excuſe them, That is uncharitable.

Walcot. I do forgive them, and I deſire, with all my Heart, God would forgive them.

Dr. Cartwright. You confeſs you were guilty enough to take away your Life.

Walcot. I was ſo. The ſame Meaſure we mete to another, that Meaſure God will mete to us: I leave it to God.

Dr. Cartwright. You pray this may be the laſt Blood ſpilt upon this Account.

Walcot. I do ſo.

Dr. Cartwright. Would not you have Traitors brought to their End? You talk of ſpilling of Blood, as if it were innocent Blood now ſpilt, when you do confeſs and own the Guilt: But I ſhall give you no further Diſturbance, than my Prayers to Almighty God for you, That God would give you Mercy.

Dr. Cartwright, then turning to Hone, and exhorting him to unburden his Conſcience: Hone confeſſed he was guilty of this Crime, according to the Law of the Land, and the Law of God. Hone's laſt Words at Tyburn.

Dr. Cartwright. You ſay, you were guilty of conſpiring the Death of the King, and raiſing an Inſurrection?

Hone. Truly, I muſt ſay, as the Captain, I was drawn in: Thou ſaweſt a Thief, and thou conſentedſt with him. So I ſay, That I was drawn in: I ſaw the Thief, and conſented. I have looked upon myſelf ſince to be the more guilty of Blood, and my Circumſtance was to be drawn in, and enſnared; for I never was at any of their Meetings, any of their Cabals, but in a publick Coffee-Houſe or Tavern, where they diſcourſed the Matter of Fact: And I was to meet the King, and the Duke of York; but I did not know at that

1683. 35 Car. II.

Time, when, or where, or what was my Buſineſs.

Dr. Cartwright. But you were to aſſiſt.

Hone. Yes, I promiſed that! To aſſiſt! I was reſolved, however, to go down into the Country, and not meddle in the Thing at all; and had been in the Country; but meeting with Keeling, he called me, and diſcourſing with him, I did ſay, I was for killing the King, and ſaving the Duke of York.

Dr. Cartwright. What was your Reaſon for killing the King, and ſaving the Duke of York?

Hone. The Duke of York did openly profeſs himſelf to be a Roman Catholick. And I did ſay, I had rather diſpoſe of the King, than the Duke of York.

Dr. Cartwright. Had you rather a Papiſt ſhould reign over us, than the King? If you had had a Deſign to kill the Duke, and ſave the King, it might be to prevent Popery; but you ſay the quite contrary. God in Heaven forgive your murderous Deſign.

Hone. I know as little of this, as any poor ſilly Man in the World: I was fain to gather it; I had it not down-right; I was drawn into it; however, I am now to die. As for the Witneſſes, The Lord forgive them.

Rouſe's Speech at the Place of Execution.

Dr. Cartwright asking Rouſe, What he had to ſay? he anſwered, I confeſs I have been a Hearer, and have underſtood too much of ſome kind of Meetings; God forgive me that I have not been as careful and diligent to diſcover them: But then he ſaid, he had declared his Opinion againſt thoſe Things, as a Breach of the Laws of God, and the Laws of the Land. And that what he had declared to his Majeſty in Council, was the naked Truth. He endeavoured to acquit Sir Thomas Player, of having any Hand in the Plot; and ſaid, he was indeed acquainted with the Lord Shafteſbury; but was very ſhy of his Company, after he came out of the Tower: That Sir Thomas told him (Rouſe), he never was in that Lord's Company but once after; for he ſaw ſome Deſigns that he was afraid were going on: That he (Rouſe) had been at ſeveral Clubs, eating and drinking; and that there was a Deſign to ſet up the Duke of Monmouth, (he would not ſay while the King reigned) though ſome extravagant, hot-headed Men, had taken upon them to diſcourſe thoſe Things: And he knew ſome worthy Men, who had declared, in his hearing, that in Oppoſition to the Duke of York, if the King was ſeized, they ſhould ſtand by the Duke of Monmouth. There were others that were for a Commonwealth; and ſome few for the Duke of Buckingham. That the way of theſe Gentlemen's diſcourſing of theſe Things, was only with one at a Time. This had long been the Practice of one of the Witneſſes againſt him, who had teſtified againſt him, the Words he ſpoke himſelf. That his (Rouſe's) Deſign was, to get to the Bottom of the Buſineſs, and then to have made a Diſcovery: That the ſame Witneſs told him, That a certain Number of People had made a Reſolution to attack the Tower of London, the City, White-Hall, and St. James's: That their Reſolution was not to ſpill a Drop of Blood, but only to ſecure the King's Perſon, that the Papiſts did not kill him; and then they would deal with the Duke of York as they pleaſed.

That Meſſengers being out againſt that Witneſs, he (Rouſe) offered him a Bed at his Houſe; and now he came and ſwore againſt him, that he was the Perſon engaged in the taking the Tower of London; but he never had any ſuch Thought, never conſulted any Perſon of Quality, or diſcourſed of Arms in order to it. That it was this Witneſs, that told him, the King was to be taken off, as he came from Windſor; and there were ſeveral Things to be done, in order to it: That they wanted a Place of Rendezvous; ſome were for Salisbury-Plain, and ſome for Black-Heath; but Black-Heath was pitched upon as the moſt convenient Place: And in order to gather the People together, ſome were for giving a Silver Ball to be played for; which he (Rouſe) ſeemed to approve of, and diſcourſed Goodenough about it; and of drinking a Bowl of Punch, and giving out that all ſhould be welcome: And by ſuch Means, they might gather Thirty or Forty Thouſand Men together, within two or three Days; but his (Rouſe's) Deſign was only to get what he could out of them. That the ſame Witneſs told him, Goodenough ſaid, There were Forty Thouſand Pounds in Bank; and if ſuch a Ball coſt Thirty or Forty Pounds, it mattered not, to carry on ſuch a Deſign; He ſaid alſo, there were Five Hundred Arms to be brought in, and that Mr. Weſt knew of them; for part of them were bought by him.——Rouſe added, I do freely acknowledge, and confeſs, that it is juſt in God, in the firſt Place, and righteous and juſt in the King, that I die: I die juſtly for concealing it: But he ſaid, he did not conceal it with a Deſign to prejudice his Majeſty.——The Ordinary afterwards prayed, and ſung a Pſalm with them, and then they prayed by themſelves; after which the Executioner did his Office.

The Execution of the Lord Ruſſel, being appointed on the 21ſt of July, the Sheriffs went to Newgate, about Nine in the Morning, to ſee if he was ready; and in a little Time after his Lordſhip came out, and went into his Coach, taking his Leave of his Lady, the Lord Cavendiſh, and ſeveral other Friends. There went in the Coach with him, Dr. Tillotſon, and Dr. Burnet, who attended him to the Scaffold, erected in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields, which was covered with black Cloth. Lord Ruſſel ſet out from the Scaffold in Lincoln's-Inn-Fields.

Being come upon the Scaffold, his Lordſhip bowed to the Company, and then turning to the Sheriff, ſaid,

Mr. SHERIFF,

I Expected the Noiſe would be ſuch, that I ſhould not be very well heard. I was never fond of much ſpeaking, much leſs now: Therefore, I have ſet down in this Paper, all that I think fit to leave behind me. God knows how far I was always from Deſigns againſt the King's Perſon, or of altering the Government. And I ſtill pray for the Preſervation of both, and of the Proteſtant Religion.

Mr.

Mr. Sheriff, I am told, that Captain Walcot Yeſterday ſaid ſome Things concerning my Knowledge of the Plot: I know not whether the Report is true or not. To which it being anſwered, his Lordſhip was not named by him; he replied, he hoped he was not; for, ſays he, I never ſaw him, or ſpoke to him in my whole Life; and in the Words of a dying Man, I profeſs I know of no Plot, either againſt the King's Life, or the Government: But I have now done with this World, and am going to a better. I forgive all the World heartily, and I thank God I die in Charity with all Men; and I wiſh all ſincere Proteſtants may love one another, and not make way for Popery, by their Animoſities. I pray God forgive them, and continue the Proteſtant Religion, that it may flouriſh, as long as the Sun and Moon endure. I am now more ſatisfied to die than ever I have been.

Then kneeling down, his Lordſhip prayed by himſelf; after which, Dr. Tillotſon prayed with him, and having prayed again by himſelf, he pulled off his Peruke, put on his Cap, took off his Neckcloth and Coat, and bidding the Executioner, after he had lain down a Moment, to do his Office with out a Sign, he gave him ſome Gold. Then embracing Dr. Tillotſon, and Dr. Burnet, he ſubmitted to the Block, and his Head was ſevered from his Body at two Blows, according to Dr. Burnet, who was on the Scaffold; though others ſay, there were three Strokes, and that the firſt deprived him of all Senſe and Motion; but the Faction had got a Story amongſt them, that they were mighty fond of propagating, namely, That the Executioner firſt ſtruck him on the Shoulder, and that his Lordſhip roſe up, and ſpoke to him, and his Head was not cut off under ſix or ſeven Strokes; inſinuating that the Executioner had Orders from Authority, to uſe him in that barbarous Manner: But theſe are ſuch Circumſtances, as would infallibly have been taken Notice of by Dr. Burnet if there had been any Truth in them; and therefore we may very well conclude there was no Foundation for this Story.

He is beheaded.

The Paper he left behind him.

As to the Paper the Lord Ruſſel left behind him, it being very long, and appearing an artificial Piece, drawn up by Dr. Burnet's Advice and Direction, I have deſignedly omitted it; but if the Reader has the Curioſity to peruſe that Paper, he will find it in ſeveral of our Engliſh Hiſtories; and in the Tract, entitled, The Characters and Dying Speeches of the State Priſoners.

Dr. Tillotſon, and Dr. Burnet, it is ſaid, laboured very hard to convince the Lord Ruſſel, That it was not lawful to take up Arms againſt the King; which if they could have effected, his Pardon, it was thought, might have been obtained: But he differed in Opinion with theſe Divines, at leaſt with Dr. Tillotſon to the laſt, as appears by a Letter Dr. Tillotſon wrote to him, the Day before he died, of the following Tenour.

Dr. Tillotſon's Letter to Lord Ruſſel againſt Reſiſtance.

My Lord,

I WAS heartily glad to ſee your Lordſhip, this Morning, in that calm and devout Temper, at the receiving the Bleſſed Sacrament; but Peace of Mind, unleſs it be well grounded, will avail but little, and becauſe tranſient Diſcourſe many times hath little Effect, for want of Time to weigh and conſider it: Therefore, in tender Compaſſion to your Lordſhip's Caſe, and from all the good Will, that one Man can bear to another, I do humbly offer to your Lordſhip's deliberate Thoughts, theſe following Conſiderations, concerning the Points of Reſiſtance, if your Religion and Rights ſhould be invaded, as your Lordſhip puts the Caſe: Concerning which, I underſtood by Dr. Burnet, that your Lordſhip had once received Satisfaction, and am ſorry to find a Change. 1. That the Chriſtian Religion doth plainly forbid the Reſiſtance of Authority. 2. That though our Religion be eſtabliſhed by Law, which your Lordſhip urges as a Difference between our Caſe, and that of the primitive Chriſtians; yet in the ſame Law, which eſtabliſhes our Religion, it is declared, That it is not lawful, upon any Pretence, to take up Arms: Beſides which, There is a particular Law, declaring the Power of the Militia to be ſolely in the King: And that ties the Hands of Subjects, though the Law of Nature, and general Rules of Scripture, had left us at Liberty, which I believe they do not, becauſe the Government and Peace of human Society could not well ſubſiſt upon theſe Terms. 3. Your Lordſhip's Opinion is contrary to the declared Doctrine of all Proteſtant Churches: And though ſome particular Perſons have taught otherwiſe, yet they have been contradicted herein, and condemned for it, by the generality of Proteſtants. And I beg your Lordſhip to conſider, How it will agree with an avowed aſſerting the Proteſtant Religion, to go contrary to the general Doctrine of Proteſtants: My End in this is, to convince your Lordſhip, That you are in a very great and dangerous Miſtake: And being ſo convinced, That which before was a Sin of Ignorance, will appear of a much more heinous Nature, as in Truth it is, and call for a very particular and deep Repentance; which if your Lordſhip ſincerely exerciſe, upon the Sight of your Error, by a penitent Acknowledgment of it to God and Men, you will not only obtain Forgiveneſs of God, but prevent a mighty Scandal to the Reformed Religion. I am very loth to give your Lordſhip any Diſquiet in the Diſtreſs you are in, which I commiſerate from my Heart; but am much more concerned that you do not leave the World in a Deluſion, and falſe Peace, to the Hindrance of your Eternal Happineſs. I heartily pray for you, and beſeech your Lordſhip to believe I am with the greateſt Sincerity and Compaſſion in the World,

My Lord,

Your Lordſhip's moſt faithful, and afflicted Servant,

TILLOTSON.

Mr. Echard relates, that Dr. Tillotſon delivered this Letter into his Lordſhip's own Hand, who read it with great Deliberation, and ac-

1683. 35 Car. II. acknowledged he had therein offered more to convince him, than he had ever met with before: That he was now ſatisfied, nothing but a Caſe of a very extraordinary Nature, could juſtify Subjects in taking up Arms againſt their Prince: That he was fully of Opinion, no ſuch Cauſe had been given by the King to juſtify any ſuch Attempt againſt him. But ſtill he thought ſuch Circumſtances there might be, in which it would be lawful for them to Reſiſt.

Remarks on the five laſt Trials. In my Remarks on the five laſt Trials, viz. Thoſe of Capt. Walcot, Hone, Rouſe, Blague, and Lord Ruſſel, I ſhall conſider theſe three Particulars. 1*ſt*, Whether there was any ſuch Plot as the Priſoners are charged with? 2*dly*, What were the reſpective Views of the Conſpirators? 3*dly* and laſtly, Which of the Priſoners were guilty, and how far?

1. Whether there was any Plot, or Conſpiracy, againſt the King and Government at that Time? And if the Evidence, given at theſe Trials, againſt the Priſoners, and their own Confeſſions at the Hour of Death, will not convince their Friends of the Certainty of it, I cannot tell how it is poſſible to convince them; eſpecially if it be conſidered, that the Witneſſes of this Plot were Men of Figure and Subſtance, Men who evidently appeared with great Unwillingneſs againſt their Accomplices, and only came in to ſave their own Lives, who gave their Teſtimony with all the Tenderneſs imaginable; and, indeed, could not forbear expreſſing their Affection for the Priſoners in open Court. Had they been a raſcally and profligate People, who made a Trade of ſwearing Men out of their Lives, for the extravagant Rewards that were offered them publickly and privately, as was the Caſe of the Witneſſes of the pretended Popiſh Plot, their Evidence might have been dubious: But when the Priſoners themſelves made no other Objections to their Teſtimony, Than that they gave their Evidence to ſave their own Lives, and that they were as deep, or deeper, in the Plot than themſelves, and ſeduced them into it: Surely there needs no other Proof of a Plot in general, the Priſoners, as well as the Witneſſes againſt them, atteſt the Truth of it: I proceed therefore to the ſecond Particular.

2. What were the ſeveral Views of the Conſpirators? And nothing is more evident than that all of them intended to make the Duke of Monmouth their Tool, to obtain their ſeveral Ends; the Lords Ruſſel, Eſſex, Hampden, &c. propoſed he ſhould command the Malcontents; aſſiſt them in compelling the King to exclude the Duke of York from the Succeſſion; to adminiſter the Government during his Majeſty's Life-time, under ſuch Limitations as they ſhould preſcribe; and that the Duke ſhould accept of the Crown after the King's Death, upon the like Limitations; that is, they propoſed to have a Chief Officer, with the Name and Title of King; but that he ſhould obey the Dictates of the Parliament, and never pretend to diſpute their high and mighty Commands. There was another Party of the Duke's particular Friends, that propoſed his enjoying the Crown with the ſame Prerogatives former Kings had done; but theſe were a very ſmall Party; for moſt of the Sons of Monarchy were for continuing the Succeſſion in the right Line: But the third and moſt powerful Faction, of which Lord Shaftesbury was the Head, were for extirpating both the Family of the Stuarts, and Monarchy itſelf, and reducing the Kingdom to a Commonwealth, like that of Holland, of which no doubt that Lord propoſed to be the PROTECTOR, or rather Director, in Imitation of the celebrated Cromwell; and to have exerciſed a more abſolute Dominion in the Name of the Commonwealth, than any of our Monarchs had ever aſſumed. 1683. 35 Car. II.

This third Party did not propoſe to obſerve any Meaſures, but to break through all Laws human and divine, and even to have aſſaſſinated their Sovereign, to facilitate the Enterprize; or perhaps they looked upon the People, of whom they fooliſhly imagined their Faction a Majority, to be veſted with Sovereign Authority; and that They had a Right to depoſe, and call the Chief Magiſtrate to account, and to eſtabliſh what Form of Government they ſaw fit; and, according to the Maxims of their Predeceſſors in Uſurpation, they propoſed to do Juſtice (as their Phraſe was) either without them, or upon them; that is, to turn out, or put to Death, the Miniſters of State at Pleaſure; and to murder their Maſter, if he oppoſed them, or refuſed to become their Slave. Thus much appears very obvious from theſe Trials, and the Declarations of the Conſpirators at the Place of Execution; which brings me to the third Particular, namely, to enquire, 3*dly*, Which of the Priſoners were guilty of any Part of the Charge, and how far?

As to Captain Walcot, he offers, in a Letter to Secretary Jenkins, to become an Evidence; and aſſures his Majeſty, That the Conſpiracy was laid very broad: At his Trial, he acknowledged he had been at ſeveral treaſonable Conſults, and was acquainted with the intended Inſurrection: At his Execution, he ſays, Mr. Weſt often viſited him, and his Diſcourſe was ſtill concerning the lopping the two Sparks; by which was meant, the murdering the King and Duke; and that it was ſometimes propoſed to be done at the Play-houſe: That Weſt told him, Arms were provided, and Fifty Men employed to aſſaſſinate the King and Duke; and that he (Walcot) told them, the killing the King and Duke would caſt a Blemiſh on them and their Poſterity, and the Duke of Monmouth would revenge his Father's Death.

He confeſſed, That by the Law of the Land he ought to die, for being at thoſe Meetings, where a War was debated; and in another Place, he acknowledges the King's Murder was propoſed, when he was preſent: After which, it is impoſſible to doubt whether he was to have a Share in the Inſurrection, and was acquainted with the Deſign of ſome of his Party to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty; and as he concealed both theſe traitorous Deſigns, though he pretends he diſapproved the Murder, he was ſurely, in a great Meaſure, guilty of both. If he was contriving an Inſurrection when he knew others deſigned to take that Opportunity to murder the King, in order to facilitate the 1683. 35 Car. II. Inſurrection he was engaged in. Can any one ſuppoſe he was very averſe to the Aſſaſſination? Or that he would not have been pleaſed to have ſeen it effected, though he was not fond of the Infamy of the Action?

Inſurrection

I ſhall conclude my Remarks on Capt. Walcot's Caſe, with the Character Biſhop Sprat gives him; namely, "That he was an Officer "in Cromwell's Army, who, after Pardon and "Indemnity received, and a plentiful Eſtate "ſecured to him at the King's Reſtoration, "was nevertheleſs engaged in all the Plots "againſt the Government ever ſince; and "particularly in that of Ireland, ſome Years "before, to ſurprize the Caſtle of Dublin. "He was introduced by Lord Howard, un-"der the Character of a ſtout and able "Officer, into a ſtrict Familiarity with the "Earl of Shaftesbury, from whom he never "departed till his Death; accompanying him "in his Flight to Holland, and returning "thence with his Corps; he and Ferguſon "having this peculiar Mark of his Kindneſs, "to be made Legatees in his laſt Will, as his "ſpecial Friends". Biſhop of Rocheſter's Narrative of the Conſpiracy, Page 22.

As to Hone, he confeſſed at his Trial, That he was to be one of thoſe who was to go down to the Rye, to aſſaſſinate the King; and was to have twenty Pounds for that Service; but ſays, he was drawn into it by Goodenough: After which, it is ſurely unneceſſary to bring further Proof of his Guilt; or that ſome of the Conſpirators had formed a Deſign to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty, at Rumbold's Houſe at the Rye in Hertfordſhire, as he came from New-market.

As to Rouſe, it was proved at his Trial, He had been at ſeveral treaſonable Conſults; That he knew ſome of the Conſpirators had a Deſign to aſſaſſinate the King: That he had declared, Whatever the King had, the Parliament gave him: That the King had forfeited his Crown, and had no Right to it. At his Execution he ſaid, He knew ſome worthy Men, who in his hearing declared, That, in Oppoſition to the Duke of York, if the King was ſeized, they would ſtand by the Duke of Monmouth: Others were for a Commonwealth; and ſome few for the Duke of Bucks. That it was the principal Witneſs againſt him, who told him, The King was to be taken off as he came from Windſor; and ſeveral Things were to be done, in order to it. They were divided about a Place to aſſemble their Forces: Some were for Salisbury-Plain, and ſome for Black-Heath; but Black-Heath was at length agreed on: And in order to gather their Friends together, it was propoſed to play for a Silver Ball; which he ſeemed to approve of, and ſaid, they might gather together thirty or forty thouſand Men by that Means. And though he ſays, in his Excuſe, that he went to their Meetings only to ſerve the King, and enable himſelf to diſcover the Bottom of the Plot; yet he ſeems to recollect himſelf afterwards, and ſays, I do freely acknowledge and confeſs, that it is juſt in God in the firſt Place, and righteous and juſt in the King, that I die: I die juſtly for concealing it (the Conſpiracy); which he could not be ſaid to have done, if it had appeared he had no other Deſign than to have ſerved the King by a Diſcovery: And therefore we can no longer doubt he was to have had a Share in the intended Inſurrection; and was guilty, at leaſt, of concealing, that there was a Party that intended to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty. 1683. 35 Car. II.

I come now to enquire into the Lord Ruſſel's Caſe, who was charged with Meeting and Conſulting with other Conſpirators, to raiſe an Inſurrection and Rebellion; and with a Deſign to ſurprize the King's Guards at White-Hall.

The Witneſſes againſt him were Colonel Rumſey, Mr. Shepherd, and my Lord Howard, his intimate Friends. Colonel Rumſey depoſed, That he was ſent by Lord Shaftesbury to the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruſſel, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and Mr. Ferguſon, who were met that Evening (November 2.) at Mr. Shepherd's Houſe, to know what Reſolution they came to about the Riſing at Taunton; and that he went to Mr. Shepherd's, and found all that Company there; and having delivered his Meſſage, they anſwered, Mr. Trenchard had failed them, who had promiſed to raiſe a thouſand Foot, and three hundred Horſe; but could not perform it; and Lord Shaftesbury muſt be content (to defer the Riſing.)

He teſtified alſo, That there was a Diſcourſe of ſeeing what Poſture the Guards were in, it being intended to ſurprize them: And being asked, if it was diſcourſed by all the Company, he anſwered, All the Company did debate it; and that the Lord Ruſſel was agreeing to it: He teſtified alſo, That the Lord Ruſſel did diſcourſe of the Riſing at Taunton.

Mr. Shepherd alſo teſtified, That the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Ruſſel, and the reſt of the Company, met at his Houſe; and that the Subſtance of their Diſcourſe was, How to ſurpriſe the Guards: And that ſomewhat was read, in the Nature of a Declaration, ſetting forth the Grievances of the Nation, in order to a Riſing.

Lord Howard depoſed, That on Lord Shaftesbury's going to Holland, the Duke of Monmouth, Lord Eſſex, Lord Ruſſel, Mr. Hampden, jun. Algernon Sidney, and himſelf, formed a Cabal, or Council, in order to propoſe Matters for the intended Inſurrection (for the Buſineſs was not dropped on the Lord Shaftesbury's retiring beyond Sea, but deferred): That they met accordingly, and conſulted about raiſing Men: Where it was proper to begin the Inſurrection; whether at London or in the Country; and how to provide Arms and Money: But the principal Buſineſs was, to engage the Kingdom of Scotland in the Conſpiracy, before they declared themſelves.

The Lord Ruſſel acknowledged at his Trial, that he met the Company mentioned, at Mr. Shepherd's: And that he twice met the Gentlemen ſaid to be of the Council of Six.

And in the Paper his Lordſhip left with the Sheriff, he confeſſes, He was with the Company at Mr. Shepherd's, and that there was ſome Diſcourſe of the Feaſibleneſs of ſurprizing the Guards there; and ſeveral times by accident, in general Diſcourſe, he had heard it mentioned elſewhere, as a thing might eaſily be done; but never conſented to, as fit to be done: And, particularly at Lord Shaftesbury's, there being ſome general Diſcourſe of this Kind, he flew out, and exclaimed againſt it.

In another Part of that Paper his Lordſhip ſays, The Duke of Monmouth came to him and ſaid, he was extremely glad he was come to Town; for Lord Shaftesbury, and ſome hot Men, would undo them all, if great Care was not taken; and therefore deſired, for God's Sake, he would uſe his Endeavours with his Friends, to prevent any thing of that Kind. That he told him, there would be Company at Mr. Shepherd's that Night, and took him thither with him: And there were ſome Things ſaid there, with much more Heat than Judgment, which he ſufficiently diſapproved; and yet for theſe Things he was condemned: And that it had been urged againſt him, That he was acquainted with theſe Heats and ill Deſigns, and did not diſcover them: But this was but Miſpriſion of Treaſon at moſt. That he was adviſed not to confeſs Matter of Fact plainly at his Trial, ſince that muſt certainly have brought him within the Guilt of Miſpriſion of Treaſon.

Upon the Whole, there naturally ariſes three Queſtions:

1. Whether the Lord Ruſſel committed the Facts he was charged with?

2. Whether there was legal Evidence given to convict him? And,

3. Whether thoſe Facts were High-Treaſon, or juſtifiable by the Laws and Conſtitution of this Kingdom?

1. And firſt: His Lordſhip acknowledged he was at ſeveral Conſults or Meetings, which the Lawyers call Treaſonable; (that is) where the ſurprizing the King's Guards, and an Inſurrection, was treated of; and that he went deſignedly with the Duke of Monmouth, to Mr. Shepherd's, to prevent the Earl of Shafteſbury precipitating Matters; which is a ſtrong Evidence they had conſulted and debated of an Inſurrection before. He confeſſed alſo in his Paper, that the ſeizing the Guards had ſeveral times been debated in his Company: That he once flew out into a Paſſion when it was propoſed; and that the Duke of Monmouth ſaid to him, Did you ever hear ſo horrid a Thing? Which would incline an impartial Man to believe, that theſe Things were talked of in earneſt, and with a view of putting them in Execution; eſpecially if it be conſidered, That the Duke of Monmouth, one of the Six, with whom this Lord aſſociated himſelf, confeſſed himſelf guilty under his Hand: And the Lord Eſſex, another of the Cabal, ſent a Meſſage to his Lady, when he was in the Tower, That what he was charged with was true: That Mr. Hampden, another of the Cabal, confeſſed himſelf guilty in open Court afterwards: And Lord Howard did not only confeſs his Guilt, but became an Evidence againſt his Accomplices.

Is it poſſible, after this, to believe no Inſurrection was intended, or conſidered of, at theſe Meetings? And if there was, though ſome of the Company might diſagree about the Time or the Manner, I doubt the Law would look upon them all as guilty of High-Treaſon, rather than Miſpriſion of Treaſon, which is only, where a Perſon accidentally falls into Company, and hears Treaſon without revealing it; and not where all the Company meet on Purpoſe to debate treaſonable Matters, which they have had under their Conſideration before.

1685. 35 Car. II.

2. As to the Legality of the Evidence, both Colonel Rumſey and Mr. Shepherd agree, That the Meeting at Shepherd's Houſe was by Deſign and Appointment, and not accidental: Both of them agree, that the ſurprizing the Guards was debated; and the Colonel avers, that their Meeting was to conſult, as well concerning the intended Inſurrection, as the ſurprizing the Guards: Nay, that Lord Shafteſbury ſent him to this very Company, telling him they were to meet at Mr. Shepherd's by Appointment, to know what was done in Relation to the Riſing at Taunton: And Lord Howard gives Evidence of the Lord Ruſſel's being at ſeveral Meetings, where the Inſurrection was conſidered, and the raiſing Arms and Money to effect it: The Scots invited into the Conſpiracy; and a Sum of Money promiſed them, to enable them to make a Diverſion.

Thus we find Colonel Rumſey and Lord Howard poſitive as to the Debates concerning an Inſurrection; and both Colonel Rumſey and Shepherd as poſitive, that the Propoſal of ſurprizing the Guards, was made when the Lord Ruſſel was preſent: So that here are, in Reality, three Witneſſes inſtead of two, which the Law requires, to convict a Perſon of High-Treaſon: And that ſuch Conſults are treaſonable, and may be given in Evidence as Overt-Acts of Compaſſing and Conſpiring the King's Death, was conſtantly reſolved at the Trials of the Conſpirators againſt King William, and ever ſince the Revolution.

3. But then come my Lord Ruſſel's Friends, and ſay; Admitting all theſe Facts to be true, notwithſtanding the Opinions of the Lawyers, there was no Treaſon in the Matter; for theſe Conſultations were intended for the Support and Preſervation of the Conſtitution in Church and State. Our Liberties were invaded by the Adminiſtration: The Proteſtant Religion in Danger of being ſubverted; and Popery, and Arbitrary Power, eſtabliſhed: We had no other View but the ſecuring our Religious and Civil Rights, and reducing the Prerogative within its due Bounds: His Lordſhip's Caſe was the ſame with thoſe worthy Patriots, who were inſtrumental in the glorious Revolution.

To which it is anſwered, That the Circumſtances of the reſpective Caſes, were widely different: There were no Breaches made in our Conſtitution then, like thoſe in the ſucceeding Reign; none, at leaſt, that could juſtify an Inſurrection. The greateſt Grievance the Faction complained of, was, the putting the Laws in Execution againſt the Sectaries:

And

1683. 35 Car. II.

And how hard and uncharitable ſoever this might be, it is generally held, That while the King and his Miniſters only put the Laws and Statutes of the Realm in Execution, they are not to be reſiſted on any Pretence whatſoever And as for the Apprehenſions of Popery and Arbitrary Power in the next Reign; neither could this juſtify an Inſurrection, while our Religious and Civil Rights were actually protected. At the Revolution, both the Civil and Military Government were put into the Hands of profeſſed Papiſts and Presbyterians, Enemies to the Conſtitution, and diſqualified to hold any Poſts in the Government: A great Standing Army was kept up in Time of Peace; the Penal Laws and Teſt ſuſpended, or evaded: The Biſhops, Clergy, and Univerſities, were attacked in the moſt violent Manner, for inſiſting on their Rights; and the whole Frame of Government, in a Manner, diſſolved; which was ſo notorious to the whole Nation, that they reſolved, as one Man, to ſtand up in Defence of the Conſtitution, and of their Liberties and Properties: For it is true, this is a legal and a limited Monarchy; and the People have as much Right to be governed according to Law, as the King has to govern them by Law. But then it is not every little Deviation from the Laws, every falſe Step in the Adminiſtration; or private Wrong done to ſome particular Man, or Party of Men, that will juſtify their taking up Arms: The Grievances ought to be general; and our Religious or Civil Rights actually invaded in ſuch apparent Inſtances, that a Majority of the Nation may be convinced the Foundations are ſtruck at: For might every little Faction enter into Plots and Conſpiracies againſt the Government, when the Adminiſtration is not agreeable to their Taſte, what Confuſion muſt it perpetually create in the Kingdom. One Set of Men might approve that Conduct, which another diſapproved; and we ſhould probably have as many contending Armies on Foot in the Iſland, as we have Opinions; a State more to be dreaded than that of Abſolute Monarchy. Whoever is at the Helm therefore, for the Preſervation of themſelves and the Conſtitution, will ever find it neceſſary to ſuppreſs ſuch Kind of Conſults and Conſpiracies, and puniſh them as treaſonable.

1683. 35 Car. II

It is very probable the Lord Ruſſel, and many more of his Party, had no other View, than to compel the King to call a Parliament, and paſs ſuch Acts as might ſecure the Nation againſt Popery and Arbitrary Power in the ſucceeding Reign: And were of Opinion that, according to the Conſtitution, they might lawfully put a Force upon their Prince, and compel him to put the Adminiſtration into ſuch Hands as they directed him; — the King being no more than their Officer; and the Supreme Power really veſted in the Commons. And thus his Lordſhip might unfortunately and ignorantly incur the Guilt of High-Treaſon, while he imagined he was ſerving his Country, and ſupporting the Conſtitution; which ſeems to me the moſt charitable Conſtruction that can be put upon his Actions. His ſolemn Profeſſions that he had no Deſign againſt the King or Government, at the Hour of Death, can no other way be accounted for.

I am apt to think, that the Parliament that reverſed his Attainder at the Revolution, were of Opinion, his Lordſhip deſigned well (however he might have been miſtaken in our Conſtitution); and as he was a Gentleman of great Honour and Virtue, and of a Family well-affected to King William and the Revolution, the Bill met with the eaſier Paſſage.

The Indictment.

THE Priſoner, was brought by Habeas Corpus, from the Tower, and arraigned the 7th of November, and the Indictment read; which charged him with Compaſſing and Conſpiring the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government; and for that End, aſſembling and conſulting with other Traitors, on the 30th of June, in the 35th Year of his preſent Majeſty, at the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, how to execute and fulfil the ſame: And that he ſent Aaron Smith into Scotland to invite the Malcontents in that Kingdom, to join with the ſaid Engliſh Traitors to perpetrate the ſaid Treaſons. And it further charges, That the Priſoner, in order to accompliſh his ſaid traitorous Compaſſings, Imaginations and Purpoſes; and to perſuade his Majeſty's Engliſh Subjects, that it was lawful to riſe in Rebellion againſt him; did, at the Time and Place aforeſaid, traitorouſly compoſe and write a falſe, ſeditious, and traitorous Libel, wherein, among other Things, were contained the following Words, (viz.) The Power, originally in the People of England, is delegated unto the Parliament: He (meaning his preſent Majeſty) is ſubject unto the Law of God, as he is a Man; to the People that make him a King, inaſmuch as he is a King: The Law ſets a Meaſure unto that Subjection; and the Parliament judges of the particular Caſes thereupon ariſing: He muſt be content to ſubmit his Intereſt unto theirs; ſince he is no more than any one of them, in any other reſpect, than 1683. 35 Car. II. than that he is, by the Consent of all, raised above any other. If he doth not like this Condition, he may renounce the Crown; but if he receive it upon that Condition (as all Magistrates do the Power they receive), and swear to perform it, he must expect that the Performance will be exacted; or Revenge taken by those he hath betrayed. And in another Place says, We may therefore change, or take away Kings, without breaking any Yoke (or that is made a Yoke) which ought not to be one: The Injury therefore is in making, or imposing; and there can be none in breaking it, Against his Allegiance, &c.

A Bill of Exceptions offered, and refused. The Prisoner desiring to put in a Bill of Exceptions to the Legality of the Indictment, was told, he must either plead or demur; and that it would not be accepted, unless he offered it as a Plea: Whereupon, after some Debate between the Court and the Prisoner, he pleaded Not guilty. Then he desired a Fortnight's time to prepare for his Trial, which was granted. He desired also Counsel, and a Copy of his Indictment, which were denied; and he was only indulged so far as to hear it read again in Latin.

Counsel, and a Copy of the Indictment, denied.

Challerge for want of Freehold. The Trial coming on the the 21st of November, the Jury, after several Challenges, were sworn: He challenged some for want of Freehold; but this was not held a legal Cause of Challenge.

The Evidence of a Plot in general. The Witnesses being called, Colonel Rumsey and Mr. West gave a general Account of the Plot; but said nothing against the Prisoner in particular, but what they had by Hearsay; of which the Prisoner complaining, and urging that this was done with a Design to prepossess the Jury, he was answered, That this was the Practice at the Lord Stafford's Trial; and at all the Trials for the Popish Plot, when his Friends had the Direction of the Prosecution.

Lord Howard's Evidence. Then the Lord Howard was sworn, and deposed, That the principal Conspirators agreed, the preceding Month of January, to form themselves into a Cabal, or Council of Six, in order to prepare Matters for an Insurrection; and that the Members of this Cabal were, the Duke of Monmouth, the Lords Essex and Russel, Mr. Hampden, the Witness, and Colonel Sidney, the Prisoner: That these Gentlemen had a Meeting at Mr. Hampden's House, the latter End of January, and considered when, and where, it was proper to begin the Insurrection; and what Magazines and Money would be wanting to carry on the Enterprize. That about a Fortnight or three Weeks after, the same Cabal had a Meeting at Southampton House (the Lord Russel's); and it being debated what Answer they should give to those who demanded a Reason for the intended Insurrection, and whose Assistance they expected, It was agreed, to resolve all into the Power of the Parliament; and declare, They intended nothing but the publick Good. That they also considered the settling a good Understanding with the Lord Argyle, and some leading Men of the Kingdom of Scotland; and the inviting them to join with the English Conspirators. And it was agreed to dispatch Aaron Smith to Scotland, to negotiate that Affair; and to send a Letter by him to Sir John Cockram, under the Disguise of providing for a Plantation in Carolina. That he saw the Prisoner (Colonel Sidney), afterwards, put sixty Guineas in his Pocket, which he told this Witness (Lord Howard) were for Aaron Smith. After this, he told him Aaron Smith was gone, and he had heard from him from Newcastle.

1683. 35 Car. II.

The Court demanding of the Prisoner, If he would ask this Witness any Questions? He answered, He had no Questions to ask him.

Evidence that the Scotish Agents came up. Sir Andrew Foster being sworn, deposed, That Sir John Cockram, and the two Campbels, came up from Scotland to London last Summer; and that Sir John, when he was taken, pretended they came up about making a Purchase in Carolina.

Evidence of the treasonable Libel found in his Study. Sir Philip Lloyd deposed, That the treasonable Libel, laid in the Indictment, was found upon a Desk in the Prisoner's Study.

Evidence of his Hand. Mr. Shepherd and Mr. Carey deposed, That they had seen the Prisoner's Hand to several Bills of Exchange, and believed the Libel to be written by the same (the Prisoner's) Hand. Cooke deposed, That he had never seen Colonel Sidney write; but he had seen several Notes that came to him, with Endorsements of his Name, and they had paid them; and the Writing was like this; nor were they ever called to an Account for Miss-payment.

The Libel read. Then Mr. Attorney desired the Libel might be read.

Colonel Sidney desired it might be all read.

The Chief Justice told the Prisoner, Mr. Attorney must have what Part he desired read; and then he (the Prisoner) should have what Part he desired read afterwards.

Then the Clerk read some other Passages in the Libel, besides those laid in the Indictment, (viz.) I know not why the Multitude should be concluded headless: Moses was Head of the Multitude that went out of Egypt. Othoniel led them against the King of Mesopotamia, &c. The Earl of Murray headed the People of Scotland in the Minority of King James I. And in all the Revolutions we have had in England, the People have been headed by the Parliament; or the Nobility and Gentry that composed it: And when Kings failed of their Duties (in calling a Parliament) they called it by their own Authority. The Multitude therefore is never headless; but either finds or creates Heads to itself: And why may they not shake off the Yoke, if it prove uneasy or hurtful to them? When Tarquin turned the Regal Monarchy of Rome into a most abominable Tyranny, Why should they not abolish it? And when the Protestants of the Low Countries were so grievously oppressed by the Power of Spain, Why should they not make use of all the Means that God had put into their Hands for their Deliverance? If the King of Spain desired to keep his Subjects, he should have governed them with more Justice and Mercy; when, contrary to all Laws, Human and Divine, he sought to destroy those he ought to have preserved; he can blame none but himself, if they delivered themselves from his Tyranny. As to the People being Judges in their own Case, it is plain, they ought to be the only Judges, because it is their own, and only concerns themſelves: The general Revolt of a Nation from its own Magiſtrates can never be called Rebellion: The Power of calling and diſſolving Parliaments is not in the King.

it

Mr. Attorney demanding, If the Priſoner would have any other Part of it read; he anſwered, He did not know what to ſay to it, as it was read thus in Pieces: The Chief Juſtice anſwered, He perceived, the Colonel had diſpoſed it under certain Heads; and demanded, to what Heads they ſhould read? To which the Priſoner only replied, Let him give an Account of it that did it; and demanded, what Statute he was indicted upon? The Court anſwered, He was indicted on the 25 Edw. III, which made it High Treaſon, to compaſs or conſpire the King's Death; and the Overt-Act was ſufficiently ſet forth in the Indictment.

The Priſoner's Defence.

Then the Colonel proceeded in his Defence, and ſaid, Since I am indicted on that Statute, I am not to take notice of any other. I am indicted for conſpiring the Death of the King, becauſe ſuch a Paper is found in my Houſe: I think that can be nothing at all to me; for, though Sir Philip Lloyd did ask me if I would put my Seal to it, he did not ask me till he had been in my Cloſet; and I knew not what he had put in: Then come theſe Gentlemen upon Similitude of Hands. My Lord, one told me, within theſe two Days, that a Perſon came to him and offered to counterfeit any Hand he ſhould ſhew him, in half an Hour: And there is a like Caſe of my Lady Carr, ſome few Years ago: She was indicted of Perjury, and, as Evidence againſt her, ſome Letters of hers were produced, that were contrary to what ſhe ſwore in Chancery; and her Hand was proved; that it is to ſay, it was like it: But the Chief Juſtice Kelynge directed the Jury, that though in Civil Cauſes it was a Proof, yet it was the ſmalleſt and leaſt of Proofs; but in Criminal Caſes it was none at all. Mr. Attorney ſhewed ſome Papers to me; I do not know whether they are mine are no; but theſe very Papers, ſuch as they are, do abhor, as much as any one can, ſuch a Deſign: Look upon them, you ſee they are all old Ink; they may have been written perhaps theſe twenty Years, the Ink is ſo old; and, my Lord, it is a polemical Diſcourſe; it ſeems to be an Anſwer to Filmer, which is not calculated for any particular Government in the World: And they, by a ſtrange kind of Conſtruction and Imagination, will have it, that theſe Papers, ſaid to be found in my Study, had relation to this Plot, as they call it; I know of none, nor am in none: But if a Commoner of England write his preſent Thoughts, and another Man looking on the Book, write his preſent Thoughts, what great Hurt is there in it? However, I ſay, firſt, it is not proved upon me; and ſecondly, it is not a Crime, if it be proved: Beſides, my Lord, if theſe Papers are right, it mentions two hundred and odd Sheets; and theſe ſhew neither Beginning nor Ending: And will you indict a Man for Treaſon, for Scraps of Paper found in his Houſe, relating to an antient Paper, intended as innocently as any thing in the World; and piece and patch this to my Lord Howard's Diſcourſe, to make this a Contrivance to kill the King? Then, my Lord, I think it is a Right of Mankind, and it is exerciſed by all ſtudious Men, to write in their own Cloſets, what they pleaſe for their Memory; and no Man can be anſwerable for it, unleſs he publiſh it.

1683. 35 Car. II.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, Pray do not go away with that Right of Mankind; That it is lawful for me to write what I will in my own Cloſet, ſo I do not publiſh it: We muſt not endure Men to talk thus; that by the Right of Nature, every Man may contrive Miſchief in his own Chamber, and is not to be puniſhed for it, till he thinks fit.

The Colonel replied, If they will produce the whole, then I can ſee, whether one Part contradicts another: You aſk me, What other Paſſage I would have read? I do not know a Paſſage in them; I cannot tell whether it be good or bad; and what if any body had in my Houſe found Papers that were not well juſtifiable, either in my own Hand or another's; Is this Treaſon? Does this imagine the Death of the King? If any Man can ſay, I ever printed a Sheet in my Life, I will ſubmit to any Puniſhment: Nor have theſe Papers any Relation to the Deſign againſt the King's Life: You find only Scraps of Papers, never perfect, written many Years ago; and which could not be calculated for raiſing the People now. What Man can be ſafe, if the King's Counſel may make ſuch (whimſical, I would not ſay, but) groundleſs Conſtructions? If I had publiſhed it, or the Thing had been whole, and mine, I muſt have anſwered it; but for theſe Scraps, never ſhewed any body, that I think does not at all concern me: And, I ſay, If the Jury ſhould find it, which is impoſſible, I deſire to have the Law reſerved to me.

Then as for the Evidence, I cannot be indicted, much leſs tried, and condemned, on the 25th of Edw. III. The Act requiring two Witneſſes, to that very Branch unto which the Treaſon does relate. Now the conſpiring the Death of the King, and the levying War, are two Treaſons; and there muſt be two Witneſſes to either of theſe: Only my Lord Howard ſpeaks of the ſix Men, who were a ſelect Council, and he is but one Witneſs; and if by the Law there muſt be two Witneſſes to the ſame Fact, there is and End of the Matter: For one to come and tell a Tale of a Tub, of an imaginary Council, and another of a Libel or Paper, written No-body knows when, is ſuch a Thing as you can never get over.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, If he relied on that, he would direct the Jury preſently.

The Priſoner went on, and ſaid, My Lord Howard ſets forth his Evidence very rhetorically; but it does not become a Witneſs; for he is only to tell what is done: And ſaid, His Lordſhip atteſted, That they took upon them to conſider; but does not ſay, what one Man ſaid, or what one Man reſolved, much leſs what I did; and I deſire I may have Counſel to that Point, of there being but one Witneſs.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, That was a Point of Fact. Colonel Sidney replied, If the War was not levied, it was not within the Statute.

1683. 35 Car. II.

Whereupon the Chief Juſtice ſaid, The Court will have Patience to hear you; but this is miſſpending your Time. If you can anſwer the Fact; or, if you can diſparage the Witneſſes, do; but do not ask us Queſtions, this Way or the other.

Then the Colonel proceeded, and ſaid, As to my Lord Howard, he has accuſed himſelf of divers Treaſons; and I do not hear he hath his Pardon for any. He is under the Terror of theſe Treaſons, and the Puniſhment for them: He hath ſhewn himſelf to be under that Terror: He hath ſaid, That he could not get his Pardon, till he had done ſome other Jobs, till he was paſſed this Drudgery of ſwearing; that is, he would procure his own Indemnity, by deſtroying of others: Beſides, my Lord, he is my Debtor, I lent him a conſiderable Sum of Money, in Time of his great Neceſſity; and when the Mortgage was forfeited, to avoid paying it, he gets me laid up in the Tower: And he would have perſuaded my Servants to put my Plate and Goods into his Hands, when I was made Priſoner. My Lord, he hath made ſeveral Affirmations, with Hands and Eyes lift up to Heaven, that he believed I was innocent: And though my Lord Howard's Teſtimony were to be credited; it is but ſingle, as to the Conſult, and the ſending of Aaron Smith: Beſides, conſpiring to levy War is not Treaſon, and I deſire Counſel to that.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, He might as well aſk him, Whether the firſt Chapter of Littleton was Law.

The Evidence for the Priſoner.

Then the Priſoner called his Witneſſes; and the Lord Clare, the Lord Angleſey, Mr. Howard, Dr. Burnet, and ſeveral more, depoſed, That they had heard the Lord Howard ſay, in the moſt ſolemn Manner, that the Priſoner was innocent; and that he knew nothing of a Plot: To which the Attorney General anſwered, Would not any Man have ſaid as much, that had been in a Plot?

After which, the Colonel proceeded in his Defence; and ſaid, It is firſt imagined, that I intended to raiſe a War; and then it is imagined, that War would tend to the Deſtruction of the King: Now that may follow, but that is not natural or neceſſary; it cannot be ſo underſtood by Law. Many Wars have been, and the Death of the King has not followed: It is two diſtinct Treaſons, to make War, and to endeavour to kill the King: Now, as there is no Manner of Proof, that I intended to kill the King directly, ſo it cannot be by Inference, becauſe, it is Treaſon of another Species; and therefore, though I had made War, I could not be ſaid to have conſpired the Death of the King. Beſides, I ſay, It is not the beſt Man's Evidence here, would be good in this Caſe, becauſe the Law requires two. The next Thing is the Buſineſs of Aaron Smith: My Lord Howard tells you of a Letter ſent with him; but he does not ſay by whom written, what was in it, or whether it was delivered or not: Nor have I written, or ſent a Letter into Scotland ſince the Year 59. I returned into England in the Year 77; and ſince that Time, have not written, or received, a Letter from Scotland: And as to the Scots Gentlemen that are come hither, I never ſaw the Campbels, or Monroe, in my Life. As to the Papers, What Agreement is there between them, and that other Buſineſs of the ſelect Council, as my Lord Howard calls it? And what was this ſelect Council, ſuppoſe Lord Howard was to be credited? But a few Men talking at large, of what might be, or might not be, without any Manner of Intention of doing any thing. They did not ſo much as enquire, whether there were Men, Arms, or Ammunition in the Country; and how unlikely it is, that a War ſhould be made by five or ſix Men, not knowing one another, or not truſting one another; for what Dr. Coxe ſaid at my Lord Ruſſel's Trial, of my Lord Howard's not being truſted by any Party, he might have ſaid of ſome others: And I deſire your Lordſhip to conſider, Whether there be a Poſſibility for any Men, that have the Senſe of Porters, to do ſuch Things as my Lord Howard would put upon us? He, the great Contriver of this Plot, goes to theſe Conſults, and agrees on nothing; then he goes into Eſſex, upon important Buſineſs, greater than the War of England and Scotland: To what Purpoſe? To look after a little pimping Manor: And what then? Why then, it muſt be laid aſide, and he muſt be idle five Weeks at the Bath; and there is no Enquiry after the Deſign: Is there any Appearance of Probability in all this? But further, my Lord, you are to go according to plain Proof: Conſtructive Treaſons, belong only to the Parliament. If I have neither endeavoured to kill the King, or levied War; then it is Matter of Conſtruction, and does not belong to any private Court.

1683. 35 Car. II.

Mr. Solicitor's Reply to the Colonel.

To this Defence, Mr. Solicitor Finch replied, The Crime the Priſoner ſtands accuſed of, is, compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King: That which we go about to prove that compaſſing and imagining by, is, by his meeting, and conſulting how to raiſe Arms againſt the King; and by plain Matter in writing, under his own Hand, where he does affirm, It is lawful to take away and deſtroy the King. Notwithſtanding what the Priſoner has objected, it hath been adjudged over and over again, that an Act, which is one Branch of that Statute, may be an Overt-Act to prove a Man guilty of another Branch of it: Levying War is an Overt-Act to prove a Man guilty of conſpiring the Death of the King, as was adjudged in the Caſe of Sir Henry Vane; and ſo is meeting and conſulting to raiſe Arms; and Reaſon does plainly ſpeak it to be ſo: For they that conſpire to raiſe War againſt the King, cannot be preſumed to ſtop any where, till they have dethroned or murdered the King: And though the Priſoner ſays, there muſt be two Witneſſes to every particular Fact; this hath been often objected, and as often over-ruled: It was over-ruled ſolemnly, in the Caſe of the Lord Stafford.

As to the Papers found in Colonel Sidney's Houſe, we prove them to be Colonel Sidney's Hand, by as much Proof as the thing is capable of; and ſuch Proof as in all Caſes hath been allowed: And that is by Men, who knew, and are acquainted with his Hand-writing, who come and ſwear they believe this to be his Hand. And Sir Philip Lloyd atteſts that theſe very Papers were found in the Priſoner's Study, Study, on a Table where he uſed to write: And for the Surmiſe, that they were laid there, it is altogether without Ground. And if they were wrote by him, the next Thing will be, how far this will be Evidence to prove his compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King. Compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King is the Act of the Mind, and is Treaſon, while it remains ſecret in the Heart; though no ſuch Treaſon can be puniſhed, becauſe there is no Way to prove it: But when once there is an Overt-Act, that is, any thing that does manifeſt and declare ſuch Intention; then the Law takes hold of it, and puniſhes it as High Treaſon.

1683. 35 Car. II.

Now, after this Evidence, no Man will doubt whether it was in the Heart of the Priſoner to deſtroy the King. He objects indeed, that this is but Part of a Book; and unleſs you take the Whole, nothing can be made of it. As it is in wreſting of Texts of Scripture (ſays he) you may as well ſay, that David ſays there is no God, becauſe David ſays, The Fool hath ſaid in his Heart, there is no God. But the Application won't hold; for here you ſee a continued Thread of Argument. 'Tis not one Propoſition, but a whole Series of Argument. Theſe are his Poſitions: That the King derives all his Power from the People: That 'tis originally in the People, and that the Meaſure of Subjection muſt be adjudged by the Parliament. And if the King does fall from doing his Duty, he muſt expect the People will exact it. And this he has laid down as no way prejudicial to him: For, ſays he, The King may refuſe the Crown, if he does not like it upon theſe Terms: But if he does accept it, he muſt expect the Performance will be exacted; or Revenge taken by thoſe he has betrayed. He takes Notice of it alſo as a very abſurd Poſition, That the King ſhould judge in his own Cauſe, and not the People. That would be to ſay, (ſays the Priſoner) that the Servant, entertained by the Maſter, ſhall judge the Maſter; but the Maſter ſhall not judge his Servant. After theſe Kind of Arguments, he comes to this ſettled Poſition: We may therefore, (ſays he) change or take away Kings, without breaking any Yoke, or what is made a Yoke. The Injury is in impoſing the Yoke; there can be none at all in breaking it. He goes on, and, by way of Anſwer to an Objection, That if there be no Injury, yet there may be an Inconvenience, if the headleſs Multitude ſhould ſhake off the Yoke, ſays, I would fain know how the Multitude came to be headleſs; and having given many Inſtances in the Hiſtories of foreign Nations, he comes Home to the Engliſh, and tells you how all Rebellions, in later Ages, have been headed: And, That the Parliament is the Head, or the Nobility and Gentry that compoſe it: And when the King fails of doing his Duty (in calling a Parliament) the People may call one. That the Multitude therefore is never headleſs; but they either find, or create a Head. So that here is a plain and avowed Principle of Rebellion eſtabliſhed, on the ſtrongeſt Reaſons he has to back it. Gentlemen, This, with the other Evidence that has been given, will be ſufficient to prove his Compaſſing the Death of the King.

In another Part of the Book, he ſays, The Calling and Diſſolving of Parliaments is not in the King's Power. And you all know how many Parliaments the King hath called and diſſolved: If it be not in his Power, he hath done that which was not in his Power, and ſo acted contrary to his Truſt. Gentlemen, Words ſpoken upon a Suppoſition, may be High Treaſon, as was held in the Reign of King James I. in the Caſe of Collins, in Roll's Reports. The Words were; The King, being excommunicate, may be depoſed and murdered, without affirming he was excommunicated; and this was held ſufficient to convict him of Treaſon: Now, according to that Caſe, to ſay, the King having broken his Truſt, may be depoſed by his People, is High Treaſon; but here he does as good as affirm, the King hath broke his Truſt; for every one ſees the King has diſſolved Parliaments: And this reduces it to an Affirmation.

And though this Book was not brought to the Council of Six, to be peruſed and debated there; yet it will be another, and more than two Witneſſes againſt the Priſoner: For ſuppoſe a Man was in a Room, with two other Men, and he comes to one of them apart, and endeavours to perſwade him that it is lawful to riſe in Arms againſt the King, if he breaks his Truſt; and then goes to the other, and tells him the King has broken his Truſt, and they ſeek ſome Way to redreſs themſelves, and perſwade the People to riſe: Theſe two Witneſſes do ſo tack the Treaſon together, that they will be two Witneſſes to prove him guilty of High Treaſon.

You have heard one Witneſs prove it poſitively, That he conſulted to riſe in Arms againſt the King. And here is his own Book ſays, It is lawful for a Man to riſe in Arms againſt the King, if he breaks his Truſt: In Effect, he hath ſaid, The King hath broken his Truſt. And this is a ſufficient Demonſtration, what the Imagination of the Heart of this Man was: That it was the Deſtruction of the King and Government, and indeed of all Governments; for there can be no ſuch Thing as Government, if the People ſhall be Judge in the Caſe.

I think this is ſufficient Evidence of his conſulting the Death of the King. Some Men may by Paſſion be tranſported into ſuch an Offence; but this Gentleman proceeds upon a ſurer Foundation: It is his Reaſon: It is his Principle; It is the Guide of all his Actions; It is that by which he leads the ſteady Courſe of his Life. A Man convinced of theſe Principles, what won't he do to accompliſh his Deſigns? Gentlemen, how dangerous is this Conſpiracy! how is it rooted in him! That he ſhould write it as his Principle, That it is lawful to depoſe Kings when they break their Truſt, and that the Revolt of a whole Nation cannot be called Rebellion! It will be a very ſad Caſe, when People act this according to their Conſciences; and do all this for the Good of the People, as they would have it thought. Gentlemen, We have proved it ſufficiently, that it was the Imagination of his Heart to deſtroy the King, and conſequently made ſufficient Proof of his being guilty of High Treaſon.

Colonel Sidney would have replied, but this was not permitted; it being the conſtant Courſe for the

the King's Counſel to conclude: And the Chief Juſtice Jeffries therefore preceeded to ſum up the Evidence, and obſerved, That though two Witneſſes are required to prove a Man guilty of High Treaſon, yet if two Witneſſes prove two ſeveral Facts, that have a Tendency to the ſame Treaſon; this was ſufficient, as had been adjudged in the Lord Stafford's Caſe: And though ſome Judges had been of Opinion, that Words of themſelves were not an Overt-Act to prove a Man guilty of High Treaſon; yet none ever queſtioned, but a Letter would be a ſufficient Overt-Act to prove a Man guilty of High Treaſon, for ſcribere eſt agere.

That if the Indictment had charged him with levying War, there muſt have been a War actually levied to have convicted him of High Treaſon; but the Indictment charging him with Compaſſing the King's Death, the levying War, or Conſpiring to levy War, might be given in Evidence to prove his Compaſſing and Imagining the King's Death: For it was the Imagination of the Heart, that was the Treaſon. And when this appeared by any open, or Overt-Act, which naturally evinced, that the King was intended to be depoſed, impriſoned, or otherwiſe deſtroyed; it was a ſufficient Evidence of High Treaſon, within the 25th of Edw. III.

That if there was one Witneſs to prove a direct Treaſon, and another to a Circumſtance, that contributed to that Treaſon; theſe were deemed two Witneſſes, by all the Judges of England, on the following Caſe, lately put to them, (viz.) If one buy a Knife of J. S. to kill the King; and it be proved by one Witneſs, that he bought the Knife for that Purpoſe; and by another, that he bought ſuch a Knife of J. S. Theſe are two Witneſſes, ſufficient to convict him of High Treaſon.

The Witneſſes, who knew the Priſoner's Hand, ſwearing they believed in their Conſciences, that it was his Hand, and the Papers being found in his Study, on the Table where he uſed to write, was a ſtrong Evidence of their being his.

That if the Priſoner was privy to the Letter written by my Lord Ruſſel, and ſent into Scotland, and intended to remove, or depoſe the King; theſe were Evidence againſt him: And if the Jury believed the Book found in the Priſoner's Study, to be written by him; that was more than two and twenty Witneſſes againſt him; for there he affirmed, That the King was reſponſible to the People; That he was but their Truſtee; That he had betrayed his Truſt, and miſgoverned, and now was to give it up, that they might be all Kings themſelves.

Then Mr. Juſtice Wythens declared, That all the Judges on the Bench concurred with the Lord Chief Juſtice in all the Points of Law, delivered by him.

He is convicted.

The Jury afterwards withdrawing; returned into Court in half an Hour's Time, and brought the Priſoner in GUILTY of High Treaſon.

His Exceptions in Arreſt of Judgment.

The Colonel being brought to the Bar again to hear his Sentence, on Monday the 26th of November, objected, that ſeveral of the Jury were not Freeholders: To which the Court anſwered, That it was the Opinion of all the Judges of England, that this was no Cauſe of Challenge; for by the Statute of Queen Mary, the Trial of Treaſon was to be as it was before at Common Law; and there was no ſuch Challenge at Common Law.

Then the Priſoner deſired the Indictment might be read again; which being granted, he obſerved, that Part of the King's Title, (viz. Defenſor Fidei, was left out: To which the Chief Juſtice anſwered, the Treaſon was ſufficiently laid.

The Colonel objected further, That there was no Treaſon in the Papers, ſaid to be found in his Study: The Chief Juſtice anſwered, there was ſcarce a Line in the Book, but what was Treaſon, and that was the worſt Part of his Caſe: That if he was ſo riveted in Opinion, that Kings might be depoſed, and were accountable to their People, and that a general Inſurrection was no Rebellion; it was high Time, to call thoſe to an Account, that juſtified theſe Things. The Priſoner then repeated ſome other Parts of his Defence, as that Similitude of Hands was no Evidence, &c. and ſaid, He appealed to God and the World, he was not heard.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, He could wiſh, inſtead of his Appealing to the World, as though he had received ſome great Hardſhip, he would appeal to God, and conſider the great Guilt he had contracted, and how ungratefully he had dealt by a Prince that had pardoned him once before: Which ought to have wrought ſuch a Temper in him, as to have turned the reſt of his Life into a generous Acknowlegment of his Bounty and Mercy; and not into a State of conſtant Combining and Writing, not only to deſtroy him, but to ſubvert the Government. He was ſorry to ſee him ſo earneſt in the Juſtification of a Book, which contained the rankeſt Treaſon; which not only encouraged, but juſtified Rebellion: And then the Chief Juſtice proceeded to pronounce the uſual Sentence, in Caſes of High Treaſon.

He is condemned.

After which the Colonel ſaid: Then, O God! O God! I beſeech thee, ſanctify theſe Sufferings unto me, and impute not my Blood to the Country, or the City through which I am to be drawn: Let no Inquiſition be made for it; but if any, and the ſhedding of Blood that is innocent, muſt be revenged; let the Weight of it fall only upon thoſe that maliciouſly perſecute me for Righteouſneſs Sake.

Exclaims againſt the Sentence.

The Chief Juſtice thereupon ſaid, I pray God work in you a Temper fit to go into the other World; for I ſee you are not fit for this.

Colonel Sidney replied; My Lord, feel my Pulſe (holding out his Hand), and ſee if I am diſordered: I bleſs God, I never was in better Temper than I am now.

Then the Lieutenant of the Tower carried away his Priſoner.

As the Colonel was of a Noble Family (that of Leiceſter), the King was pleaſed to remit all the Sentence, but the Beheading. Whereupon he was brought to a Scaffold, erected on Tower-Hill, on Friday, the 7th of December 1683. When, inſtead of making a Speech, he delivered a Paper to the Sheriff, wherein he obſerved, observed, They lived in an Age, that made Truth paſs for Treaſon: That the Lord Howard, the only Witneſs againſt him, was too infamous to be believed; and there was no other Evidence againſt him but the Papers, ſaid to be found in his Cloſet; and there was no other Proof of their being his, than a Similitude of Hands; but if they were his, there was nothing in them, but what might be juſtified: That God had left Nations at Liberty, to ſet up what Governments they pleaſed: That Magiſtrates were ſet up for the Good of Nations; not Nations for the Honour and Glory of Magiſtrates: That the Right and Power of Magiſtrates, in every Country, was what the Laws of that Country made them: That thoſe Laws were to be obſerved; and the Oaths taken by them, having the Force of a Contract between Magiſtrate and People, could not be violated without Danger of diſſolving the whole Fabrick: But if the Writer was miſtaken, he ought to have been refuted by Law, Reaſon, and Scripture: It was never known, that ſuch Points were referred to the Judgment of a Jury, compoſed of Men utterly incapable to comprehend them.

He is beheaded.

1683. 35 Car. II.

Whatever was ſaid, in that Treatiſe, of the Expulſion of Tarquin; the Inſurrection againſt Nero; the Slaughter of Caligula, or Domitian; the Tranſlation of the Crown of France, from Meroveus's Race to Pepin, and from his Dependants to Hugh Capet, and the like, which had been applied by Inuendo's to the King; if they had conſidered that, if ſuch Acts of of State were not good, there was not a King in the World, that had any Title to the Crown he wore, nor could have any, unleſs he could deduce his Pedigree from the eldeſt Son of Noah, and ſhew that the Succeſſion had ſtill continued in the eldeſt Line, and had been ſo deduced to him.

Then he complains of having a pack'd Jury, ſome of whom were not Freeholders; that he had not a Copy of his Indictment, or Counſel allowed him; and that he was condemned for Facts they made Treaſon, by Conſtruction, or Inferences, which none but the Parliament could do; and by ſuch means, he obſerved, he was brought to that Place; concluding in the following Words.

Grant that I may die, glorifying thee for all thy Mercies; and that at the laſt, thou haſt permitted me to be ſingled out as a Witneſs of thy Truth; and, even by the Confeſſion of my Oppoſers, FOR THAT OLD CAUSE, IN WHICH I WAS ENGAGED FROM MY YOUTH, AND FOR WHICH THOU HAST OFTEN AND WONDERFULLY DECLARED THYSELF. Having delivered this Paper to the Sheriff, he ſubmitted to the Block, and the Executioner did his Office.

He is beheaded.

Some Account of him.

This Gentleman took up Arms, when he was very young, againſt King Charles I. and deſerved ſo well of the Uſurpers, that he was nominated one of that King's Judges. At the Reſtoration, he did not take Advantage of the Act of Oblivion, but remained in Baniſhment, till the Year 1677, when he returned to England, and obtained a particular Pardon for himſelf, upon his repeated Engagements, to remain his Majeſty's faithful Subject for the future; but how he employed his Time afterwards, is pretty evident from this Trial. Biſhop Burnet relates, that he was attended by ſome Independant Teachers, in his laſt Moments; which ſhews he was of that Sect.

1683. 35 Car. II.

Mr. Solicitor Finch's Reply to Colonel Sidney's Defence, ſeems to me to be unanſwerable; and therefore I ſhall only obſerve, in Confirmation of that great Man's Arguments, that moſt of the Things the Colonel and his Friends complained off, (if not all) have been practiſed and defended by thoſe very Lawyers, at ſeveral Trials, ſince the Revolution, who ſo loudly complained of ſuch Practices before.

Remarks on Colonel Sidney's Trial.

At the Trial of Sir John Friend, Anno 1695. the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, in his Directions to the Jury, declares, That if there be a Conſpiracy to kill the King; to depoſe, or impriſon him; or to put any Force, or Reſtraint upon him; and the Method intended to effect this, is by Levying War; there, the Conſultation, or Conſpiracy to levy War for that Purpoſe, is High Treaſon, though no War be levied. That this ſhould not be High Treaſon, unleſs a War be actually levied, is very ſtrange Doctrine; and the contrary has always been held to be Law.

And yet Sir John Hawles, who was Counſel at this very Trial for the King, ſpent a great deal of Paper, in his Remarks on the Trials of Lord Ruſſel, Sidney, &c. in endeavouring to prove what the Lord Chief Juſtice ſays, at Sir John Friend's Trial, was very ſtrange Doctrine, and the contrary always held to be Law.

In the Trials of Sir William Parkins, Rookwood, and Cook, the ſame Year, the Chief Juſtice maintains, That the Conſpiring to invade the Realm, or to depoſe the King, were Overt-Acts of High Treaſon, within the 25th of Edw. III. and of the ſame Species of Treaſon as the deſigning to murder him. The Chief Juſtice alſo declares, That if there was one Witneſs to one Overt-Act, and another Witneſs to another Overt-Act of the ſame Species of Treaſon, that was all the Law required.

The Lord Chief Juſtice Treby declared at the ſame Trial, That the Conſpiring with a foreign Prince to invade the Realm; the providing Arms, to join with the Invaders, and make an Inſurrection againſt the King, were Overt-Acts of Conſpiring his Death. He that would cauſe an Invaſion, or Inſurrection againſt the King's Perſon, muſt be preſumed to deſign his Ruin and Murder.

When Sir John Friend moved in Arreſt of Judgment, That he was convicted by one Witneſs, becauſe the other Witneſs only ſwore to a Conſpiracy to levy War, which he apprehended was not Treaſon, unleſs War was actually levied; All the Judges on the Bench told him, they were agreed, That a Conſpiracy to levy War to depoſe the King, was Treaſon; or a Conſpiracy to invade the Realm, was Treaſon. And as to there being two Witneſſes to every Overt-Act, the Statute of the 7th of Will. III. Cap. 3. for regulating Trials of Treaſon, has put the Matter beyond all Doubt declaring the Law to have been, and enacting that it ſhall always be, conſtrued ſo for the future, That one Witneſs to one Overt- 1683. 35 Car. II. Act, and another to another Overt-Act of the same Treaſon, ſhall be ſufficient.

And laſtly, As to the proving the Papers, or treaſonable Libel, to be the Colonel's, by Similitude of Hands, and their being found in his Cuſtody; the like Evidence was given againſt the Lord Preſton, after the Revolution, in the Year 1690; and held to be good Proof, that the Papers were his: Nay, the Proof was not ſo ſtrong, as in Sidney's Caſe; for there the Papers were found in his Study, on a Table where he uſed to write; and in the Lord Preſton's Caſe, the Papers were found in the Hold of the Ship, where his Lordſhip was; but not upon him.

Thus, we ſee the Judges and Lawyers in all Reigns, find it neceſſary to ſupport theſe Maxims, in Order to ſupport the King, on his Throne, how much ſoever they were clamoured at, when declared to be Law at the Trials of Lord Ruſſel, Sidney, &c. And the Lord Sidney's Friends are ſo far from denying the Libel to be his, at this Day, that they have printed and publiſhed it, as his, ſince the Revolution; and ſeem to adore his Memory for the Principles laid down in it, and his Deſign of propagating thoſe Principles, by that Libel.

It remains, therefore, only to conſider, Whether the Maxims advanced in that bleſſed Piece, were really treaſonable, or conſiſtent with, and agreeable to the Laws and Conſtitution of this Kingdom; and ſuch as were neceſſary to be propagated and maintained, for the Preſervation of our Rights and Liberties.

Thus far I agree with the Colonel, That no particular Form of Government is Jure Divino; but whatever Government we find eſtabliſhed in any Country, ought to be obeyed:

And, That the Right and Power of Magiſtrates, in every Country, is what the Laws of that Country make them to be.

But then as to the next Article, That the Oath taken by the Prince, at his Coronation, and the Oath of Allegiance, taken by the Subject, are in the Nature of a Contract between King and People, and cannot be violated without Diſſolving the Government; this I muſt deny; eſpecially, as he makes every Man a Judge of this Violation: (For if he does not, it will not come up to his own Caſe, who could not pretend to have the Authority of either Lords or Commons; of either Houſe of Parliament, to juſtify this Conſpiracy, to depoſe the King: Only his own Opinion, and that of an inconſiderable Faction, his Accomplices: The Bulk of the Kingdom were Loyal, and for continuing the King upon his Throne.)

Now, that the King's Coronation Oath, is not of the Nature of a Contract, and every Breach of it a Forfeiture of his Kingdom, is evident; becauſe by our Laws a Man may be guilty of High-Treaſon before the King is crowned: And there is no limited Time ſet for the King's Coronation, but he may defer it as long as he ſees fit. The People owe Allegiance to him, and are obliged to take the Oaths to him, though he be not crowned.

And though the Col. lays great Streſs on that Maxim, That Princes and Governors are appointed for the Good of the People, and not for their own Glory; yet neither will this juſtify every private Man, or every little Faction conſpiring againſt the Government, whenever they apprehend themſelves aggrieved, or that their Governors do not act for the Good of the Nation, or agreeable to the Laws: For, if this was admitted, no Government, whether Monarchical or Republican, could ſubſiſt; for there will be always ſome Malcontents, in all Countries, who will think themſelves aggrieved by the Adminiſtration: Nor would this Maxim contribute to the Peace and Happineſs of Mankind; for if one Part of the Nation ſhould be of Opinion that the Adminiſtration was legal and beneficial, and the other of a contrary Opinion, what Confuſion muſt this Doctrine create? Every People muſt be in a perpetual State of War among themſelves: It is very fit therefore, for the Sake of the Subjects themſelves, that they ſhould not have a Power of calling their Kings or Governors to an Account, and depoſing them whenever the Adminiſtration is not ſuitable to their Taſte. Ask the Dutch, or the Venetians, how they would reliſh ſuch depoſing Doctrines; or indeed, whether they ever ſuffer ſuch to be broached in their Territories? And whether a People have one or many Governors, this can make no Alteration in the Terms of their Allegiance, unleſs the Laws of their reſpective Countries make any: If the four and twenty Burgomaſters of Amſterdam, in whom the Sovereign Power is veſted there, ſhould in the Opinion of any of their Subjects ſtudy their own Intereſt and Glory, more than than that of their People, they might according to this Maxim be depoſed, as well as a King of England. But I do not doubt, the States of that City would make no Scruple of convincing the Author of any ſuch Doctrine of his Error, by the Ax or the Halter.

Sure I am, our Laws make no Exceptions in Favour of thoſe who conſpire to dethrone their Prince; nor would it be any Anſwer to an Indictment or Charge of High-Treaſon, that the Party did not think the King's Adminiſtration was for the Good of the People, or agreeable to the Conſtitution: I would not adviſe my Friends and Fellow-Subjects therefore to depend upon ſuch a Plea, in any Reign.

Biſhop Burnet ſays, Colonel Sidney met Death, as became one who had Marcus Brutus for his Pattern. But there ſeems to have been this remarkable Difference between Brutus and Sidney; That Brutus fought in Behalf of a glorious Commonwealth, that had been eſtabliſhed ſeveral Centuries, without any Diſpute, Claim, or Pretence of Title by any other; whereas Sidney conſpired to deſtroy his lawful Sovereign, and Monarchy with him, under which Form of Government this Kingdom had flouriſhed for Time immemorial, and where a Republican Form of Government was never heard of, unleſs in the Reign of the Regicides, whom he ſeemed ſo fond of imitating. In one Word, Brutus fought to maintain the Laws and Conſtitution of his Country; and Sidney conſpired to ſubvert thoſe of his; which is extremely like ſome of the reſt of Biſhop Burnet's Parallels.

This Judgment was reverſed after the Revolution, in which the Colonel's Family were very Inſtrumental.

The

1683. 36 Car. II. Braddon's Trial.

The Trial of LAURENCE BRADDON and HUGH SPEKE Gentlemen, for a Miſdemeanor, at the King's-Bench-Bar, the 7th of February, 1683. Hill. 36 Car. II.

The Information.

AN Information was preferred againſt the Defendants, Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, by Mr. Attorney General Sir Robert Sawyer, which recites; That whereas Arthur, late Earl of Eſſex, was on the Tenth of July, in the 35th Year of the King, committed to the Tower for High-Treaſon; and on the 13th of the ſame Month, murdered himſelf, as appeared by the Coroner's Inquiſition: The Defendants, Laurence Braddon and Hugh Speke, knowing the Premiſſes, and deſigning to bring the Government into Hatred and Contempt; did on the 15th of Auguſt, in the Year aforeſaid, in the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, maliciouſly conſpire, to make his Majeſty's Subjects believe, that the ſaid Inquiſition was unduely taken; and that the Earl did not murder himſelf, but was murdered by the Perſons to whoſe Cuſtody he was committed; and that the ſaid Defendants did conſpire to procure certain falſe Witneſſes to atteſt the ſame; and to induce the King's Subjects to believe theſe Reports, did maliciouſly declare in Writing, that the ſaid Laurence Braddon, was the Perſon that did proſecute the ſaid Earl's Murderers: To the great Scandal of the Government, againſt the King's Peace, &c.

The Coroner's Inqueſt read.

Then the Warrant for the Earl's Commitment, and the Inquiſition taken before the Coroner, were proved: By which Inquiſition, taken the 14th of July, it was found, that the ſaid Arthur Earl of Eſſex, on the 13th of July, in the 35th Year of the King, about Nine of the Clock in the Forenoon, being alone in his Chamber in the Tower, did feloniouſly cut his Throat with a Razor, from one Jugular Vein to the other, of which Wound he inſtantly died.

Evans's Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Mr. Evans was ſworn, and depoſed, that about Eleven o' Clock, that Morning the Earl of Eſſex cut his Throat, Edwards, a Cuſtom-Houſe Officer, told him, he had heard from Home, that his Son ſaw a Hand throw a Razor out of the Earl of Eſſex's Window that Morning; and that Edwards came to him again in the Afternoon, and told him, he had examined into that Matter, and his Boy confirmed the Truth of it.

Edwards's Evidence.

Mr. Edwards being ſworn, depoſed, that about Ten, on the 13th of July in the Morning, he was informed by his Family, that his Son ſaid, he had been at the Tower, and ſeen his Majeſty and the Duke of York; and that the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat: And he (the Boy) ſaw a Hand throw a Razor out of the Window, and a Maid or Woman came out of the Houſe and took it up, and went in again; and then he heard a Noiſe, as of Murder, cried out: Mr. Edwards depoſed further, that his two Sons, of which this was the younger, were going together that Morning to Merchant-Taylors School, as they uſed to do; and hearing by the Way, that the King was at the Tower, the younger Boy gave the elder Brother the Slip, and went to the Tower, where he rambled about from Place to Place: That examining the Boy afterwards, as to the Truth of his ſeeing a Razor thrown out of a Window, he did not deny it, till the Defendant Braddon came to his (the Witneſs's) Houſe, to enquire concerning that Report: That he (the Witneſs) begg'd of Mr. Braddon, that he would take no notice of the Matter; but he was ſo zealous as that nothing would ſatisfy him: That leaving Mr. Braddon at his Houſe, till he went to the Cuſtom-houſe, ſome of his Family talked to the Boy at that Rate, that he began to deny he had ſeen any ſuch Thing; but in half an Hour he own'd it again; and ſo the Boy was off and on, till the Time he was carried before the Council; and at this Day, he ſeemed to ſtand to his Denial; but whether he would now do it or no, he could not tell.

The Court demanding, If he did not acquaint Mr. Braddon, the Boy was a lying Boy? Edwards anſwered, he acquainted him with as much, and told him, he would not undertake to aſſert the Truth of the Story; for his Daughter told him, the Boy had often excuſed his playing Truant by falſe Stories.

The Court then demanded, If he talked of this Matter before he went Home? Edwards anſwered, he ſtepped Home, being very near his own Houſe, and as ſoon as he came in at the Door, the Family began to give him an Account what News the Boy brought in: He could not diſcourſe of it before, unleſs he had been the Contriver of the Story; to which Mr. Attorney replied, ſo it is like enough you were.

Then Evans was called again, and confronted with Edwards; and ſaid, he thought Mr. Edwards ſaid, he had the Story from Home, but did not go Home; and at two a Clock he came to the Company again, and ſaid he had now been at Home, and the Boy had told him the ſame Story he had heard in the Morning: But ſtill Edwards perſiſted, he did not tell Evans any thing till he had been at Home the firſt Time, and then he had it from his Family.

Being ask'd, If ever Braddon tendered his Son a Paper to ſign? Edwards anſwered, he had heard ſo, and that he did ſign it; and Braddon told him, before his Son ſigned it, that he had other Evidence beſides his Son's: That he never ſaw Braddon before the 17th of July, when he firſt came to his Houſe about this Matter.

Edwards the Son his Evidence.

Then William Edwards the Boy was ſworn; and his Father charging him to ſpeak the Truth, and nothing but the Truth, the Chief Juſtice bid him turn about, and exhort his Father to ſpeak nothing but the Truth.

A Paper being then produced in Court, and the Boy asked, If he ſet his Name to it; He anſwered, Mr. Braddon enquired of him, if he ſaw any Thing at the Tower; and he told him, Yes, he was in the Tower, and ſaw a Razor thrown out of a Window: That he afterwards went with his Brother to the Tower, and ſhewed him the Place, 1683. 36 Car. II. Place; and Mr. Braddon wrote this down as he told it him.

The Court demanding, if he refuſed to put his Name to it; he anſwered, yes; he was afraid of coming into Danger.

The Chief Juſtice replied, why ſo? What Danger could there be, if it was Truth? The Boy ſaid, That was not the Truth which he told him: The Court demanded, how he came to ſign it afterwards then? The Boy anſwered, he perſuaded me, and ſaid there was no Harm in it; and would have had my Aunt ſign it.

Being asked, If he told Mr. Braddon it was falſe? He ſaid, No.

It was then demanded of him? What he told his Father before Braddon came to their Houſe? The Boy anſwered, he told his Father, the King and the Duke of York were at the Tower, and while he was there, he ſaw a Hand caſt out a bloody Razor; and a Maid came out and took it up, and went in again: Being asked, if he really did ſee a bloody Razor caſt out; he anſwered, No.

Hawkins's Evidence. Then, young Hawkins, the Son of Doctor Hawkins, who play'd Truant that Day with Will. Edwards, was ſworn as a Witneſs, and depoſed, that he met with Edwards that Morning in the Tower, and they walked round the Tower as long as the King walked, and then the King going into the Conſtable's Houſe, they went to play with ſome other Boys; after which he went home to his Father's Houſe in the Tower; and in a little Time, News was brought to his Father that the Earl of Eſſex had killed himſelf: That thereupon, his Father went down, and he (young Hawkins) followed him; and after he had been at the Place a little while, Will. Edwards came to him, and they ſtood looking up at the Window, an Hour or two at leaſt; and about Eleven, he and young Edwards went away together out of the Tower-Gate; but there was no Razor thrown out of the Window, neither did young Edwards mention any ſuch Thing.

Then Will. Edwards was called again, and confronted with Hawkins; and it being demanded of him, if young Hawkins was with him all the while he was in the Tower; he anſwered, yes, except a little Time he was at the Mills.

The Clerk of the Council's Evidence. Mr. Blathwaite, one of the Clerks of the Council, being ſworn, depoſed, That Mr. Braddon, and young Edwards, being brought to Whitehall the twentieth of July, and the Boy being aſked before his Majeſty, if the Matter in the Information was true? The Boy anſwered, It was a Lie; upon his Faith it was not true: And Mr. Braddon being called in, and told what he ſaid, it appeared to have been an Invention of the Boy's, to excuſe his playing Truant that Day.

He depoſed further, That Mr. Braddon having been in the Country, was again examined before the King upon this Matter; by which it appeared he continued his Purſuit: And the Words in the Minutes, which he, (Blathwaite,) took, at the Examination of one of Edwards's Siſters, were, That Braddon compelled the Boy to ſign it.

The Under-Secretary's Evidence. Mr. Monſtevens, being ſworn, depoſed, That about five or ſix Days after the Lord Eſſex had murdered himſelf, Braddon came to the Lord Sunderland's Office, (who was Secretary of State) at Whitehall, with a young Woman, and a Boy about 12 or 13 Years of Age; and Braddon told this Witneſs, that he had earneſt Buſineſs with my Lord Sunderland, and came from Sir Henry Capel, having an Information that the Boy had given relating to the Earl of Eſſex's Death; and the Deponent demanding, Why Sir Henry Capel did not appear himſelf, in a Matter that ſo much concerned the Reputation of his Family, Braddon ſaid, He was not well; and added, that what he (Braddon) did, he was obliged to do, out of Conſcience, and the Duty he owed to the Memory of the Earl of Eſſex: That the Deponent thereupon went with Braddon to my Lord Sunderland, and his Lordſhip having taken the Information, Braddon was committed to Cuſtody, and brought before the King and Council. 1683. 36 Car. II.

The Court then demanded of young Edwards If he never told any body, he was in my Lord Brandon Gerrard's Lodgings in the Tower: To which the Boy anſwering, Never in his Life, the Information that Braddon had drawn up for the Boy to ſign, was ordered to be read.

The Information ſigned by young Edwards. In this Information, the Boy ſays, Hearing his Majeſty and the Duke were in the Tower, on Friday the thirteenth of July, he ran thither; and when he had ſeen his Majeſty, he went to the Lord Brandon Gerrard's Lodgings; and as he was ſtanding between them and the Lord Eſſex's Lodgings, he ſaw a Hand caſt out a bloody Razor, out of the Lord Eſſex's Lodgings; and that, as he was going to take up the Razor, a Maid run out of Captain Hawley's Houſe, took up the Razor, and carried it into the Houſe; and he believed it was this Maid, that firſt cried out Murder: That he alſo heard the Maid ſay, after Murder was cried, that ſhe heard the Lord Eſſex groan three Times that Morning.

Sir Henry Capel's Evidence. Sir Henry Capel then being ſworn, the Court aſked him, If he ever employed Braddon about any ſuch Buſineſs, as he had undertaken? He anſwered, Braddon was twice to ſpeak with him; the firſt Time he was in ſuch Diſorder, that he did not know well what he ſaid; the ſecond Time, Braddon ſpeaking of ſuch a Buſineſs, he told him, he was under great Grief, and under a great Burthen of Buſineſs in his private Family; and whatever he had to ſay in the Matter, he deſired he would acquaint a Secretary of State with it. Being aſked, if he deſired Braddon to go to Edwards's Houſe, Sir Harry anſwered, He knew nothing of Edwards or his Houſe.

Mr. Blathwaite alſo teſtified, That when Braddon was before the King, he confeſſed, he had gone about to find ſome Juſtice of the Peace, to take the Information upon Oath, and named Sir Robert Clayton, and Sir John Lawrence; and becauſe Sir Robert refuſed to take it in private, he would not let him take it at all, but went away with it.

Beech's Evidence. Beech the Meſſenger, depoſed, He apprehended Braddon in Wiltſhire; and among other Papers found upon him, was a Letter of Mr. Speke's, (the other Defendant) directed to Sir Robert Atkyns; and another from one Burgis of Marlbrough, directed to Compten, Poſt-Maſter at Frome, to enquire concerning a Report, that was there the thirteenth of July, that the

Earl

1683. 36 Car. II.

Earl of Eſſex was murdered, being the ſame Day he murdered himſelf.

Speke's Letter read.

Then Speke's Letter, dated the fifteenth of Auguſt, was read, the Purport whereof was to acquaint Sir Robert Atkyns, that Braddon was the only Perſon who proſecuted the Earl of Eſſex's Murder: That he was qualified for ſuch an Undertaking, being a Perſon of good Reputation, Prudence, and great Courage: That he was going Poſt to Marlbrough to make a further Diſcovery, and he lent him his Man; for he was afraid he would be ſtabbed, or knocked on the Head; and that he had directed him to wait on Sir Robert, ſince he was to go ſo near him, and adviſe with him how he had beſt proceed; deſired he would conceal Braddon's being there, leſt it ſhould be a Prejudice to Sir Robert; and he hoped they ſhould bring the Earl of Eſſex's Murder upon the Stage, before they could bring any of thoſe in the Tower to a Trial: He alſo informs Sir Robert, that Braddon went by the Name of Johnſon; and that he, (the Writer) had received a Letter from Sir Robert that Day, with a Letter incloſed for the Lady Ruſſel, which he ſealed up, and carried to her; and my Lady returned him ten thouſand Thanks for his Kindneſs, and the great Pains he had taken.

Lodeman the Girl's Information read.

The Information of Jane Lodeman, aged thirteen Years, alſo was read, importing, that ſhe was in the Tower on the thirteenth of July; and ſtanding over-againſt the Window of the Earl of Eſſex's Lodging, ſhe ſaw a Hand caſt a Razor out of the Window, and heard Shrieks; and that a Soldier at the Door, cried out to thoſe in the Houſe, that they ſhould come and take up the Razor, and a Maid come out of the Houſe in a white Hood; but who took up the Razor ſhe could not tell. Which Paper alſo was found about Mr. Braddon when he was taken. Another Letter from Burgis, to Cumpen at Frome, that was found about him alſo, was read; wherein Burgis deſires Cumpen to call to Mind that he was at Frome, the ſixth of July, being Friday; and then heard the Report, that the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat; and that he would enquire, who firſt reported it; and give the Bearer an Account of it.

The Defence.

Here Mr. Wallop and Mr. Williams, the Defendant's Counſel, urged in their Behalf, That what they had done, was not with any malicious or factious Deſign; nor did they go about to procure theſe Informations, but heard of the Facts accidentally: And, if they had gone a little out of the Way, and taken theſe Examinations in Writing, in order to lay them before the Secretary of State; they hoped this was no Crime, if they did not do it ſeditiouſly; but only with an Intention, that Mr. Secretary might receive a fuller Information.

Then the Defendant's Witneſſes were called, one of whom ſaid, As he was upon the Road, he heard the Earl of Eſſex had cut his Throat: Another ſaid, He heard ſo at Andover, the Wedneſday or Thurſday before it was done.

Sarah Edwards's Evidence.

Edwards and his Wife being examined again by Braddon, gave much the ſame Evidence Edwards had given before; and then Sarah Edwards, the Boy's Siſter, depoſed, That Braddon came the Tueſday after the Lord Eſſex's Death, and told her Father, he came from Sir Henry Capel and the Counteſs of Eſſex, to know the Truth of her Brother's Report: That her Father told him, the Boy had reported ſuch a Thing; but he would not affirm the Truth of it, for he was apt to tell Lies, to excuſe his playing Truant: That when the Boy came from School, ſhe bid him be ſure to tell the Truth; whereupon he aſked, If any Harm would come of it? And ſhe anſwered, She did not know; but a Gentleman had been to enquire about it: And then the Boy denied it; whereupon they were all daunted: And Braddon coming again ſoon after, bid the Boy ſpeak Truth; telling him what a dreadful Thing it was to be a Liar; that he ſhould read the fifth Chapter of the Acts, where two were ſtruck dead for lying: And that Braddon coming again the Wedneſday following, the Boy owned it again; whereupon Braddon wrote down what the Boy told him, and went away, ſaying, he would go to Sir Henry Capel, and the Counteſs of Eſſex: That the next Day Braddon came again, bringing a Paper he had written over, and the Child ſet his Hand to it; but it was not the ſame Paper Braddon wrote at their Houſe: The Boy was unwilling to ſign it; but he ſaid, It would be no Harm to him: If there was any Danger, it would be to himſelf.

1683. 36 Car. II.

Braddon demanding of her, Why the Boy ran to his Mother, and cried he ſhould be hanged? ſhe anſwered, The Child had ſuch a Fear and Dread upon his Spirits, knowing it to be a Lie he had told, ſhe ſuppoſed.

Mr. Wallop demanded, If they did not tell him his Father would loſe his Place? and ſhe anſwered, They did.

Lodeman's Evidence.

Jane Lodeman, the Girl of thirteen Years of Age, being called, depoſed, That between nine and ten in the Morning, the Day the Earl of Eſſex died, ſhe ſaw a Hand throw a Razor out of the Window, and heard two Shrieks and Groans preſently after; and the People ſaid it was the Earl of Eſſex's Lodging: That the Razor fell within the Pales; and ſhe ſaw a Woman come out in a white Hood; but could not tell, whether ſhe took up the Razor or not: That ſhe ſaw the Razor only as it was flying, and it appeared open and very bloody: She did not ſee it upon the Ground; but was ſure it was a Razor, and not a Knife.

Then the aboveſaid Information was read, atteſted by thoſe who heard her tell the Story to Braddon: Whereupon the Chief Juſtice obſerved, That the Information ſaid, ſhe heard the Soldier cry out; but here, ſhe ſaid ſhe did not know of any Soldier, or heard any body ſpeak to the Maid, as ſhe related there.

The Girl being aſked, If Mr. Braddon carried her before a Juſtice of Peace; ſhe anſwered, No; he took the Information himſelf.

Beech the Meſſenger, depoſed, That he asked the Poſt-Maſter of Frome, if there had been any Rumour there, concerning the Earl of Eſſex's Death, on the Day it happened, as was reported; and that the Poſt-Maſter anſwered, there was no ſuch Report in that Town, till the Sunday after his Death.

Then Mr. Thompſon, Counſel for Mr. Speke, ſaid, That his Client was no otherwiſe concerned in the Matter, than writing the ſaid Letter to Sir Robert Atkyns, ſending it by Mr. Braddon, and lending him his Man: To which the Counſel for the King anſwered, That the Letter was written in ſuch a Strain, as ſhewed, he had a conſiderable Share in the Contrivance; for he ſaid in it, We row againſt the Stream: We thank you for your Kindneſs to us: We hope to bring on the Trial of the Earl of Eſſex's Murder, before they can any of thoſe in the Tower.

Mr. Speke ſaid, Mr. Braddon came to him late at Night, when he had been drinking a Bottle of Wine; and he hardly knew what he wrote: Mr. Wallop his Counſel alſo ſaid, He might believe, from what Braddon told him, there were probable Grounds to go upon; but he knew nothing himſelf, and deſired the Jury would obſerve, there was no Contrivance proved againſt him.

Then Mr. Attorney ſaid, They ſhould ſhew that it was impoſſible for any Man, unleſs the moſt malicious, and villainouſly inclined againſt the Peace and Government of the Kingdom, to ſpread ſuch a Report; and called Mr. Bomeney, the Lord Eſſex's Gentleman, to give an Account of the Matter, who had lived with his Lordſhip ſix Years; and attended him in the Tower at the Time of his Death.

Bomeney depoſed, That he attended his Lord to the Tower, and waited on him there: That his Lordſhip aſked him for a Pen-knife to cut his Nails; but that coming away from home in Haſte, he had not brought one: However, when he ſent the Footman to the Steward for Proviſions the next Morning, he wrote to the Steward to ſend a Pen-knife: That his Lord asked, if it was not come? and when he told him it was not, he bid him bring him one of his Razors, which would do as well; and he carried his Lord a Razor, who walked with it in his Hand about the Chamber: That the Deponent, in the mean time, ſtepped into the Paſſage, and talked with Ruſſel the Warder at a Window, and ſaw the King was in the Tower: That a little while after, he (the Deponent) went down, and the Footman returned with the Proviſions and a Pen-knife: He brought alſo a Note, which the Deponent carried up to his Lord's Chamber, but found Nobody there: And there being a Cloſet in the Room, in which was a Cloſe-ſtool, he thought my Lord was there, and went down therefore a little while, and then went up again; and finding the Cloſet Door ſhut ſtill, he knocked three Times, and called his Lord, but Nobody anſwered: Then he looked through a Chink of the Door, and ſaw Blood, and Part of the Razor; whereupon he called the Warder, and the People of the Houſe; and Ruſſel the Warder came up, and puſhed againſt the Door, but could not open it far, becauſe my Lord's Feet were againſt the Door: That it was a very ſmall Cloſet; the Cloſe-ſtool and the Length of a Man would fill it: That his Lord lay all along on his Side, and the Razor by him: There was a Window in the Cloſet, and, he thought, a Caſement that opened into a little Yard.

It being demanded, If he obſerved his Lord to be melancholly; he anſwered, Yes, he was melancholly, but they took no notice of it; for he uſed to be ſo, and they had no Reaſon to ſuſpect any thing more than ordinary.

Ruſſel the Warder, being ſworn, depoſed, That on the Morning the Earl killed himſelf, he was in the Chamber oppoſite to my Lord's Chamber: That the Stairs came up between the two Doors, which being both open, he could ſee plainly into the Room: That he heard my Lord ask Bomeney if the Pen-knife was come, and he ſaid, No: Then ſaid my Lord, Lend me your Razor, that will do it; and my Lord took the Razor in his Hand, and went two or three Turns in the Room: By and by Bomeney went down, and my Lord ſhut the Door to him: A little while after Bomeney came up, and my Lord being gone to Stool in the Cloſet, as he ſuppoſed, he went down a ſecond Time, and ſtaid about a Quarter of an Hour. 1683. 36 Car. II. The Warder's Evidence.

The Court demanded, If any Perſon had been there, from the Time Bomeney went down, to the Time he came up again: Ruſſel anſwered, No; but that Bomeney coming up again, and finding his Lord not come out of the Cloſet, he put by the Hanging, and ſaw my Lord lying in his Blood in the Cloſet: Whereupon Bomeney made a great Noiſe; and he (Ruſſel) came up, and finding the Key on the out-ſide of the Door, opened it a little; but could not puſh it quite open, becauſe my Lord's Legs lay againſt the Door: That there was a Window in the Cloſet that looked into a back Yard, which was paled in, and there was only one Door that went into it out of the Houſe: Nobody could come into that Yard, without coming through Captain Hawley's Houſe.

Lloyd the Centinel, who ſtood at the Door of the Lord Eſſex's Lodgings, was ſworn, and depoſed, That he ſaw the Lord Eſſex at the Caſement in the Morning; and he asked, what o' Clock it was: That he ſaw him alſo when the Lord Ruſſel went by; and about half an Hour after, a Cry was made, that Lord Eſſex had killed himſelf: That there was no Razor thrown out; no Maid came out of the Houſe; nor did he call to any one; and there was no other Soldier at the Door at that Time, but himſelf. The Centinel's Evidence.

It being demanded, If any body came into the Houſe that Morning; he anſwered, Nobody came in while he ſtood there.

Captain Hawley being ſworn, depoſed, That ſtanding at the Tower Gate that Morning, the Warder came and told him, the Lord Eſſex had killed himſelf, whereupon he went up Stairs, and coming to the Cloſet could not open the Door far, but looked in, and ſaw the Razor bloody, and my Lord lying on his Arm; and the Conſtable was called, to come and examine the Servants. Hawley's Evidence.

That the Houſe having ſettled, the Caſement in the Cloſet could not be opened far; and beſides, it was ſo low, and the Pales before the Window ſo high, that it was impoſſible to throw any thing out of the Window three Foot, they could not throw any thing out of the Window to be ſeen (in the Street, I ſuppoſe he means; the little Yard being encloſed with high Pales, and had no Door into it out of the Street.)

Then Mr. Speke called his Servant as a Witneſs, who atteſted, That he had never ſeen Mr. Braddon but once at his Maſter's Chambers, before he wrote the aboveſaid Letter: And Mr. Speke obſerved, That it had not been proved, The Defence continued.

he had conſpired with Braddon to procure falſe Witneſſes, as was laid in the Information; but that it appeared he was ſurprized when he wrote the Letter, by Braddon's making him believe that to be true, which was not; and that he wrote it late at Night, after he had been at the Tavern.

Braddon alſo obſerved upon the Evidence, That it had not been proved he had uſed any ill Arts to perſwade the Witneſſes to teſtify what was falſe, but had dealt with all the Caution and Candour imaginable; and deſired the Jury would take no Notice of what had been ſaid, or ſhould be ſaid, that was not proved.

Directions of the Chief Juſtice.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice proceeded to direct the Jury; and among other Things ſaid, that the Crime Mr. Braddon was accuſed of, carried all the Venom and Baſeneſs, and the greateſt Inveteracy againſt the Government, that ever any Caſe did; for it was inſinuated, that, becauſe the King and the Duke were walking in the Tower that Day, and near that Time when this unfortunate Thing happened, the King and the Duke had deſigned this Murder.

That as to the Corrupting of Witneſſes, though Braddon did not get any Witneſſes ſworn, and ſo it was no Subornation of Perjury; yet however it was a Miſdemeanor to labour any one, eſpecially ſuch a Child, into a Falſity, as apparently he did; and preſſing the Boy to ſign the Paper, when he refuſed it.

Had it been a Thing of Indiſcretion only, without Malice, and had there been no Caution given him about it, as a Thing that did not concern him, there might have been ſomething ſaid to alleviate it: But for him to come, as if he had Authority from the Counteſs of Eſſex and Sir Henry Capel, who denied they ever gave him any ſuch Authority, ſhewed the Malice of his Deſign.

As to Mr. Spake, If he did write the Letter above-mentioned, with a Deſign to ſpread the Calumny, he made himſelf a Party to the general Deſign; though not equally Guilty, as to the Management of the Witneſſes: But if they were of Opinion he was ſurprized into the Thing, and did it innocently, or ignorantly, they ſhould acquit him, though he ſeemed to have been very zealous in proſecuting the Buſineſs.

Remarks on Braddon's Trial.

The Faction, it ſeems were very zealous in promoting that Calumny, that the Earl of Eſſex was murdered by thoſe that had him in Cuſtody, — by the Direction of the Duke of York: They went ſo far, as to ſay, that the King and the Duke went to the Tower that Morning, on Purpoſe to countenance the Fact: But ſurely, if they had been at the Bottom of it, they would rather have choſen to have been at a greater Diſtance from the Place where it was executed. Biſhop Burnet, for whom the Party profeſs a moſt profound Veneration, gave up the Story as a Forgery, after he had narrowly enquired into it: And as he had better Opportunities of informing himſelf of the Truth of the Fact, than any other Man could have; and was employed by the Lady Eſſex for that Purpoſe; one would think the Faction ſhould not have the Aſſurance to repeat the malicious Tale to this Day, as ſome of them do.

The Biſhop, ſpeaking of this Occurrence in the firſt Volume of his Poſthumous Hiſtory, ſays, That "the Earl of Eſſex appeared in "much Confuſion, when he was brought be- "fore the Council; and fell under great De- "preſſion of Spirit, after he was committed to "the Tower. He had been before troubled "with Fits of the Spleen, which now returned "upon him with greater Violence. He ſent a "a Meſſage by a Servant to his Wife; telling "her, That what he was charged with, was "true; and he was ſorry he had ruined her, "and her Children. He ordered ſeveral Things "to be ſent to him, and among the reſt, a "Pen-knife, with which he uſed to pare his "his Nails; but it not being brought, he asked "for a Razor, and ſaid, that would do as "well. That Morning the King and Duke "came to the Tower, to ſee a new Invention "concerning the Ordnance, as was given out: "And as they were going into their Barge to "to return back, News was brought that the "Lord Eſſex was killed: For his Man think- "ing he ſtaid longer in his Cloſet than Ordi- "nary, looked through the Key-Hole, and "ſaw him lie dead; and breaking open the "Door, they found his Throat was cut. At "that Time, every Body looked upon it as "done by himſelf, and the Coroner's Inqueſt "found it to be Self-Murder: His own Sur- "geon alſo aſſured me, that it was impoſſible "the Wound could be as it was, if it had been "given by any Hand but his own."

Bp. Burnet's Reflections on the Earl of Eſſex's Death.

In the ſame Volume of his Poſthumous Hiſtory, a little afterwards, he ſays, "Suſpicions "began now to be entertained, that the Earl "of Eſſex was murdered, from the Report of "a Boy and a Girl, that heard a Cry in his "Lodgings, that Morning he was found dead; "and that they ſaw a bloody Razor thrown out "of the Window, and a Woman came out of "the Lodgings, and took it up: But as ſoon "as the Earl of Eſſex's Lady heard of this Re- "port, ſhe made a ſtrict Enquiry about it, "and ſent what ſhe had collected to him (Dr. "Burnet) who, when he had peruſed all, "thought there was no Colour to ground any "Proſecution upon: Which the Lady would "have encouraged, with all poſſible Zeal, if ſhe "had found any Appearance of Truth in the "Matter. Beſides, (adds the Doctor) The "Lord Eſſex had a Notion, that every Man "was Maſter of his own Life; and ſeemed to "approve what his Wife's Great Grandfather, "the Earl of Northumberland, had done, who "ſhot himſelf in the Tower, after he was ar- "raigned."

To this Account of Dr. Burnet's, I ſhall add a Paragraph of Mr. Echard's Hiſtory of England; who ſays, Since the Manner of the Earl's Death has been made a Queſtion, I here ſubjoin an Extract of two Letters ſent me, in the Months of September and October, 1719, from a Perſon of full Credit and Worth, who had the trueſt Honour and Reſpect for that Noble Lord: In theſe Letters the Writer ſays:

"I was then one of the Family of that very "worthy, but unhappy Earl of Eſſex, who "died in the Tower, by his own Hands. He "was really an excellent Perſon, but happened, "by Lies and falſe Suggeſtions, to be exaſpe- "rated

I ſhall conclude theſe Remarks, with obſerving the Diſingenuity of the Authors of that Hiſtory, which goes under the Name of Rapin, who were well acquainted with Mr. Echard's Hiſtory, and Biſhop Burnet's Poſthumous Hiſtory; and yet ſtill ſuggeſt, that the Earl was murdered by the Direction of the King and Duke: They do not think fit indeed to recite, what theſe Authors ſay on the other Side; for had they given us the Words of Biſhop Burnet, whom they call in other Parts of their Hiſtory, The moſt illuſtrious Writer, ſubſcribing to the Truth of whatever he advances; they durſt not have aſſerted the direct contrary to what he affirms here. Their greateſt Admirers muſt have retorted upon them.—With what Face can you reject the Authority of a Man, whoſe Opinion you have hitherto looked upon as ſacred; and to whoſe Labours you are indebted for the beſt Part of your Hiſtory of thoſe Times?

Barnardiſton's Trial.

The Trial of Sir SAMUEL BARNARDISTON, Baronet, for a Miſdemeanor, in the Court of King's-Bench, the 14th of February, 1683. 36 Car. II.

1683. 36Car. II.

The Information.

AN Information was preferred againſt Sir Samuel Barnardiſton the Defendant, by the Attorney General Sir Robert Sawyer; which recites, That, whereas there had been a horrid Conſpiracy, againſt the King and Government, of which ſeveral Perſons had been convicted, and afterwards executed for the ſame; particularly the Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney; the Defendant, being a Perſon of a turbulent and unquiet Spirit, and maliciouſly intending to ſcandalize and vilify the Evidence, and diſturb the Government, cauſed ſeveral Letters to be written, in the firſt of which were the following Expreſſions.

His Letters made Evidence againſt him.

" The Return of the Duke of Monmouth to " Whitehall, and his being received into Favour,
" has made a ſtrange Alteration at Court: Thoſe
" who before ſpoke of him very indecently,
" now court, cringe, and creep to him. His " Grace complained to the King, of the ſcan-
" dalous Repreſentation made of him in the " Monday's Gazette; upon which the Gazet-
" teer was called to an Account, who alledged
" for himſelf, that a Perſon of great Quality
" ſent him in Writing, the Words related there-
" in, commanding him to put them into the " Gazette. Yeſterday all the Priſoners that were " in the Tower, upon the late ſham Plot, were
" diſcharged upon Bail. Great Applications
" are made to his Majeſty for pardoning Mr.
" Sidney, which, it is believed, will be attain" ed, and that he will be baniſhed. The Lord
" Howard appears deſpicable in the Eyes of all " Men; he is under a Guard at Whitehall; and,
" it is believed, will be ſent to the Tower; for
" the Duke of Monmouth will accuſe him, con" cerning the Teſtimony he hath given, &c.
" The Papiſts and High Tories are quite down in " the Mouth; their Pride is abated, themſelves
" and their Plot confounded; but their Malice
" is not aſſwaged. It is generally ſaid, the Earl " of Eſſex was murdered: The brave Lord
" Ruſſel is afreſh lamented. The Plot is loſt
" here, except you in the Country can find it
" out among the Addreſſers and Abhorrers.

In another Letter, he ſays, " I am now tho" roughly ſatisfied, that what was printed in " Monday's Gazette, (relating to the Duke of " Monmouth's Confeſſion) is utterly falſe, and
" you will ſee it publickly declared ſo ſhortly:
" The King is never pleaſed, but when he is
" with him; hath commanded all the Privy Council

1683. 36Car. II.

1683. 36 Car. II.

" Council to wait on him, and happy is he that " hath moſt of his Favour: His Pardon was " ſealed and delivered him laſt Wedneſday. It is " reported, he will be made Captain General, " and Lord High Admiral: He treats all his " old Friends, that daily viſit him, with great " Civilities: They are all ſatisfied of his Integri- " ty; and, if God ſpares his Life, I doubt not, " but he will be an Inſtrument of much Good to the " King and Kingdom: He ſaid publickly, he " knew my Lord Ruſſel was as loyal a Subject " as any in England; and that his Majeſty be- " lieved the ſame now. It would make one " laugh to ſee, how ſtrangely our high Tories " and Clergy are mortified; their Countenances " ſpeak it".

In a third Letter, he ſays, " The late Change " here is ſo great and ſtrange, that we are like " Men in a Dream, can hardly believe what " we ſee, and fear we are not fit for ſo great a " Mercy as the preſent Juncture ſeems to pro- " miſe: The ſham Proteſtant Plot is quite loſt " and confounded: The Earl of Macclesfield is " bringing Actions of Scand. Mag. againſt all " the Grand Jury that indicted him; and the " Gentlemen of Cheſhire and Northamptonſhire, " who were indicted, will bring their Actions".

His fourth Letter ſhews all his Hopes were blaſted, where he ſays, Contrary to all Men's Expec- " tations, a Warrant is ſigned at laſt, for be- " heading Colonel Sidney, on Tower-Hill, next " Friday: Great Endeavours have been uſed, " to obtain his Pardon; but the contrary Party " have carried it, which much daſhes our " Hopes; but God ſtill governs".

The firſt of theſe Letters was dated the twenty-ninth of November, 1683, and directed to Sir Philip Skippon at Ipſwich: The ſecond Letter was dated the firſt of December, 83. and directed to the ſame: The third was dated 1ſt of December, and directed to Mr. Edward Gael, Linnen-Draper at Ipſwich; and the fourth was dated the 4th of December, 1683, and directed to Mr. William Cavell at Brightwell, near Ipſwich.

The three firſt were proved to be Sir Samuel's Hand, or written by his Direction, by his own Confeſſion before the Council, and the Evidence of Oſland his Servant: The fourth, Oſland depoſed, was tranſcribed from a Copy Sir Samuel gave him; and, it appeared, they were all ſent to the Poſt-Houſe by the Defendant's Direction.

Mr. Williams being of Counſel for Sir Samuel, ſaid in his Defence, That though it was proved, Sir Samuel did ſend theſe Letters to the Poſt-Houſe, he doubted, whether the writing a Letter to a private Friend, and putting it into the Poſt, could be deemed publiſhing a Libel, within the Information: Beſides, he held there were ſeveral Things mentioned in the Information, by Way of Inducement, that were not proved; as that the Defendant, being of a turbulent Spirit, did it maliciouſly and ſeditiouſly, to diſturb the Peace.

The Chief Juſtice demanded, If he did it piouſly, with a good Intent? and obſerved, that if the Fact implied Malice and Sedition, the Law ſupplied the Proof. In Informations for Offences of this Nature, it is ſaid he did it falſely, maliciouſly, and ſeditiouſly, which are the formal Words; and, if the Nature of the Thing be ſuch, as neceſſarily imports Malice, Reproach, and Scandal, to the Government, there needed no Proof, but of the Fact done: If the Fact indeed were indifferent in itſelf, then, to make a Crime of it, the accidental Circumſtances muſt be proved; but they need not, where they imply Malice in their own Nature. And the Chief Juſtice proceeding to ſum up the Evidence, ſaid, Sir Samuel might endeavour to cover his Practices, and gild them with a Pretence of Zeal for the true Proteſtant Religion, and call himſelf one of the ſober Party, or the godly Party; yet his Inſide was rotten: He was factious and ſeditious at Bottom, and full of Malice againſt the King and Government; againſt both Church and State, and every one that had not a Share in the late bloody Conſpiracy againſt his Majeſty: That in his Libels, he ſainted my Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney, two of the Traitors that had been legally condemned and executed; and inſinuated, that the King was prevailed on by a ſham Plot, to deſtroy the Government, and every one of the ſober Party, as they called themſelves: Theſe Letters tell us, in the Language of that Traitor Walcot, That God will be ſure to raiſe up Inſtruments, by which was meant Inſtruments of Rebellion, Faction, and Sedition, which they impiouſly called God's own Work: That this was the Language of thoſe Times, when they deſtroyed the beſt of Kings, and ſubverted the beſt of Governments: Nor did they only aim at the Deſtruction of the Civil Government, and thoſe in Authority; but of all thoſe who had been ſo dutiful to addreſs his Majeſty, and congratulate him on his Deliverance from the late Conſpiracy; by branding them with the Names of Abhorrers, Tories, Addreſſers, Sham-Plotters, and all the ignominious Names they could think on.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury

That the Queſtion now to be tried, was, Whether the Defendant was guilty of writing theſe malicious factious Letters? which Sir Samuel's Counſel had not offered to defend: And it muſt be admitted, they were as ſeditious and factious as could be written; and, in his Opinion, bordered on High Treaſon: He had not ſaid thus much, but it was a Matter of great Expectation and Conſequence; and he ſhould be ſorry to ſee us twice in one Age gulled by the ſelf-ſame Men, and the ſelf-ſame Way, into the ſame Treaſon and Rebellion; and all thoſe other Miſchiefs brought upon us in the late Times.

Then the Jury, without going out of Court, gave their Verdict, That Sir Samuel Barnardiſton was GUILTY of the Miſdemeanor charged in the Information:

The Defendant convicted.

For which he was ſentenced to pay a Fine of 10,000 Pound, and to give Security for his good Behaviour for Life.

Fined 10,000 l.

We may diſcern by theſe Letters the Credulity of the Faction; how ready they are to believe every thing to be true, that is for the Advantage of their Party, upon the ſlendereſt Grounds; and with what Zeal they ſpread and propagate every Calumny, that may traduce the Government, and incite Tumults and Inſurrections, when they are out of Play.

Remarks

The Duke of Monmouth we find, notwithſtanding their ſanguine Hopes, was turned out of all his Places, and in a Manner baniſhed; and the reſt of the Facts aſſerted in thoſe Letters were equally falſe; probably forged by ſome of the Party.

1683. 35 Car. II. The East-India Company and Sandys.

The Trial between the East-India Company Plaintiffs, and Thomas Sandys Defendant, in the Court of King's-Bench, in the 35th and 36th Years of Car. II. 1683, and 1684.

The Declaration.

THIS is a Special Action on the Caſe, wherein the Plantiffs declare, That His Majeſty King Charles II. by his Letters Patent dated the third of April, in the thirteenth of his Reign, reciting, That the Governor and Company of Merchants, trading to the Eaſt-Indies, had for a long Time been a Corporation, and enjoyed divers Liberties and Privileges, by Virtue of divers Letters, Patents, and Charters, granted them by Queen Elizabeth and King James: And that the King being informed that divers Diſorders and Inconveniences were then lately committed, to the great Prejudice of the ſaid Company, and Interruption of their Trade; whereupon they had humbly beſought his preſent Majeſty King Charles II. to confirm their ſaid Charter, with ſome Alterations and Additions, tending to the Advancement and Benefit of Trade: —— The King had given and granted to them, That they ſhould be a perpetual Corporation, to have Succeſſion, Capacity, &c. And further granted, That they, and every one that ſhould be of the ſaid Company, and their Sons, at their ſeveral Ages of twenty-one; their Apprentices, Factors, and Servants; might freely traffick, and uſe the Trade of Merchandize by Sea, by ſuch Ways and Paſſages, then found out and diſcovered, as they ſhould think fit, to and from the Eaſt-Indies; and to and from the Iſlands, Ports, Havens, Cities, Creeks, Towns, and Places of Aſia, Africa, or America, or any of them beyond the Cape of Good Hope; as by the ſaid Company, from Time to Time, ſhould be limited and agreed, without Moleſtation, any Statute, Uſage, Diverſity of Religion or Faith, or any other Cauſe whatſoever notwithſtanding; ſo as the ſaid Trade be not carried on to any Country, Port, or Place, in the Poſſeſſion of ſome Chriſtian Prince or State, in Amity with his Majeſty.

That the ſaid Company ſhall have the whole, entire, and only Trade, to and from the Eaſt-Indies, and all Ports and Places aforeſaid. —— That the ſaid Eaſt-Indies, Ports and Places aforeſaid, ſhall not be traded to, or frequented, by any other of his Majeſty's Subjects, who are prohibited to viſit the ſame, by Way of Merchandize, unleſs licenſed ſo to do, by the ſaid Company, on Pain of Forfeiture of their Ships and Goods, the one half of ſuch Forfeitures to the King, and the other to the Company: The Offenders to be impriſoned during the King's Pleaſure, and otherwiſe puniſhed for their Contempt; and not to be ſet at Liberty, till they have reſpectively entered into Bonds to the ſaid Company, of 1000 Pound each, not to trade to the Eaſt-Indies for the future. —— That the ſaid Company might grant Licences to any other Perſons to trade thither: And that the King would not, during the Continuance of the ſaid Letters Patent, give Licences to any Perſons to trade thither.

1683. 35 Car. II.

By Virtue of which Letters Patent, they alledged, They had been and were a Corporation; and have had eſtabliſhed and managed, and did ſtill manage, a great Trade of Merchandize to the ſaid Eaſt-Indies, with the Inhabitants there; who at the Time of the making the ſaid Letters Patent, or ſince, were not Chriſtians, or Subjects to any Chriſtian Prince or State; but are, and were Infidels and Enemies to the Chriſtian Faith: And that they had ſpent and laid out many and great Sums on this Occaſion.

And they further ſay, That the Trade aforeſaid cannot be managed or carried on, but by ſuch a Corporation; and that they ought to have and enjoy the ſole Trade thither, according to the ſaid Letters Patent.

But that the ſaid Thomas Sandys, being a Subject of the King's, and no Member of the ſaid Company, or Son, Apprentice, Factor, Servant, or Aſſignee of any of the ſaid Company, ſufficiently knowing the Premiſſes, and deſigning to prejudice the Company, contrary to the ſaid Letters Patent; and after making the ſame, and after the ſaid Company had ſettled their Trade, viz. the 19th of January, in the 34th Year of the King, did trade to the Eaſt-Indies, within the Ports and Places above ſpecified, particularly to Atcheon, Mechlopotan, and Porta Nova, with a certain Ship called the Expectation, without the Licence, and againſt the Will of the ſaid Company; to the Prejudice, Impoveriſhment, and manifeſt Grievance of the ſame, and againſt the Form and Effect of the ſaid Letters Patent, to the Plaintiffs' Damage 1000 l.

The Defendant's Plea.

The Defendant hereupon prayed Oyer of the ſaid Letters Patent, which being ſet forth in hæc Verba, he pleaded the Statute of 18 Edw. III. cap. 3. which enacted, That the Sea be open to all manner of Merchants, to paſs with their Merchandiſe where they pleaſed.

Demurrer.

To this Plea the Plaintiffs demurred, and the Defendant joined in Demurrer: Mr. Holt, in his Argument for the Company, reduced the whole Diſpute to theſe two grand Queſtions: 1. Whether this Grant of the King to the Company, to have the ſole Trade to the Eaſt-Indies, excluſive of all the reſt of his Subjects, was a good Grant? 2. Admitting it to be a good Grant, whether it did veſt ſuch an Intereſt, Liberty, and Franchiſe in the ſaid Company, that an Action might be brought and maintained by them againſt any Perſon trading to the Eaſt-Indies, who was not qualified ſo to do by the ſaid Charter?

Mr. Holt's Argument for the King.

And he held the Company's Charter to be good, 1. From the Conſideration of the Perſons to be traded withall; that they were Infidels, and not Chriſtians: 2. From the Conſideration of Foreign Trade itſelf; which might by Law be reſtrained by the King's Royal Power: And, 3. He conſidered the Circumſtances and Particulars of this Grant made to the Company.

1. As

1683. 35 Car. II.

1. As to the first he held, That by Law no Subject of England could trade with Infidels, without the King's Licence; or at least the King might prohibit it; for the Law had adjudged them to be perpetual Enemies; for which he quoted the Lord Coke's Words, 7 Rep. 17. 6. And no Man could trade with an Enemy without the King's Permission; Besides, it was lawful for the King to use his Royal Authority, to prevent his Subjects being perverted from the true Religion; which he could not do, unless he could prohibit their resorting to Infidel Countries. And it was plain also from the Writ Ne exeat Regnum, that the King might prohibit any Person from going beyond Sea: That the Subjects of England had not such a Right to a foreign Trade, that it could not be controuled, because the Liberty and Right to foreign Trade depended on Agreements and Contracts with foreign Princes, which depended on the Accidents of Peace and War; and the King had the sole Power of making Peace and War: Besides, the Rights of Trading were founded on the Treaties made between Princes, and the Articles of Commerce wholly in their Power; and no Subject could have Right to trade to any Country, but upon such Terms as the King was pleased to settle with other Princes by Treaties of Commerce. He held further, that if a Trade became a Nusance, and was rather hurtful than advantageous, the King, by Virtue of his Prerogative, was to defend the Nation, and protect his Subjects against those Evils.

Then he proceeded to answer that Objection in the Defendant's Plea, That by the Statute of 18 Edw. III. c. 3. The Sea shall be open to all Merchants to trade where they please.

That this could not be taken so largely as the Defendant would have it; for then it would give a Liberty of trading with the King's Enemies: But the true Meaning of that Statute was only this; That the Sea should be open, without paying any extraordinary Duties or Customs for their Wool: Agreeable to that Clause in Magna Charta, c. 30. that all Merchants should be allowed to trade, without unlawful Exactions: And further, that this Statute could not affect the East-India Trade; because there was then no Trade in being, either with the Indians, or any other Infidel Nation.

That the Kings of England had, since that Statute, restrained foreign Trade by their Proclamations: And when the Commons petitioned they might have Liberty to trade, notwithstanding any Proclamation, Roll's Abr. 214. they were not of Opinion, that the said Statute did extend to give Merchants Liberty to trade any where at their Pleasure; if they had, they would have insisted on that Statute, and urged it to the King; and desired that Law might be observed: But there they did tacitly acknowledge that the King had such a Power.

Another Objection, he observed, was made against this Patent, that it created a Monopoly: But this, he alledged, was not a Monopoly; for that was a Grant or Commission from the King to any Persons, Bodies politick, or corporate, for the sole buying, selling, making, working, or using any Thing, whereby other Persons were restrained of their Freedom or Liberty that they had before, or hindered in their lawful Trade: Now here it could not be made out, that the Defendant ever had any such Liberty before; or, that he was in Possession of this Trade; and consequently this Charter did not restrain him. That in the 43d of Elizabeth a Parliament was sitting; and at that very Time there was a Charter granted to this Company, of having the sole Trade, exclusive of all others; and there had been another Charter of the like Tenor granted before, in the 27th of Eliz. That in the Parliament of the 43d of Eliz. they fell vigorously upon Monopolies, and brought in a long Catalogue of them: But in all these Debates there was not one Word mentioned of the East-India Company's Charter; or indeed, of the Charters granted to any other Companies; as appeared by Townshend's Collection of the Proceedings of that Parliament, 244, 245. where might be seen the whole Catalogue of Monopolies, and all the Debates upon them.

1683. 35 Car. II.

That between the 43d of Elizabeth and the 21st of King James, the Legality of Monopolies was warmly debated in Parliament; and, at length, a Statute was made, in the 21st of King James, which seemed to settle and bound the Prerogative of the Crown, and the Right of the Subject; and this Statute condemns all Monopolies, and Commissions, for the sole buying, &c. or using any Thing within the King's Dominions: But the Parliament were so far from condemning the Charter of this or any other Company, that there was an express Proviso, That it should not extend to any Company, for the ordering or managing of Trade: That it appeared also, by the Preamble of the Statute 3 Jac. cap. 6. That the King had granted a Charter to divers Merchants to be a Company, and to have the sole Trade to Spain and Portugal, exclusive of all others; and the Statute recites the Mischief of giving a Liberty to all the King's Subjects to trade thither: So far were they from condemning that Charter as unlawful; they seem to acknowledge, that nothing less than an Act of Parliament could give the Subject Liberty to trade contrary to that Charter: For their Words are, Notwithstanding the Charter had given the sole Right of Trade to the Company, yet it should be lawful for all People to trade thither.

Mr. Holt observed farther, That Practice and Usage was a great Evidence of the Law; and it appeared, that many Charters had been granted to Persons, to trade exclusively of all others: Abraham Gilbert, 26 Eliz. had the sole Trade to China, granted to him and his Associates, exclusive of all others: There was a Patent to Sir Walter Raleigh 27 Eliz. to discover new Countries, inhabited by Heathens and Infidels: In the 23d of Eliz. There was a Patent to divers Turky-Merchants, to have the sole Trade to Turky, exclusive of others: Another Patent, of the like Tenor, in the 34th of her Reign: And in the 27th, there were Letters Patent granted to certain Noblemen, to trade to Barbary; and other Patents there were, for the sole Trade to Guinea. And the Parliament had been so far of late from looking on the East-India Trade as a Monopoly, that in the 14th of this King, they had declared it to be for the Good of the Kingdom.

2. As to the second Point, supposing this to be a good Grant, If any Person did trade to the the Damage of the Company, it was a good Ground for an Action: For whenever the King grants a Franchiſe to one, and another Perſon violates the Franchiſe, the King's Patentee may have an Action of the Caſe againſt the Perſon that does violate the Franchiſe: And, as the Company had a Right, they had a Remedy againſt any that invaded it.

Sir George Treby's Argument for the Defendant.

Sir George Treby, who argued on the other Side for the Defendant, laid down this for his Foundation, That this Patent, as to reſtraining the Trade, and excluding all other Subjects, had the Nature of a Monopoly; and therefore was void in that Particular.

For the Statute againſt Monopolies, 21 Jac. cap. 3. declares, That all Grants, any way tending to the erecting, ſtrengthening, furthering, or countenancing the ſole buying, ſelling, making, working, or uſing any Thing, whereby any Perſon is reſtrained of any Freedom, or Liberty, he had before, or hindered in his lawful Trade, are contrary to the Laws of the Realm, and utterly void.

If therefore this Trade to the Eaſt-Indies be a lawful Trade, then the Patent for reſtraining it, muſt be a Monopoly. The Nature of a Monopoly conſiſts in reſtraining a common Right: It appropriates to one, or a few, what others had the lawful Uſe of before.

Generally ſpeaking, Merchandiſe was always reckoned a lawful Trade. Every Man might uſe the Sea, and trade with other Nations, as freely as he might uſe the Air: And this Trade to the Eaſt-Indies was lawfully uſed before there was a Company, or elſe there never had been a Company.

He inſiſted chiefly on thoſe two Caſes in Coke 11 Rep. The Caſe of the Taylor of Ipſwich, and Darcy and Allen's Caſe, called the Caſe of Monopolies. It was themain Ground of both thoſe Caſes, that, at Common Law, no Man could be prohibited to exerciſe his Trade; for that was an Avoidance of Idleneſs: It helped to provide Suſtenance for a Man and his Family: It was of Service to the King; and the Conſequences of reſtraining Trade were pernicious; as the raiſing the Prices of Commodities, impoveriſhing of Men, and the bringing in bad Goods: And it was held in the Taylor's Caſe, That no Trade, or Merchandiſe, could be hindered by Patent: And a Charter to hinder a Trade at Sea, (as that a hundred Men ſhould have the ſole Trade, and the like,) was void.

It was truly ſaid by my Lord Coke, Co. Mag. Cha. 47 & 67. That all Monopolies concerning Trade and Traffick, were againſt the Common Law, and divers Statutes.

A Patent for the ſole printing of Law Books held void.

15 Jac. A Patent was granted, for the ſole printing of Law-Books: The Validity of which was queſtioned, in 1668, in Chancery, in a Cauſe between the Patentees and the Bookſellers, who had acquired Copies of Law-Books; and it was referred to all the Judges, before whom many ſpecious Reaſons were given to maintain it; as, that the Invention of Printing was new; that the printing Law concerned the State; and that they were printed in a particular Language and Character: But it was the Opinion of all the Judges, certified to the Lord Keeper, That thoſe Perſons who had acquired Copies ſince the Patent, could not be reſtrained from printing them.

1683. 35 Car. II.

Then he cited Magna Charta, 28 Edw. III. and ſeveral other Statutes, which declared, That all Merchants ſhould be at Liberty to trade by Sea: And he obſerved, that the Statute of 26 H. VIII. cap. 10. gave the King Power during his Life, to reſtrain the Trade to ſeveral foreign Countries; and repeated the Lord Coke's Obſervation, that this King, who ſtood ſo much upon his Prerogative, would never have accepted this Power from the Parliament, if he had it before: That the 35 Eliz. cap. 7. enacts, That the Queen might by Proclamation prohibit the Exportation of Corn, which ſhe could not have done without ſuch an Act: And in anſwer to Mr. Holt's Aſſertion, That no Subject can trade with Infidels without the King's Licence, he ſaid, there was no Law or Statute that prohibited it: That the Caſe of Michelborn, in 2 Brownlow 296. was but a very ſlender Authority to build upon. Had this been Law, Men would have been proſecuted for trading to Turkey, and Barbary, and ſeveral other Infidel Countries in Aſia and Africa; but there never were any ſuch Proſecutions: That it was only ſaid by the by in Michelborn's Caſe, That no Subject might trade with Infidels; and was never ſolemnly adjudged; nor was it any where to be found in the Lord Coke's own Books: And if the Lord Coke had ſeen a Licence to trade with Infidels, no Man beſides had ever ſeen one: And perhaps he was miſtaken; perhaps it was not authentick; and perhaps a ſufficient Anſwer to it might have been found in the Inſtrument itſelf, if it had appeared: However, this was but one Precedent; and if the Law required ſuch Licences, there would have been more found among our Records.

And as to the Danger of corrupting our Religion, or Manners, by opening a Trade with Infidels; this would be as much endangered by the Company's Servants reſorting to India, as by thoſe of any other private Trader's Servants, or Agents.

As to that Opinion of the Lord Coke's, cited by Mr. Holt, That Infidels were our perpetual Enemies, it was not eaſy to underſtand what my Lord Coke meant by theſe Words. He thought he muſt mean a ſpiritual Diſcord, in reſpect to Religion, and not a temporal one between Nations; for then we could not be in Peace, or have any Treaty or Intercourſe with Indians, or other Infidel Nations, but muſt be in a conſtant and never-ceaſing State of War; eſpecially, if this was founded on a Divine Precept, as the Lord Coke inſinuates; for whatever Prerogative the King might have, he could not have a Prerogative to diſpenſe with the Canon of Scripture: And by the like Reaſon we ought not to trade with Infidels, there ought to be no Foreign Trade at all; for there was no Nation where the Religion did not differ from that eſtabliſhed in England, in one Inſtance or other: That as to the Paſſage in Grotius, cited by Mr. Holt, it was only a Caution; for his whole Drift was, to demonſtrate, that Commerce and Leagues with Infidels were lawful; and he had written a whole Book, entitled, Mare Liberum, to manifeſt the Right and Lawfulneſs of Trade to the Eaſt-

1683. 36 Car. II.

East-Indies, obſerving, that God in Nature appointed all People to reſort to and trade with others, inaſmuch as he had given ſeveral Commodities to ſome which others wanted: And Sir George obſerved, that this Notion, of having no Commerce with Infidels, was abſurd, monkiſh, phantaſtical, and fanatical.

The King, indeed, had a Right of making Peace and War: But it could not be ſuppoſed that his Majeſty, in his Treaties with the Indian Princes, ſhould ſtipulate, that one Part of his Subjects ſhould trade thither, and the reſt ſhould not: Or, that the King could be at Amity with them, as to one Part of his Subjects, namely, the Company, and be at Enmity with them, as to the other Part of his Subjects.

That the Statute of 12 Hen. VII. cap. 6. did not only recite, That the Merchant-Adventurers had Commerce with Spain and Portugal, and other Places in Amity with the King; but added, That of Right they ought to have it: Which ſhewed, that it was not by the King's Grant, or Licence: And, in like manner, the Defendant of Right ought to trade with the Indians, there being no War between the King and them.

He admitted, the King might reſtrain particular Perſons from going out of the Kingdom, by the Writ of Ne exeat Regnum: But that Writ was intended originally, to reſtrain the Clergy only. Of late, indeed, it had been extended to confine a Perſon to abide the Juſtice of a Court here: But it was always to reſtrain ſome particular Man from ſomething unlawful, and againſt the Duty of a Subject; and never to reſtrain one from doing a lawful Act, as Trade was.

As to the Charters ſaid to be granted by Queen Elizabeth, theſe were but Temporary, and grounded upon ſome new Diſcovery of a Trade, or Paſſage; and this was the only good Foundation on which ſuch a Charter could be granted. When a new Invention, or Diſcovery, has been made, or was making by any Perſon, by his Skill, Charge, or, perhaps, with the Peril of his Life, the King, in that Caſe, may remunerate him with ſuch a Grant; but this muſt be only for a reaſonable Number of Years by the Common Law; and the Statute 21 Jac. concerning Monopolies, had limited that reaſonable Time to fourteen Years. The firſt Grant made in England to Perſons of the ſole Trade to the Eaſt-Indies, was upon a Suggeſtion of their being the firſt Traders thither; and that was but for fifteen Years, which was long ſince expired.

He cited the Statute of 18 Eliz. for eſtabliſhing the Ruſſia Company, which recites their Charter made by the Crown; and that, notwithſtanding that Charter, others traded thither; and then enacts, that no other Perſons ſhould trade to Ruſſia: Which ſhewed the Judgment of the Parliament, that without ſuch an Act, the Reſtraint was not good.

The Canary Company had a like Charter; but in Treſpaſs brought, for ſeizing the Ship of one that traded to the Canaries without Licence, the Defendant juſtified by Virtue of that Charter; and Judgment was given for the Plaintiff againſt the Charter, by the uniform Opinion of the whole Court. Mich. 26 Car. II. Rot. 403. Banco Regis, Horn and Ivy.

1684. 36 Car. II.

As to the ſecond Point, he held, That the Charter could not give the Plaintiffs a Right to an Action againſt the Defendant; he could only be ſubject to a Penalty at the Suit of the King. In every Action on the Caſe, there muſt be Damnum & Injuria; there muſt be ſome Wrong done the Plaintiff: And it was no Wrong done the Plaintiffs here, that the Defendant had broke a Law which was diſpenſed with, as to them.

If the Defendant's trading without the King's Leave, was an Offence againſt the King, it was puniſhable by the King ſtill; and that Way of Puniſhment muſt be followed, if there was to be any. The Charter on which the Plaintiffs founded their Action, appointed the Penalty to be Forfeiture of the Ship and Cargo; but no Action of the Caſe was given: And, if this Trade had been prohibited by Act of Parliament, under Forfeiture of Ship and Goods, that muſt have been purſued: There could never have been an Action on the Caſe brought: In all Caſes of Statutes, By-Laws, and Charters, the Method of Puniſhment preſcribed muſt be obſerved.

Mr. Solicitor's Argument for the Company.

Mr. Solicitor Finch, in his Argument for the Company, maintained, That the Crown had Power at Common Law to grant ſuch a Charter. 1. Becauſe no Subject at Common Law had a Right to trade with Infidels, or go to Infidel Countries, without the King's Licence: And 2. Becauſe no Trade could be eſtabliſhed without precedent Treaties; and no ſuch Treaties could be made by Subjects, without Licence from the King to make them: For firſt, there was no Trade but what depended on the good Will and Pleaſure of the Foreign Prince, with whom it was propoſed to trade, whether he would admit of it, or not; and 2. this might be reſtrained by a total Prohibition of Commerce with ſuch Prince, or Nation, by the King; and 3. The King might reſtrain any Man from going out of the Kingdom by a Ne exeat Regnum, without ſhewing any Cauſe. 4. If any Foreign Prince, on concluding a Treaty with the King, ſhould reſtrain the Trade to a certain Number of Perſons, or inſiſt on any particular Qualifications in the Management of of it; he did not ſee how any Man could pretend to a Right to act contrary to that, in Breach of ſuch a League or Treaty made with the King by ſuch Foreign Prince: And as to the Statute of 21 Jac. cap. 3. it was made upon a particular Occaſion, and had not altered the Common Law in theſe Particulars; and, if ſo, the King had ſtill the Prerogative of laying ſome Reſtraints upon Trade, and of ſeeing it conducted to the Advantage of the Nation.

Mr. Pollexfen's Argument for the Defendant.

Mr. Pollexfen afterwards argued in Behalf of Mr. Sandys, the Defendant, wherein he admitted, that the King might reſtrain his Subjects on particular Occaſions, from going out of the Kingdom: And that he might alſo prohibit Commerce with any People in Time of War or Peſtilence; but ſaid, it did not follow from thence, that he might reſtrain all his Subjects, and at all Times, from trading, except ſome particular Men, or Companies. And having inſiſted on the like Authorities that Sir George Treby

1684. 36 Car. II.

Treby had done, he obſerved, That ingroſſing of any Goods or Merchandize, was penal by the Laws of this Nation; and whoever had the ſole Trade of buying and ſelling the Commodities of any particular Country, ingroſſed thoſe Commodities; and the Merchandizes that were to be vended, in ſuch Countries, were at his Will and Pleaſure, whereby he made what Prices he pleaſed, ordering and diſpoſing of them, both as to the Value, and every Thing elſe, as his own: And all monopolizing of Trade, in this Manner, was ingroſſing, by the Aſſiſtance of Letters Patent, which created ſuch Monopolies. The granting this Company the ſole Trade to the Eaſt-Indies, inveſted them in all the Merchandize of thoſe Countries: And, if ingroſſing by the Common Law was unlawful, all Letters Patent, to authoriſe Men to ingroſs, were void. And as it had been admitted on the other Side, that, if this was a Monopoly, it was unlawful, he would take upon him to ſhew, that it agreed exactly with my Lord Coke's Deſcription of a Monopoly: And firſt, he obſerved, that by their Patent the ſole Trade was granted them; that is, the ſole buying and ſelling; and accordingly they actually had the ſole buying and ſelling of all Eaſt-India Commodities, if their Charter was good. 2. They were within that other Part of the Deſcription, that other Perſons were hindered and reſtrained from a Freedom, or Liberty they had before, in their lawful Trade; for they were authoriſed, by this Patent, to ſeize the Ships and Goods of thoſe that traded thither. 3. All the Evils and Miſchiefs that attended Monopolies, were the Conſequences of this Patent: 1. The Prices of Goods were raiſed and enhanſed. 2. It was calculated for the private Gain of a few, to the Prejudice of the reſt of the King's Subjects. A Grant of the ſole Trade to one Set of People, to this or that Part of the World, was deſtructive to other Merchants, and People: All Shipping, and Maſters that go ſuch Voyages, muſt alſo ſubmit to their Prices, and ſuch Terms as theſe Monopolizers pleaſed to impoſe; as muſt all Mariners, Artificers, Factors, and others, that depend upon ſuch Foreign Trades, which might be of very ill Conſequence to the Kingdom. Great Oppreſſions might be, and actually were, exerciſed by ſuch Companies, on thoſe who were within their Service or Power: And, if the Evils and Miſchiefs which the Common Law forbad, and endeavoured to prevent, by adjudging all Monopolies, Ingroſſings, and ſole Trade, unlawful, were great, the Evils and Miſchiefs, attending this Patent, were greater than any other Monopoly; becauſe their Trade was the greateſt that ever England knew.

It was held, That every Grant of the King had a Condition annexed to it, namely, that it ſhould not be to the Charge or Prejudice of the King's Subjects; for if it were, it was a void Grant; and therefore the King is ſuppoſed to be deceived in ſuch Grants.

It had, indeed, been ſaid by the Defendants, That this was not a Patent granted for the Advantage of a few, or for raiſing the Prices, or monopolizing Commodities; but for good Government and Order, and the Preſervation of this Trade, which otherwiſe would be deſtroyed: And there were the like Grants heretofore, to Turkey, Barbary, and other Places: But it was obſervable, what our Law-Books ſaid concerning ſuch Grants and Monopolies; particularly 2 Inſt. 540. That new Corporations, trading to Foreign Parts, or at Home, though under the fair Pretence of Order and Government, yet, in Concluſion, tended to the Hindrance of Trade and Traffick; and in the End produced Monopolies: And he inſiſted, that there never was one judicial Opinion againſt Perſons trading ſeparately within the Limits granted to any trading Company, though there muſt have been a Multitude of Inſtances of private Perſons trading within ſuch Limits.

He did admit, that the Grants to the Turkey, Barbary, and Ruſſia Companies, were like this, of ſole Trade; but yet they had never attempted to reſtrain others in the Manner the Eaſt-India Company had done: Theſe Companies never inſiſted on a ſole Trade, though they had ſuch Words in their reſpective Patents; but had uſed their Trade in a more commendable and legal way; and thereupon obſerved the Difference between the Way of trading of thoſe Companies, and the Trade of the Eaſt-India Company.

That the Companies of Turkey, Barbary, Ruſſia, and Hamburgh, nor any other, till of late Years, ever traded with a Joint Stock; but the Members of the ſaid Companies, every Man uſed his own Trade; bought and ſold his own Commodity; uſed and employed his own Factors and Servants; and the Company took Care to ſend out a Conſul, or ſome other Agent, to preſerve the Trade; and by ſmall Impoſts upon the Commodities traded for, provided for ſuch Officers; which Impoſts, and Aſſeſſments, were made by By-Laws among themſelves: They only ordered what Ships ſhould go; but left it to every particular Member of the Company, to ſend what Goods he would upon his own Account; to appoint who he would for his Factor; and to bring over what Commodities he pleaſed: They did not trade upon a Joint Stock, or the Stock of the Body politick. If you dealt with any of them, you knew the particular Perſon you dealt with; and no Man was refuſed to be of the Company, who would pay a ſmall Sum for his Freedom: And whoever was of the Company, had a Vote in ordering the Affairs of the Company: But on the other Hand, the Eaſt-India Company ingroſſed the whole Trade: They had a Joint Stock; and every Man, whether a Merchant or not, who could buy a Share in their Stock, was of their Company: The Committee managed; and the reſt were forced to ſubmit to their Pleaſure in the Diſtribution: Thoſe few that had the greateſt Shares, had the Diſpoſal of the whole Stock: No Member traded, bought, or ſold, or had any Thing he could call his own, but ſuch a Share in the Stock: They did not ſuffer the Members to trade with their own Money, at their own Diſcretion, or to employ whom they pleaſed; and no Man could have a Vote amongſt them, that had not 500 l. Stock: Nor no Man could have ſuch a Share, unleſs he gave 14 l. or 15 l. two and a half per Cent. or ſome great Sum for it: So that by their Conſtitution they could have no more Perſons in their Company than they had 500 l. Shares; and theſe Shares being ingroſſed groſſed into a few Hands, they had All, and called themſelves the Company: So that a Man that would not be deceived by Words, but diſtinguiſh Things different from one another, muſt diſtinguiſh between one Company and another; which of them were Ingroſſers and Monopolizers, and which not.

The Turky Company, and thoſe like it, might be truly ſaid to be Managers, Regulators, and Improvers of Trade: They had no Joint Stock to trade upon: They did not ingroſs: They admitted every Man to be free of the Company that would; to trade with his own Money, on his own Credit; to buy and ſell his own, and to employ whom he pleaſed: And none of them, under Pretence of Government, or the Preſervation of Trade, made unreaſonable Advantages. ——While this inviſible Eaſt-India Merchant, the Body politick, covered and countenanced ſome few Men amongſt them, to ingroſs, buy, and ſell, at their own Rates; and exclude all others, to the great and exceſſive Advantage of a few.

In the Turky Company, where they traded as diſtinct Members, every Man knew his Creditor and his Debtor, becauſe they dealt in their natural Capacities: But this Company trading in the Capacity of a Body Politick, no Man that dealt with them knew his Creditor or Debtor; and it was a great Miſchief, when Perſons knew not how to ſue or deal with them: Take them apart indeed, they were as juſt and good a People to deal with as could be; but take them together as a Body, what was ſo hard to deal with as a Corporation? They had ſeen Inſtances of theſe Things in this very Company: Within a few Days they had ſuch an exorbitant Power, that no Man could contend with them; and in a few Days they became ſo inviſible, as well as low, that no Dun could find them: Bodies politick, in Judgment of Law, had neither Soul or Conſcience; and they generally dealt with the reſt of Mankind, as if the ſeveral Members in their natural Capacities had neither Souls or Conſciences.

Then Mr. Pollexfen proceeded to conſider that Objection, That this was an Infidel Country; and the Subject had no Right to trade with Infidels, without the King's Licence. To prove which, they had cited Michelborn's Caſe, in 2 Brownl. 296; wherein Mr. Brownlow, the Prothonotary, recites, what my Lord Coke ſaid in that Caſe, "That no Subject might trade to Infidel "Countries, without the King's Licence; and his "Reaſon was, becauſe he might relinquiſh the "Catholick Faith, and adhere to Infideliſm: "And that he had ſeen a Licenſe in the Time "of Edward III; wherein the King recited the "Confidence that he had in his Subject, that "he would not decline his Religion, and li-"cenſed him; and that this did ariſe upon "the Recital of a Licence, made to trade to the "Eaſt-Indies".

That they had alſo cited Calvin's Caſe, in Co. 7 Rep. Fol. 17; wherein it is ſaid, "That Infi-"dels were in Law, perpetui inimici: Between "them and Chriſtians, there was perpetual Hoſ-"tility; there could be no Peace: And 12 H. VIII. "Fol. 4.; where it was holden, That a Pagan "could not have or maintain any Action at all, "or have any thing within the Realm; and to "prove this cited the Regiſter, 282, & 12 H. "VIII. Fol. 4."

1684. 36 Car. II.

He anſwered, Suppoſing the Law to be according to theſe Books, and as the other Side would have it; the Conſequence would be, that the Plantiffs could not maintain their Action; but the Charter granted to them would be void: For if the Books cited were of any Authority, the Reaſons given in them muſt be of Authority; and Brownlow ſaid, the King had the Care and Preſervation of Religion, by the Law veſted, and repoſed in him; that the Subject ſhould not trade with Infidels, that they ſhould not renounce their Faith: And the King would give Licence only to ſuch Men to traffick, as he had that Confidence in, that they would never waver from the Religion they profeſſed.

But ſuppoſing this to be true, the Patent muſt be naught; for then it would only have been grantable to Perſons in whom he had ſuch Confidence: But here the Power of trading with Infidels, is granted to Perſons indefinitely; for the Members of this Company were perpetually changing; ſome ſold their Stocks, ſome died, and others came in as Executors: Many new Members there were every Year; nor was it ſo much as examined or enquired into, whether they were fixed in their Religion or not? And what Confidence then could there be in this Body politick, which the Law looked upon as having neither Soul nor Conſcience? What Confidence could be repoſed in ſuch a Perſon, as to Religion?

2. It was not only the Members of the Company, that at the Time of the Incorporation were incorporated, and their Succeſſors, that were thus priviledged; but their Sons, Apprentices, Factors, and Servants, had Licence to trade there, by this Patent: And what Security could there be, that ſuch might not, by converſing with Infidels, change or prejudice their Religion? Such a Patent could not be granted to a Body politick, and their Succeſſors, which might have Continuance for ever; and to their Sons, Factors, Apprentices, and Servants, Perſons yet unborn, and not in rerum natura, when theſe Patents were made. And admitting the King could give Licence to the Eaſt-India Company to trade with Infidels, he could not give them a Power to grant Licences to others, as this Patent did, to their Sons, Servants, and all that they ſhould nominate at their Diſcretions.

Could the King thus grant from himſelf his Kingly Care, and the Truſt in him repoſed, for the Care of Religion, to them, to manage as they would; and ſtipulate that he would not uſe it himſelf without their Conſent? This muſt certainly make it a void Grant.

And conſidering the Authorities, on which this Point was founded; he obſerved, That this Book of Brownlow's was printed during the Uſurpation, and was not licenſed by any Judge: And he had, he ſaid, got an Abſtract of the Roll of the Caſe there reported; and it was this, Mich. 7 Jac. B. C. Rot. 3107. Michelborn againſt Bathurſt: In a Prohibition, ſetting forth, That the King had granted to the Plantiff his Commiſſion, to go with the Ship Tyger to the Indies, To ſpoil and ſuppreſs the Infidels, and to take from them what he could; and the Plantiff in

in the Prohibition having this Commiſſion from the King, did enter into Articles with the Defendant, to give him a Share of what he ſhould get in the Adventure; and thereupon there was a Suit in the Admiralty by the Defendant againſt the Plantiff, and he moved for a Prohibition, ſuggeſting, That the Articles were made upon the Land, and not upon the High Sea, and ſo the Court had no Juriſdiction. Upon the Debate of this Caſe, it did appear, there were a kind of Letters of Mart, a Commiſſion from the King, in a warlike Manner to ſpoil the Infidels, and get what he could from them: But how this would effect the Buſineſs of Trade, he did not know. As to what was in Brownlow, it was only an occaſional Saying of the Lord Coke's, upon the Motion for a Prohibition, and did not relate to the Matter brought in Judgment.

As to that Caſe in Calvin of the Poſt-nati; where it is ſaid, That an Infidel is perpetuus inimicus, can maintain no Action, or have any Property in any thing; and that there is, or ought to be, perpetual Hoſtilities between Chriſtians and them; no Peace could be made with them: Theſe too were but occaſional Sayings, and made nothing to the Matter in Queſtion, about the Poſt-nati: There was nothing there in Judgment that gave Occaſion for them: It did appear indeed, That in a Writ of Protection, granted to the Prior and Brethren of the Hoſpital of St. John of Jeruſalem, that that Hoſpital was founded for the Defence of Holy Church, againſt the Enemies of Chriſt and Chriſtians; but it could not be concluded from thence, that Infidels ſhould not have any Property in Trade, and be perpetual Enemies, with whom no Peace could be had: And as to the Caſe cited 12 H. VIII. 4. This was an Action of Treſpaſs, for beating a Man's Servant, and taking away his Dog, called a Blood-Hound; and in arguing this Caſe, it was ſaid occaſionally, That if a Lord beat his Villain, or an Huſband his Wife, or if a Man beat a Pagan, an Outlaw, or a Traitor; theſe Perſons reſpectively could have no Action, becauſe they were diſabled to ſue: But this was no more than Diſcourſe, ſudden Thoughts and Opinions, and Sayings of Counſel; no ſolemn Debates or Judgment in the Caſe.

It was true, the Chriſtian Religion and Paganiſm were contrary to each other: But, becauſe theſe Religions could not be reconciled, did it therefore follow we ſhould have no Commerce with them? This was a moſt irreligious Doctrine; and deſtroyed all Means of convincing or converting them.

One would think, If the General Practice of Trade and Commerce, and legal Proceedings in all Ages, had been conſidered; my Lord Coke could not be in Earneſt, in what he ſaid in Calvin's Caſe about Infidels; for we had had Commerce with the Turks, Perſians, and Moors of Barbary, as well as with thoſe of Spain and Portugal, who were Infidels, till the Year 1474: And we had made Leagues with ſeveral Infidel Princes, ſent Ambaſſadors and Miniſters to them, and received Ambaſſadors from them, even in that religious Reign of Queen Elizabeth, and ſome hundred of Years before.

But had they been perpetual Enemies, we might have juſtified killing them; and the taking away all they had, as was adjudged 17 Edw. IV. Fo. 13, & 14. and 2 H. VII. 15. 1684 36 Car. II.

It had been objected, That the Jews were actually dealt with in this Manner: As they were Infidels and perpetual Enemies, our Kings taxed them, and took away their Eſtates at Pleaſure: To which he anſwered, Our Kings uſed them but as Spunges, ſuffering them to gripe what they could from others, that they might ſqueeze it from them, into their own Treaſuries: And it did not follow from thence, that they were to be uſed as alien Enemies, and could have no Property: They were indeed under a Curſe, a vagrant People, without Head, Prince, Governor, or Country; and there was no Difficulty in taxing or taking from them at Pleaſure, being hated of the People wherever they lived: But had they been as alien Enemies amongſt us, they could neither have made Bargains or Contracts, or been capable of Property; but the Subject as well as the Prince might at Pleaſure fall upon them, and take what they had to their own Uſe, as from an Enemy.

But by what had been admitted, That they were great Uſurers, and had great Eſtates; it was evident, they were treated as alien Amies, (Friends): How could they elſe have been Uſurers, and got Eſtates, if they could make no Contracts? How could they have preſerved their Perſons and Eſtates againſt the King's Subjects, unleſs they had had the King's Protection, and been treated as alien Friends? How could ſuch Multitudes have remained amongſt us, as it appears there were here in the Reign of Edward I. when the Statute de Judaiſmo was made, That no Jew ſhould take Uſury upon Lands, Rents, or other Things; upon the making whereof, my Lord Coke, in his Comment on that Statute, ſays, That 15,000 Jews and upwards, thereupon went out of the Realm: And of late Years, and at preſent, how many of them were there that lived amongſt us, drove great Trades, and had conſiderable Eſtates?

And ſhould it now be adjudged, that any Man at Pleaſure might take away their Eſtates, and they could have no Remedy or Action for their Debts owing them; but inſtead thereof, might be beaten or impriſoned, as Enemies to the King; we ſhould probably ſoon ſee, what the Succeſs of ſuch a Judgment would be.

It is none of the moſt inconſiderable Doctrines our Religion teaches us, That we ſhould ſpeak and act plainly and uprightly one with another: But Religion is too often made a Cloak for other Purpoſes; he hoped it would not be ſo in this Caſe. He obſerved further, That the Statutes that had been cited, Magna Charta, 9 Edw. III. 25 Edw. III. 2 & 11 Rich. II. all enacted the Freedom of Trade in general Words, excepting only ſuch as were at War with the King: In none of them was there any Exception of Trade with Infidels, and the Practice had been accordingly: We had traded with all Infidel Countries, with which we were acquainted; and treated the People of thoſe Nations as alien Amies, (Friends) when we were not in an actual War with them. And thoſe Sayings on which the contrary Opinion is founded, were probably taken out of ſome zealous Catholick Authors, in ſuperſtitious Times; not being at all all conſonant to the Rules of Law, or true Religion.

The Statute of Monopolies was general; and he hoped it would not be avoided, upon any imaginary Difference in Law, between Infidel and Chriſtian Countries, to monopolize the Trade of the greater Part of the World thereby; viz. That of Turky, Perſia, Barbary, and the Eaſt and Weſt-Indies.

If Licences to trade to theſe Places were neceſſary, it would be worth Conſideration, Whether that would not introduce the impoſing of Rates without a Parliament? For ſuppoſing it true, That there had been Licence to go to trade in Infidel Countries; ſo there had been Licences to go beyond Sea, and to carry on other Trades beſides this: But it did not follow from thence, That it was unlawful to trade without Licences; much leſs did it follow, that ſuch a Patent as this to any one, or to a few Men, to have the ſole Trade to any Place and the Power of licenſing others, could be warranted by it.

The King, no Doubt, might reſtrain the Paſſage of Merchants and Merchandize, in ſome Caſes, and lay an Embargo on Ships; but this muſt be done upon ſpecial Reaſons.

As, Firſt, In Caſe of War. 2. He might reſtrain the Exportation of ſuch Merchandizes, as were neceſſary for the Defence of the Kingdom. 3. In caſe of a Plague, he might prohibit Commerce with any infected Country; but then theſe Prohibitions were general to all his Subjects alike, and the particular Reaſons and Grounds of them apparent: But if under any Pretence, any ſole Trade to ſome one Perſon, Body politick, or natural, be granted, excluding all others; ſuch a Grant was in Deceit of the King, and to the Prejudice of his Subjects; and therefore void.

As to the ſecond Point, They could not have an Action on the Caſe, provided their Patent had been good: If they would take Advantage of the Grant, they muſt take it as the Grant gives it; and proceed for the Forfeiture of Ship and Goods: As for an Action of the Caſe, their Charter did not give it; and, if an Act of Parliament had been penned in this Manner, ſuch an Action could not have lain.

And upon the whole concluded; 1. That what the Company claimed by their Patent, (viz.) To have the ſole Trade to the Eaſt-Indies, in their politick Capacity, excluding all others, was a Monopoly and Ingroſſing, againſt the common Law and the antient Statutes, and the Statute of Monopolies, 21 Jac. and therefore they had no Right to what they claimed.

2. That what the Defendant had done, he had done lawfully, and therefore was not to be puniſhed: And

3. Though the Company had a lawful Claim to this Trade by their Patent, and the Defendant had done what he ought not, yet they could not maintain this Action; and therefore prayed Judgment for the Defendant.

The Chief Juſtice's Declamation.

The Chief Juſtice Jeffries, upon hearing the Arguments thus far, obſerved, That it was a Caſe of great Importance, and had been very well argued on both Sides: But he did not think there was any material Difference, between this and the Charters granted to the Turky Company, and others: But there was another Thing, which, he thought, deſerved great Conſideration, it being a Queſtion wherein Trade was mightily concerned: We had a potent Neighbour, that had both Experience and Induſtry, and was our Rival in this Trade: He wiſhed, We had as much Induſtry, and were as diligent as they: They had found by long Experience, that a Joint-Stock was the only Way to carry on their Trade; (he meant Holland). And it was very well known, if it had not been for a Joint-Stock, the Trade had never been ſo beneficial as it was; it was owing to this, that their Trade was become ſo great and deſirable: And now, that by the Joint-Stock, and Induſtry, and Expence of the Company, the Thing was become facile and valuable; that particular Perſons ſhould come and ſweep away the Advantage of it, ought to be conſidered. Mr. Sandys and his Partners were zealous now to reap the Fruits of the Company's Labours: But would he be contented to pay his Proportion of all the Charge theſe People had been at, to advance the Trade to the Condition it was in?

There was another Conſideration of great Moment: Peace and War was no Doubt in the Power of that Prince and People with whom this Trade was carried on: And ſuppoſe an Injury ſhould be committed by any particular Perſons in the Infidels Country, and the Ship ſuch Perſons belonged to, ſhould get away without making any Reparation for it; Would not the Company's Stock and Factors, as they were of the ſame Nation, be in Danger of ſuffering by it? And might not ſuch Outrages occaſion a War, and exclude all the Subjects of this Nation from that Trade? As the Company therefore were liable to make Satisfaction for ſuch Injuries, it ſeemed fit they ſhould have the Management of the Trade.

Judgment for the Plaintiff.

This Cauſe having been argued ſeveral Terms, Judgment was given for the Plaintiff, in which all the Judges of the King's Bench were unanimous, and gave their Reaſons for it.

The Judges Reaſons.

Mr. Juſtice Holloway obſerved, That a Foreign Trade, with ſeveral Chriſtian Nations, had been opened by Act of Parliament; but held, that at Common Law, this was an inherent Prerogative in the Crown; and none could trade with Foreigners without the King's Licence: That Michelborne's Caſe, cited by thoſe that argued for the Company, had not been anſwered: That this Trade could not be carried on but by a Company, which none could erect but the King: And that the Parliament were ſo far from looking on it as a Monopoly, that it was declared to be advantageous to the Publick, by the Statute of 14 Car. II. cap. 24. which was made that the Company might not be diſcouraged in carrying on their Trade: That the 29 Car. II. took Notice of them, and aſſeſſed their Stock, at twenty Shillings for every hundred Pounds; nor had it ever been queſtioned as a Monopoly by Parliament: That the Prerogative of making Leagues and Treaties with foreign Nations, was in the King alone; and conſequently the Terms and Conditions of Trade: That the Statute of Edw. III. did not affect this Trade, for there was then no ſuch Trade in Being; but taken in the largeſt, it only extended to the Tranſportation of Wool:

1684. 36 Car. II.

That the Company had been in Poſſeſſion of this Trade an hundred Years, which gave them a Right, if they had none before.

Mr. Juſtice Walcot, and Mr. Juſtice Wythens, gave much the ſame Reaſons, concluding alſo for the Plaintiff. The Lord Chief Juſtice Jeffries went through the Caſe, and ſummed up what had been offered by the Counſel on both Sides: And he ſeemed to admit that the Clauſe in the Charter, for the Forfeiture of the Ship and Cargo, was illegal: But he held, that Commerce was founded on the Law of Nations, and not on the Common Law; and that the King only had the Prerogative of ſettling the Terms of it with other Powers: That the King only could do Juſtice to his Subjects, and grant Letters of Mart or Repriſal, where they were injured in their Trade: That all the Staples and Marts for the Trade of his Subjects, whether in England or out of England, were erected by the Crown: That the King ſhut and opened foreign Trade at Pleaſure.

That the Hanſe Towns were ſome of the firſt Corporations of Trade, mentioned in our Hiſtories; and it was thought the Intereſt of England to ſupport and encourage them: King Henry III. gave them great Privileges, and the Still-yards for their Reſidence, which they enjoyed near 300 Years.

That the firſt Patent for erecting the Staple, was obtained in the Reign of Edward III. They were called, The Brotherhood of St. Thomas of Becket; and their Charter confirmed by many ſucceeding Kings, till the Reign of Hen. VII, who gave them the Name of Merchant-Adventurers; and they were afterwards confirmed by Hen. VIII. Edw. VI. Q. Mary, and Q. Eliz. the laſt of whom inlarged the Privileges of this Company; confirmed the Charter to the Muſcovy Company, granted by Philip and Mary; and erected ſeveral other Trading Companies: And in the third Year of King James I. that Act was made for opening a general Trade to Spain, Portugal, and France, to all his Majeſty's Subjects, but left all other Charters of Foreign Trade to remain as they were before.

That it appeared, the Law of the Land, and the Law of Nature and Nations, gave the Power of erecting Companies, for the Management of Traffick, to the Prince, excluſive of all others; and this was to be reckoned among the Jura Regalia: No Act of Parliament had reſtrained this Prerogative, but in ſome particular Places: That the Eaſt-India Company had ſolely run the Hazard, and been at the Expence of eſtabliſhing this Trade; made Diſcoveries, erected Forts, kept Forces, ſettled Factories, and entered into Leagues with the Indian Princes, for the due Regulation of it; and, it would be againſt natural Juſtice and Equity for others to reap the Advantage; eſpecially ſince they had done all this by the Authority of the Crown, under which they claimed: And had the Matter been at firſt doubtful, as it was not; yet, after ſo many Years undiſputed and uninterrupted Prerogative of the King's, and the Poſſeſſion of the Company purſuant thereto, it muſt be looked upon as a good Grant by Law.

As to the ſecond Point, he was of Opinion, That the Defendant trading to the Indies, contrary to this Charter, might be puniſhed by an Information at the Suit of the King; and that this Action by the Pliantiff was alſo well brought, and the Plaintiff need not alledge ſpecial Damage, any more than the Grantee of a Fair or Market, or any other Franchiſe; and, upon the whole declared, he was of the ſame Opinion with his Brethren, That Judgment be given for the Plaintiff. 1684. 36 Car. II.

Remarks on the Trial of the Eaſt-India Company and Sandys.

Notwithſtanding this Judgment, it ſeemed to be the prevailing Opinion after the Revolution, That Charters, granting the ſole Trade to Foreign Countries, excluſive of the reſt of his Majeſty's Subjects, were not legal; and the Old Eaſt-India Company, thereupon, applied themſelves to the Parliament, to have their Trade eſtabliſhed by a Statute; which the Parliament were ready to comply with, on Condition of their advancing a Sum of Money, for the Support of the War againſt France: But another Set of Merchants out-bidding them, and offering to advance two Millions, it was agreed to demoliſh the Old Company, and erect a new one: However, the Old Company ſubſcribing large Sums towards the New one, and ſo gaining a conſiderable Intereſt in it, and being poſſeſſed of all the Engliſh Forts and Factories in India, the two Companies thought fit, at length, to unite; and were eſtabliſhed by Act of Parliament, as they remain at this Day.

But, if the monopolizing any Branch of Trade be prejudicial to the Kingdom, it certainly is not leſs ſo, for having the Sanction of a Statute to countenance it; and, I think, it is agreed, that all ſuch excluſive Acts and Charters, are very detrimental to Trade.

It was, indeed, neceſſary, at firſt, to fit out ſtrong Fleets, and to erect Forts in the Eaſt-Indies, for the Protection of our Trade; not againſt the inoffenſive Indians, but againſt the Dutch; who, in a hoſtile Manner, drove both the Engliſh, and the Natives themſelves from the Iſlands where the fine Spices grow, and monopolized that Trade, while we were unhappily engaged in a Contention with King James and King Charles I. about their Prerogatives. King James was ſo diſtreſſed for want of Money, that he was forced to deliver up the Cautionary Towns to the Dutch, which rendered them dependant on England: 'Till they obtained theſe, they durſt not openly invade our Settlements in the Oriental Iſlands: But they no ſooner had theſe Towns reſtored, and ſaw the Parliament contending with King James, about his Prerogatives, but they ſeized all our Settlements in the Spice Iſlands, tortured and murdered our Merchants and Factors there, and deſtroyed their Ships, and plundered them of their Goods; for which they have never made us Satisfaction ſince. King James, indeed, preſented Memorial after Memorial on this Head: But as they knew he abhorred War, and that his Parliament would never grant him a Penny of Money to go to War with them, though he had had an Inclination that Way, they went on with their Depredations, till they had entirely expelled us from the Spice Iſlands.

King Charles I. had ſet his Heart on procuring the Nation Satisfaction from theſe High and Mighty Monopolizers; and when the Parliament refuſed him Money to enable him to call the Dutch to an Account, and maintain the Sove-

1684. 36 Car. II.

Sovereignty of the Seas, he raiſed Money by Ship-Writs for that End; a Way that had been made uſe of antiently to equip out a Fleet. But the Dutch, jealous they ſhould be driven from the Herring-Fiſhery on our Coaſts, and be obliged to reſtore us the Spice-Trade, the two Grand Supports of their State, joined with the French, and with their Brethren the Engliſh Fanaticks and Republicans, and raiſed ſuch a Rebellion againſt him, that they deſtroyed this Prince, and Monarchy with him, for a Time.

The Uſurpers afterwards made the ſame Demands on the Dutch, that King James and King Charles had done; and beat them in ſo many Sea-Engagements, that they were glad to beg Peace, and promiſe Reſtitution of what they had robbed the Nation of: But Cromwell, on account of their Guaranteeing his Uſurpation, was content to diſpenſe with this Article of the Peace, and let them remain in poſſeſſion of the Spice Iſlands. King Charles II. continued to demand the Reſtoration of theſe Iſlands; and engaged in two Wars with them on that account, in which they were very handſomely beaten: But they raiſed up a Faction againſt that Prince at home, as they had done againſt his Father; and he was compelled to make Peace with them: King James II. made the like Demands, and was preparing to call thoſe High and Mighty Merchants to an Account; which occaſioned their joining ſo vigorouſly in depoſing of him; and ever ſince they have been our good Allies. We muſt not quarrel with them, if they beat us out of every other Branch of Trade: But in no Reign have we ever expreſly relinquiſhed our Right in theſe invaluable Iſlands, to this Day.

To return to our Subject: It was at firſt, as I have obſerved, abſolutely neceſſary to provide a large Joint-Stock, to fit out a Fleet, of Force ſufficient to eſtabliſh and defend our Plantations and Settlements in the Eaſt-Indies againſt the Dutch: And it is much to be lamented, that, inſtead of quarrelling with our Princes, we did not enable them to ſupport the Pretenſions this Nation had to the Spice-Iſlands, againſt the Uſurpations of the Hollanders. But when we had actually loſt theſe, the Eaſt-India Trade was not of the like Importance as before: We had, indeed, afterwards, a Trade to the Continent of China and India, from whence we import Silks, Muſlin, Calicoes, Tea, Pepper, Jewels, &c. But this we have in common with the French, Dutch, and Danes; and this might have been carried on by private Traders, probably, with more Succeſs than by a Company; as I have heard the famous Pit affirm, though he was twice Governor of the Coaſt of Cormandel, for the Company. And we find, that the African, or Guinea Trade, has been much improved ſince it was laid open: Indeed, it is very proper, that thoſe who uſe any Trade, ſhould contribute to maintain the Forts, and Forces, that are neceſſary to preſerve the Nation in the Poſſeſſion of that Trade; and this is done, by obliging the Merchants, who trade to any Country, to allow five or ten per Cent. or ſuch other Sums as ſhall be found neceſſary for the Support of them. This the Statute requires, that lays open the African Trade: But there is no Manner of Neceſſity of excluding all the King's Subjects, but the Company, from trading; this would be prejudicial to the Nation, as well as to particular Men; for private Merchants will uſe much more Frugality, and Diligence, in carrying on their Trade, than Companies will; and manage better for themſelves, than Directors, or Committees, do for them: It is obſerved of all Companies, not excepting that of the Dutch Eaſt-India Company, That their Directors, Governors, Factors, and Officers, grow exceſſive rich, while the Company itſelf is miſerably poor; every Man regarding his private Intereſt, more than that of his Maſters, or of the Publick.

1684. 36 Car. II.

The only Remark I ſhall make more on this Trial, is, That it appears from the Arguments of the Counſel on both Sides, that the Commiſſions, which were granted to the firſt Adventurers to the Indies, and other Parts of the Heathen World (and particularly, that to) authorized them to ſpoil, plunder, and enſlave the poor defenceleſs Natives; take their Countries from them; and even to kill them, if they refuſed to ſubmit to the Dominion of the Chriſtians, and embrace their Religion: But how, or when, this Mahometan Doctrine came to be introduced among a People, whoſe Religion teaches them univerſal Benevolence and good Will to Mankind, and ſtrictly forbids all Violence and Injuſtice, is not eaſy to conceive: Certain it is, that it was originally a Popiſh Doctrine; and that both the Kings of Spain and Portugal gave the like Commiſſions to the Diſcoverers of the Eaſt and Weſt-Indies, with the Concurrence of the Pope; or rather by his Authority: For it was by Virtue of the Pope's Bulls, that the one aſſumed the Dominion over all Pagan Countries in the Eaſt, and the other over thoſe in the Weſt; and by Virtue thereof they invaded the Natives in a hoſtile Manner; took their Countries from them, and enſlaved them; in which they exactly copied after Mahomet.

Dominion was then univerſally held to be founded in Grace; and none were thought to have a Right to this World, but true Believers; and thoſe particularly, to whom the Pope, the then Head of the Latin Church, transferred thoſe Countries that remained in the Poſſeſſion of the Pagans: And though the Proteſtants, after the Reformation, renounced the Pope's Authority, yet they ſtill held, that Chriſtians might juſtly invade Heathen Countries, and uſurp the Dominion of them; as appears by that Commiſſion of Michelbourn's, above-mentioned. And our Saints, during the Grand Rebellion, carried this Principle ſo far, that they held, No Man was entitled to any Thing in this World, that was not of their Party; and made no Scruple in plundering and enſlaving all other Chriſtians that differed from them; which was a remarkable Improvement on that Popiſh Doctrine, That DOMINION IS FOUNDED IN GRACE; eſpecially, as it was held by Men who pretend to abhor nothing more than Popery.

1684 36 Car. II. Hampden's Trial.

The Trial of JOHN HAMPDEN, Esq; for an High Misdemeanor, at the King's-Bench Bar, 6 February, 1683. Hill. 36 Car. II.

1684 36 Car. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges, That the Defendant, John Hampden, on the last Day of June, in the 35th Year of the King, did, at the Parish of St. Giles in the Fields, in the County of Middlesex, unlawfully assemble, consult, and agree, with divers other evil disposed Persons, to raise a Rebellion, and to provide Forces and Arms in divers Parts of the Kingdom; and, the better to accomplish their said evil Purposes, they did, on the Day and Year aforesaid, agree to send certain Persons to Scotland, to invite the Malcontents there to join with them in the said Conspiracy.

The Reasons given, why the Defendant was not charged with High Treason.

Mr. Attorney, in opening the Evidence, observed, that the Matter in this Trial had already been under Examination at several Trials for High-Treason, at which the Enemies of the Government pretended, the Persons accused lay under great Hardships, in not having the Advantage of Counsel, and their Witnesses examined upon Oath; for which Reason his Majesty was pleased the Defendant should be prosecuted in a milder Way, to give him all Opportunities of clearing his Innocence, if he had Witnesses to do it: And if the having Counsel would contribute to the Advantage of his Cause, he might have them too. He observed farther, that the Earl of Essex, one of the Conspirators, had given Judgment against himself; but the Party had been so officious to fling his Death upon the Government: That two more of this Cabal had received the Judgment of the Law; and the remaining two, the Lord Howard and the Duke of Monmouth, having confessed the whole Matter, the King had extended his Mercy to them; and they were summoned to be here this Day, that the Malcontents might see there was nothing intended by this Prosecution, but the settling the Peace and Quiet of the Kingdom.

Duke of Monmouth summoned as a Witness.

Then the Duke of Monmouth was called, and Oath made of his being served with a Subpœna, to appear as a Witness; but his Grace did not think fit to attend.

Lord Howard's Evidence.

Whereupon the Lord Howard was sworn, and gave an account of the Lord Shaftesbury's having formed a Conspiracy, to incite a Rebellion about Michaelmas 1685. as he had done at the Trials of Sidney and Russel; and that Shaftesbury going beyond Sea the following November, the Duke of Monmouth, the Earl of Essex, the Lord Russel, Colonel Sidney, Mr. Hampden the Defendant, and himself, (Lord Howard) formed themselves into a Cabal, to carry on the said Conspiracy, and met at Mr. Hampden's House about the Middle of January, when they discoursed of raising Money, and of the Time and Place most proper to begin the Insurrection. But the Principal Thing resolved on, was to settle a Correspondence with Lord Argyle, and the Malcontents in Scotland, that they might give the Government all the Diversion they could, both at Home and Abroad; and that they all concurred and assented to this Resolution.

Cabal of six.

The Court demanding what Grievances they complained of in the Administration, to induce them to enter into this Conspiracy; his Lordship answered, They thought it a Grievance, that such a Force was put upon the City at the Election of Sheriffs; and observed the ill Consequences this would have upon Juries.

At their next Meeting, which was in February at the Lord Russel's, about a Fortnight after the first; they agreed to send Aaron Smith to Scotland, and Sidney took upon him to manage that Affair; and told the Deponent afterwards, That he had sent Smith, and given him threescore Guineas to bear his Charges; and that he was then at Newcastle, from whence he heard from him: That in Pursuance of this Message, the Lord Melvin, Sir John Cockram, and one Campbel, of the Lord Argyle's Name and Family, came up to London, under Pretence of carrying on a Plantation in Carolina: That these Gentlemen were known to the Lord Russel only; and he was to write the Letter to them, which he, (Lord Howard,) supposed he did.

Then Proof was made by the Master of the Inn, at Newcastle, where Smith lay; and by the Guide that conducted him towards Scotland, of his being at Newcastle, at the Time the Lord Howard testified.

Proof the Scotish Malcontents came up to London.

Atterbury, the Messenger, also proved his apprehending the two Campbels, and some of the rest of the Scots Gentlemen in London, who came up about this Business: And Sir Andrew Foster deposed, That Sir John Cockram, Monroe, Sir George Campbel, and his Father, were in London the last Summer; and that he saw a Commission to Sir John Cockram, to make a Purchase in Carolina.

Mr. Hampden's Defence by his Counsel.

Mr. Williams, being of Counsel for Mr. Hampden, then entered on his Defence, and observed, That Lord Howard not being positive as to the Day of the Consultation in January, it was not possible to contradict him in that Particular; and that there was not any one Circumstance, unless the Matter of Aaron Smith, to confirm his Testimony: That it was strange there should not be one Person more, who could prove that any of these Gentlemen were at that Meeting at Mr. Hampden's, or the other Meeting at Lord Russel's.

And though he testified there was a Discourse of raising Men, providing Arms, Money, &c. in January, yet nothing was done thereupon; though no Discovery was made till the July after: He insisted also, That Lord Howard appeared, by his own Evidence, to be very deep in the Conspiracy; and gave this Evidence against others to get his own Pardon: And he had, by exposing this Gentleman, and the Blood of others, procured himself a Pardon: Was it reasonable therefore to believe what he had said?

The

1684. 36 Car. II.

The Chief Juſtice thereupon ſaid, What do you mean by that, Mr. Williams? It is a harſh Word, you had need explain yourſelf; as though the King's Pardon were to be procured by Blood.

Mr. Williams anſwered, I mean no more than that, there being other Witneſſes before my Lord Howard, it concerned him to give a home Evidence, or he could not have expected his Pardon. Another Objection he made to this Lord's Evidence was, That he owned he knew nothing of the Plot; and had ſaid, Colonel Sidney and the Lord Ruſſel were innocent: And that he had been guilty of Atheiſtical Expreſſions; and, becauſe he had ſaid, That he could not have his Pardon, till the Drudgery of of Swearing was over. That he ſhould call that a Drudgery, which was manifeſtly his Duty (viz.) the giving his Teſtimony to preſerve the King and Government, was but an odd Inſinuation; and, as he underſtood it, his Lordſhip ſtrained a little, to make his Diſcovery the more profitable to him.

As to what concerned Aaron Smith, he did not ſee how that affected Mr. Hampden; he ſaid no more of him, than that he was in the Company.

The Chief Juſtice obſerved, he ſaid, He conſented to it.

The Evidence for the Defendant.

Mr. Williams replied, It muſt be by his Silence; for he did not teſtify he ſaid one Word: Nor was it proved at laſt, that Aaron Smith was in Scotland, or concerned in the Conſpiracy; or, that the Defendant was ever in the Company of thoſe Scotiſh Gentlemen.

The Counſel then called the Defendant's Witneſſes, viz. Mr. Ducas, Mr. Howard, the Earl of Clare, Dr. Burnet, &c. who depoſed, that they had heard the Lord Howard ſolemnly declare, he knew nothing of any Plot: And particularly Dr. Burnet depoſed, that the Lord Howard proteſted, with Hands and Eyes lifted up, he knew of no Plot; and that, before the Lord Howard made thoſe ſolemn Aſſeverations, he was poſſeſſed with a Belief of the Plot.

Dr. Burnet.

Mr. Recorder thereupon demanded of the Doctor, If he believed the Plot now?

Dr. Burnet anſwered, I make no Doubt, as to the Aſſaſſination.

Mr. Blake depoſed, The Lord Howard ſaid, He muſt not have his Pardon, till the Drudgery of Swearing was over.

Witneſſes being called to Mr. Hampden's Character, the Lord Paget depoſed, That he believed the Defendant to be a Man of Honour and Virtue, and lived a ſtudious contemplative Life; and therefore was not likely to be engaged in ſuch a Deſign: That he was not of a turbulent, ſeditious Spirit, but a peaceable Man, and of little Acquaintance; and he never heard him expreſs any Diſſatisfaction, as to the Government.

Mr. Pelham gave him the like Character; as did Sir Henry Hobart: Adding, that the Defendant went over to France in 1680, and remained there till September 1682, and deſigned to go over to France again.

Other Witneſſes depoſed, they had heard the Defendant expreſs a great Affection for the Government; and that, when he was told the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Grey lay hid, he ſaid, I will never fly, or conceal myſelf; for my Conſcience reproaches me with nothing.

1684. 36 Car. II.

Then Mr. Williams was about to produce a Witneſs, that the Lord Eſſex had ſo mean an Opinion of the Lord Howard, that it was not likely he would enter into Conſultations with him about ſuch Matters.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, They muſt not bring Evidence of what a third Perſon thought of the Lord Howard; and beſides, the Record of the Conviction of the Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney, who were convicted on my Lord Howard's Teſtimony, ſupported his Credit more than the Report of a third Perſon could impeach it: And, it ſeemed, my Lord Eſſex had ſuch an Opinion of my Lord Howard's Evidence, that he cut his Throat upon it.

Then one Murray was called, to give an Account of my Lord Howard's Atheiſtical Diſcourſes; but Mr. Attorney objected againſt ſuch Evidence, as it was impoſſible his Lordſhip could be prepared to give any Anſwer to it.

Lord Howard alſo ſaid, This preſſes hard upon my Reputation; and I profeſs before God, I do not know this Fellow; I never ſaw him in my Life: Who is this Raſcal they bring here? I would fain have this Fellow to dare ſay this any where elſe.

The Chief Juſtice obſerved, That it was very hard thus to rake into the whole Courſe of a Man's Life: Whereupon his Teſtimony was waved; and the whole Evidence for the Defendant being ended, the Counſel on both Sides agreed to make no Obſervations on the Evidence, but leave it to the Court.

The Directions of the Chief Juſtice to the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice, in his Directions to the Jury, obſerved, That the Counſel on both Sides had drawn Inferences to their Advantage, from the Duke of Monmouth's being ſubpœna'd as a Witneſs in this Cauſe: Thoſe for the King urged, they had ſubpœna'd him to ſhew the Fairneſs of their Proceedings; and that they were not afraid to have the whole Truth appear: And the other Side inſinuated, that the Truth of the Conſpiracy ought to be ſuſpected, becauſe he did not appear.

As to the Objections that had been made to the Lord Howard's Teſtimony, it was very ſtrange it ſhould be made an Objection, that, before he had his Pardon, he gave his Evidence out of Fear, and in order to get his Pardon; and it ought to be an Objection too, that he had got his Pardon, and therefore ought not to be believed: But if, after he was pardoned, when he was under no Dread or Fear, he ſaid the ſame Things he did when he might be in Fear, it was a plain Anſwer to that Objection, of his being moved by his Fears.

That he might be particular, as to the Time he converſed with the Lord Shaftesbury about Sheriffs, and the Return of Juries, becauſe the Sheriffs are always ſworn the Day after Michaelmas-Day; but it was not ſo eaſy for him to fix the very Day when the Conſultation in January was, becauſe there was not ſo material a Circumſtance to fix it in his Memory.

The Reaſon there was nothing done by the Conſpirators, between the Time of the Conſultation in January and July following, was, becauſe a Treaty was to be negotiated with the Scots, before they could reſolve on any Thing; and the Scotiſh Agents did not come up to London till July.

1684. 36 Car. II.

And as to the Lord Howard's ſaying, He knew nothing of a Plot; and that they had done nothing but what was legal; he knew ſome People believed the raiſing Tumults, and the making Seditions and Commotions, was a legal Way to obtain their Ends: And what would they not do, under a Perſuaſion, that all they did was according to Law? They were taught, by the Religion they profeſſed, to oppoſe the Government. The Old Cauſe was a good Cauſe to this Day, in ſome Mens Opinion: They could die in it; and thank God for being concerned in it; and yet called themſelves Proteſtants. But this was rank Treaſon and Rebellion, let Men pretend Conſcience, or what they would. Was it not under Pretence of Religion, that King Charles I. was brought to the Block?

As to Lord Howard's ſwearing, that he could not have his Pardon till the Drudgery of the Swearing was over; it muſt be a Drudgery, and irkſome to him, to call himſelf Traitor ſo often, in a Court of Juſtice; though it was his Duty to tell the Truth: He might, indeed, have given it a ſofter Term; but he had Reaſon, in ſome Senſe, to call it a Drudgery: But, as he did ſwear, before he had a Pardon, upon all Occaſions, when he was called to be a Witneſs; ſo when he had his Pardon, he did ſwear the ſame Thing: The Want of a Pardon, therefore, did not influence his Teſtimony: He was under no Fear, but as free as any Subject the King had; and yet he made Oath of the ſame Things now, as he did at the Trials of the Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney.

And notwithſtanding the Evidence that had been given of Mr. Hampden's loyal and peaceable Diſpoſition, he obſerved from the Teſtimony of his own Witneſſes, that there had been ſome Jealouſy of him; and that he lay under hard Cenſures as well as other People. For in diſcourſing of the Plot, the Advice given him was this: My Lord Grey is gone, and the Duke of Monmouth is gone; Why wont you go? Why ſhould this Advice be given to him, if there was no Suſpicion of his being concerned? As to his ſaying, I will not go, which they gave as a Proof of his Innocence, there was the ſame Innocence in my Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney, and all the ſix, except the Duke of Monmouth; and he did abſcond. They knew no Reaſon why they ſhould ſtay to be taken, any more than Weſt or Rumſey; and yet that was not uſed by them as an Argument of their Innocence. As to his Intentions of going Abroad, it was much he did not put them in Execution. He came over at an unlucky Time, when the City was in a Ferment, and Men were filled with Fears and Jealouſies; and theſe might animate him, as they did other People: It had been much better, for his Advantage, he had never come out of France, or, that he had returned thither ſooner.

As to the Lord Howard's denying he was in a Plot; Could it be ſuppoſed, that a Man guilty of High-Treaſon would proclaim his own Guilt? Could it be ſuppoſed he ſhould tell Dr. Burnet, that he, and Colonel Sidney, and Mr. Hampden, were in a Plot, and make it common Talk? His Proteſtations were ſo far from being an Argument of his Innocence, that they were rather an Argument of his Guilt: If he had been free from Suſpicion, why ſhould he tell Colonel Sidney's Footman, and this Man and the other, I know nothing of the Plot; and neither I, nor any Man, I am ſure, is concerned in it? This Over-Caution was an Intimation, that there was ſomething more than ordinary in the Matter; ſo that the Argument turned the other Way: And if it did not, the Witneſſes muſt be looked upon as Perſons diſaffected to the Government; namely, Dr. Burnet, Lord Paget, Lord Clare, and the reſt. It muſt be ſuppoſed, he did not think fit to truſt theſe loyal Gentlemen with his Confeſſions: This they ought to value themſelves upon; it was for their Credit and Reputation: They ſhould not therefore make it an Argument againſt my Lord Howard, or againſt the Credibility of his Teſtimony, that he did not truſt them with the Secret.

The Chief Juſtice concluded, That this was a Cauſe of great Conſequence, wherein the Peace and Government of the Kingdom was concerned in a very high Degree: And had there been another Witneſs as poſitive as my Lord Howard, the Charge would have amounted to High-Treaſon; but as there was but one Witneſs, ſupported by other corroborating Circumſtances, he was only charged with a Treſpaſs; the Tendency whereof, however, was to bring us into Confuſion, as in the Times of the late Rebellion. Men might make fair Pretences; as that they deſigned only the Security of the Government, and the Proteſtant Religion: But they would have done well to have waited till they had a legal Authority to conſult of thoſe High Matters that they pretended to ſecure: What had they to do to aſſume ſuch a Power? Upon the whole, the Lord Howard had poſitively ſworn the Matter of Fact laid in the Indictment, and was ſupported by the Witneſſes that teſtified Smith's going to Scotland, the Scotiſh Gentlemens being in London; and the Sham and Cant of Carolina; and was not contradicted by any Thing that carried any Probability of an Anſwer; and he left it to the Jury to determine, whether the Defendant was guilty.

The Jury thereupon withdrawing, returned within the Space of half an Hour; and brought in their Verdict, that the Priſoner was GUILTY. The Defendant convicted.

Mr. Attorney, on Tueſday the 12th of February, prayed Judgment againſt the Defendant: That the Court would ſet a good Fine upon him, and he might find Sureties for his good Behaviour for Life: Whereupon Mr. Williams repreſented, that Mr. Hampden was but Heir apparent to his Father, who was alive: So that he had only the Proſpect of an Eſtate; very little in Poſſeſſion; and, according to Magna Charta, Fines ought to be ſet with a Salvo Contenemento.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, If the Crime had been proved by two Witneſſes, it would have wrought a Forfeiture of his Eſtate and Life too, and corrupted his Blood; and that it deſerved a great Puniſhment, if they could impoſe one adequate adequate to his Deſerts; and the Clauſe in Magna Charta never meant Fines for great Offences, but Amerciaments only.

Fined 40,000 l.

Then a Fine of 40,000 Pounds was ſet upon the Defendant; and he was ordered to be impriſoned till he paid it, and find Sureties for his good Behaviour during Life: But the Chief Juſtice told the Defendant, If he would apply himſelf to his Majeſty, he might find Mercy.

Then Mr. Hampden being committed for his Fine, his Bail were diſcharged.

Remarks on Mr. Hampden's Trial.

As every one of the ſix Noblemen and Gentlemen, charged with aſſembling and conſulting to raiſe a Rebellion, and depoſe the King, either confeſſed the Fact, or were convicted of it; there is little Doubt to be made of the Truth of the Conſpiracy, or of their Share in it. And I queſtion whether their Friends at this Day would endeavour to diſprove the Charge; or rather, whether they do not look upon them as Heroes and Patriots, that endeavoured to preſerve the Religion and Conſtitution of their Country, with the Hazard of their Lives.

1684. 36 Car. II.

I ſhall only obſerve here, that though Biſhop Burnet, in his poſthumous Hiſtory, ſpeaking of the intended Aſſaſſination of the King at the Rye-Houſe, ſays, It was all but rambling Diſcourſe, all was but Talk: Yet at this Trial of Mr. Hampden, when he was asked, If he believed the Plot; he anſwered, I make no Doubt, as to the Aſſaſſination.

Sacheverell's Trial.

The Information.

AN Information was preferred by Sir Robert Sawyer the Attorney General, againſt William Sacheverell Eſq; George Gregory Eſq; Richard Mansfield Eſq; Henry Plumtree Eſq; Charles Hutchinſon Eſq; John Greaves Gent. William Greaves Gent. &c. Setting forth, That on the twenty-ninth of September, in the thirty-fourth Year of the preſent King, at the Town of Nottingham, there was an Aſſembly duely ſummoned, before Gervas Wild, then Mayor of the ſaid Town, for the electing and ſwearing a new Mayor of the ſaid Town, for the Year enſuing: That the ſaid Mayor proceeding to Election, made a Proclamation for all Perſons to depart, that were not concerned in the Election, and for keeping the Peace; and that they, the ſaid Will. Sacheverell, and the reſt of the Defendants, nevertheleſs, well knowing the Premiſes, and being unconcerned in the ſaid Election, did diſturb the Peace of the Place, ſet the Town together by the Ears; and, in a riotous Manner, aſſemble themſelves with many other ill-diſpoſed Perſons, to the Number of five hundred, and continued the Riot for the Space of ſeven Hours, with a great deal of Noiſe and Tumult; and with Force and Arms, did riotouſly carry away, and detain a Mace, from one John Malin, then one of the Sheriffs of the ſaid Town; to the great Terror of his Majeſty's Subjects, to the evil Example of others, and againſt the King's Peace, &c.

The Caſe, as ſtated by Mr. Sacheverell, is as follows: The Town of Nottingham claimed to have been a Corporation by Preſcription: King Edward I. granted the Burgeſſes of that Town, the Privilege of chuſing a Mayor annually, they having only Bailiffs before: King Henry VI. made it a County, and gave them the Privilege of chuſing two Sheriffs, inſtead of Bailiffs; and of electing ſeven Aldermen out of their Number, one of them to be Mayor annually: That the Aldermen, while they remained ſuch, ſhould be Juſtices of Peace; and, that the Town of Nottingham ſhould for ever be a Body Corporate, by the Name of Mayor and Burgeſſes: And that no Charter ſince, or any By-Law, had given the Aldermen any more Power than they held by that Charter, which was no more than every Burgeſs of the Town had; except the Privilege of being Juſtices of Peace, and wearing Gowns and Hoods.

That the Aldermen, however, in the Reign of King James I. did take upon them to be Part of the Council, and intermeddle in the Affairs of the Town; and pretend to have a Right of letting, and diſpoſing of the Corporation-Lands, Bridge-Lands, and School-Lands; of which the Burgeſſes complained to the Lords of the Council, in the Year 1605, and prayed Redreſs: The Council referred the Matter to the Judges of Aſſize; but it was afterwards amicably agreed, That there ſhould be a Council of twenty-four Perſons; (the Aldermen for the Time being always excepted) and theſe, with the Mayor, or (the Majority of them) ſhould have the letting or diſpoſing of the Town-Lands; and that Pretence of the Aldermen, to diſpoſe of their Lands, or to be of the Council, was given up, till of late Years.

That the Burgeſſes being informed, That in Eaſter-Term laſt, the Mayor, and ſome of the Aldermen of the Town, had a Deſign to ſurrender the Charter of that Corporation; for the Prevention of the ill Conſequences thereof, they entered four Caveats, two at the Lord Chancellor's, and two at the Attorney-General's; one of which, in each Place, was againſt paſſing any new Charter to the Town of Nottingham, without the Privity, Conſent, or Hearing of the Burgeſſes; the other againſt the accepting of any Surrender of any Charter of that Town, without the like Privity, Conſent, or Hearing.

However, the Mayor called a Council the twenty-fifth of July laſt, without giving Notice what the Buſineſs would be; and there appearing at the Hall the Mayor, five Aldermen, and twenty-two of the Council, beſides Alderman Toplady, whoſe Election was conteſted; the Mayor cauſed the Queſtion to be put, for ſurrendering their Charters: And, though it was objected objected by ſome of the Council, That the Aldermen had no Right to vote; yet the Mayor cauſed the Poll to be taken, and admitted the Aldermen and Mr. Toplady as Voters: And there appeared to be the Mayor, four Aldermen, and nine of the Council for ſurrendering; and Aldermen Greaves, the two Coroners, and ten more, were againſt ſurrendering; ſo that the Votes were equal: But, if Toplady's Vote was not good, (as he held it was not) Thoſe that were againſt the Surrender were a Majority: And if the Aldermen had no Right to give their Votes, as he conceived they had not, either by Preſcription or Charter; then there were only the Mayor and nine of the Council for the Surrender, and thirteen of the Council againſt it.

Nor had the Council, as he apprehended, any Right to ſurrender their Charters, if there had been a Majority of them; being only elected by the reſt of the Burgeſſes, for the Management of the Revenues of the Corporation, and the Diſpatch of ſome other ordinary Affairs: All the Burgeſſes were intereſted in the Matter, and had as good a Right to vote as any of the Council; nor could the Mayor, Aldermen, or Council, bind their Hands, or ſurrender their Charter, without the Conſent of the Burgeſſes: However, the Mayor, as ſoon as the Vote paſſed in the ſaid Aſſembly, for the Surrender of the Charter, produced an Inſtrument in writing, purporting a Surrender, and cauſed the Town-Seal to be fixed to it, and ſent it up to London.

Whereupon the Burgeſſes of Nottingham, who were againſt the Surrender, adviſed with Counſel, Whether many of their Cuſtoms and Privileges in reference to Trade, which they held only by Cuſtom or Preſcription, and the Lands they held of the Crown, and of private Perſons, which were of a great annual Value, would not be loſt by a Surrender of their Charter?

To which the Counſel anſwered, That if the Charters of any Body Corporate were lawfully ſurrendered, the Corporation that held by ſuch Charters was diſſolved, and the Heirs of the Perſons that granted the Lands, would be entitled to recover the ſame; and as to the Crown Lands, his Majeſty might grant them again to the Corporation: But no new Charter would give them a Title to ſuch Lands, as had been granted by private Perſons, and enable the Corporation to keep them from their Heirs; as was reſolved by the Judges when the Monaſteries were ſurrendered; and therefore a ſpecial Act of Parliament was made, to veſt theſe Lands in the King.

That, if they claimed a Right of Common in other Men's Lands, their Preſcription for Common would be deſtroyed by ſuch a Surrender.

That their Freedom from Tolls, in like Manner, would be loſt.

And to the laſt Queſtion. (viz.) Whether, if the Mayor and other Members, without the Conſent of the Body Corporate, ſhould ſurrender the Charters of the Corporation; the particular Perſons who received Damage thereby, might not have an Action againſt the Mayor and ſuch other Members? it was anſwered, They might: But to prevent the ſurrendering the Charter, and the Suits and Inconveniencies that might be occaſioned thereby, it was thought fit to preſent Mr. Mayor with their Senſe of his Proceedings, and declare their Diſſent to any Surrender; and accordingly a Writing was drawn engroſſed and ſigned, by between three and four hundred of the Burgeſſes, and preſented to the Mayor, on the 14th of Auguſt, as the Senſe of moſt of the Burgeſſes of that Town; in which Inſtrument they ſay,

1684. 36 Car. II.

That underſtanding the Mayor, and thirteen more of the Corporation, had, without the Conſent of the Burgeſſes, agreed to ſurrender the Charters, Liberties, and Franchiſes of the Corporation; and cauſed the Corporation-Seal to be affixed to an Inſtrument, for making ſuch Surrender; They, conſidering the great Damage it muſt be to the Corporation, and to every particular Burgeſs, if they ſhould be ſo ſurrendered, did ſignify their Thoughts on what they had done, and were about to do: That many of their Liberties and Franchiſes would be loſt, if ſuch Surrender ſhould be effected, as they had agreed to: They did thereby declare their Diſſent to thoſe Proceedings; and that they did not, nor ever would conſent that a Surrender of any Charter, Liberty, Franchiſe, or Privilege of the Corporation of Nottingham, ſhould be made; and that they would by all lawful Means oppoſe the ſame; and, in caſe they proceeded in the ſaid Surrender, they ſhould expect ſuch Satisfaction as the Law would give them.

The Burgeſſes alſo ordered Caveats to be entered at the Lord Chancellor's, the Lord Privy Sea'ls, and the Signet-Office, againſt ſurrendering their Charters without their Conſent, and againſt the paſſing any new Charter: A Petition alſo was ſigned by three hundred and ſixty Burgeſſes, deſiring to be heard, before any Surrender of their Charters ſhould be accepted.

But, contrary to the Expectation of the Burgeſſes, Mr. Mayor, having, as he ſaid, received Advice from London, that the Inſtrument he had ſent up for ſurrendering the Charters was not ſufficient; did, on Saturday the twelfth of Auguſt, without ſummoning a Council, affix the Town-Seal to another Inſtrument of Surrender; which was preſented to his Majeſty the 14th of Auguſt: And he ſuggeſts that the Mayor broke open the Cheſt, where the Town-Seal was kept, to come at it: The Seal being kept under three Locks and Keys, and the Officers who had them refuſing to deliver him the Keys, without calling a Council: From all which Conſiderations, they looked upon the Surrender that had been made of their Charters to be illegal, and hoped ſtill to preſerve their antient Rights, by the Aſſiſtance of the Courts of Juſtice: And when a new Charter was ſent down, they actually refuſed to accept it; but proceeded to the Choice of a new Mayor, according to their old Charter; Mr. Sacheverell, one of the Honorary Burgeſſes, and the reſt of the Gentlemen mentioned in the Information, being at the Town-Hall, and countenancing the Burgeſſes, in their Oppoſition to the new Charter; which appears to have been the Occaſion of preferring this Information againſt them.

The Defendants plead Not guilty.

All the Defendants, except Plumtree, pleaded Not Guilty to the Information; but alledged, That the Inhabitants of the Town and County ty of the Town of Nottingham, ought not to be drawn out of their ſaid County; and deſiring that a Jury of the County of Kent might try the Iſſue; the Attorney General agreed to it; and, accordingly a Jury of Gentlemen of the County of Kent, were impanelled, and ſworn: After which, the King's Counſel opened the Information and the Evidence; and calling their Witneſſes; Mr. Pollexfen, of Counſel for the Defendants, objected to the ſwearing Mr. Wild, Mr. Edge, and other Members of the new Corporation, as not being competent Witneſſes in this Caſe: He ſaid, There was a Diſpute, Whether the Old Corporation was in being, or not? and, Whether the New Charter was a good Charter in Law? That the Matter was depending both in the Chancery and King's-Bench: A Scire Facias having been brought againſt the New Charter, and a Quo Warranto in this Court, againſt the Old; and, if it ſhould ſo fall out, that the New Charter, upon which the Information was founded, was not good in Law, the Cauſe muſt go for the Defendants: That the Members who claimed under the New Corporation, therefore, could not be Witneſſes; becauſe they would thereby maintain their Intereſt in the New Charter.

1684. 36 Car. II.

Tried by a Jury from Kent.

Objections to the Witneſſes.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, They were not about to try, whether the Old or New Charter was good, that would not come in Queſtion on this Iſſue: But, whether there was a Riot committed by the Defendants, againſt the publick Peace.

Wild's Evidence.

Then Alderman Wild, who was Mayor at the Time of the Riot, was ſworn, and depoſed, That on Michaelmas-Day, being the Day for electing the Mayor, he was waiting at his Houſe, in Expectation of the New Charter; and the Burgeſſes came to him, and would have had him gone with them to Church, as was uſual on that Day; but he told them the New Charter was coming, and deſired they would ſtay a little; however, they went to Church, with Mr. Sacheverell at the Head of them, leaving him (the Mayor), and ſome of the Aldermen with him: That the New Charter arriving immediately after, he went to the Town-Hall, in order to be ſworn; and ſent to the Church, for the Town-Clerk to come and adminiſter him the Oath, that he might act as Mayor under the new Charter: The Town-Clerk ſent him Word at firſt, that he would not come; but not long after he came, with Mr. Sacheverell, and other Gentlemen mentioned in the Information, and many more, who were not Burgeſſes; and thoſe of them that were Burgeſſes had no Votes by the old Charter: That he was a little amazed to ſee ſo many Gentlemen; and he took the new Charter out of the Box, and ſhewed it them, and would have had Alderman Edge the Town-Clerk read it, but he refuſed; and ſome People cried out, No New Charter, No New Charter; and Mr. Sacheverell ſaid, This is not our Buſineſs here, we come for the Election of a Mayor by the old Charter: That he (the Mayor) then ſaid to Mr. Sacheverell, I know no Buſineſs you have here, nor a great many Gentlemen more; it would better become you to be in another Place: That Mr. Sacheverell then demanded, If he would proceed to an Election? And he (the Mayor) anſwered, He had a great deal to do, before he could proceed to an Election; he muſt be ſworn himſelf, and ſwear half a Dozen more, in the Room of thoſe that were left out in the new Charter: And then they cried out again, No New Charter, No New Charter; A Greaves Mayor: They bid Alderman Edge take his Book alſo, and proceed to Election; demanding of him (the Mayor), Who he was for? To which he replied, They could not proceed to Election without his Conſent, and he diſclaimed it; and then adjourning the Court from the Council-Room, to the Guild-Hall adjoining; he went out into the Hall, where ſitting on the Bench with ſome of his Brethren, he was ſworn: Then he told the Burgeſſes of the Town, the King had granted them a new Charter, and they ſhould hear it read: But Mr. Gregory and Mr. Hutchinſon, mentioned in the Information, coming from the Gentlemen in the inner Room, told him, they had elected Mr. Greaves Mayor; and deſired he (the Mayor) would come and hear him ſworn: But he (the Mayor) told them, they could not elect a Mayor without him, and he would have nothing to do with it; whereupon there was ſuch a Noiſe and Tumult, that they were afraid they ſhould have been pulled off the Bench; and Mr. Alderman Parker ſaid, Shall we ſtay here and be knocked on the Head? That he replied, He hoped there was no Danger of that; and commanded Silence while the New Charter was reading: Whereupon an honeſt Gentleman, a Barriſter, took the Charter, and read it to the Burgeſſes, as far as they would give him Leave: That he made Proclamation for Silence, and keeping the Peace, ſeveral Times, commanding all that had no Buſineſs there to depart; but they were ſo outrageous, that Alderman Parker apprehending his Life in Danger, ran out of Court: He (the Mayor) ſtaid ſome little Time after; but finding nothing could be done for the Noiſe, he adjourned the Court to his own Houſe, and went away; and was no ſooner come Home, but Mr. Gregory, Mr. Hutchinſon, and ſome other Gentlemen, came after him, and very ſaucily demanded his Mace: That he anſwered them, he received it by the King's Authority, and to the King's Authority only ſhould reſign it: They had nothing to do in the Election, either by the New or the Old Charter; and thereupon they went away: And when he had ſworn all thoſe that were in the New Charter, they proceeded to Election, and choſe Mr. Toplady Mayor, and went in the uſual Manner, and proclaimed him at the Market-Croſs; and while they were proclaiming him, came Sherwin and Green, and a great many more, and cried out, No New Charter, No New Charter, A Greaves Mayor; ſhouting, and throwing up their Hats: And the Court demanding, Who was at the Head of this Rabble? He anſwered, He believed, if Mr. Sacheverell, and the reſt of the Gentlemen, had not been there, they had met with no Diſturbance; it was they that abetted and countenanced the Tumult.

1684. 36 Car. II.

That being apprehenſive the Tumult would increaſe, the next Day being Market-Day, and they might be knocked on the Head, he diſ-

1684. 36 Car. II.

patched a Letter to the Duke of Newcaſtle, to come to their Aſſiſtance; and he came with ſome Troops, and ſtaid till the Town was quiet: However, the other Side had proclaimed their Mayor (Greaves), at the Market-Croſs firſt, as they (the New Charter Men) did Toplady; it being uſual to proclaim the Mayor on the Day of Election, and on the Market-Day following.

It being demanded, If Mr. Sacheverell was a Burgeſs; the Mayor anſwered, He was a Burgeſs by the Old Charter; but was not, however, one of the Electors; nor had any thing to do there: The Electors were the Mayor, Aldermen, Sheriffs, Coroners, and the reſt of the Council, by both Charters; none of the other Burgeſſes uſed to appear at the Election.

Malin's Evidence.

Mr. Malin, one of the Sheriffs of Nottingham, confirmed the Teſtimony that Mr. Wild the Mayor had given; and added, that the Mayor having ordered Proclamation, for all to depart out of the Council-Chamber, that had no Buſineſs there; and a Tumult being made, it was with Difficulty he eſcaped from them into the Town-Hall: And they laid their Hands on the Mayor's Mace to have ſtopped it; but the Serjeant got away with it, and went out with the Mayor and ſeveral of the Aldermen; and Mr. Sacheverell cried out ſeveral Times, Stop the Books: That he (the Sheriff) was crouded out, and not ſuffered to take his own Mace; and thought he ſhould have been knocked on the Head: That he ſent the Serjeant for his Mace, and they would not let him have it: That he went in himſelf afterwards for the Mace, and they reſcued it from him, and would not let him bring it away: And that the Burgeſſes were ſo tumultuous in the Hall, that Alderman Parker ran away, leſt he ſhould be knocked on the Head.

Rippon's Evidence.

Alderman Rippon, being ſworn, confirmed the Teſtimony of Wild: The Mayor alſo added, that his Clothes were torn off his Back, in endeavouring to ſave the Charter from being torn in Pieces; and that the Tumult in the Hall, was occaſioned chiefly by two of the Gentlemen coming out of the Council-Chamber into the Town-Hall, and demanding of Wild the Mayor, that he would come into the Council-Chamber, and ſwear Greaves in Mayor, whom they had taken upon them to elect; though no Mayor could be elected, but in the Preſence of the old Mayor: That the Mayor and Aldermen, finding themſelves in Danger, adjourned to the Mayor's Houſe; where they choſe Mr. Toplady Mayor, by the New Charter, and afterwards proclaimed him as uſual.

Reynolds's Evidence.

Mr. Reynolds, who carried down the New Charter, being ſworn, atteſted the Truth of what Wild the Mayor had teſtified: As did alſo Alderman Parker's Evidence.

Alderman Parker; who added, that expecting to be knocked on the Head, and with much Difficulty getting out of the Town-Hall, he went and drank a Glaſs of Wine, for he was almoſt ſpent.

Whereupon Jeffries, the Chief Juſtice, obſerved, That was to recover his Heart again, that was ſinking; for an Alderman's Heart generally ſinks in ſuch a Fright.

Parker replied, He went back again afterwards; for, he ſaid, if they muſt be knocked on the Head, he would go, and be knocked on the Head with them; which gave the Chief Juſtice Occaſion to obſerve again, That his Courage came again, when he had a Glaſs of Wine. 1684. 36 Car. II.

Then Parker proceeded, and ſaid, He met Wild the Mayor, and ſome of his Brethren, coming from the Town-Hall, and went with them to the Mayor's Houſe; where they choſe a Mayor, according to the new Charter; and proclaimed him, as the former Witneſſes had teſtified: Adding, that Greaves, whom the other Party pretended to have choſen Mayor, conteſted with the Mayor in the Church the next Sunday, for the Chair; but it was not yielded to him.

Somner's Evidence.

Somner the Sheriff's Serjeant, being ſworn, confirmed ſeveral of the Particulars the former Witneſſes had atteſted; and depoſed, That the Sheriff's Mace was wreſted from him, by the Company in the Council-Chamber; and, that neither he, nor his Maſter the Sheriff, were ſuffered to have it again; and that he (Somner) was beaten by ſome of the Rabble, when he deſired them to be quiet.

Wright's Evidence.

Mr. Richard Wright alſo was ſworn, and confirmed the Evidence, given by the former Witneſſes.

Obſervations of the Defendants' Counſel on this Evidence.

Mr. Pollexfen, Counſel for the Defendants, then obſerved in their Behalf, That the Information charged a tumultuous Aſſembly on the Defendants, to diſturb the Election of a Mayor upon the new Charter: That it charged alſo the taking away the Mace from Malin, who was then Sheriff: But Malin was Sheriff by the old Charter, and not by the new; and, if ſo, then by the Surrender of the old Charter, he was out of Office, and the Information failed as to that Point.

And as to the aſſembling and acting of the Defendants, and others, under the old Charter; the Mayor was by that to be elected, or rather confirmed, and take his Place on Michaelmas-Day: Now Greaves was nominated according to Cuſtom, on the 14th of Auguſt, before, and agreeably to their Conſtitution by the old Charter: If the former Mayor was not preſent, the Coroner had Power to ſwear the new one: And Greaves was ſworn by the Coroner, in the Abſence of the laſt Mayor: All Things were done by the old Corporation, as uſual: It was ſaid, indeed, that ſome of the Defendants were not of the Corporation, and others had no Vote at the Election; but, admitting they had no Voice, yet there was no Crime: For, if a Burgeſs was preſent at the Election of the Town Officers, and did adviſe or aſſiſt at an Election, (and he was not altogether unconcerned in it); this of itſelf could be no Crime: The Day was Michaelmas-Day, the uſual Time of Election; the Place, and Proceedings, were according to Cuſtom, and the old Charter; for they went firſt to the old Mayor's, then to Church, and from thence to the Council-Chamber; where the Mayor uſed to be confirmed, who was nominated before: There they did elect, or confirm, Greaves Mayor, and ſent to the old Mayor, who was then in the Hall, to be preſent at the Swearing of him; all which was according to the old Charter; and the ſole Queſtion therefore was, Whether that Charter was in Force? For, if it was, their ſwearing Greaves Mayor, and demanding manding the Mace of Wild, must be regular, as was also their proclaiming the new Mayor: That the crying out, A Greaves Mayor, was but a Sort of Applause, very usual at such Elections; and they should shew there was no Violence or Force used, that could occasion the calling this a riotous Assembly: That all that was done in the Council-Chamber, was before Wild had taken the Oaths by the New Charter; and therefore he could not act by Virtue of that Charter: So that the Information failed in that Particular; where it was charged, that the Assembly was duly summoned by Gervas Wild, then Mayor of the Town, in Pursuance of the New Charter: For, if what was done, was done before he was sworn Mayor, it could not be an Assembly duely summoned by him; he having till then no Authority to summon it: Nor could what the Defendants had done, be to the Hindrance or Disturbance of him, in the Exercise of his Office; and so the Information differed from the Fact the Witnesses had sworn: It appeared also, that the new Charter bore Date the 28th of September; and came down the next Day, being Michaelmas-Day, at eleven o' Clock: And they should shew in their Proofs, that the Surrender of the Old Charter was not enrolled till the seventh of October afterwards; and he held, the old Charter could not be determined, till the Surrender was enrolled: As the Old Charter therefore remained in Force, at the Time of the Election, they might well act under it; and if they had neglected to have proceeded to an Election that Day, they had been faulty, according to the old Charter.

The Chief Justice demanding, Whether Malin was Sheriff, or not: Mr. Pollexfen answered, He believed he was Sheriff then by the Old Charter. To which the Chief Justice replied, What had the Defendants then to do with his Mace?

Mr. Pollexfen said, As the Information had charged the Offence to be, in Taking away the Mace from one who was Sheriff by the New Charter, and he was not Sheriff by the New Charter, the Information was faulty.

The Chief Justice demanded again, If it was not true, in Fact, that Wild was then Mayor, and met in an Assembly, for the Election of a new Mayor? Mr. Pollexfen answered, That was true; but, they conceived, that would not support the Information: If the Old Charter was in Being, they had done nothing but what they might justify by the Old Charter; Mr. Sacheverell was a Burgess, and might be present at an Election.

The Chief Justice replied, It was not an Offence, indeed, for a Freeman of London to be at the Election of the Mayor: But if a Parcel of Freemen, that were not Liverymen, came, and run themselves into the Business, and gave Directions about that they had nothing to do with, crying out, Stop the Books; Deliver the Mace, and the like; they concerned themselves, and meddled with an Authority they had nothing to do with; and must suffer for it: It was never known that Mr. Sacheverell, or any other Gentleman, intermeddled with these Affairs before.

Another of the Defendants' Counsel said, He conceived Malin was not Sheriff; for they had chosen another Sheriff, by the Old Charter, before the Mace was demanded of him: And he was left out by the New Charter; and so could not be Sheriff either by the one or the other. The Chief Justice demanded, What Authority they had to take the Mace away by Force? Besides, he observed, there was no New Sheriff chosen. The New Sheriff was appointed by the New Charter; and, till that appeared, Malin was empowered to act as Sheriff: This Way of Riots, he said, looked like the Times of Usurpation; when the Rabble met to reform the Government: Let us have no such Doctrines preached here, as the Settling of Governments, and Trying of Rights, by Club-Law: There were legal Courses to be taken, to try which Charter was in Force: But that was not the Question here; the Defendants were now to answer, Why they committed this Riot?

Then the Defendants called their Witnesses; and first, Sir Thomas Parkyns deposed, That he was at the Council-Chamber at Nottingham, on the Day of Election; and he saw no Disturbance there: There was some Discourse, indeed, of a New Charter, and that they must have a Mayor, according to that; and others voted for a new Mayor, according to the Old Charter: And when Wild, the old Mayor, saw that Greaves was like to have a Majority, he rose up, and went away. He did not oppose the Election; neither was there any Proclamation made for any Body to depart; nor did any of the Old-Charter-Men oppose the reading the New Charter: He did not hear Mr. Sacheverell, or any Body, cry out, No New Charter; or to stop the Books; or any Outcries at all made.—He did, indeed, remember, that the Old Mayor went away with two Maces, and one was left behind; and that Mr. Malin came back presently, and demanded it; and some said, they had as much Interest as Malin in it; for they had paid their Shares towards it; but he could not tell who they were: And the Court demanding, If he heard no Noise at all? he answered, No, by my Soul, not I: Which directly contradicting all the Evidence that had been given, the Defendants' Counsel observed, Sir Thomas was not in the Hall when the Uproar was, but in the Council-Chamber: To which the Chief Justice replied, Could he be in the next Room, and not hear the Noise?

Sir Tho. Parkyns, Evidence for the Defendants.

Mr. Thynn also deposed, That he was in the Council-Chamber on the Day of Election; and he observed no manner of Heat, or the least angry Word, or heard any Shout; but, he said, he was a Stranger, and did not much mind what was done.

Thynn's Evidence.

Mr. Pole deposed, That he was at the Council-Chamber, and heard Wild, the Mayor, ask Serjeant Bigland's Advice, how to proceed upon the New Charter: Who said, Do you ask my Advice as Recorder, or as Counsel? and gave no other Answer: That the Mayor put the like Question to Mr. Edge, the Town-Clerk, who gave the same Answer: After which some of the Company said, Let us go to the Poll; and Mr. Edge began to take the Poll; and some that were for the New Charter gave their Votes: That he saw nothing but civil Behaviour from Mr. Sacheverell, and the Gentlemen there; but he might hear some Noise without in the Hall. It being demanded, If he ſaw any thing of the detaining Malin's Mace? he anſwered, Mr. Malin, or ſomebody, left a Mace behind him; and when one came for it, a Gentleman of the Council puſhed it from him, and would not let him have it; but he could not be poſitive who it was.

The Court demanding, If he heard any Body ſay, Stop the Books? he anſwered, He thought there was a Diſpute about the Books among the Gownſmen of the Council; but he could not name any particular Perſon.

The Court demanding, If Mr. Sacheverell concerned himſelf in the Election? Pole anſwered, That the Old-Charter-Men took it, that the Surrender had been ſurreptitiouſly obtained; and he thought Mr. Sacheverell might ſay, They had a good Right to inſiſt upon the old Charter: He added, that he did not hear the Proclamation made, for all People to depart that had no Buſineſs there: Whereupon Reynolds was called again, and depoſed a ſecond Time, that he made ſuch a Proclamation in the Council-Chamber, by Wild the Mayor's Order.

Mr. Pole depoſed further, That the great Shout in the Hall was occaſioned by ſending Mr. Hutchinſon (mentioned in the Information) to the old Mayor, to acquaint him, Mr. Greaves had a Majority, and to deſire him to come and ſwear Mr. Greaves.

Ryley's Evidence.

Mr. Ryley, being called as a Witneſs, depoſed, That he was at the Nomination of Greaves for Mayor, the 14th of Auguſt, according to the Cuſtom; and being ſummoned upon the Clothing on Michaelmas-Day, he went to the old Mayor's, then to Church, and from thence to the Council-Chamber, with the Old-Charter Men, where he ſaw Greaves ſworn in Mayor: And being asked, If he ever knew the new Mayor ſworn in the Abſence of the old one? He anſwered, No: Nor did he hear any Diſturbance in the Council-Room, or any Proclamation made.

Muxlow, another of the Clothing, depoſed to the ſame Effect as the laſt Witneſs had done.

The Defendants' called two Witneſſes, who ſaid, They were in the Hall, and heard the Shouting, and confirmed part of the Evidence of the Witneſſes on the other Side; and one of them acknowledged, he ſhouted himſelf, and flouriſhed his Hat in the Hall.

Objections of the Defendants' Counſel on their own Evidense.

Upon this Evidence Mr. Pollexfen obſerved, That Wild was not ſworn till moſt of the Buſineſs was over; and that, as he could not act till he was ſworn, this could not be ſuch an unlawful Aſſembly as was laid in the Information: He had no Authority to make Proclamation for the People to depart, or do any Thing elſe, till then.

Then Wild being called again, and aſked, Whether he was ſworn before the Proclamation? anſwered, The firſt Proclamation was made in the Council-Room, before he was ſworn, and the other in the Hall, after he was ſworn.

Whereupon the Defendants' Council obſerved, That the Proclamation made in the Hall could not affect the Gentlemen in the Council-Chamber, that did not hear it; and the other was made before Wild was ſworn Mayor; and the Information ſuppoſed they continued together, and that all the Facts were done after he was ſworn Mayor by the new Charter; which, upon the Evidence, appeared not to be ſo. 1684. 36Car II.

Further Evidence.

After this the Defendants called Serjeant Bigland as a Witneſs; who depoſed, that he was in the Council-Room on the Day of the Election, but heard no Noiſe or Diſturbance, or any Proclamation made there: Neither did he hear Mr. Sacheverell ſpeak to the Mayor.

Mr. Edge being called, depoſed, That he took the Poll; but did not ſwear Greaves: That the Gentlemen would have had him to have ſworn him in the Abſence of the Mayor; but he refuſed. And being aſked, If Mr. Sacheverell was among them all Day? He ſaid, He was.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Lord Chief Juſtice, in his Directions to the Jury, obſerved, That the Defendants inſiſted they could not be guilty of the Riot laid in the Information, becauſe the Mayor was not ſworn, as the Information charged; but it was evident they were guilty of a great Crime; becauſe, till another Mayor was choſen, Wild was Mayor. And as to what was ſaid, that Greaves, whom they choſe Mayor, was regularly ſworn into that Office, according to the old Charter, they could not ſwear him in the Abſence of the old Mayor; and whoever adminiſtered the Oath to him was guilty of a Crime, as well as he that took it: Nor was there any Occaſion for this Riotous Aſſembly to have inveſted him in this Office, if he was legally choſen: They might have had a Mandamus, to admit and ſwear him into his Office. Every Right had a Remedy; and they ought to have taken a lawful Courſe to obtain this Right they pretended to; and he underſtood, there was a Scire Facias, and a Quo Warranto, depending, in order to determine it: But for Country Gentlemen to buſy themſelves, and come and head the People at thoſe Elections they had nothing to do with, was never practiſed before. Had they been only Spectators, and behaved themſelves quietly, there had, indeed, been no great Matter in it: But the demanding People to be ſworn, calling out to ſtop the Books, and heading the Mob, did not become any Man: The greater the Man, the greater his Influence; and the greater ought to be his Puniſhment. He obſerved, the Tumult was ſo great in the Hall, that the King's Charter was like to have been torn in Pieces; and in the Council-Chamber, they ſeized the Sheriff's Mace, and forced it from him: The People, without any Authority, had choſen a Mayor; that Mayor had aſſembled a Body of all Sorts of People, that committed all Manner of Diſorders, under Pretence of acting by his Authority; which was, in Effect to ſet up a Commonwealth: And had it been on a general Deſign, and not with an Intent to do ſome particular Thing, it had been High-Treaſon.

If People pretended to obtain their Rights in a mutinous Manner in general, that was High-Treaſon; or at leaſt ſo near it, that it would be difficult to diſtinguiſh them: That if ever there was a Riot, this was plainly proved; and though they objected, Malin was not Sheriff, he muſt have been Sheriff till another was ſworn; and if he was Sheriff, they could have no Authority to take his Mace from him: Nay,

Nay, though he was but de facto Sheriff, and poſſeſſed of the Enſign of his Office, that was enough; for the Right was not to be determined in ſuch a Way as this.

As to Wild, he was Mayor by the Old Charter before he was ſworn on the New one: He had made Proclamation for them to depart, in the Council-Chamber, and then again in the Hall, after he was ſworn; but no Obedience was given either to the old Authority or the new: They grew the more violent, and Mr. Sacheverell, and the reſt of the Gentlemen, continued with them to the laſt, requiring the new Mayor might be ſworn, which could not be done in the Abſence of the old Mayor.

Sir Thomas Parker, one of the Witneſſes for the Defendants, indeed pretended there was no Noiſe, and ſcarce a Word ſpoken; though their other Witneſſes heard a Noiſe, he heard none: All was a wonderful regular Thing; ſo that the Witneſſes they themſelves called, contradicted each other; and ſuch was the Happineſs of ſome People, that they could not hear if they had no Mind to it: Mr. Thynn, another of their Witneſſes, ſaid, he came as a Stranger, and could give no particular Account of the Matter. Others of their Witneſſes did hear a Noiſe, but nothing of the Out-cry, No new Charter, a Greaves Mayor: But then all the King's Witneſſes had poſitively ſworn theſe Things; and if the Jury did not look upon them all to be perjured, they muſt believe there was a Riot: They did hear, and they did ſee, the Things they teſtified; though the Defendant's Witneſſes pretended, they neither heard or ſaw any Thing of a riotous Nature: And upon the whole concluded, that every one of the Defendants were guilty of the Riot, having been proved every Man to be there, except Humphry Barker, whom he directed them to acquit.

The Defendants convicted. The Trial having continued long, the Court broke up, and the Jury afterwards gave in a private Verdict, which they confirmed next Morning in Court, viz. That One and Twenty of the Defendants were GUILTY, and the other Defendant, Humphry Barker, was not Guilty.

1684. 36 Car. II.

The following Trinity-Term the Defendants were ſentenced to pay each of them a Fine, viz. Sacheverell 500 Marks, Gregory 300, Hutchinſon 200, Sherwin, and three more, 100 Marks each, and none of the reſt more than 20 Marks; and the ſeveral Defendants were ordered to give Security for their good Behaviour for a Year. Fined.

Remarks on the Trial for this Riot. The Practices of the Miniſtry in theſe Times, to induce Corporations to ſurrender their Charters by Threats, Bribes, or other corrupt and indirect Means, were certainly very odious, and of dangerous Tendency to the Conſtitution: But then the way of ſupporting their Privileges and Franchiſes, by Riots and Tumults, was not to be ſuffered; at leaſt till they had tryed all Legal Ways, and found that Juſtice was denied them in the Courts of Law.

As this was a Party Cauſe, we ſee the Witneſſes on both Sides ſwore very home to carry their Point, and even in direct Contradiction to each other: But upon the whole, it ſeems pretty evident, that there was a great Tumult, and that the neighbouring Gentlemen encouraged the Burgeſſes of Nottingham to inſiſt on their old Charter, and reject the new one; and as far as they endeavoured this in a legal Way, perhaps they may deſerve Applauſe. But, as the Chief Juſtice obſerved, it would have been of very ill Conſequence to try theſe, or any other Controverſies by Club Law. The Remedy would probably have been worſe than the Diſeaſe. As to Mr. Sacheverell's Obſervation in ſtating his Caſe, viz. That the Election ought to be by the whole Body of Burgeſſes. This ſeems to have been given up by both Sides; for in the Election of Greaves by the old Charter-men I don't find that any Body was ſuffered to vote but the Aldermen, Sheriffs, Coroners, and 24 Livery-men of the Common-Council. This had been the Cuſtom for many Years paſſed; the Burgeſſes at large had now loſt the Privilege of electing their Mayor, if they had it anciently.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charges the ſaid Joſeph Hayes with High-Treaſon; for that he, well knowing Sir Thomas Armſtrong to be a Traitor, and to have been Out-lawed, and proclaimed guilty of High-Treaſon, in Conſpiring the Death of the King, did on the 31ſt of Auguſt, in the 35th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, traiterouſly relieve, comfort, and maintain the ſaid Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and particularly did aſſign, or pay to him, or for his Uſe, the Sum of 150 l. contrary to the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

Peremptory Challenges. The Priſoner being brought to his Trial the 21ſt of November, 1684. Challenged 35 of the Gentlemen returned to try him peremptorily, which was as many as he could challenge by Law; and was ſo fortunate as to have ſeveral of his Party and particular Friends among the Twelve that were ſworn of his Jury, particularly Sheppard the Foreman, and Bellamy; and there might be more, but I am not acquainted with the Characters of the reſt. The Names of the Twelve that tried him were theſe, viz. Samuel Sheppard, The Jury ſworn.

The Evidence

The Indictment againſt Sir Thomas Armſtrong, found the 12th of July 1683. was then read, with the Proclamation for apprehending him, and declaring him to be a Traitor. After which the Witneſſes were called; and

firſt, Ezekiel Everis was ſworn, and teſtified, That in the Month of Auguſt 1683, he was at Cleve in Germany with the Lord Grey, who went by the Name of Thomas Holt; and that Sir Thomas Armſtrong who went by the Name of Henry Lawrence came thither, and ſhewed him a Bill of Exchange from England, drawn upon Mr. Iſrael Hayes in Amſterdam, for 160 l. odd Money, it being for an 150 Guineas paid in England; that the Bill was ſigned Joſeph Hayes, and accepted; and the Deponent ſaw a Letter from Iſrael Hayes to Sir Thomas Armſtrong by the Name of Lawrence, which mentioned the ſending the ſaid Sum to Cleve.

Conſtable's Evidence.

Conſtable, Mr. Chudleys Secretary, being ſworn depoſed, That he was preſent when the Scout of Leyden apprehended Sir Thomas Armſtrong, and took three Letters out of his Pockets, which the Deponent brought over and delivered to the Lord Godolphin: And his Lordſhip being ſworn depoſed, That the three Letters now produced in Court were the ſame Letters he received from Mr. Conſtable.

Davis's Evidence.

Charles Davis depoſed, That taking Boat from Amſterdam to Rotterdam, he met Iſrael Hayes and Sir Thomas Armſtrong coming to take Boat, and that Sir Thomas accompanied him in the Boat, and went by the Name of Henry Lawrence: He depoſed further, that he lodged a Month in the Houſe of one Mr. Briſcoe in Amſterdam, where there was a Club every Thurſday, of which Mr. Iſrael Hayes, Mr. Henry Ireton, Mr. Wilmore, Mr. Dare, Mr. Emerton, and ſome other Engliſh Merchants were Members, and he heard them ſeveral Times abuſe the King at Table.

A Letter proved

Then a Letter was produced in Court, ſubſcribed by Joſeph Hayes, and dated the 31ſt of Auguſt 1683. being directed to Mr. Lawrence Senior, at Amſterdam; wherein Hayes tells Sir Thomas, At your Deſire I have ſent you a Bill, &c. And Mr. Walpole being ſworn depoſed, that he was Servant to Mr. Joſeph Hayes four Years and three Quarters; and upon peruſing the Letter, ſaid, he believed it to be his Maſter's Hand.

by Walpole.

The Priſoners Hand proved by others.

Harman, a Servant to the Eaſt-India Company being ſworn teſtified, That he knew Mr. Hayes the Priſoner, and that he had made ſeveral Contracts with that Company, which were entered in their Books; and that he ſaw him ſubſcribe his Name to one of them in September, 1683. Brittle, another of the Company's Servants alſo depoſed, he ſaw the Priſoner ſet his Hand to the Book; and this, being compared in Court with the Hand in the ſaid Letter, appeared to be the ſame.

Captain Piercehouſe alſo produced a Note, which he ſaid was the Priſoner's, and that he paid the Money upon it; and Walpole depoſed, that he believed the Note to be his Maſter's the Priſoner's Hand, whereupon this alſo was compared with the Hand in the aboveſaid Letter. 1684. 36 Car. II.

Then another of the Papers taken out of Sir Thomas Armſtrong's Pockets was produced, and Mr. Conſtable atteſted it to be the ſame that was taken from Sir Thomas by the Scout of Leyden.

This was another Letter, ſigned Joſeph Hayes, and directed to Sir Thomas Armſtrong; but the Contents are not given us.

Atterbury the Meſſenger's Evidence.

Atterbury, the Meſſenger who apprehended the Priſoner, depoſed, That he brought him before his Majeſty, and was preſent when he was examined; and the Letter being ſhewn the Priſoner, the King and the Lord Keeper North, preſſed him to ſay whether it was his Hand or not: To which he anſwered, he ſhould ſay nothing to it, if they could prove it upon him well and good. The Chief Juſtice ſaid, that this was true, the Priſoner did not abſolutely deny the Letter; but ſaid he was not bound to accuſe himſelf: He did deny, indeed, that he knew either Lawrence or Armſtrong.

The Priſoner's Defence.

The Priſoner in his Defence ſaid, That Walpole his Servant, who was the principal Witneſs againſt him, went away from him in a very odd manner, ſuggeſting that he was governed by Malice or ſome corrupt Motive to appear againſt him; and objected that a Compariſon of Hands, or a Belief that it was his Hand, was no Evidence in a Charge of Treaſon; and held to be no Evidence in ſome Caſes that were not Capital, particularly in the Lady Carr's Caſe.

The Court anſwered, That was a Miſtake, he had it from Colonel Sidney; but Compariſon of Hands was always allowed to be Evidence, particularly in Coleman's Caſe.

The Priſoner replied, That was a different Caſe; for thoſe Letters were found in Coleman's Cuſtody; but theſe were in the Hands of another Man, and in another Nation. Beſides, here was no other Evidence produced againſt him but the Letter, and that was not two Witneſſes as the Law required: Nor was there any Proof that he knew Sir Thomas Armſtrong to be guilty of Treaſon, as the Indictment charged, and which only could make his relieving or correſponding with him Criminal: And whether the Outlawry and Proclamation were ſufficient Notice, as was urged, was a Point of Law: To that he deſired Counſel, as well as to that other Point, whether a Similitude of Hands was Evidence in a Charge of High-Treaſon? Nor was there any Evidence but hear-ſay, he obſerved, of any Money paid to Sir Thomas. He objected further, that the Indictment was laid for Money paid in London, and they would prove the Money paid beyond Sea, which could not maintain the Indictment: That for a Fact done beyond Sea, he could not be tried but according to the 35 H. 8. c. 2. by ſpecial Commiſſion from the King, and by a Jury of of ſuch a County as the King ſhould appoint: To which Point he alſo deſired Counſel.

1684. 36 Car. II.

The Evidence for the Priſoner.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, This was a fooliſh Crochet. The Priſoner then called Mr. Sturdivant as a Witneſs for him; who depoſed, That he had dealt with the Priſoner for ſeveral thouſand Pounds; and being ſhewn the aboveſaid Letter, ſaid, he did not believe it to be the Priſoner's Hand.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, Every Body knew a Hand might be counterfeited very like.

The Priſoner urged further, That he was not a Man of that Quality to give Sir Thomas 150 Guineas.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, They all knew he had been a very active buſy Fellow about the City; as forward a Spark as any he knew: He did not know his Quality, indeed, but he knew his Qualifications; that he had always been factious and turbulent againſt the King and Government.

The Priſoner proceeded in his Defence, and ſaid, That Mr. Common Serjeant had his Books ſeveral Days in his Hands; in which there was an Account of 20,000 l. between him and his Brother; but not any thing of the Name of Lawrence to be found; or of any ſuch Sum paid: He acknowledged, indeed, there was an Account of divers Parcels of Money diſburſed in little Sums, amounting to the Sum in the Bill; but he appealed to any Merchant, Whether any ſuch Bill of Exchange was ever paid in ſuch ſmall Parcels as 20 l.— 3 l.— 10 s. &c. and the like.

Then the Priſoner called Alderman Jefferies, Mr. Withers, Mr. Lloyd, Mr. Pellet, &c. to his Character, who all ſaid he was a fair Dealer.

Whereupon the Chief Juſtice demanded, If they had ſeen how active he was, when Corniſh and Bethel, and ſuch Men, were choſen Sheriffs? And Alderman Jefferies anſwered, He could ſay nothing to his Behaviour on thoſe Occaſions.

The Priſoner then applied himſelf to the Jury, and ſaid, He knew nothing of any Conſpiracy; nor had any one of the Conſpirators accuſed him; and begged they would conſider what the Witneſſes had teſtified: That they were not poſitive, but ſwore according to their Belief; neither were there two to any one Point; only Conſtable had ſworn the Letter was found amongſt Sir Thomas's Papers: And Everis only ſaid, he ſaw ſuch a Bill; but did not know the Hand.

Then he uſed the moſt ſolemn Proteſtations, ſaying, I call God, Angels and Men, to witneſs the Truth, as I ſhall anſwer it to him; before whom, for ought I know, I am quickly to appear; I never ſpoke with Sir Thomas Armſtrong; or ever was in his Company; or ever wrote to him by the Name of Lawrence, or any other Name: And I do ſolemnly ſay, in the Preſence of God, that I never gave, ſent lent, paid, or ordered to be paid, any Money, directly or indirectly, to Sir Thomas Armſtrong, or Henry Lawrence, or to him by any other Name, or for his Uſe: I ſpeak it without Counterfeiting or Equivocation.

He added, That Overtures of Life had been made him on certain Terms; and did they think he would riſque his Life, if he could ſave it by ſpeaking the Truth?

1684. 36 Car. II.

Here the Chief Juſtice reprehended him, as endeavouring to caſt a Reflection on the Government; telling him, he muſt not inſinuate that the Government would make Bargains with him.

The Priſoner anſwered, He ſaid no more than that it had been told him, the Way to ſave his Life was to confeſs, and Mr. Foſter told him ſo.

The Chief Juſtice replied, He could tell him too of 4 or 5000 l. that was offered to let him eſcape.

Then the Priſoner applied himſelf to the Jury again, and ſaid, Gentlemen, I have declared to you the whole Truth, with all the Solemnity that becomes an innocent Man: And you have heard the Evidence; it is nothing but Circumſtance and Hear-ſay: And ſhall a Man's Life be taken away for I believe, I think, or, I have heard? Gentlemen, you are my fellow-Citizens, and fellow-Chriſtians; of the ſame Reformed Religion that I am: And I hope you are ſworn into this Service without any Prejudice againſt me, but with an impartial Reſolution to do Juſtice; and therefore I chearfully leave the Matter to you. I am ſure that, if God help me, and deliver me in this Exigency, it is you that under him muſt preſerve my Life. Gentlemen, the great Incertainties, Improbabilities and Conſequences in this Caſe, I hope will be weighed by you. We muſt all die; and I am ſure it will be no Grief to you, when you come to die, that you have acquitted an innocent Man. I leave it with you: The Lord direct you.

The Obſervations the King's Counſel made on the Evidence, and their Reply to the Priſoner's Defence, are wanting in this Trial: And great Part of the Chief Juſtice's Obſervations in his Directions to the Jury are likewiſe wanting; from whence we may conclude, this Trial was taken by ſome of the Priſoner's Friends.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

If what they have given us be genuine, they make the Chief Juſtice, in his Directions to the Jury, ſay, That they were to go according to their Evidence: That the Priſoner's Proteſtations of his Innocence was not to weigh with them: That ſeveral of the Conſpirators had, with as much Solemnity, imprecated the Vengeance of Heaven if they were guilty of any Treaſon: They thought they did God Almighty good Service in that helliſh Conſpiracy. One of the proſcribed Traytors had declared, That they ſhould be ſo far from being eſteemed Traitors, that they ſhould have Trophies ſet up for them; and all this under Pretence of Religion. They were wound up to that Height, as to diſturb the Government, and deſtroy the Foundations of it; to murder his Majeſty, and his Royal Brother; and ſubvert Religion, Liberty and Property, under Pretence of ſerving God. As the Life of this Man was precious, the Life of the King alſo was precious, and the Preſervation of our Religion and Government precious Things; and a due Regard ought to be had for them.

The Jury withdrawing, returned into Court about two Hours afterwards, and gave in their Verdict, 1684. 36 Car. II. Verdict, That the Priſoner was NOT GUILTY. Whereupon he was diſcharged: Though Mr. Attorney moved, that the Evidence being ſo ſtrong againſt him, he might be obliged to give Security for his good Behaviour, during Life.

He is acquitted.

Remarks. The Priſoner made as good a Defence as could have been expected, from a Man of his Education. No doubt, he found his Account in his ſolemn Proteſtations, and his Application to the Jury. He knew there were ſome amongſt them enclined to favour him; and as there was nothing but a Similitude of Hands to convict him, they had ſome Pretence for acquitting him. In every other Caſe, where a Man's Hand-writing had been urged as an Evidence againſt him in former Trials, there were other Overt-Acts proved againſt the Priſoner; and therefore I do not think the Jury did amiſs in acquitting Mr. Hayes; though I verily believe he ſent over the Money to Sir Thomas Armſtrong, as the Indictment charged.

Proceedings on the Outlawry againſt JAMES HOLLOWAY, for High-Treaſon, in the Court of King's-Bench, on Monday the 21ſt of April, 1684. Paſch. 36 Car. II.

1684. 36 Car. II. Holloway's Outlawry.

The Indictment. THE Priſoner, James Holloway of London Merchant, was indicted of High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; and meeting and conſulting for that End, with Hone, Rumbold, Goodenough, and other falſe Traitors, how to depoſe and murder his Majeſty, and ſubvert the Eſtabliſhed Religion and Government, &c.

Outlawry. For not appearing, and anſwering to which Indictment, the Priſoner was outlawed, and attainted of the ſaid High-Treaſon; but being apprehended, and committed to Newgate, he was brought from thence by Habeas Corpus, to the Court of King's-Bench, to ſhew Cauſe why a Rule ſhould not be made for his Execution: When the Court offered to waive the Outlawry, and admit him to a Trial, if he had any thing to ſay in his Defence.

He confeſſes his Guilt. The Priſoner anſwered, He could not undertake to defend himſelf; for he had confeſſed before his Majeſty, that he was guilty of many Things in the Indictment; and he threw himſelf upon the King's Mercy.

The Court replied, That muſt be left to his Majeſty, who was the Diſpenſer of his own Grace; they muſt execute his Juſtice, and give a Rule for the Priſoner's Execution:

A Rule made for his Execution. And a Rule was made accordingly for his Execution on the Wedneſday ſev'night following.

The Priſoner's Petition. After Execution was awarded, Holloway preferred a Petition to his Majeſty, wherein he acknowledged himſelf guilty of the Crimes he was charged with, and declares himſelf ſorry for them; imploring, that his Majeſty, who was ſo eminent for his merciful Diſpoſition, would grant him his Pardon. However, as he made no Scruple ſtill to cenſure his Majeſty's Adminiſtration pretty freely, he was not deemed a proper Object of the King's Mercy, and therefore was drawn to the Place of Execution at Tyburn, on the 26th of April, 1684, when he left a Paper with the Sheriffs, Daniel and Daſhwood: Who demanding of him at the Place of Execution, if it was his own Hand-writing? He anſwered, It is my own Hand-writing. — A Diſcovery of what I knew, I made to his Majeſty; but a great many People think that I have not diſcovered what I knew: But I have diſcovered what I knew of the Plot, and I am heartily ſorry I was concerned in that Way, as to the endeavouring any thing by Arms. I do think ſeveral things have been ill managed in England; there have been many Things done againſt the King and the Kingdom's Intereſt; and I wiſh the King was well ſatisfied of it, and that a Courſe might be taken to prevent it. And I think one Way to prevent Plotting (according to my weak Capacity) is, That his Majeſty would be pleaſed to call a Parliament, and paſs an Act of Oblivion for all Plotters whatſoever. There was a damnable Popiſh Plot; and I look upon the ſtifling of that to be the only Cauſe that any Man did any thing in this. Had all the Popiſh Plotters been——

His Diſcourſe with the Sheriffs at Tyburn.

Sheriff Daniel. By the Way, Sir, how do you know it was ſtifled?

Holloway. Sir, we have known that the Laws could not be ſuffered againſt them; and the Parliament could not be ſuffered in the Proſecution of them. I wiſh the King would conſult his own Safety, and the Safety of the Nation; and that an Act of Oblivion might paſs, for I believe there are many concerned.

Being asked what he knew of the Buſineſs of the Rye, for Lopping, or taking off the King and Duke? He ſaid, he look'd upon it as a Buſineſs not likely to take Effect; for he could never find above five were concerned in it: That it was carried on by Rumſey and Weſt; he was not concerned in the Plot till a good while after that was intended to have been done. This Dialogue being ended, and the Priſoner having prayed ſome time, the Executioner did his Office.

He is executed.

The Paper delivered to the Sheriffs was dated April 26, 1684.

Wherein he ſays,

" To ſtop the Mouths of all Pamphleteers " and News-Scribblers, who have done more " Prejudice to his Majeſty and his Kingdoms, " by their impudent Endeavours to ſham all " Plots, and to fill the Country with falſe " News, than they will ever be able to re- " trieve; and to ſatisfy all I leave behind " me, I thought good to draw up a ſhort " Account of what I knew of the late Pro- " teſtant Plot, how I came to be concerned, " what induced me to it, and how far I was " concerned; alſo my now Opinion of it, &c.

" About July, 1682, I met with a Per- " ſon who then being come from London, " gave me a Relation at large, concerning " the Election of Sheriffs that had been in " June, the Manner of which is well known " to all; he repreſented it to me as a very " illegal Act; and that there was a deviliſh " Deſign of the Papiſts in it, to cut off the " King's Friends, the ſtirring Men in both " the laſt Parliaments, and the Proſecutors " of the Popiſh Plot, who I always took to " be both the King's and the Nation's Friends. " That there were Witneſſes ready a long " time, to ſwear againſt them, but they could " not get Jurors to believe them; but now " they had, by Force of Arms, &c. got " Sheriffs who would find Juries to believe " them, and ſo hang them up at their Plea- " ſure. That there was none but bad Coun- " ſel about the King, who kept all ill Actions " from his Knowledge; and if they proceed- " ed to ſwear North and Rich at Michaelmas, " and to chuſe Lord-Mayor as they had " done Sheriffs, the Proteſtant Gentry were " reſolved (naming ſome) to remedy what " was deſigned, by an Inſurrection in ſeveral " Parts of England; and if poſſible, to get " the King off from his evil Council, and " bring all Popiſh Offenders to Juſtice, ſay- " ing, That they were ſure that, when the " King knew the Occaſion of the Riſing, he " preſently give up all Offenders, and come " in to them: That it ſhould begin in No- " vember in London, Briſtol, Exeter, Taunton, " Cheſter, York and Newcaſtle; and that we " ſhould hear more of it in a Month's Time; " therefore deſired we might conſider how " it might be managed in Briſtol, which we " did; and concluded that Briſtol, with " about 350 Men, might be eaſily ſecured " by a Surprize, without the Bloodſhed of " one Man. About a Month after that, came " the Perſon he mentioned we ſhould hear " more by; but he could declare no more " than the former did, only that the Deſign " went on, and there would be timely No- " tice given to all Parts; but we heard of " nothing but Diſappointments and Delays, " putting it off from time to time. In April " I heard of another Deſign againſt the King " and Duke of York, as they were to come " from Newmarket ſome time in March; but " when I enquired into that, found it was " carried on by three or four; and never " could hear the Names of above five that " were for it. When I heard it, I declared " my Abhorrence of any ſuch Thing, and " that I was confident none in our Parts would " be for ſuch a baſe Action. After that, I " enquired farther into it, and could find, " that although it was intended to be done " ſix Weeks before, that they had only a " Parcel of Arms ready, and that they had " neither Men nor Horſes; but one ſaid, if " they could have raiſed 6 or 800 l. to have " bought Horſes, and alſo ſomething to en- " courage Men, they ſhould have found Men " enough; ſo that I looked upon that only " to be the Deſign of five or ſix Perſons, and " no way likely to be acted; but the general " Deſign for the Inſurrection was carried on " by others, who, though they had made a " great Stir in the Nation, trying the Incli- " nations of People, and had treated with " the Scots and Iriſh (as I heard), who were " to be ready at the ſame Time, yet were " never come to any Reſolution as to any " Time, or Method, before all was diſ- " covered; though they had been eleven " Months contriving it, from the Time I firſt " heard of it. This, I hope, will be enough " to ſatisfy all People that there was a Plot; " I mention no Names here, having given his " Majeſty a more large Account of what I " knew of it, mentioning the Names of all " I knew concerned. The Arguments before- " mentioned, with many others to the ſame " Effect, not only ſoon prevailed with me, " but made me indeed think it my Duty to " do what I could for my King and Country's " Safety; being then fully perſuaded, that " not only Popery, but Arbitrary Govern- " ment was intended; not then conſidering, " as I have ſince conſidered, how much Blood- " ſhed it might have cauſed in the Nation; " for then I thought all would have ended in " little time, ſuppoſing Things to be as to " me was reported. But I do now declare my " hearty Sorrow for my yielding thereto, and " acting therein; though I can ſafely ſay, I " was not for taking the King's Life, but " wholly for his Preſervation; yet am ſatiſ- " fied that it might have cauſed very much " Bloodſhed in the Nation, and I am glad it " did not take Effect. Alſo I declare, that " I am ſatisfied it was a very great Sin againſt " God, not only in diſtruſting his Providence, " but in offering to take the Work out of " his Hand, who knows the Hearts, Thoughts, " and Actions of all, though never ſo ſecret; " whoſe Mercy and Pardon I moſt humbly " beg, and truſt ſhall have; and in Confi- " dence thereof, through the Merits of the " Blood of our Lord and Saviour Chriſt Jeſus, " can willingly die.

" I have heard that ſome ſhould ſay, I " took up Money at Intereſt to carry on the " Plot, which I diſown; for I never was at " any Charge therein, more than common " Expences; nor never heard of any Money " raiſed upon that Account; though I heard " of ten thouſand Pounds that were to be " raiſed for the Scots; but ſuppoſe it was " not done.

" When I gave in my Confeſſion, I ſtood not upon Terms of a Pardon, being confident, if Truth would merit Mercy from the King, I ſhould have his Pardon, and that it was the only way to gain Mercy with God. I find already, that People are paſſing their Cenſures upon me, ſome one way, and ſome another, for my not pleading and accepting of another Trial, when it was offered; ſaying, that I confeſſed the whole Indictment, which I diſown: For I ſaid thus; What I was guilty of I had confeſſed to his Majeſty, and wholly depended upon his Mercy: Beſides, I had ſome other Reaſons why I did not plead, which at preſent I conceal; and alſo why I did not ſpeak what I intended. More I may ſay at the Place of Execution, before I leave the World, which will be according as I find Things: But as to a Diſcovery of any more Perſons, I cannot, than has been already mentioned. Should I mention any whom I thought would have been concerned, I may much abuſe them, though I believe many thouſands in the Nation would have appeared, for the Reaſons afore-mentioned, which cauſed me to be concerned. I doubt not, but ſeveral that were concerned, who are, or may be cleared for want of ſufficient Proof againſt them, or by his Majeſty's Mercy, will blame me for confeſſing what I knew, and not much grieve that I failed of a Pardon, or at my Death. But I repent not my Confeſſion; and could I diſcover more, would do it willingly, though I find no Mercy with Man.

Remaks on Holloway's Outlawry.

James Holloway was a Merchant of Briſtol, a bold enterpriſing Man, and a great Projector: He had engaged in a Deſign of betraying the City of Briſtol into the Hands of the Malcontents; and was acquainted alſo with the intended Aſſaſſination at the Rye; but ſays, he did not know above five or ſix of the Aſſaſſins; among whom were the two Rumbolds (one of them the Owner of the Rye, where the Murders were to have been committed.) Some would infer, that this Aſſaſſination was only the Project of four or five daring Villains, becauſe Holloway ſays he knew but five or ſix of the Aſſaſſins; but from the Trials of the Conſpirators themſelves, there appears to have been a great many more than five concerned in that intended Regicide, and even thoſe of the beſt Quality among the Malcontents. Nor is it any Wonder that Holloway ſhould not be acquainted with every one of the Aſſaſſins; Conſpirators do not uſe to communicate ſuch Secrets to many: Beſides, he did not come into the Conſpiracy till that Part of it was dropped, if we may believe him. It is evident from the Trials, that there were ſeveral deſperate Men prepared to execute any Villany their Leaders ſhould put them upon, without asking Queſtions, or knowing when or where the Murders were to be perpetrated, which they were to be concerned in, till the very Time of Action. See the Trial of Hone, Vol. 3. p. 129.

1684. 36 Car. II.

Holloway had made his Eſcape twice; and the laſt time got away as far as the Weſt-Indies, and yet was diſcovered there, brought back, and executed on the Outlawry that had been proſecuted againſt him in his Abſence. The Reaſon he refuſed to make his Defence when this Favour was offered him, was probably, as he himſelf ſays, becauſe he had before confeſſed enough to hang him, and he hoped, by a free Acknowledgment of his Guilt, to have obtained Mercy; but as he ſeemed to perſiſt in that Opinion, that it was lawful to reſiſt our Governors, and call them to an Account when their Adminiſtration was not acceptable to the People, he was deemed too dangerous a Man to live; as has been hinted already.

I ſhall only obſerve further, That Biſhop Burnet was egregiouſly miſtaken, when he ſays, Holloway was offered a Pardon; for he himſelf is ſo far from aſſerting any ſuch thing, that he ſays, He did not inſiſt upon a Pardon; but made his Confeſſion voluntarily.

Proceedings on the Outlawry againſt Sir THOMAS ARMSTRONG, for High-Treaſon, in the Court of King's-Bench, on Saturday the 14th of June, 1684. Trin. 36 Car. II.

1684. 36 Car. II

Arm-ſtrong

SIR Thomas Armſtrong was taken in Holland, and being brought before the Court of King's-Bench, by Virtue of a Writ of Habeas Corpus, directed to the Keeper of Newgate, it appeared he was in Cuſtody of the Keeper of Newgate, by a Warrant from the Honourable Sidney Godolphin, Eſq; one of his Majeſty's Principal Secretaries of State, and the Return being read and filed, Mr. Attorney Sir Robert Sawyer, prayed an Award of Execution upon the Outlawry. Whereupon the Chief Juſtice ordered the Priſoner to be arraigned on the Outlawry; whereby it appeared, that Sir Thomas had been indicted in London of High-Treaſon, in conſpiring the Death of the King, and the ſubverſion of the Government; and for not appearing and anſwering that Indictment he had been outlawed and attainted of the ſaid Treaſon: It was therefore demanded of him, What he could ſay why Execution ſhould not be awarded upon that Attainder?

Outlawed.

Sir Thomas anſwered, he was beyond Sea at the Time of the Outlawry, and deſired he might be admitted to a Trial, according to that Clauſe in the Statute of Edw. 6. whereby it is provided, That if the Party outlawed, ſhall, within one Year after the Outlawry pronounced, yield himſelf to the Chief Juſtice, and offer to Traverſe the Indictment, he ſhall be received to Traverſe it, and if he be found not Guilty, he ſhall be acquitted and diſcharged of the ſaid Outlawry, and of all Penalties, &c. as though no ſuch Outlawry had been.

Tho-mas offers a Trial.

Att. Gen. I ſuppoſe, Sir Thomas will now ſhew he yields himſelf to your Lordſhip.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. The Year is not yet out, and therefore I come Time enough now. And here, I am, and deſire the Benefit of this Act.

Aſſerted he came time enough.

L. C. J. You did not render your ſelf according to that Act, but are brought a Priſoner before us now.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. My Lord, I beg I may have Counſel to plead for me in this Caſe.

Denied, ſelf comitted.

L. C. J. For what Reaſon, we are of Opinion, it is not a Matter of any Doubt.

Sir Thomas Armſtrong. A little while ago, there was one in this Place had the Benefit of a Trial offered him, if he would accept it.

Denied, by reaſon of the Family.

L. C. J. That was the Grace and Mercy of the King, and he may, if he pleaſe, extend the ſame Grace and Favour to you; but that is not our Buſineſs: We are ſatisfied, that according to Law, we muſt award Execution upon this Outlawry.

Mrs. Matthews. My Lord, I hope you will not murder my Father, this is murdering a Man.

L. C. J. Who is this Woman? Marſhal, Take her into Cuſtody.

Mrs. Matthews. God Almighty's Judgments light upon you.

L. C. J. God Almighty's Judgments will light upon thoſe that are Guilty of High-Treaſon; but Clamours never prevail upon me: I am Clamour Proof, and will never fear to do my Duty.

Then Mr. Attorney ſhewed that Sir Thomas did not deſerve the ſame Favour that Holloway had; for that after the Diſappointment of the Conſpirators by the Fire at Newmarket, the Priſoner was one of the Perſons, who actually engaged to go and deſtroy the King upon his coming to Town, as appeared upon full and clear Evidence.

L. C. J. We are not to meddle at all with the Evidence, all we have to do, is to conſider of the Record before us; and what the Priſoner ſays againſt our awarding Execution. We have conſidered whether this be a yielding within the Statute; and we think it is not, nor can be, by any Means.

Sir Thomas complained, that when he was taken they robbed him, and took all his Money from him, ſo that he had no Money to Fee Counſel; and he knew Lawyers would not plead without Money.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid he knew nothing at all of that Matter, and ordered Execution to be done the Friday following.

And accordingly Sir Thomas was drawn on a Sledge to Tyburn, on Friday the 20th of June, 1684. of whoſe Behaviour at the Place of Execution we meet with the following Account.

His Behaviour at his Execution.

The Sheriffs of London and Middleſex, about Nine o'Clock in the Morning, coming to Newgate and demanding their Priſoner, he was delivered to them, and put into a Sledge, and drawn to the Place of Execution, attended by a numerous Guard, and as great a Number of Spectators, of all Degrees and Qualities, as have been ſeen on ſuch Occaſions. Though he affected an Air of Courage, yet ſomething of Sullenneſs and Reſerve appeared in his Countenance.

He employed the Time he was drawing to Tyburn in reading The Whole Duty of Man, till he came within Sight of the Gallows, and then he laid it by, and with lifted up Hands and Eyes addreſſed himſelf to Heaven, till he came beneath the Tree, where he remained about a Quarter of an Hour in the Sledge: Before he aſcended the Cart that ſtood ready for him, he deſired the Sheriff to admit Dr. Tenniſon to come to him; and having delivered a Paper to the Sheriff, the Doctor kneeled down down with the Priſoner, and prayed with him about a Quarter of an Hour, during all which Time the Priſoner preſerved a becoming and heroick Countenance, little daunted with the Terror of that Fate he was in view of; but riſing from his Devotions, he pulled off his Cravat and Hat, which he gave to his Servant who attended him, and had followed him by the Sledge-ſide; when kneeling down himſelf, he prayed for a ſhort Time with Fervency and Devotion, begging Pardon of God for thoſe manifold and crying Sins he had been too often guilty of, and concluded with a Reſignation of himſelf to the God of Heaven and Earth, before whoſe Judgment-Seat he was forthwith to appear, deſiring that the whole World would forgive him, with whom he hoped he died in Peace and Charity.

Remarks on Armſtrong's Execution.

In the firſt Volume of Biſhop Burnet's Poſthumous Hiſtory, he informs us, that Sir Thomas Armſtrong had been intruſted in every Thing by the Duke of Monmouth (which I preſume is meant in relation to the Duke's Conſpiracy againſt the Government) and yet he has ſome Paſſages in that worthy Hiſtory that would encline a Man to believe both the Duke and Sir Thomas were perfectly innocent. The Biſhop adds, that Sir Thomas expreſſed ſuch a Dejection of Mind before he made his Eſcape out of England, that Hampden told him (the Biſhop) That he believed he would do any thing to ſave his life: However, in his Examination before the Council, he denied he knew of any Plot but the Popiſh Plot, and only deſired he might have a fair Trial. The Biſhop tells us alſo, that he was loaded with Irons, which was not uſual for a Perſon of his Quality, having been Lieutenant of the Guards, and Gentlemen of the Horſe to the King. But the Credit of the Witneſſes was ſo blaſted, that the Court was apprehenſive a Jury would not credit them; and therefore ordered Armſtrong to be executed on the Outlawry, and would not ſuffer him to have the Advantage of a Trial, though the Statute allowed it to any one that came in within the Year: (But the Biſhop is ſo good as to remember that the Court told him, That he did not come in voluntarily, but was brought in by Force.)

The Biſhop goes on, and ſays, In the Paper Armſtrong left behind him at his Execution, he denied he ever knew of a Deſign againſt the King's, or the Duke's Life; or was in any Plot againſt the Government: And the Court ordered no Reflections ſhould be made upon his Speech on Account of a Paſſage in it, wherein he denied his being ſent over by Cromwell to murder the King during his Exile, as the King had reported to the Foreign Miniſters and others. The Biſhop relates alſo, That he ſaw a Paper, wherein Armſtrong expreſſed his Reſentments in a ſharper Manner than he (the Biſhop) thought became a dying Penitent; which being repreſented to Armſtrong, he ſoftened it much: Though he ſhewed he never went but once beyond Sea, and then he carried a conſiderable Preſent of Money to the King, and brought back Letters of Thanks from his Majeſty; and for this, Cromwell impriſoned him almoſt a Year, upon the Merit of which, he was advanced to the Poſt of Captain of the Horſe at the Reſtoration.

But as to the Reaſon the Biſhop gives for not admitting Armſtrong to a Trial, namely, becauſe a Jury would not Credit the Witneſſes againſt him; this agrees very ill with what the Biſhop aſſerted but juſt before, viz. That Juries would at this Time find any Thing they were directed to find, whether there was Evidence of the Facts or not: And as to that Clauſe he mentioned in Armſtrong's Paper, That he knew of no Deſign againſt the Government; This may eaſily be accounted for, inaſmuch as the Conſpirators pretended all their Deſigns were for the Support and Eſtabliſhment of the Government, and to prevent the Subverſion of it. And, as the Biſhop confeſſes, he had the Peruſal and Alteration of the Speech, if he had not the entire modelling of it, we are not to wonder at the equivocal Expreſſions in it. The Fact ſeems now to be pretty well ſettled: All the Diſpute at preſent is, Whether Sir Thomas, and his Accomplices, ought to be looked upon as Traitors; or ought to have Statues erected to their Memories, as Patriots and Champions of their Countries Liberties, as the celebrated Ferguſon told them they ought?

Dr. Sprat, Biſhop of Rocheſter, who wrote the Hiſtory of the Rye-houſe Plot, ſays, That the King could not think himſelf in the leaſt bound to go out of the way of the Law, by ſhewing any diſtinguiſhing Act of Grace to Armſtrong; eſpecially ſince it was manifeſt there was ſcarce a Man living who had more Perſonal Obligations to his Majeſty than he had, and yet no Man had made more ungrateful Returns for them than he had done: Nor could his Majeſty forget how many other Perſons, and ſome very near his Majeſty, Sir Thomas Armſtrong had been the chief Inſtrument of perverting: Upon which Account his Majeſty had Reaſon to look on him as the Author of many more Treaſons beſides his own.

The Declaration.

THIS was an Action of Treſpaſs and Contempt grounded upon the Statute de Scandalis Magnatum, wherein his Royal Highneſs ſet forth, That whereas the ſaid Statute prohibited the ſlandering the great Men and Peers of the Realm, and that the Plaintiff being the King's only Brother, and a Peer, the Defendant, in Diſcourſe between him and ſome other Perſons about a Letter the Defendant then had in his Hands, ſaid, This Letter coſt me nine Pence, and might have been brought for a Penny; I know no body the better for it, but that Traitor James Duke of York. And at another Time ſaid, before a great deal of Company, That the Duke of York was a Traitor: Which Words were laid to be to the Plaintiff's Damage one hundred thouſand Pounds. The Defendant not pleading to the Declaration, Judgment by Default.

the Plaintiff ſigned Judgment; and a Writ of Enquiry was taken out, directed to the Sheriffs of Middleſex, to enquire, by a Jury of that County, what Damages the Plaintiff had ſuſtained; and upon a Motion made in the Court of King's-Bench, a Day was given to the Defendant to ſhew Cauſe why the Writ of Enquiry ſhould not be executed at the Bar of that Court; and no Cauſe being ſhewn to the contrary, Sir Peter Daniel, Kt. and Samuel Daſhwood, Eſq; the then Sheriffs of Middleſex, Writ of Enquiry executed.

came into Court at the Day appointed, and being placed at the Table at the Judges Feet, were covered during the Execution of the Writ.

The Jury.

Sir Charles Lee, three other Knights, ten Eſquires, and one Gentleman, in all fifteen, being ſworn of the Jury, Mr. Thomas Rouſe, the Under-Sheriff, read the Writ of Enquiry in Engliſh to them, and informed them, That they were to enquire what Damages his Royal Highneſs the Plaintiff had ſuſtained, by means of the aboveſaid Words; as alſo what Coſts he had been at in this Suit.

Then the King's Counſel opened the Declaration, and obſerved, That the Words were confeſſed by the Defendant's Default in not pleading, and that they were only to enquire of the Damages: However, they ſhould produce Witneſſes to prove the Words, and to ſhew that this was the conſtant Tenour of his Diſcourſe, inveighing againſt the Government in all Companies, and particularly againſt his Royal Highneſs the Plaintiff.

The Evidence.

Witneſſes being called, Mr. Smith depoſed, That he heard the Defendant ſay in a publick Coffee-houſe, This Letter coſt me nine Pence; it might have been brought for a Penny; I know no body is the better for it but a Traitor; and to the beſt of his Remembrance he ſaid, The Duke of York.

Mr. Penniſton Whaley being ſworn, depoſed as follows:

Whaley. I was at the Biſhop of Ely's Table at Ely-Houſe, either the Eaſter or Whitſunday after Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Trial. I had received the Sacrament at the Chapel there that Day, and ſo had Dr. Oates. And ſome Diſcourſe happening at the Table about Sir Thomas Gaſcoigne's Trial, Oates fell foul upon the Jury, and ſaid, They are a Company of profligate Villains, and He would have them attainted. I ſaid, Doctor, you are a good Man at a Matter of Fact, but I doubt you are not ſo at a Matter of Law. Then we came to high Words, and among other Things he ſaid, The Duke of York was a Traitor. I ſaid, Doctor, you lie under a great Error, I ſuppoſe by miſtaking a Statute made againſt Popery: Says he, No matter for that; I ſay he is a Traitor. And both of us growing pretty warm, he called his two Men, that uſed to follow him up and down, to his Aſſiſtance. I ſaid, there is no body to hurt you: Do you think that the Biſhop of Ely's Table is not a Protection for any body that comes here?

L. C. J. Was the Biſhop at the Table then?

Whaley. He was at the Table, but a great Diſtance from us; the Doctor and I ſat at the lower end of the Table. Afterwards I begged the Biſhop of Ely's Pardon, for being ſo hot and loud at his Table: Says the Biſhop, I thank you kindly for it; none of us dare talk with him.

Edward Johnſon was ſworn.

He depoſed, that meeting Oates the 23d of Auguſt 1680. the Deponent ſaid, All things will go well now, for there is a Parliament to meet in a little Time; and Oates anſwered, No, not till York be baniſhed or hanged. He has a good Brother, but he takes all the Courſes in the World to undo him.

Randall Bowring was ſworn.

He depoſed, in October 1679, he was at dinner with Oates, at his Lodgings at Whitehall, and a Gentleman ſaying in caſe his Royal Highneſs were a Papiſt, how ſhould we be ſecured, in caſe he came to the Crown, that he would not bring in Popery? The Doctor replied, I would not have you trouble your ſelf about that; for he ſhall be hanged before that Time. That at another Time Oates having preached in Foſter-lane, the Church-Warden invited him to Dinner. He asked, If any of them had dined with James D. of York, at any of the Feaſts in the City, when the Duke uſed to come ſometimes; and none of them anſwered him. Oates replied, He would not dine with any Man that had eat with the Devil, 1684. 36 Car. II. vil: And ſo went and dined with a Brazier at London-wall.

Mr. Fairfax was ſworn.

He depoſed, That in my Lord Chief Juſtice Scrogg's Time, there was a Preſentment to be brought in by the Grand Jury againſt his Royal Highneſs for being a Papiſt, and not coming to Church; and that this Oates was the main Proſecutor of it. That the Grand Jury being diſmiſſed, the Deponent told Oates, that now he was diſappointed; and Oates replied, Oh, We will do well enough; there will be a Seſſions after the Term, and there we will at him again; and we will have no more Regard for him than if he were a Scavenger of Kent-ſtreet.

Mr. Philips was ſworn.

He depoſed, That in January 1678, he was at Oates's Lodgings in Whitehall, and Oates ſaid, He hoped to ſee our Maſter James, meaning the Duke of York, at the Bar of the Houſe of Commons; and it would be no Diſparagement to him to appear there, for there were better Men Members of that Houſe than he was.

William Aſhlock was ſworn.

He depoſed, That as Oates was dreſſing one Morning in Eaſter-Term 1682, Oates ſaid, He was going out to draw up a Bill of Indictment againſt the Duke of York; but the Deponent heard afterwards he was otherwiſe adviſed. That he ſaid alſo, The City of London was fired by the Duke of York's Order; and the Forces at Blackheath were to have plundered the City, and killed all the honeſt Proteſtant Diſſenters there; and the Duke of York was to have headed thoſe Forces; and this he would prove, if ever they could get a Parliament to their Mind. And he ſaid, They ſhould take away the Poſt-Office from the Duke of York, and give it to the Duke of Monmouth.

That at another Time he ſaid in Company, The Duke of York was a Son of a Whore, and he ſhould live to ſee him hanged; and if they could but get a Parliament to their Mind, they would ſoon ſend the Duke and all his Gang out of England; for he muſt never expect to ſucceed to the Crown.

Capt. Creſſet was ſworn.

That as he was waiting one Morning at the Duke's Lodgings, Oates ſaid to him, You will never leave, till you have loſt your Reputation: You have been with James (York, I mean:) He is a Raſcal, a Papiſt, and a Traitor, and I hope to live to ſee him hanged.

Sir William Jennings was ſworn.

He depoſed, That being at a Tavern at Oxford with Oates, when the Parliament ſat there, and the Duke's Health being propoſed, Oates ſaid, Do not drink York's Health: He has ruined the Nation; and if the Devil has a Place in Hell more hot than others, I hope he will beſtow it upon him.

Mr. Warcop was ſworn.

He depoſed, That meeting Oates afterwards, and reproving him for the laſt recited Expreſſions, he anſwered, The Duke was a Traitor, and in the Plot: and told the Deponent, He was a Yorkiſt, and he would remember him for it. 1684. 36 Car. II.

Mr. Charles Chapman was ſworn.

He depoſed, That he went along with Mr. Swift, the Duke's Attorney, when he went to the Defendant Oates to demand a Plea: That Oates asked Mr. Swift, If he were the Duke's Attorney? And Swift anſwering, Yes; Oates ſaid, He did not value the Duke, nor his Attorney neither; he would plead as he ſhould ſee Cauſe; and that he neither loved the Duke nor feared him. That, may be, he might be in the King's-Bench for 100,000 l. But if ever a Parliament ſat, he did not queſtion but to have ſome body elſe in his Place.

No body appearing for the Defendant Oates, my Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid,

L. C. J. Gentlemen of the Jury, It is not your Buſineſs to enquire whether Oates ſpoke theſe Words; for by letting Judgment go againſt him by Default, he doth in Law confeſs the Words; but you are to enquire what Damages are fit to be given to the Plaintiff, by reaſon of theſe Words. Yet inaſmuch as this is a Caſe of an extraordinary Nature, Weight and Moment, having Relation to ſo great a Prince, His Royal Highneſs, the King's only Brother, it requires this extraordinary Solemnity; it not having been uſual heretofore to have Writs of Enquiry executed at this Bar. But the Occaſion is extraordinary, ſuch as has not happened before this Age, this corrupt, this profligate Age, wherein we live, and wherein common ordinary Fellows, the meer Scum and Scoundrels of the factious Party, have taken the Liberty to reproach and calumniate Magiſtracy and Government, and the greateſt Perſonages concerned in it; not ſparing even Majeſty it ſelf, nor him who is next in Degree to his ſacred Perſon, his only dear and Royal Brother. And therefore, as the Caſe is extraordinary in its Nature, ſo ought the Example of it to be made as publick as can be, in order to ſatisfy all People what a ſort of Fellow this Defendant is, who has been ſo much adored, and looked upon with an Eye of Admiration, courted with ſo wonderful an Affection, and ſo, I had almoſt ſaid, Hoſanna'd by the Factious. Such as he ought to be made publick Examples of; and therefore the King's Counſel have deſired that this Cauſe might be here canvaſſed at the Bar; and that the Defendant, as he has made himſelf eminent for ſome particular Qualifications, might be made a publick Example for this Offence.

Thus the Writ comes to be executed here. Now though the Words laid in this Declaration, are Words that do import in themſelves ſo much Scandal and Reproach, ſo much Malice and Venom, that they need no Aggravation; and his ſuffering Judgment to go by Default ſhews they are no way to be extenuated: Yet, however, to ſatisfy all People that have any Inclination to be ſatisfied, that this Proſecution is highly reaſonable, nay, abſolutely neceſſary; they come here, and give you an Account, that theſe in the Declaration are but a ſmall Part of the ſcandalous and malicious licious Words that the Defendant had uſed concerning the Plaintiff. And indeed it doth plainly appear, that the Malice of the Defendant is intended with all the moſt unchriſtian and uncharitable, as well as diſloyal and diſobedient Circumſtances, that any thing can be; with Deſign to traduce and diſparage a Subject ſo Loyal, and a Perſon ſo Great and Illuſtrious as his Royal Highneſs.

Then the Chief Juſtice having ſummed up the Evidence, the Under-Sheriff ſaid, Gentlemen, Lay your Heads together, and conſider of your Verdict.

Which they did, ſtanding at the Bar.

Under-Sheriff. What Damages do you find?

Sir Charles Lee. Full Damages, an hundred thouſand Pounds, and twenty Shillings Coſts.

Which Verdict being recorded in an Inquiſition indented, taken under the Hands of all the Jury, was afterwards annexed as the Return to the Writ of Enquiry; and the Priſoner was committed in Execution to the King's-Bench Priſon for Non-payment of the Damages, where he remained till he was convicted of Perjury in the next Reign, and then he was remanded to the ſame Priſon again.

1684. 36 Car. II.

His Offence in reviling the Duke of York, the Preſumptive Heir of the Crown, was certainly a very great one; but the giving ſuch Damages as the Defendant could never poſſibly pay, was in Effect to condemn him to perpetual Impriſonment, and render him incapable of getting his Bread, which has been juſtly cenſured: And it is preſumed the Precedent will not be followed, eſpecially by that Party who uſed to exclaim moſt loudly againſt ſuch rigorous Judgments, as being a Breach of Magna Charta, and conſequently illegal. Remarks.

Pritchard and Papillon. The Declaration.

THE Plaintiff, Sir William Pritchard, declared, That whereas on the 12th of February, in the 35th Year of the King, he was Mayor of the City of London, the Defendant Thomas Papillon, being one of the Commonalty of the ſaid City, and under the Government of the Plaintiff, maliciouſly contriving to diſturb him in the Execution of his ſaid Office, did, on the ſaid 12th of February, in order to vex the Plaintiff, and without any probable Cauſe of Action, take out a Writ againſt the Plaintiff, and cauſe him to be arreſted and detained in Cuſtody for the Space of ſix Hours, on the 24th of April following, to the Plaintiff's Damage 10,000 l.

Mr. Attorney General, in opening the Evidence, ſaid, This Action was brought to vindicate the Honour of the Chair from ſuch Affronts as it never had met with, till theſe Times of Faction and Confuſion: That the Defendant had no probable Cauſe for the Action he brought againſt the Lord Mayor was evident by his not proceeding in the Action; but there was a further Deſign in that Proſecution, namely, to carry on the Plot againſt the King's Life, and to ſubvert the Government; for the Faction had contrived to impriſon the Mayor, ſuppoſing that the Loyal Citizens would have attempted his Reſcue, and then their Party deſigned to riſe and aſſiſt the Officer that arreſted him, he having the Countenance of Authority, as being in the Execution of the King's Writ, and ſo a publick Commotion would have been made; and in that Confuſion, while the City wanted a Head, they expected they ſhould have had an Opportunity of accompliſhing what the Conſpirators intended.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Keeling was ſworn, and depoſed, That he was made a ſpecial Bailiff on purpoſe to arreſt the Lord Mayor, and that he did arreſt him accordingly. Goodenough, the Under-Sheriff, telling this Witneſs, The Party would take it amiſs if he refuſed to do it; and that thirty or forty of the Party were by, when he received his Directions to arreſt the Lord Mayor.

Sir John Peak depoſed, That there being ſome Diſturbance on the arreſting of the Lord Mayor, he had Orders from the Lieutenancy to raiſe his Regiment, and that he came with his Soldiers to Skinners-Hall, where he heard the Lord Mayor was, and prevented the Miſchief that was intended.

Mr. Wells, the Common Cryer depoſed, That Brown the Coroner cauſed the Lord-Mayor to be arreſted and carried to his Houſe, where he was detained in Cuſtody ſome Hours, on his refuſing to give an Appearance: (It ſeems, The Militia being raiſed, and coming to his Lordſhip's Reſcue, the Party thought fit to releaſe his Lordſhip)

Papillon's Defence by his Counſel.

Mr. Serjeant Maynard, being of Counſel for Mr. Papillon, ſaid in his Defence: This is an Action upon the Caſe, wherein the Plaintiff declares, That the Defendant did arreſt him, being then Lord Mayor, without any probable Cauſe, and out of Malice. Now my Lord Mayor, if he do miſtake in his Office, and do not do that which belongs to him to do; do; if he does any Man an Injury, or does that which is not right in his Office, by which another Perſon is grieved, he is as much ſubject to Actions, and to the Proceſs of Law, as any private Man in the City of London; and if we can give you any Account of a probable Cauſe for the Arreſt, that is ſufficient to juſtify us from this Action. The Queſtion is not, whether this or that Man were duly choſen into ſuch an Office? but whether there were any probable Cauſe for the Defendant to conteſt about the Choice? And here the Caſe falls out to be thus: There was a Difference in the City of London about the Choice of Sheriffs, wherein the Defendant was one of the Competitors, and had many Suffrages, and was returned by the Sheriffs to the Court of Aldermen to have a Majority, which gave him Occaſion to apprehend he was rightly choſen: Now though we inſiſt not upon the Right of Election (that having been otherwiſe determined), yet this ſurely was a probable Cauſe for him to proceed upon it; and he having no other Method to take, for ſettling this Matter, but to appeal to your Lordſhip, and that great Court where your Lordſhip ſits, to have a Writ to command the Mayor to ſwear him into the Office, or ſhew good Cauſe why he did not; accordingly a Mandamus was moved for and granted; and to this Writ the Mayor and Aldermen, to whom it was directed, made a Return that we were not elected Sheriff of London; which Return we apprehended to be falſe, and to try the Truth of this Return, was the Action brought againſt the Plaintiff, and not to promote the Deſigns of a diſcontented Party, as has been inſinuated: Upon this Action the Defendant proceeded regularly and orderly, applying himſelf in a decent manner to get an Appearance: For firſt, we took out a Latitat againſt my Lord Mayor, and by the Attorney gave him Notice of it, and deſired an Appearance, but he was not pleaſed to give an Appearance upon that Writ: We took out a Capias, and gave him Notice of it, but could have no Appearance: Whereupon we took out an Alias Capias, which is the Writ mentioned in the Declaration; to which my Lord refuſing to give an Appearance, the Officer was conſtrained to arreſt him. This was nothing but what the then Plaintiff apprehended he might lawfully do, and no Malice or ill Deſign is proved upon him: And I hope it will never come to that, That a Man (though miſtaken) conceiving himſelf to have a Right of Action, and ſuing out the King's Writ, ſhall ſuffer for ſo doing, unleſs particular Damage be made appear. Here is a great Noiſe of Damage and Diſgrace to the Plaintiff and his Office, and he has been pleaſed to reckon his own Damages 10,000 l. But we ſay he has ſuſtained no Damage by any Thing we have done, and we are not Guilty of this unreaſonable and malicious Proſecution laid to our Charge.

1684. 36 Car. II.

The Defendant's Witneſſes.

Then Brome the Coroner, who granted the Warrant for arreſting the Lord Mayor, was called as a Witneſs for the Defendant, and depoſed, That he ſeveral Times deſired an Appearance of his Lordſhip, but he refuſed to give any, whereupon he was arreſted; and he carried his Lordſhip to his (the Deponent's) Houſe: And it being demanded, how he came to releaſe his Lordſhip, he anſwered; he was taken into Cuſtody himſelf; and ſaid, he had Directions from his Clients to uſe his Lordſhip with all the Reſpect imaginable, and he punctually obeyed their Orders.

1684. 36 Car. II.

Mr. Corniſh and ſeveral other Witneſſes being called, they confirmed Brome's Teſtimony: But Mr. Corniſh prevaricating in ſome of his Anſwers, the Chief Juſtice ſaid, You muſt not think to dance in a Net and blind all the World: I know theſe Things very well without their Aſſiſtance, and only ask theſe Queſtions to let the World know what ſort of Men theſe are that pretend to Saintſhip: You ſee we can hardly get one Word of Truth out of them; neither Bethell, nor that Fellow Corniſh would take the Oaths and Sacrament according to Law, till they found it would contribute to their Deſign of ſubverting the Government: Then theſe Raſcals could qualify themſelves for an Office, only to put the Kingdom into a Flame.

Then ſome other Witneſſes depoſed, That Mr. Papillon, and Mr. Dubois had a Majority at the Poll for Sheriffs.

To this, the Attorney-General anſwered, That the Poll taken by the Sheriffs was done in an unlawful and riotous manner, and by thoſe who had no Power to take it; and called the Town-Clerk as a Witneſs for the Plaintiff, who depoſed, That Sir Dudley North and Mr. Box, were duly elected Sheriffs, An. 1682. and that the Sheriffs were not Judges of the Poll.

Obſervations on the Evidence by the Defendant's Counſel.

The Evidence being cloſed, Mr. Serjeant Maynard made his Obſervations on it, and ſaid, It is nothing to the Purpoſe, who took the Poll, or who had a Right to take the Poll; but it was a Diſpute, and ſome, it may be, could not poll at one Place, and others would not poll at the other, yet the lifting up of two Thouſand Hands might make the Defendant think he was choſen Sheriff; and there lies the Cauſe of his Action, his Apprehenſion of a Right. And though it may be objected to the Prudence of my Client, to deſire ſuch an Office, yet that proves nothing of Malice in him againſt the Plaintiff. And as to the Objection to the Inſtrument we made Uſe of, that our Attorney was in a Plot, &c. what is that to us? There is not the leaſt Suſpicion upon us; though he is a bad Man, that doth not make all his Clients bad. Now, Gentlemen, upon this Action we are not to be fined: But they, if they can, are to ſhew what Damages the Plaintiff ſuſtained by our Action: And if what we have ſaid do not ſatisfy you, that we had probable Reaſon for what we did, then you upon your Oaths are to give him what Damages you in your Conſciences think he has received by it: After which the Chief Juſtice directed the Jury, and ſaid.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

Gentlemen of the Jury, The Point of this Action before us reſolves it ſelf into a very narrow Compaſs, and is only this in ſhort: Whether or no the Plaintiff was arreſted by the

the Defendant without probable Cauſe, and maliciouſly. Now Matters of Malice are Things that remain in a Man's Heart, and it is impoſſible to diſcover whether another Man hath Malice againſt me, if I do not ſee it in his Actions. Therefore you muſt conſider the Circumſtances that do attend this Action; if they are malicious, then you are to find for the Plaintiff: But if they for the Defendant have offered to you any Circumſtances that can convince you that he had any probable Cauſe of Action, and that not attended with a malicious Proſecution of that probable Cauſe; then the Iſſue is with the Defendant. Now, in point of Law, I am to tell you, that though I have a probable Cauſe of Action againſt another; yet if, to obtain my End in that, I proſecute him maliciouſly, with a Deſign to ruin him, or to put an Indignity upon him, or the Character he bears in the Publick; or put an Hardſhip or Difficulty upon him, I mean in Point of Time, when it is probable the Remedy may be had at another Time; and the ſame thing done with leſs Injury and leſs Trouble, then an Action will lie againſt me; though it be true, I had a conjectural Cauſe of Action againſt him. The perſuing malicious Ways to obtain a Right, makes a Man obnoxious to the Action of the Party ſo proſecuted.

But as to their probable Cauſe, Suppoſe it were a Queſtion between me and John-a-Stiles, for the Place of Bridge-maſter, for the Purpoſe, and a Poll is demanded and granted; if they that have no Authority ſhall go, after the Court is adjourned by him that has Power, and take a Number of Names in the way of a Poll, by themſelves, and upon that come and ſay, that J. S. has 2400, and I have but ſo many, that ſure is not any probable Cauſe, nor a Right: For you have gone here out of the known and uſual Method in ſuch Matters, and depend upon that which can give no Foundation of a Right at all: You may have 50000 Names for you after that Rate, and yet not be elected, or have probable Cauſe of any ſuch Apprehenſion.

But Gentlemen, to bring an Action alone, will ſcarce amount to a Proof of Malice; therefore you muſt weigh the Evidence, whether the Circumſtances do ſhew there was any Malice in Mr. Papillon. It is true, a Man may lawfully ſue for ſuch an Office, and it is no Offence; yet it looks ſomewhat extraordinary, and that a Man has a Mind to do ſomething unuſual in the Place, that he ſhould ſue for it; eſpecially when he had fined for the Office once before. My Lord Mayor of London, it is true, is not, nor no Perſon whatever, exempt from the Law: If he owe a Man any thing, he is bound to anſwer it to him, as much as the meaneſt Citizen: But is he to be arreſted juſt at ſuch a Time, when he is chief Governor of the City? And the Court of Aldermen too, becauſe they are his Aſſiſtants? And at ſuch a time as this was, when the Government, both in the City and elſewhere, was ſurrounded with Difficulties, and in great Danger on all Sides? What Occaſion was there for ſuch Haſte in this Action? Would Mr. Papillon and Mr. Dubois have ſtarved, if it had been ſuſpended a while? Sir William Pritchard would have been as anſwerable to this, or any Man's Action, when the Year of his Office had been out: But it carries Malice and Vengeance in the very Face of it. And becauſe they would be ſure their Malice and Revenge ſhould take Place, they take the very Scoundrels of the Party to be employed in this great Work; the Goodenoughs, Burleigh, Keeling, and Nelthorp, who now ſtand attainted of High-Treaſon, muſt be called in to conſult about a fit Man to make an Arreſt. It is plain, Gentlemen, what the Deſign was, from the Beginning to the End; nothing but to cauſe a Tumult and Confuſion in the City, in order to put that damned helliſh Conſpiracy, for the Deſtruction of the King and his Brother, and every Man that was honeſt and loyal, in Execution. Another Circumſtance, which is conſiderable in this Caſe, is the particular Perſons that were ſued. The Mandamus, that was directed to the Lord Mayor and Aldermen in general; and the Return was made in the Name of the whole Court. How comes it then, that my Lord Mayor, Sir Henry Tulſe, and thoſe other Gentlemen, muſt be arreſted; but Mr. Corniſh, and his Party, are not meddled with? This is a Circumſtance, that carries Malice in it.

Gentlemen, as to the Damages, if you find for the Plaintiff, it is left to your Judgments to conſider of, and give what you ſhall think fit, upon this Occaſion. It is true, it is not eaſy to aſcertain particular Damages in ſuch a Caſe; or to prove that Sir William Pritchard, being in Priſon five or ſix Hours, ſuffered ſo much Damages as comes to 10,000 l. Yet, however, if the Thing for which the Action is brought, were deſigned with Malice, though the ill Deſign be not effected, that is no Thanks to the Party, nor is to weigh with you; but the malicious Deſign muſt govern you. Now the Malice here, was not againſt Sir William Pritchard, as ſuch a particular Man, but againſt my Lord Mayor; and the Government of the City, the Honour of your Chief Magiſtrate, and indeed the Honour of your King, whoſe Subſtitute he was, is concerned; and that puts a Weight upon your Enquiry into the Damages of this Caſe. You are to conſider, you give Damages to the Plaintiff, not as Sir William Pritchard, but as Lord Mayor: And your Severity in this Caſe, will deter all People from entering into Clans and Cabals, to make Diſturbances, and affront the Government.

It was not, I dare ſay, out of a frank, generous Humour, to oblige the City, that Mr. Papillon would have ſpent his Time and Money in the Office of Sheriff: No, I know he had better Ways to employ both.

It was not the generous Mind of Mr. Bethel, that called him on to be Sheriff of London, to entitle him to ſpend his Money; but on Purpoſe to be one of the firſt that ſhould turn all Things upſide down in the City, and diſturb the Government: And they that ſucceeded him, carried on the Project; and they that would have been in, but could not, had a Mind, no doubt, to follow ſo worſhipful an Example as he laid before them.

1684. 36 Car. II.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after half an Hour's ſtay, returned with a Verdict for the Plaintiff, and aſſeſſed Damages to 10,000*l* and Coſts to four Marks.

Remarks.

It appears, that many of the Conſpirators, who were in the Plot againſt the King and Government, were concerned in contriving and promoting this Action againſt the Lord Mayor. Goodenough, the Attorney, was deep in the intended Aſſaſſination: Brome, the Coroner, who granted the Warrant, was a Conſpirator: Keeling, who was made a Special Bayliff, on purpoſe to arreſt the Lord Mayor, was one of the intended Aſſaſſins; and the Plaintiffs, and the reſt of the Citizens that aſſembled to direct the Affair, were known Malcontents, and probably equally concerned in the Conſpiracy, though not ſo openly: And if this be admitted, it cannot remain a Doubt, whether one principal View in arreſting the Lord Mayor, was not in hopes of creating ſome Confuſion in the City, and thereby to favour the intended Inſurrection; though another Reaſon poſſibly might be, to gratify their Spleen in diſgracing the Lord Mayor, who was a loyal Citizen, and well-affected to his Majeſty. They would ſhew the Government, they were not afraid to inſult the Chief Magiſtrate of the City, and in him the King himſelf, whoſe Subſtitute he was: For, as the King's Counſel obſerved, if Papillon and Dubois had only brought their Action to obtain Satisfaction for their Loſs of the Shrievalty, this might have been done as well half a Year afterwards, and with more Probability of Succeſs, when he was out of his Office, than while he poſſeſſed the Chair.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charged, That the Priſoner, Thomas Roſewell, on the 14th of September, in the 36th Year of the King, at the Pariſh of Rotherhith, in the County of Surrey, did compaſs and imagine the Death of his Majeſty, and to raiſe a Rebellion; and that, to accompliſh his ſaid traitorous Purpoſes, he did, at the Time and Place aforeſaid, in a certain unlawful Aſſembly, ſpeak, aſſert and declare the following Words, (viz.) That the People made a Flocking to the King, upon Pretence of healing the King's Evil, which he could not do; but that They, meaning himſelf, and other traitorous Perſons, the King's Subjects, were the Perſons they ought to flock to, becauſe they were Prieſts and Prophets, who by their Prayers could heal the Dolours and Griefs of the People: That they had had two wicked Kings together, meaning King Charles I. and King Charles II. who had permitted Popery to enter in under their Noſes; whom they could reſemble to no other Perſon but to the moſt wicked Jeroboam: And that if they, meaning the ſaid evil-diſpoſed Perſons, unlawfully aſſembled, would ſtand to their Principles, he did not fear but they would overcome their Enemies, meaning the King and his Subjects, as in former times, with Rams-Horns, broken Platters, and a Stone in a Sling: All which was laid to be againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, the King's Peace, &c.

The Evidence.

The Witneſſes being called, Elizabeth Smith was ſworn, and depoſed, That the Priſoner preached at ſeveral private Houſes, and had a publick Meeting-Houſe of his own in Salisbury-ſtreet, near his own Dwelling-Houſe in Rotherhith, where there uſed to aſſemble, three or four hundred at a Time. That preaching at Capt. Daniel Weldy's Houſe, on the 14th of September, 1684, he uſed the Expreſſions laid in the Indictment, (viz.) The People make a Flocking to the King, &c. That there were two lower Rooms, and two Chambers, full of People, that came to hear the Priſoner, who ſtood in a Door upon the Stairs, ſo that his Voice might be heard above and below.

She depoſed further, That ſhe had been offered two hundred Pounds not to come in a Witneſs againſt Mr. Roſewell.

Mrs. Hilton, who went with the former Witneſs to the ſaid Meeting, on Sunday the 14th of September, depoſed, That ſhe heard the Priſoner ſpeak the Words laid in the Indictment: Adding, that they returned home about Two of the Clock, and Mrs. Smith, the firſt Witneſs, immediately wrote down the Words: That the Exerciſe began at Seven in the Morning; and the firſt Part of it being over, the Priſoner went to Dinner, and abundance of the Congregation eat Sweetmeats, Biſcuits, &c. during his Abſence.

Mrs. Farrar depoſed, That ſhe was at the ſame Meeting, and heard him ſay, It was not the King that cured the Evil, but it is we they ſhould flock to; for we are Prieſts and Prophets, that by our Prayers do cure the Grievances of the People. He ſaid alſo, That we had had two wicked Kings together; and bid the People ſtand to their Principles, and in time they ſhould overcome their Enemies.

That at another Meeting ſhe heard him pray, That he might not offend the Lord in not praying for the King; but the Lord might pleaſe to open his Eyes, or turn the Times.

Then

1684. 36 Car. II. His Defence.

Then the Court acquainting Mr. Roſewell, that he might enter upon his Defence, he deſired the Indictment might be read again in Latin. After which, he objected to the Latin, that Morbus Regni Anglici was the Diſeaſe of the Engliſh Kingdom, and could not be made to ſignify the King's Evil.

L. C. J. No, no, it is, Morbus Regni, Anglicè, the King's Evil; there being no apt Word in the Law for that Diſtemper, they help it with an Anglicè.

Roſewell. But, my Lord, there are proper Words for the Diſeaſe, as Struma, and Scrofula, and not Morbus Regni.

L. C. J. Phyſicians may uſe thoſe Words, but we muſt keep to the legal Names and Phraſes; and where we have not a proper Word, we uſe an Anglicè to expreſs what we mean.

Roſewell. Then there is another Phraſe I object to, viz. Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges inſimul: This cannot be underſtood of two Kings one after another; but inſimul makes them to be both at once. Theſe two Words, inſimul, and nunc, both ſignify the preſent Time; it ſhould have been ſucceſſivè.

L. C. J. Then it had not agreed with your Words; which are, That we had two wicked Kings together.

Roſewell. If that be an Angliciſm, this cannot be true Latin.

L. C. J. If it be a Blunder in Latin, it is one of your making, for you ſpoke it ſo in Engliſh; and the Indictment in Latin muſt exactly purſue your Engliſh.

Roſewell. Then here is Romanam Superſtitionem made to ſignify Popery: Now there may be Superſtition in the Church of Rome, and yet that not be the Thing we call Popery.

L. C. J. Therefore, becauſe Romana Superſtitio may be too general an Expreſſion, we have aſcertained it with an Anglicè.

Roſewell. Then my Lord it is ſaid, in eorum conſpectu, under their Noſes. Now if the Latin in the Indictment is exactly to purſue the Engliſh, it ſhould have been, ſub naribus illorum.

L. C. J. Suffer Rebellion, or Conventicles, under your Noſes; are theſe Things, ſub naribus, or in conſpectu.

Roſewell. Theſe Words could not be ſpoken of the late King, and this King; for the firſt died a zealous Proteſtant, and his preſent Majeſty has often declared againſt Popery.

L. C. J. But it was the Pretence of Popery and Arbitrary Power that brought the firſt to the Block; and the Cry of every ſeditious factious Fellow is againſt Popery now, as if it was juſt breaking in upon us, and the Government abetted it; and the Words are laid in the Indictment, as ſpoken, falſo & malitioſe.

Roſewell. Then, my Lord, it is ſaid, Si ipſi ſtarent ad Fundamentalia eorum. How comes Fundamentalia to ſignify Principles?

L. C. J. The Latin Bible expreſſeth them by Fundamentalia: If the Foundations be deſtroyed, &c.

Roſewell. Then it is ſaid, Si ipſi, which muſt refer to the two wicked Kings that were ſpoken of juſt before.

L. C. J. No, that was ſpoken of your Congregation if they would ſtand to their Principles, &c.

1684. 36 Car. II.

Roſewell. It is ſaid ipſe non timebat quin — This is in the third Perſon, and the ſingular Number.

Sol Gen. The Jurors that find this Indictment ſay, that he ſaid ſo; and that muſt be in the third Perſon.

Then Mr. Roſewell deſired he might have Liberty to declare what the Words of his Sermon really were; and in the moſt ſolemn Manner averred, That he did not ſpeak the Words in the Order, or with the Intention the Witneſſes had teſtified. And then called ſome Witneſſes, who took Notes at his Meeting, to ſhew what the Words were, and what Application he made of them.

The Priſoner's Witneſſes.

Mr. Thomas Hudſon, being called as a Witneſs for the Priſoner, depoſed, That he was at the Meeting mentioned by the Witneſſes to be held the 14th of September, and that in the Morning the Priſoner did not preach, but expound the 20th Chapter of Geneſis; and took Occaſion from thence to ſpeak of the Worth and Value of the Prayers of God's Prophets, ſaying, They were good to cure the King's Evil; and inſtanced in the Prophet that came to Jeroboam, by whoſe Prayer that King's withered Arm was reſtored.

It being demanded what Application the Priſoner made when he ſpoke of the two wicked Kings; Hudſon anſwered, He ſaid, if Abraham fell, and Jehoſhaphat fell, and Sampſon and Peter fell, What are we? Let him that ſtandeth take heed leſt he fall. Then he was asked, How he apprehended that about the King's Evil was meant? Hudſon anſwered, He did not believe it was ſpoken with reſpect to that Diſeaſe called the King's Evil; becauſe it was ſpoken with Reference to the Diſeaſe the King was under: And as to what was mentioned about the Rams-horns, that was in his Sermon in the Afternoon, where he ſhewed how God could by very ſmall Means bring great Things to paſs; inſtancing in Moſes's Rod, Gideon's broken Pitchers, the ſounding of Ram's-horns, whereby the Walls of Jericho fell down, and the like.

Roſewell demanding if he had heard the King of England mentioned, Hudſon anſwered, He prayed for the King, or elſe he did not hear a Word of any King that Day, unleſs the Kings in the Scripture. He prayed heartily that God would bleſs the King, and enable him to govern his People; and uſed to ſay, God forbid he ſhould ſin againſt God in neglecting to pray for the King: And prayed God would remove all evil Counſellors from him.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, He did not queſtion that; and he remembered their praying in Weſtminſter-hall for the doing his late Majeſty Juſtice; and they knew where that ended.

Atkinſon, another Witneſs, depoſed, That at the Meeting the Priſoner expounded the 20th Chapter of Geneſis; and obſerving how Abraham bid Sarah ſay ſhe was his Siſter, he inferred that a Child of God might fall into the ſame Sin again and again, inſtancing in Lot's committing Inceſt twice, Peter's denying his Lord three Times, Sampſon's taking two Wives

1684. 36 Car. II.

Wives of the Philiſtines, and Jehoſhaphat's joining with two wicked Kings. And he ſaid, A godly Man, by his Prayers, might help to cure the King's Evil; but he heard nothing of the King of England, or any thing like what the King's Witneſſes had teſtified: And ſeveral more of the Priſoner's Witneſſes confirmed what theſe had ſaid.

Other Witneſſes appeared to the Priſoner's Character, and ſaid he was an honeſt Man, and a loyal Subject, and uſed to pray heartily for the King: And Atkinſon being called again, depoſed, That the Priſoner kept the 30th of January as a Faſt, and preached on this Text, Pray for Kings, and all in Authority; aſſerting, That Kingly Government was moſt agreeable to the Word of God.

Then the Priſoner called ſeveral Witneſſes to diſcredit Mr. Smith, one of the King's Witneſſes, ſome of whom ſaid that he would have perſuaded them to have appeared as Witneſſes againſt Recuſants for holding Conventicles, or being preſent at them, when they knew nothing of the Matter; and that he had ſworn falſly againſt ſome for being at Conventicles.

Sir John Talbot depoſed, that Mrs. Hilton, another of the King's Witneſſes, lived ten Years in his Family, but uſed to tell Lies and Stories, and bubbled ſome Gentlemen of their Money, by pretending ſhe had an Intereſt in Mrs. Jones, a Lady of a good Fortune. And another Witneſs depoſed, That Hilton had but an indifferent Character.

Roſewell proceeds in his Defence.

Then Mr. Roſewell proceeded to make his Obſervations on the Evidence, and ſaid, That what he ſhould now ſpeak, was as much in reſpect of the precious Souls of thoſe who were concerned in the Proſecution, or trying of him, as of his own Safety; and that, though Strangers, he would lay down his Life to be inſtrumental in ſaving any one of their Souls. He declared his Incapacity to make a regular Defence before ſuch learned Gentlemen of the long Robe, and thanked his Lordſhip, and the Court, for the Indulgence ſhewn to his Infirmities. Then he obſerved that the Witneſſes varied in their Evidence; for Mrs. Smith ſwore the Text was the 21ſt of Geneſis, and Mrs. Hilton ſwears to the 20th, and therefore they could not be deemed two legal Witneſſes, or either of them deſerve Credit. His next Obſervation was, That they teſtified the Words charged in the Indictment, were delivered all in the Morning-Exerciſe, when he had proved the contrary; and left it to the Jury if they were two credible Witneſſes. That they varied likewiſe in this: That one depoſed they met at Capt. Daniel Weldy's, and the other at Mr. Daniel's; and if they were out in one thing, they might be ſo in another. He reflected on their great Wickedneſs, in applying what was innocently ſpoken and meant to the late King and his preſent Majeſty whom he had proved he always prayed for. He added, that they had not only ſworn him a Knave, but a Fool, and a Madman, to ſpeak ſuch abſurd, incoherent, ſoleciſtical, and nonſenſical Things; and he had brought Perſons to teſtify, no ſuch Things were ſaid; and that he was always for Monarchy, and againſt Anarchy, and continually obſerved the 30th of January, and the 29th of May, and inveighed againſt thoſe that were Rebels againſt his preſent Majeſty, or had been concerned in that barbarous Act againſt his Royal Father, which he utterly abhorred: And obſerved further, That ſeveral Gentlemen of the Church of England had teſtified concerning his Converſation, who had known him eight, ten, or twelve Years: That he hoped his Lordſhip and the Jury took Notice that the Witneſſes would ſwear and forſwear any Thing; and that one of them had made Compoſitions, and was a Woman of lewd Converſation: He obſerved likewiſe, that they muſt have incredible Memories, that they could exactly agree in every Circumſtance, and in each particular Word, which he believed the Jury would not undertake to repeat upon their Notes; and ſaid, That he laid the great Streſs of his Defence, not on the Incredibility and Improbability, but the Impoſſibility of the Truth of the Evidence they had given. He confeſſed, if that were a Crime, that it was his Practice to expound the Scriptures to the People; for the People, he ſaid, periſhed for lack of Knowledge; and that it was by the Knowledge of our Lord Jeſus Chriſt, that they muſt come to Life and Salvation.

1684. 36 Car. II.

L. C. J. Mr. Attorney, will you, or any of the King's Counſel, ſay any thing in this Matter?

Att. Gen. No, my Lord; we leave it entirely to your Lordſhip.

The Lord Chief Juſtice in ſumming up the Evidence ſaid, That though a Man muſt have an obdurate Heart not to compaſſionate his Fellow-Creature in ſuch Circumſtances, yet the Priſoner's Denials, with the Imprecations he had made, and the Affirmations he had offered of what he had formerly done, and his appealing to God about his Innocency, was not to weigh with the Jury; for their Buſineſs, according to the Oath they had taken, was to know if they had Evidence given to ſatisfy them he was guilty according to that Evidence. He obſerved likewiſe, (though he ſaid he did not ſpeak it to affect this Caſe) that the Law does declare, that it was from theſe Seminaries of Sedition and factious Conventicles, and the Clubs and Cabals of diſcontented and irregular People, diſaffected to the Laws both of Church and State, that the great Miſchief and Confuſion that was brought upon us, and which at length brought us into the Diſtractions of the late Times, proceeded; and that he muſt ſay (whatever the Priſoner thought) that Bleſſed Martyr King Charles I. was by ſuch Means brought to that horrid, accurſed, murderous Death and End, under the Pretence of Religion; and that perhaps, there were as many Rebels raiſed againſt the late King, by the beating of the Cuſhion in the Pulpit, as by the beating of the Drum in the Street. He obſerved alſo, that they picked out and choſe Occaſional Texts, of binding Kings in Chains, and their Nobles in Fetters of Iron; and raiſed ſuch Doctrines from Texts of Scripture, as were intended to quite other Purpoſes, to make People kill and ſlay God's Anointed, under Pretence

1684. 36 Car. II.

Pretence of ſaving and protecting the Anointed of God. He obſerved, that the Priſoner ſaid, he undertook to expound and teach his People the Knowledge of God: That it was a very good Leſſon to be learnt and taught; but (without any Reflection on the Gentlemen at the Bar) he thought we had Churchmen of as great Learning, Piety and Virtue, as he could pretend to; and that whoever preaches at a Conventicle, cannot preach Obedience to the Civil Magiſtrate; becauſe in that very preaching, they are acting Diſobedience againſt his Laws: Then he ſhewed, that the Thing now before them was a Queſtion of a different Nature, that they were not to try whether he Preached at a Conventicle, or whether in ſo doing it was againſt Law; but whether he did ſpeak Words of the ſame Subſtance, to the ſame Effect and Intent that are compriſed in the Indictment; therefore they were to try and conſider, whether the three Witneſſes, produced againſt him, did ſwear true, or were guilty of wilful Perjury.

He is convicted. Then the Jury withdrew, and after ſome Time returned with their Verdict, that the Priſoner was Guilty.

His Exceptions in Arreſt of Judgment. Mr. Roſewell being brought into Court again on the 24th of November, to hear Judgment, objected, That there was not any Crime ſufficiently ſet forth in the Indictment to give Judgment upon; for it was not ſufficient to ſay in an Indictment of Treaſon in general, that a Man did intend to depoſe the King, or raiſe a Rebellion; but there ought to be ſome Overt Act poſitively aſſerted to be done by that Perſon, which was Treaſon of it ſelf without the Inuendo. He inſiſted, as he had done at the Trial, that the Words were repugnant and inſenſible; and deſired Judgment might be arreſted, and Counſel aſſigned him to argue his Exceptions: Whereupon Counſel were aſſigned him, and on Thurſday the 27th of November, the Exceptions were argued.

Mr. Wallop, of Counſel for the Priſoner, inſiſted, That the Words laid in the Indictment, diſcharged of Inuendo's, were looſe, extravagant, inſenſible Words, rather than Treaſon, and held, that if it was only the Inuendo's that made them treaſonable, and thoſe Inuendo's were not warranted by Law, they could not effect the Priſoner; and that it is a Rule in Law, that no Inuendo could warrantably be inſerted in an Indictment, Information, or Declaration, upon an Action of the Caſe for Words, unleſs the Defendant be firſt averred, (and that directly) to have mentioned a Perſon in certain himſelf, to whom thoſe Words may be referred; and in this Caſe, how could the Hearer underſtand who the Preacher meant, and ſo be influenced to Rebellion, unleſs the Preacher himſelf had named the King to whom the Words he ſpoke ſhould be referred? That as to the firſt Words laid in the Indictment, viz. Quod populus, &c. The People (meaning the Subjects of our Lord the King) keep a flocking to the King to cure the King's-Evil, which he cannot do, &c. Here Populus might intend any People: It might intend the French People flocking to the French King (for he pretended to heal the People in the ſame manner). As to the next Words, Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges inſimul; We (meaning the Subjects of the King) have had two wicked Kings (meaning King Charles I. and this King) together. That there was no mention of any Kings before in the Diſcourſe, to which, according to the Office of an Inuendo, theſe Words are to be applied, according to the 4 Rep. fo. 17. B. int. Jeames & Rutlech, being an Action of the Caſe for Words; where two Things were reſolved, Firſt, That the Perſon ſcandalized muſt be aſcertained: And Secondly, That the Words ſpoken muſt be apparent Slander. — And he held, That an Inuendo was not ſufficient to give an original Certainty, where a Certainty is not fixed before. The Defendant himſelf muſt ſet up ſuch a Light, as will carry the Intention to the End of the Diſcourſe. — And further, That the Words habuimus nunc were inconſiſtent, Habuimus referring to the Time paſt, and nunc to the Time preſent; and that if habuimus were to take Place, it might refer to any two Kings before the Conqueſt. — Then he proceeded to the Words which ſeemed to be moſt relied on, viz. if they would ſtand to their Principles, he did not queſtion but they ſhou'd be able Inimicos ſuos vincere, (Inuendo the King and the Government.) Now there was no Mention of any Enemies before, no Averment that the King was Enemy to any Body, or any Body to him; and therefore the Inuendo was to be rejected; it could not put ſuch a Violence and Force upon Words, as to make them Treaſon, when in themſelves they have no ſuch Meaning; and that by the Law of England, in all dubious, uncertain, and general Caſes, the moſt benign and candid Interpretation is to be taken; ſo if there were a Doubt, as to the meaning of the Words, the moſt favourable Conſtruction ought to be made.

Mr. Pollexfen, being alſo of Counſel for the Priſoner, brought his Argument, That ſome ſort of Words might be an Overt Act of Treaſon; but that the Statute of 13 Car. 2. on which the Priſoner was indicted, had diſtinguiſhed between Words of Treaſon and Miſdemeanour; and was about to ſhew that theſe for which the Priſoner was indicted, were but a Miſdemeanour by that Statute.

Here Mr. Attorney interrupted him, and ſaid, he did not underſtand it was his Lordſhip's Pleaſure they ſhould argue, Whether the Words were Treaſon, being found to be ſpoken with ſuch an Intention; but whether the Inuendo's had been ſufficiently laid to maintain the Indictment in Point of Form?

Mr. Pollexfen. My Lord, What I would obſerve is, That the Treaſonable printing, writing or ſpeaking, mentioned in the firſt Clauſe of that Statute, muſt be of ſuch Words as ſhall intend the Death, Bodily Hurt, Reſtraint, or Impriſonment of the King's Perſon, or levying War. And that if the Words laid in the Indictment, are in themſelves ſo uncertain, or ſuch as do not tend or relate to the preſent King, or the preſent Government, to ſtir up Sedition or Re-Rebellion againſt them, then they will not be Treaſon; becauſe they do not ſo relate. That the Words laid in the Indictment ſeemed to run thus; We have had now two wicked Kings together, who have ſuffered Popery to come in under their Noſes; we cannot compare them to any but wicked Jeroboam: And if [they] would ſtand to their Principles, then he did not doubt but [they] ſhould overcome their Enemies, as in former Times, &c. And, if according to Grammar, ipſi [they] being a Relative, muſt refer to that which laſt before went, there is nothing in the Sentence that went before, but we (that is, he and the People that heard him) and the two Kings that he ſpoke of; and the two Kings being laſt ſpoke of, it muſt be underſtood of the Kings; for it would be pretty hard to apply the Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges, to the ipſi qui ſtarent ad Fundamentalia. But in all Probability he ſpoke it thus, and if we do but ſtand to our Principles, I do not doubt but we ſhall overcome our Enemies as formerly, &c. But ipſi is a Variation of the Perſon, and according to Grammatical Conſtruction, it is evident how it ought to be expounded. This laſt ſeems to be the natural Reading of the Words; but the Indictment has not purſued them, but inſtead of that, has made Nonſenſe: For I do not ſee how ipſi can be me and my Auditors.

But paſſing by this, how will they make the Word Inimicos to mean the King and his Subjects? For it is not ſurely an Inuendo that can make my Words have any other Senſe than I that ſpoke them intended. The bare ſetting down the Words with Inuendo's, are not ſufficient to maintain an Action or an Indictment; for there are but two Ways to apply Words that are uncertain; the one is by laying a Colloquium precedent of ſuch Matter as leads to the Senſe of the Words, (and whenever that is done, the Colloquium muſt be proved in the Evidence.) The other Way is, where Words are laid in a Declaration, with an Averment that they were ſpoken of ſuch a Perſon; then the Words with an Inuendo after that Averment ſhew ſufficiently what is meant by them: As where one ſays, your Brother, your Maſter, your Servant, or your Son, is a Thief: Here the Words themſelves do not expreſs the Man of whom the Scandal is raiſed; but they give ſuch a Deſcription of him, that the Hearers may know who is meant: And then if in the Declaration it is averred that the Plaintiff was his Brother, his Maſter, his Servant, or his Son, and theſe Words were ſpoken of him, and thereby it comes to be made apparent to the Court who is meant, it is right; but then the Averment muſt be proved, or the Action cannot be maintained. Theſe are the only Ways that are allowed to maintain any ſuch Action; and there the Inuendo comes very properly to aſſiſt the Averment or Colloquium. But in this Caſe, here is nothing but a bare Inuendo that ſuch and ſuch are meant, without either a Colloquium, that there was a Diſcourſe concerning ſuch and ſuch Perſons, or an Averment that the Words were ſpoken of the Perſons.

Mr. Attorney replied, That where ever Words by ſtrong and pregnant Intendment do carry Slander, and of ſuch a particular Perſon, there the Books are expreſs, that there needs no Averment, that they were ſpoken of ſuch a Perſon; and for this he cited the Caſe of Fleetwood and Curle. Hob. 267.

That this was not only ſo in Actions of the Caſe for Slander, but alſo in Indictments and Informations; and here every one knew there was but one King and one Government: And when Words are laid, to be ſpoken to excite Commotions or Rebellions, they are but external Declarations of the Mind; his inward Thoughts were the Treaſon: Indeed the laying that alone, That he did ſo and ſo compaſs and imagine, without ſome outward Declaration, would not be good in an Indictment, any more than the outward Declaration, without the inward Intention, would be ſufficient: But in this Indictment it was laid, that he did imagine to raiſe Rebellion and War within the Kingdom, to ſtir up the People againſt the King, and to depoſe the King, and bring him to Death; and then goes on and ſays, to the End he might effect this Treaſon he ſpoke ſuch and ſuch Words, (which by the late Statute amount to Treaſon). Now if theſe Words did not in their own Nature import a Tendency to invite and ſtir up the People to Rebellion and War againſt the King, it would be naught with Inuendo's; and ſo it would be, if there were twenty Averments. He added, That this Indictment was according to former Precedents, and cited 3 Hen. 8. Rot. 17. the Indictment againſt the Lord Grey; the 2 Jac. Lord Cobham's Caſe, Paſch. 17. Jac. Rot. 40. Williams's Caſe, Fitzharris's Caſe, where the Duke of York was deſcribed in the Libel by the Letters D. of Y. and ſometimes only Y. and the King by the Letters Ch. and the Inuendo is (meaning our Sovereign Lord the King,) and there is nothing averred; and that in Colonel Sidney's Caſe, there was no Averment, but the Words of the Libel are brought in alſo with an Inuendo: From whence he inferred, that the charging Words to be ſpoken to ſtir up Sedition and Rebellion within the Kingdom, without the help of any Averment whatſoever, was ſufficient.

That to ſay, Enemies was a very general Word, and therefore a bare Inuendo could not make it mean one more than another, was odd; for he ſaid it to a great Congregation, being unlawfully aſſembled at a Conventicle: And when he ſaid, That [they] ſhould overcome their Enemies, the Government muſt be intended. —— Beſides, it was plain who he meant, by what he ſaid before: That the King was a wicked Man, and repreſented him as an Enemy to God and Man, by introducing Popery into the Kingdom: And it was well known, that the conſtant Cry in thoſe Conventicles was, that we ſhould be all overrun with Popery, which were conſiderable Circſtances in this Caſe. That it was the ſame Thing as if the Words had been ſpoken at the Head of an Army, they being ſpoke to People aſſembled contrary to the Laws of the Land, and in Defiance of the Government. Nor did he ſee how it was poſſible the Words could be better laid, being ſworn exactly as they were laid; and eſpecially, being found to be all ſpoken to raiſe Sedition and Rebellion.

Mr. Sollicitor alſo inſiſted, That the Form of the Indictment was good. He ſaid, had the Words been, Procure your ſelves Arms, and make your ſelves ready by ſuch a Day, and go to Whitehall, and kill the King; no one would have affirmed it was neceſſary they ſhould ſay in the Indictment, Dixit de Populo, vel de Rege, ſo and ſo, becauſe the Words plainly import their own meaning, and ſo they do in this Caſe; and therefore to ſay, Dixit de Rege, dixit de Populo, would be impertinent. That indeed it was neceſſary, in Actions of the Caſe for Slander, to aver, Dixit de querente, for he muſt aſcertain the Perſon of whom the Words are ſpoken, to be the very Plaintiff, becauſe there may be ſeveral of the ſame Name; but where Words are pregnant, and full of themſelves, there needs no Averment.

My Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, That the Precedents Mr. Attorney had cited, had very little Weight with him: And though he made no doubt, that if one ſhould bid Men prepare Arms, and go to Whitehall, and kill the King (according to the Caſe Mr. Sollicitor had put) thoſe Words would be an Overt Act of High-Treaſon: For there the Words import in themſelves who is meant, and are therefore good without any Averment: But had he bid them Riſe, and go to Whitehall, and they ſhould overcome their Enemies; there would be no Neceſſity of intending the King was their Enemy, unleſs it had been plainly declared by the Party himſelf, who he meant. And there was no doubt, if they had averred, that thoſe Words were ſpoken of the King and the People of England, it would have made it more certain. And if they had laid the Words thus, If we will ſtand to our Principles, we ſhall deſtroy them; the Caſe would have been ten times ſtronger. That he thought the Words, We have had two wicked Kings together, who have ſuffered Popery to come in under their Noſes, related plainly enough to the late King, and the preſent: But that when they came to ſpeak of Enemies, Inuendo the King and his Subjects; having talked of no Body before, that they were ſaid to have an Enmity againſt; this, he doubted, was to ſtretch it a little too far. —— Then, as to the Difference of Perſons, he obſerved they began in the firſt Perſon Plural, We have had two wicked Kings together; Nos habuimus nunc duos iniquos Reges ſimul: And afterwards ſay, If they, ipſi, will ſtand to their Principles, he did not doubt but they ſhould overcome their Enemies. If they had laid them (as any one muſt believe they were ſpoken) If you or we will ſtand to our Principles, we ſhall overcome them; and a Jury had found that theſe Words were ſpoken with ſuch an Intention as is laid in the Indictment, it would have been Treaſon: But when they come to ſay ipſi, They, in the third Perſon, and there are no third Perſon ſpoken of but the two Kings, who are alſo the laſt Antecedent, who could this relate to? Had they put Nos inſtead of Ipſi, it had been better underſtood, and better Grammar; for when one ſpeaks in the third Perſon, he excludes both himſelf, and thoſe he ſpeaks to, and an inuendo cannot help it.

1684. 36 Car. II.

Sol. Gen. If we had laid it otherwiſe, we ſhould not have laid it as the Truth is, for the Word ſpoken was, They.

L. C. J. No doubt, he ſaid, If you will ſtand to your Principles; it is Nonſenſe elſe.

Sol. Gen. I take that to be well enough, for there are three Sentences: The firſt is, That the People make a Flocking to the King, &c. Quod populus, &c. The next is, Quod nos habuimus, &c. And the third is, Quod ſi ipſi, &c. Now Quod governs the particular Sentence by itſelf, and it is good in Grammar and Senſe too.

L. C. J. You lay it in the Indictment to be an entire Speech, and then the Relative muſt go to the laſt Antecedent.

Juſt. Wythens. If you make it ſeveral Speeches, it is ten times worſe; for then the latter Part is ſo uncertain, without an Averment of whom the Words were ſpoken, that it can never be made good.

Sol. Gen. It was an entire Speech; but conſiſted of ſeveral Sentences, which in common Underſtanding, muſt have relation to one another.

Juſt. Walcot. I think that the Averment, that theſe Words were ſpoken of the King, is a Point of Fact that ought to be averred, and proved.

L. C. J. Our Books require greater Certainty in Indictments, than in Actions on the Caſe; and in Cauſes of this Nature we are bound to be of Counſel for the Priſoner (which we are not in Cauſes not Capital.) And we have not one Act of Parliament to help the Defect of Form in Indictments, as we have in Civil Actions; which ſhews that our Anceſtors would not help Uncertainties, or Inſufficiencies in Form, where the Life of a Man was concerned. We will conſider of it: Take back the Priſoner; and you ſhall have a Rule to bring him, when the Court is ready for Judgment.

But no Judgment being given this Term, Mr. Roſewell procured the King's Pardon before the next Term; and upon pleading it, was diſcharged.

Biſhop Burnet, who is ever finding Fault with his Sovereign, in his firſt Volume of Poſthumous Hiſtory, is pleaſed to cenſure the King, for ſuffering Judgment againſt Roſewell to be arreſted, and not granting him a Pardon before he heard what he had to ſay for himſelf; telling us, that his Majeſty was aſhamed of the Proſecution: But I think the Biſhop has much more Reaſon to be out of Countenance, for reflecting on his Prince's Conduct in this Affair. Remarks upon Roſewell's Trial.

The Miniſtry, ſenſible how much his late and preſent Majeſty had ſuffered by thoſe Trumpeters of Rebellion from the Pulpit, that their Preachments were uſually Invectives againſt the Government; and that, inſtead of praying for their Governors, great Part of the Lord's Day was ſpent in curſing and reproaching 1684. 36 Car. II. proaching them. And Oath having been made by three Witneſſes, that the Priſoner had been guilty of moſt ſeditious and treaſonable Speeches in his Pulpit, thought fit to order this Proſecution againſt him: But when it appeared at the Trial, that the Witneſſes were common Informers, People of no Character; and that the Priſoner had always behaved himſelf in a modeſt and dutiful Manner, in all other Reſpects but his Nonconformity, the Court thought fit to give him Time to make his Exceptions to the Indictment (which was not drawn up with ſo much Accuracy as it might have been). And when it appeared doubtful, Whether the Treaſon was well laid, or not; his Majeſty, to prevent Judgment being given againſt him, interpoſed, and granted Mr. Roſewell a Pardon.

And what is there in all this, that future Princes may not be proud of imitating King Charles in? The Proſecution was grounded upon the Oaths of three poſitive Witneſſes, who appeared alſo againſt him at his Trial, upon whoſe Evidence the Jury convicted Roſewell: But ſo juſt and merciful was the King, ſo tender of the Life of his Subject, that though he knew the Sectaries to be generally Enemies to his Adminiſtration; yet, becauſe he doubted of the Teſtimony that had been given againſt this Preacher, was pleaſed to pardon him. Where is that Prince or State, that had gained ſuch an Advantage of a ſuppoſed Enemy to their Government, that would have extended their Grace and Compaſſion to him? But ſo maliciouſly bent againſt this benign and merciful Prince, does this envious Prelate appear, that he abuſes and calumniates him for his beſt Actions; ſuch as Poſterity, when they ſee them ſet in a true Light, muſt ever bleſs his Memory for, while they deteſt the Man that ſo induſtriouſly endeavoured to traduce him. 1684. 36 Car. The Trial of ROBERT BAILLIE of Jerviſwood, for High-Treaſon, before GEORGE, Earl of Linlithgow, Lord Juſtice-General of the Kingdom of Scotland; and the reſt of the Lords of Juſticiary at Edinburgh, December 23, 1684. 36 Car. II.

The Charge. THE Dittay, or Indictment, ſets forth, that the Priſoner having conceived extraordinary Malice againſt the King and Government, and deſigning to debar his Royal Highneſs, his Majeſty's only Brother, from his Right of Succeſſion, did endeavour to get himſelf elected one of the Commiſſioners for negotiating a Settlement of a Colony in Carolina, in or about the Month of May, 1683, that he might have the freer Acceſs to the Earls of Shaftesbury and Eſſex, the Lord Ruſſel, and others, who had entered into a Conſpiracy in England, againſt his Majeſty's Perſon and Government; and with Colonel Rumſey, Walcot, Weſt, Ferguſon, and others, who had conſpired the Murder of his Majeſty, and of his Royal Highneſs: That when he could not get himſelf elected one of the ſaid Commiſſioners, he went to London at his own Expence; declaring, his Deſign was to puſh forward the People of England, who did nothing but talk: That he did, at London, negotiate with the ſaid Engliſh Conſpirators, about a Sum of Money for the Lord Argyle, a declared Traitor, for procuring Men and Arms for raiſing a Rebellion againſt his Majeſty, and invading his native Country of Scotland; and endeavoured to perſuade Argyle to take any Sum, rather than not engage in the Deſign.

That having aſſured his Correſpondents in Scotland, the Engliſh were reſolved to exclude the Duke of York from the Succeſſion, thereby to encourage them to promote the ſaid Rebellion and Excluſion; he entered into an intimate Correſpondence with Robert Ferguſon, Sir Thomas Armſtrong, Colonel Rumſey, and Walcot, who were concerned in that Part of the Conſpiracy, for aſſaſſinating his Majeſty and the Duke; and did ſet up ſeveral Nights with them in Conſultation about it.

To which Indictment the Priſoner pleading Not Guilty, an Aſſize or Jury was ſworn, conſiſting of the Earls of Strathmore and Balcarras, Sir George Skeen, and twelve Gentlemen more. A Jury of Fifteen impannelled.

The Counſel for the Priſoner objected, That he ought to have had fifteen Days Notice of Trial, which the Court over-ruled; declaring, That this was not the Practice where the Perſon accuſed was a Priſoner; but that he might be tried upon twenty-four Hours Notice. Objections of the Priſoner's Counſel to the Charge.

The Priſoner's Counſel alſo objected, That he had been proſecuted before the Council, and fined a conſiderable Sum for the ſame Offence; and therefore he ought not to be proſecuted again for it.

To which his Majeſty's Advocate replied, That he confined himſelf to ſuch Facts as were High-Treaſon, and not mentioned in that Deciſion of the Council: And this Objection was alſo over-ruled by the Court.

The Earl of Tarras being called as a Witneſs for the King, the Priſoner's Counſel objected, That the Earl was an Accomplice in the and the Witneſs.

the ſame Crime, and had confeſſed the Fact; and that he now came to give Evidence againſt the Priſoner, in order to merit his Pardon, and therefore was not a legal Witneſs: But the Court ruled, that in Caſes of Treaſon, Accomplices were legal Witneſſes, and ordered his Teſtimony to be received.

The Evidence.

Then the Earl of Tarras was ſworn, and depoſed, That the Priſoner went to London, and concerted Meaſures with the Engliſh Conſpirators, negotiating with them for a Sum of Money to enable the Earl of Argyle to raiſe Forces, and promote an Invaſion and Rebellion, as laid in the Indictment: That the Priſoner wrote the Deponent Word by one Martin, that the Earl of Argyle was to have 10,000 l. but his Countrymen at London would have had 30,000 l. for him) which was to be ſent over to Argyle in Holland to provide Arms; and he was to land in the Weſt Highlands of Scotland.

Alexander Monro confirmed the Teſtimony of the former Witneſs, adding, That Martin was ſent down to Scotland by a Club of the Conſpirators, (who met at the Priſoner's Chambers in London) to inform them, they ſhould not riſe, till there was a Riſing in England: And that on Martin's Return to England, the Priſoner told the Deponent, Matters were in ſuch a Condition in Scotland, that a little would kindle the Fire of Rebellion.

Mr. William Carſtairs teſtified, That the Priſoner was at London concerting Meaſures with the Engliſh Conſpirators about Chriſtmas, 1682. That he met the Priſoner at Mr. Shepherd's Houſe in London, where the Lord Ruſſel being preſent, the Deponent mentioned to his Lordſhip the Propoſal of 30,000 l. for the Earl of Argyle, and the raiſing a thouſand Horſe and Dragoons: And that the Lord Ruſſel told the Deponent, they could not raiſe ſo much at that Time; but if they had ten thouſand Pounds to begin with, that would draw People in; and when they were once in, they would ſoon be brought to more: But as to the thouſand Horſe and Dragoons, he could ſay nothing to it at preſent; that muſt be concerted on the Borders. That it was reſolved by the Scotiſh Agents in London, to ſend Martin to Scotland to deſire their Friends to hinder the Country from riſing, or taking raſh Reſolutions, till they ſaw how Matters went in England: And that the Deponent heard of the Deſign of killing the King and Duke from Mr. Shepherd, who told him ſome were full upon it. That the Deponent communicated the Deſign to Dr. Owen, Mr. Griffith, and Mr. Mede, of Stepney, Diſſenting Preachers, who all concurred in it.

Shepherd's Examination read as Evidence.

Then his Majeſty's Advocate produced the Examination of Thomas Shepherd, of London, Merchant, taken upon Oath the 23d of December 1683, before the Right Hon. Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

He depoſed, That Ferguſon told him about April laſt, that an Inſurrection was intended both in England and Scotland; and that for ſettling that Affair betwixt the two Nations, Mr. Baillie the Priſoner, Mr. Monro, Sir John Cockran, Sir Hugh and Sir George Campbel, and ſome others, were come to Town: That the Deponent had ſome Acquaintance with the Priſoner Mr. Monro, and Sir John Cockran: And that the Priſoner told the Deponent, Argyle demanded 30,000 l. of the Engliſh, to capacitate him to begin the Buſineſs in Scotland; and that the Priſoner told the Deponent, that having talked with the Lord Ruſſel and others, he found an Impoſſibility of raiſing that Sum; that afterwards the Priſoner acquainted the Deponent, they were certainly promiſed 10,000 l. which was agreed to be paid into the Deponent's Hands, in order to be remitted to Holland, for providing Arms. That both Sir John Cockran and the Priſoner lamented the Delays that were made in paying in the Money, and ſaid, They feared it would be too little, if it were paid in. And the Deponent being asked to explain what he meant by the Words to capacitate him, (Argyle) to begin the Buſineſs? He ſaid he underſtood by the Word Buſineſs, an Inſurrection in Scotland.

1684. 36 Car. II.

Bourn's Examination read as Evidence.

His Majeſty's Advocate alſo produced the Information of Zachary Bourn, of London, Brewer, taken upon Oath the 10th of December 1683, before the Right Hon. Mr. Secretary Jenkins.

This Informant depoſed, That Mr. Baillie, the Priſoner, ſat up one Night, if not two, with Mr. Ferguſon, and went ſeveral Times in the Evening with him to the Duke of Monmouth, and the chief Managers of the Conſpiracy; that Ferguſon told the Deponent, that he, the ſaid Baillie, was the chief Man for the Scots, next to the Lord Argyle: That the ſaid Baillie did ſit up the greateſt Part of one Night with the ſaid Ferguſon; at which Time the Deponent believes they were buſy in preparing the intended Declaration; for that Ferguſon was about to ſhew the Deponent ſuch a Paper; but Company came up and prevented him: That Ferguſon told the Deponent, That the main Buſineſs of the ſaid Baillie, in meeting the ſaid Conſpirators, was, to get from them the 10,000 l. promiſed, for the buying Arms for the Inſurrection intended in Scotland.

His Majeſty's Advocate likewiſe produced ſeveral Warrants and Papers to prove that thoſe Depoſitions were ſigned by Sir Leolin Jenkins: And having ſummed up the Evidence, the Jury withdrew, and, on the 24th of December, brought in their Verdict, That the Priſoner was GUILTY of the Treaſons with which he was charged in the Indictment; and thereupon he received Sentence to be executed as a Traytor at the Market-Croſs in Edinburgh; and he was executed accordingly the ſame Afternoon.

He is convicted;

and executed.

Biſhop Burnet, in his firſt Volume of Poſthumous Hiſtory, reflects very ſeverely on the Government for trying and executing this Malcontent, his Kinſman and Countryman; but if it be obſerved, that there were upon his Jury two Nobleman, and thirteen Gentlemen of Quality, who unanimouſly found him guilty of the Treaſons he was charged with, though a Majority had been ſufficient to have convicted him by the Laws of Scotland; and that the Facts were proved beyond all Diſpute by Witneſſes that were known Friends of the Party. It is not eaſy to conceive what that Right Reverend Prelate could found his Clamours upon. I am apt to think his greateſt Quarrel to theſe Proceedings was, that they laid open and confirmed the Guilt of the Engliſh Conſpirators, with whom he himſelf appears to have been pretty cloſely engaged. It is obſervable, that the Biſhop touches upon the Evidence given at this Trial very ſlightly, chuſing rather to dwell upon the Hardſhips Baillie endured in Priſon, in order to move the Compaſſion of his Readers: And this is his conſtant Practice, when Facts are too evident to be denied, to ſlide them over, and endeavour to captivate the Mob with lamentable Relations of the Priſoner's Sufferings. He ſeems alſo to mention it as a Grievance, that Baillie was executed the ſame Afternoon Sentence paſſed upon him: But this was the uſual Practice in Scotland: And poſſibly they may not be much in the Wrong; for when a Criminal knows his Death is ſo near and certain, in caſe he is caſt, he will probably be the leſs likely to prevaricate and trifle with his Judges; and the truth may more eaſily be diſcovered, than where the Criminal has a Week or a Fortnight's Time allowed him, and an Opportunity of applying for a Pardon, or perhaps of making his Eſcape.

1684. 36 Car. II. Diſney's Treaſon.

The next Paper we meet with, bound up among the State Trials, is called The Trial of William Diſney, Eſq; but in Truth there is nothing of the Trial there. The Compilers of that 7th Volume of Trials only tell us, he was tried by a ſpecial Commiſſion of Oyer and Terminer at the Marſhalſea in Southwark, on the 25th of June 1685. That he was indicted for printing and publiſhing a Treaſonable Paper againſt his Majeſty and the Government, entitled, The Declaration of James Duke of Monmouth, and the Noblemen, Gentlemen, and others, now in Arms, &c. That the Evidence was plain againſt him; and that the Priſoner making little or no Defence, was found guilty of High Treaſon, received Sentence of Death, and was executed at Kennington-Common in Surry, on Monday the 29th of June 1685. Such imperfect Pieces have the Collectors of the 7th and 8th Volumes of Trials thought fit to introduce into that Work, in which, no doubt, they were governed by their Maſters the Bookſellers, who are for putting in every thing that may enlarge the Volume and enhance the Price, where they know there are ſome good things in the firſt Part of a Work that will carry off the additional Rubbiſh.

Oates's firſt Trial for Perjury.

His Challenges.

THE Defendant was permitted to ſit within the Bar, that he might the more conveniently order his Papers, and manage his Defence. The Jurors being called, he challenged ſome of them, becauſe they had been upon the Grand Jury, and found the Bill againſt him; which was allowed to be a good Cauſe of Challenge.

The Names of the twelve that were ſworn, were,

The Jury.

Sir William Dodſon,	Robert Bedingfield,
Sir Edmund Wiſeman,	Thomas Rawlinſon,
Richard Aley,	Roger Reeves,
Thomas Fowlis,	Ambroſe Iſted,
Thomas Blackmore,	Henry Collier, and
Peter Pickering,	Richard Howard.

The Indictment.

The Indictment charged the Defendant with artful and corrupt Perjury, in that he had, on the 17th of December 1678, ſworn, there was a treaſonable Conſult of Jeſuits held at the White-horſe Tavern in the Strand, in the County of Middleſex, the 24th of April in the ſaid Year 1678, at which the Jeſuits Whitebread, Fenwick, and Ireland, the ſaid Titus Oates, and forty or fifty more Jeſuits, were preſent; and that they ſeparated themſelves into ſeveral Companies, or Clubs, and came to a Reſolution to murder the King: And that he, the ſaid Titus Oates, carried the ſaid Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſigned by the ſaid Jeſuits; whereas in Truth and Fact, he, the ſaid Titus Oates, was not preſent at any ſuch Conſult on the 24th of April 1678, nor carried any ſuch Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber to be ſigned: And ſo the ſaid Titus Oates, on the ſaid 17th of December 1678, did commit willful and corrupt Perjury.

The King's Counſel, having opened the Indictment, proceeded to produce their Evidence: And firſt the Record of Ireland's Conviction was read; then Mr. Foſter was ſworn, and gave the following Teſtimony, (viz.)

Foſter's Evidence.

I was ſo unhappy to be on that Jury by whom Mr. Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, were tried in December 78. I ſaw Mr. Oates ſworn as an Evidence for the King; and he depoſed, That there was a Meeting of ſeveral Jeſuits at the White-horſe Tavern in the Strand, upon the 24th of April 1678; and that Mr. Ireland, Whitebread, and Fenwick, were preſent at the Meeting, and that there they did conſult the Death of the King, and the altering of of Religion; and ſome went, and others came. At laſt they reduced themſelves into ſeveral ſmaller Companies or Clubs, and came to a Reſolution, that Pickering and Grove ſhould aſſaſſinate the King; for which the one was to have 1500 Pounds, and the other 30,000 Maſſes ſaid for him; and that this Reſolution was drawn up by one Mico, and he (Oates) himſelf, went with it to ſeveral of their Chambers: He went to Whitebread's Chamber, and ſaw Whitebread ſign it: He went to Fenwick's Chamber, and ſaw Fenwick ſign it; and went to Ireland's Chamber, and ſaw Ireland ſign it, upon the 24th of April, 78. I am poſitive in this, becauſe I took Notes at the Trial, being a Juryman; and afterwards compared them with the Trial, and found they agreed; and I have kept theſe Notes by me ever ſince.

Oates demanded, if he ſwore they reſolved to kill the King, at the White-horſe Tavern, or that Reſolution was made after they ſeparated into leſſer Clubs: Mr. Foſter anſwered, They came to a Reſolution, you ſaid, at the White-horſe Tavern; and it was there drawn up by one Mico, I think; and it was carried by you for every one to ſign it from Chamber to Chamber; for, I remember, you were asked the Queſtion, Whether you ſaw them ſign it? And you anſwered, That you did carry it, and ſaw them ſign it.

Oates demanded, how he came to remember all this after ſo long Time: Mr. Foſter anſwered, Truly it is ſo long ago, that had I not taken theſe Notes at the Trial, I had not been able to give ſo good an Account.

Omers Students their Evidence.

Then about twenty Gentlemen, who were Students at the Engliſh College at St. Omers, when Mr. Oates was a Student there, depoſed, That they were ſure he was at the ſaid College from Chriſtmas to June 1678, and was not abſent from the College during that Time, unleſs a Day or two in January, when he went to Watton, a Town in that Neighbourhood: And theſe Witneſſes mentioned ſuch Circumſtances to confirm their Teſtimony, as ſhewed they could not eaſily be miſtaken; as that Mr. Oates always dined at a Table by himſelf in the College-hall; for, being a Man in Years, he pretended he could not eat as the young Students did, and therefore ſat at a little Table by himſelf, next to the Table of the Fathers, to which all the Students made their Reverence before they ſat down. Others depoſed, he was appointed Reader in the Sodality, and that he read there at the ſame Time he had ſworn he was in London, except a few Days he was in the Infirmary. Others remembered he was at St. Omers at that Time, by his being with them at certain Sports and Recreations they uſed then; and ſeveral more by other Circumſtances. And when the printed Trial of the Jeſuits was brought over to St. Omers, they were amazed to find Oates ſwear he was at a Conſult at London the 24th of April, when the whole College knew he was at St. Omers. Haggerſtone depoſed, That there was, indeed, a Congregation of the Jeſuits held in London in April 78, as was uſual, once in three Years, to chuſe a Procurator, and other Buſineſs relating to the Society: And that he ſaw two of the Fathers go from St. Omers to that Congregation; but he remembered very well that Oates remained there then, for he frequented his Company all that Time; and when the Fathers, viz. Mr. Williams and Mr. Marſh, returned to St. Omers, the Defendant, Oates, asked this Witneſs, if they had been at the Conſult? Others depoſed, That Oates was ſo remarkable for his Stories and ridiculous Actions, and quarrelling with every Body in the College, that if he had been out of the College ſo long as to go to London, and back again, every body muſt have miſſed him.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Lord Gerrard, who was a Student at St. Omers when the Defendant was there, depoſed, That Oates came to St. Omers in December 77, and he never heard he was abſent till June 78, and that he remembered him particularly the 25th of March 78, when Mr. Oates deſired to be appointed Reader to the Sodality, and that he was conſtant in his reading on Sundays and Holidays for five or ſix Weeks: That he remembered his being confirmed by a Catholick Biſhop, who was there, on St. Auſtin's Day, the 26th of May, N. S. That when the News of the Plot's being diſcovered came to St. Omers, it was wondered at by all the Scholars, how Oates could be ſo impudent to pretend he was at ſuch a Conſult the 24th of April 78, when all the College ſaw him every Day in April and May at St. Omers, as much as a Man could be ſeen in a Family; and that no Scholar came or went away but it was the common News of the Houſe.

Mr. Samuel Morgan, a beneficed Clergyman of the Church of England, depoſed, that he was a Student at St. Omers in the Year 78, and had been five Years reconciled to the Church of England: That he remembered Oates came to St. Omers about a Fortnight before Chriſtmas 77, and went away in June 78, and did not remember he was abſent during that Time, except one Night at Watton: That Ireland's Trial being brought to the College, wherein it was ſaid, Mr. Oates had ſworn the 24th of April 78, he was at a Conſult of the Jeſuits at the White-horſe Tavern, where they reſolved to kill the King; having it then freſh in his Memory, he found Oates was at St. Omers that very Day, by a particular Circumſtance; for he was playing at Ball that Day, and ſtruck the Ball over into a Court, and borrowed Mr. Oates's Key to fetch it.

Oates Defence

The Court directing Mr. Oates to enter upon his Defence, he objected to the Indictment, that the Aſſignment of the Perjury did not purſue the Oath, as it was ſet forth; for in the one Place the Word was ſignand', and in the other ſignat'; and if it were ſignat' in the Evidence that was given, it ought to be ſignat in the Perjury aſſigned. The Court told him that they were then upon the Fact, and that this Objection would be ſaved to him if he were convicted, but it was not proper now. Beſides, he ſhould remember, there were two Perjuries aſſigned; the one upon the firſt Part of his Oath, viz. That he was preſent at a Conſult the 24th of April 78, Ubi re vera, he

1685. 1 Jac. II.

he was not there; and if he were forſworn in that Point, it would eaſily be believed he was forſworn in the other Point, viz. That he did not carry the Reſolution from Chamber to Chamber, &c.

In the next Place, he deſired the Opinion of the Court, Whether the Evidence did prove the Words he was ſaid to ſwear, as they were laid in the Indictment?

The Court anſwered, they thought them fully proved; but that was a Point of Fact which the Jury were to try.

Then the Defendant produced a Copy of the Record of Ireland's Conviction; which was proved to be a true Copy by Mr. Percival: And he deſired to have Counſel aſſigned him to argue this Point of Law, viz. Whether the Convictions and Attainders of Ireland and Whitebread, of a treaſonable Conſult the 24th of April, 78, ought not to be taken as a legal Proof of the Fact, ſo long as thoſe Attainders remained in Force? And whether the Averment of their being falſe, ought to be received againſt thoſe Records?

The Court anſwered, That though that remained a good Record, and unimpeachable ſtill; yet it was lawful to ſay, The Verdict was obtained upon the Teſtimony of ſuch a one, who forſwore himſelf; and for that particular Perjury the Offender might be proſecuted.

Oates. If your Lordſhip rules that for Law, I will go on: And firſt, I ſhall ſubmit it to your Conſideration, Why the Preſentment, and the finding this Bill for Perjury, has been ſo long delayed; ſince it appears, that the ſame Witneſſes were at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, or might have been produced then? And I muſt obſerve, that my Caſe is very hard, ſeeing the Subſtance of my Teſtimony received ſuch Credit, that the Jury were told, upon bringing in their Verdict, That all the Objections againſt the Evidence, were then fully anſwered: That there was nothing that the Priſoners had been wanting in to object, which could be objected; and that the Thing was as clear as the Sun: And yet, after ſix Years time, I muſt be called in Queſtion for Perjury, in my Teſtimony of that Part of the Popiſh Plot with which the King and Kingdom, four ſucceſſive Parliaments, all the Judges of England, and three Juries, were ſo well ſatisfied. The Evidence I gave, they induſtriouſly endeavoured to falſify ſix Years ago, by ſixteen St. Omers Youths, who were examined at Whitebread's and Langhorn's Trials, in neither of which were they believed, becauſe of their Religion and Education, and becauſe their Inſtructors were Men of known Artifice; and if my Evidence were true then, it muſt needs be ſo ſtill; for Truth is always the ſame: And I deſire your Lordſhip and the Jury would obſerve, that though the King's Counſel are againſt me now, yet they are alſo againſt themſelves. Mr. Sollicitor was Counſel for the King at Langhorn's Trial; and Sir Robert Sawyer, at Sir George Wakeman's: And can it be ſuppoſed, that it is the Love of publick Juſtice, that is the Cauſe of this Attempt to falſify my Evidence, after ſo many Trials, in which it has been credited and confirmed? Can any thing tend more to ſubvert the Methods of Juſtice, and frighten Witneſſes from diſcovering Conſpiracies? Had the King, his Peers, his Commons and Judges, no Honour, no Juſtice or Underſtanding? Shall thoſe Juries be ſaid to have drawn the innocent Blood of thoſe Men upon their own Heads, and the Nation? As if I am perjured, it muſt be innocent Blood that was ſhed upon it.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Court. Neither Judges or Jury have any Share in that Blood: That is your own moſt certainly.

Oates. My Lord, if you pleaſe to give me Leave to proceed in my Evidence, I deſire theſe Records of Conviction may be read, which are my firſt Proof of the Conſult; and I ſhall then bring Witneſſes, viva voce, to prove what I did ſwear at thoſe Trials was true.

L. C. J. The Queſtion now is, Not whether there was a Conſult; but whether you can prove your ſelf to be here on the 24th of April, 78? At which Time it is agreed on all Hands, there was a Conſult, as is uſual, once in three Years.

Oates. I ſhall not go about to prove, that I was not then at St. Omers; but that I was actually in London: But to introduce this, it will be neceſſary for me to read the Records of Conviction of Whitebread and Ireland.

Then the Record of Ireland's Conviction was read in Engliſh.

Oates. Now read Whitebread's Attainder; I will not trouble the Court with the whole Record.

Clerk of the Crown. Thomas White, alias Whitebread, William Harcourt, alias Harriſon, John Fenwick, John Gavan, and Anthony Turner, were found guilty of High-Treaſon, and attainted; and Execution awarded againſt them upon that Attainder.

Oates. Now I ſhall prove, That at the Trial of Ireland, I gave ſo ſatisfactory an Evidence againſt Whitebread and Fenwick, that my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid, It might be ſufficient to ſatisfy a private Conſcience, though it was not a legal Proof, there being but one Witneſs.

To which Mr. Blaney was called.

He depoſed, That he had looked upon his Notes, but could not find exactly the Words that Mr. Oates repeated to him; but there was ſomething to that Purpoſe.

Oates. Did not my Lord Chief Baron ſay to the Jaylor, You muſt underſtand they are no way acquitted, the Evidence is ſo full againſt them by Mr. Oates's Teſtimony, that there is no Reaſon to acquit them: It is as flat as by one Witneſs can be?

Blaney. There is ſuch a Paſſage in my Notes.

Oates. See what my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid in ſumming up the Evidence againſt Ireland, viz. When the Matter is accompanied with ſo many other Circumſtances, which are material Things, and cannot be evaded or denied, it is impoſſible almoſt, for any Man, either to make ſuch a Story, or not to believe it when it is told.

Blaney.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Blaney. I find ſuch a Paſſage in my Notes.

Oates. And in ſumming up the Evidence againſt Ireland, Pickering and Grove, had he not this Expreſſion; You have done, Gentlemen, live very good Subjects, and very good Chriſtians, and like very good Proteſtants; and now much good may their 30000 Maſſes do them?

Blaney. There is ſuch an Expreſſion in my Notes.

Oates. Have you the Notes of Whitebread's Trial?

Blaney. No, I have them not here.

Oates. Then I muſt deſire the printed Trials may be read.

L. C. J. No, they are no Evidence.

Oates. Then give me leave to mention what your Lordſhip ſaid about your Satisfaction with the Evidence: You were then Recorder of London.

L. C. J. Ay, with all my Heart: And whatever I ſaid I will own.

Oates. Will your Lordſhip pleaſe to be ſworn then?

L. C. J. No, there will be no need for that; I will own any thing I ſaid then.

Oates. When your Lordſhip gave Judgment of Death upon the five Jeſuits and Langhorn, ſpeaking of the Objections that had been made againſt the Evidence, you ſaid, Your ſeveral Crimes have been proved againſt you; you have been fully heard, and ſtand convicted of thoſe Crimes you have been indicted for.

L. C. J. I believe I might ſpeak to the ſame Purpoſe.

Oates. And when the Jury brought in their Verdict againſt the five Jeſuits, you ſaid, Gentlemen, There has been a long Evidence againſt the Priſoners; they were all indicted, arraigned, and tried for High-Treaſon, depending upon ſeveral Circumſtances. They can none of them ſay, the Court refuſed to hear any Thing they could ſay for themſelves; but upon a long Evidence, and a patient Hearing of the Defence they made, they are found Guilty; and for any thing appears to us, it is a juſt Verdict you have given.

L. C. J. I might ſay ſomething to that Purpoſe at that time; and no doubt, as the Caſe then ſtood, the Jury did find an unexceptionable Verdict.

Oates. And, my Lord, when you were Counſel for the King in Colledge's Trial at Oxford, addreſſing yourſelf to the Jury, you had this Expreſſion: We come not here to trip up the Heels of the Popiſh Plot, by ſaying, That any of them who ſuffered for it, died contrary to Law.

L. C. J. Deceive not yourſelf; all this you have inſiſted on hitherto, has not been to the Purpoſe, or is any ſort of Evidence in this Caſe. What my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs ſaid at any of thoſe Trials, or what I ſaid, or any other Perſon who was Counſel or Judge upon the Bench; it was but our Opinion on the Fact, as it occurred to our preſent Apprehenſions, and is no Evidence or Binding to this Jury. And there is no doubt, but thoſe Juries did believe the Evidence you gave then, or they would not have convicted the Priſoners. I do not diſcommend you for inſinuating theſe Things, as introductive and preparative to your Defence; but it is no Evidence one way or other. We have many times, in Weſtminſter-Hall, Verdict againſt Verdict: And in theſe Caſes, we give our Opinions according to the preſent Teſtimony that is before us.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Oates. If then I prove, my Lord, that Ireland was engaged in a Deſign againſt the late King's Life, and was a Prieſt and a Jeſuit; will not this be a collateral Evidence to render my Credit ſufficient, and ſupport my Teſtimony?

L. C. J. It may give ſome Credit to your Teſtimony; but it is not, of it ſelf, ſufficient upon this Indictment. Nay, I will ſuppoſe there was a Conſult of Jeſuits in the Strand, the 24th of April, 78, where theſe, you ſay, were all preſent, and did come to the Reſolution you mention; and yet you will not be innocent if you were not there too, as you ſwear. Therefore give us ſome Teſtimony, to ſatisfy us you were there, if you would ſet all right again. Call two or three Witneſſes, to prove you were in Town the 22d, 23d, or 24 of April, it would be the beſt Defence you could make.

Oates. I will follow your Directions, my Lord.

Oates. Then Cecilia Mayo was ſworn.

Oates. Pray give the Court an Account, if you did not ſee me in London the latter End of April, or the Beginning of May, 1678?

Oates's Evidence, to prove he was at London at the Conſult.

Mayo. My Lord, I ſaw him the latter End of April, at my Maſter, Sir Richard Barker's, where I then lived; and he came thither again in a few Days: I remember it by this Circumſtance; Sir Richard was ſick all the Month of April, and in the Country, and came to Town but now and then; and Mr. Oates came when he was abſent: And a young Man that lived in the Houſe, came and told me, there was Mr. Oates in a ſtrange Diſguiſe, and he believed he was turned Quaker. I had never ſeen Mr. Oates before then.

L. C. J. How do you know that to be Mr. Oates then?

Mayo. The Family knew him, and they told me it was he. My Lord, he came three or four Days afterwards to the Houſe, and then the young Man came and told me, Parſon Oates was turned Jeſuit: And coming to Sir Richard's Lady's Siſter, ſhe ſaid to him, I hear you are turned Jeſuit, and we can have no Society with you now; but he ſtaid Dinner with them, and moſt part of the Day. Then he came the latter End of May: Whitſuntide was in May that Year, and I know he came the ſecond time before Whitſuntide; for we uſed to Waſh and Scour before that Time; and I was ſending to a Woman to help Waſh and Scour, when the young Man told me he was there.

L. C. J. What was the Name of that young Man you ſpeak of?

Mayo. His Name was Benjamin; but he is dead.

L. C. J. Is Sir Richard Barker living?

Mayo. He is, my Lord; but he is not well, or he would have been here.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

L. C. J. Who dined with him when he dined there?

Mayo. There was my Lady's Sister, Madam Thurrel, and her two Sons: She is in Wales, but her Sons are dead.— There was one Dr. Cocket too, who is in Wales at present. And there were two of my Lady's Daughters, that are living in Lincolnshire, I think.

L. C. J. It is a great Misfortune to have so many dead, or so far remote.

Oates. My Lord, six Years makes a great Alteration in a Family.

Att. Gen. Mr. Oates has had Time enough to send for his Witnesses, for he has had Notice of his Trial this half Year. Pray, Mrs. Mayo, What coloured Cloaths had Mr. Oates when you saw him first?

Mayo. He had a whitish Hat, and coloured Cloaths.

John Butler, Coachman to Sir Richard Barker, deposed, That, as he remembered, the first Time he saw Mr. Oates was in May (78,) before the Plot was discovered, That he came to his Master's in a Disguise, having a white Hat flapping over his Eyes, his Hair cut close to his Ears, and a grey short Coat on; and the next Time he saw him at his Master's he had a Cinnamon-coloured Coat, a long black Peruke, a black Hat with a green Ribbon, and green Cuff-strings at his Wrists; and that he dined at his Master's about seven Times.

The Chief Justice then demanding of Mrs. Mayo, Butler's Fellow Servant, how often Oates dined at her Master's Sir Richard Barker's, affirmed, He dined there but once, and that he had on a grey Coat, a grey Hat, and a short brown Wig; and that he afterwards came in black Cloaths, and a long brown Peruke.

The Chief Justice observing there were several Contradictions in their Evidence, Oates said, These Things were very lean Stuff to perjure a Witness upon: That his Lordship was not so strict with the St. Omers Witnesses, And what did it signify, Whether the Wig were long, or short, black or brown?

The Chief Justice replied, There was no other Way to detect Perjury, but by such Circumstances: In Susanna's Case the Perjury was discovered by Circumstances.

Philip Page deposed, That he was Servant to Sir Richard Barker, and Oates came thither disguised in a light-coloured Coat, a broad-brimmed Hat, and his Hair cut short to his Ears, and asked him for Dr. Tongue and Sir Richard; and he thought this was in May 78; but could not be positive what Month or Year it was.

Mr. Walker deposed, He met Oates between St. Martin's-lane and Leicester-fields, in a Disguise, between Lady-day and the latter end of April, 78.

The Chief Justice demanded, where he lodged or dieted all that while he pretended to be in Town? Oates answered, That was not now the Question. If he proved he was not at St. Omers in the Months of April and May, but here in London, he proved the St. Omer's Evidence to be false; and it was not to be expected, as he was engaged among Papists, and afterwards an Evidence to discover their Treasons, they would come to testify any thing in his Behalf now. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

Then he called the Earl of Huntington as a Witness for him, and desired his Lordship would give an Account, What Credit he had in the House of Lords upon his Discovery.

The Earl answered, He believed Mr. Oates found a good Reception in the House of Lords, which was founded upon an Opinion, that he was an honest Man; but since that Time it appearing there were so many and great Contradictions, Falsities, and Perjuries in his Evidence, upon which so much innocent Blood had been shed, he believed a great many that were concerned in the Trials of those unfortunate Persons were heartily afflicted and sorry for their Share in it: And he believed, most of the House of Peers had altered their Opinion of this Man's Credit, and looked upon his Evidence to be very false.

Mr. Oates called a great many other Persons of Quality, Peers, Judges, and Commoners; some of whom did not appear, and the rest testified nothing to his Advantage, but rather the contrary; particularly, the Lord Chief Baron, of whom Oates desired, That his Lordship would declare the Satisfaction he received concerning the Fairness and Fullness of the Evidence given at the Trials of Whitebread and Langhorne. To which the Chief Baron answered, There were a great many Persons, and Gentlemen of good Families, who came from St. Omers, and gave Evidence of Mr. Oates's being there when he said he was in London. Oates demanding further, If the Jury believed them at that Time? the Chief Baron answered, he could not tell what the Jury did, but he never had any great Faith in Mr. Oates himself: Whereupon Oates replied, He was not at all concerned at this: He valued himself more upon his Innocency and Integrity than any Man's good Opinion whatever: He would stand to what he had sworn with his last Breath, and seal it, if Occasion was, with his Blood. The chief Justice answering, It were Pity but that it were to be done by his Blood, Oates replyed, Ah, my Lord, I know why all this is, and so may the World very easily too; but this will not do to make the Plot disbelieved.

Oates's subornation of Witnesses to support the Credit of the Plot.

The King's Counsel then called Mr. Smith to depose, That Oates suborned him to perjure himself: But the Chief Justice refused to hear the Testimony of a Man who came to swear he had perjured himself at a former Trial.

Then they produced Witnesses, who proved that Oates would have suborned Clay at the Trial of the five Jesuits.

Mr. Haward deposed, That Clay was not at Dinner at his House in May 78, as Clay had deposed.

And a Paragraph of Oates's Narrative was read, wherein he had sworn, That he returned to St. Omers, three or four Days after the Consult at the White-horse.

Whereupon Mr. Attorney observed, That Oates's Witnesses swore he was in London the latter end of May; which could not be true, if Oates himself swore true in his Narrative.

Then

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Then a Reſolution of the Houſe of Lords was read, at Oates's Deſire, importing, That they believed the Popiſh Plot.

And another Reſolution, for taking up Capt. Berkley, for villifying Oates's Evidence.

He proceeds in his Defence

Being directed to go on with his Defence, he objected, That the Papiſts were not legal Witneſſes, becauſe they were Parties in the Cauſe; and deſired Counſel to argue that Point of Law. To which the Chief Juſtice anſwering, That was no Point of Law, Oates appealed to all his Hearers, if he had Juſtice done him. The Lord Chief Juſtice then replied, He was an impudent Fellow; he muſt appeal to none but the Court and the Jury: They ſhould ſtop his Mouth if he did not behave himſelf as he ought: He would ſuffer none of his Commonwealth Appeals to the Mob.

Oates then objected, That the Witneſſes were bred up in Seminaries, againſt Law: The Chief Juſtice replied, Every Man that was bred a Diſſenter was bred up againſt Law.

He inſiſted, That a Witneſs for the King could not be indicted of Perjury, or the Plot called in queſtion now.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, This was nothing to the Purpoſe. After which, Mr. Oates proceeded to ſum up the Evidence for himſelf, and obſerved, That Mrs. Mayo came and gave her Evidence voluntarily, without any Hopes of a Reward, but out of a Love to Juſtice; and therefore inſinuated, that her Teſtimony was not to be ſuſpected; for People ſeldom perjured themſelves, but where there was Malice or Intereſt in the Caſe. Then he repeated the Evidence of Butler and Page, and ſaid, He had ſubpœna'd Sir Richard Barker, to confirm the Evidence of theſe People. And he did expect that Mr. Smith would have been examined: But he perceived the Court were render of that Point, as knowing, it would then eaſily have been ſeen, upon which Side he was ſuborned.

Court. It was to do you Right, we refuſed to have him ſworn; but if you conſent to it, he ſhall be examined ſtill.

Oates. My Lord, the Evidence on which I am indicted for Perjury, is the ſame that was given ſix Years ago. There was there ſixteen Witneſſes produced againſt me; but what Credit did they receive? Now, if the Evidence I gave then was to be believed, though oppoſed by ſo many Witneſſes, what new Objection does ariſe, which was not then urged, and received an Anſwer? And I hope thoſe Paſſages of Heat, that have fallen from me, ſhall not make me fare the worſe in your Judgment. I called ſome Noble Lords to teſtify for me; but either the Diſtance of Time has wrought upon their Memories, or the Difference of the Seaſon has changed their Opinion: So that they now disbelieve what they believed before, and perhaps for as little Reaſon as ———

L. C. J. As they believed you at firſt.

Oates. Yes, truly, my Lord; for I cannot expect, that a Man who believes without a Principle, ſhould not recant that Belief without a Reaſon ——— I name no body.

L. C. J. But the Nobility, that are preſent, and have been Witneſſes in this Cauſe, are all Perſons of that Honour, that the Court is bound to vindicate them from theſe ſcandalous Reflections; but only I think, a Slander from your Mouth is very little Scandal.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Oates. Nor from ſomebody's elſe neither: I find, my Lord, I am not to be heard with Patience.

L. C. J. You do not deſerve to be heard at all: Can't you ſpeak without Reflections?

Oates. Was ever Man dealt with as I am? Or had ſuch Evidence offered againſt him? Here are the Youths of St. Omers Seminary, Sir George Wakeman, and my Lord Caſtlemain, known Papiſts; and perhaps Popiſh Recuſants convict too. And the Record of my Lord's Acquittal is brought as an Evidence of my being perjured; when all the World knows, he came off, becauſe there was but one Witneſs againſt him. And Wakeman's Acquittal too is brought, and he ſwears, That what I depoſed againſt him was falſe; but had it not been for two diſhoneſt Perſons, (one of them is now in my Sight) we could at that Time have proved five thouſand Pound paid him, and that he gave a Receipt for it. This, I am ſure, had I been a Witneſs for the Fanatick Plot; I had never been queſtioned, though my Evidence had been falſe: But the Papiſts have now a Turn to ſerve, and come to bear this Teſtimony on purpoſe to falſify my Evidence, and bring off the Popiſh Lords, who now ſtand impeached of High-Treaſon. But, I hope, as the Court would never admit Indictments of Perjury againſt the Witneſſes in my Lord Shaftesbury's Caſe, ſo you will not admit it here. My Lord, it is not me they proſecute, but the whole Proteſtant Intereſt. Do they not, hereby, arraign the Proceedings of ſeveral Parliaments? of all the Courts of Juſtice, and the Verdicts of thoſe Juries that convicted the Traitors? For my Part, I care not what becomes of me; but the Truth will one Time or other appear: And ſince I have not the Liberty to argue what is moſt material for my Defence, I appeal to the great God of Heaven and Earth, and once more in his Preſence, and before this Auditory do avow, That my Evidence of the Popiſh Plot is true in every Part of it, and will expect from Almighty God the Vindication of my Integrity and Innocence. Having concluded his Defence, He ſaid, he was troubled with the Gout and Stone, and deſired that he might not be put in Irons again, he being only a Debtor to the King upon a Civil Account; and if he were convicted on theſe Indictments, he could be but in Execution for a Treſpaſs; and therefore thought he ought not to be ſo handled. The Marſhall informed the Court, That it was but the laſt Night, Ropes were brought into his Chamber to favour his Eſcape. Then the Court directed he ſhould be kept in ſalva & arcta Cuſtodia.

Then Mr. Sollicitor ſummed up the Evidence for the King; but, before he had made any great Progreſs, Mr. Oates ſaid, he was ill, and deſired Leave of the Court to withdraw.

Then Mr. Sollicitor proceeded; and having ſummed up the Evidence that had been given for the King, he obſerved, That, of the 20 Witneſſes 1685. 1 Jac. II. Witneſſes produced, not above two or three of them were at the former Trials; though, indeed, they teſtified the ſame Things that were atteſted then; but with many other Circumſtances and Particulars. That to this, indeed, Oates had objected, that ſeveral Witneſſes came from St. Omers before, but were not believed; but that the Men were convicted, condemned and executed upon his Teſtimony. That he had alſo brought a Counter-proof, and endeavoured to ſhew, he was actually in England, when the St. Omers Witneſſes had ſworn him to be in the College.

As to the Evidence of Page, Mr. Sollicitor obſerved, That he was not poſitive either to the Month or Year he ſaw Mr. Oates; and as for Walker, the Parſon, he being asked, what Circumſtances he knew the Time by, ſaid, It was a Year and a Quarter before the Plot was diſcovered; which was a Year before Oates pretended to be at the Conſult; and therefore could do him no Service.

As to the Evidence of Mrs. Mayo, and Butler, he obſerved, they contradicted one another: For ſhe depoſed, That the firſt Time Oates came, ſhe did not ſee him; and Butler ſwears, ſhe looked out of the Window, and did ſee him as well as he: And, ſhe ſaid, he was in grey cloaths, a white Hat, and a ſhort Peruke; and Butler ſaid, he had no Peruke, but his Hair cut ſhort to his Ears. Then, the ſecond Time, ſhe ſwears, he was in black cloaths, and an indifferent long Peruke, and that the Peruke was brown. And Butler ſwears, he was in Cinnamon-coloured Cloaths, and a long black Peruke; ſo that the Witneſſes could not be reconciled to one another. He obſerved too, That ſhe had ſworn, Oates was at her Maſter's a Week before Whitſuntide, which was the 19th of May: And this contradicted Mr. Gerrard's Teſtimony, who ſwears, they were both confirmed the 16th, at St. Omers; which was ſo remarkable a Circumſtance, that there was no Room to think Mr. Gerrard miſtaken.

And farther, That Mr. Oates himſelf had contradicted his own Witneſſes; for he had ſworn he went over with the Fathers three or four Days after the Conſult, which was the 24th of April; and they atteſt that he was here in the Middle of May: And if it ſhould be admitted the Conſult continued five or ſix Days, as he had ſuggeſted, yet that would not bring it to the Time they had ſworn to.

That falſe Witneſſes were often detected by ſmall Circumſtances, but that theſe were very remarkable; and it was impoſſible they could both ſwear true.

That the Evidence of Clay the Prieſt, on which ſuch Streſs was laid at a former Trial, was not only taken away by Mr. Howard's Teſtimony, but the additional Crime of Subornation was now fixed upon Oates, who it appeared, had threatned Clay he would hang him, if he did not ſwear what he ſuggeſted to him: And it was well known what Fears ſuch People lay under at that time.

That it was impoſſible Mr. Oates could be ſo long in Town as he pretended, and be ſeen by no body but thoſe few Perſons he mentioned, conſidering his large Acquaintance; and that he appeared ſo publickly, as his Witneſſes depoſed. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

That though he had lodged at the Houſes of Perſons that did not care to give their Evidence in this Matter, yet it was ſtrange he could not produce one Circumſtance to prove his Lodgings at any Place, during that Time, if he could not have the Teſtimony of the Landlord of the Houſe: And that none of thoſe he had converſed with, or was intimate withal, ſhould ſee him, or be able to give an Account of him, was one of the ſtrangeſt things in the World.

That indeed he inſiſted upon it, That the calling his Credit in queſtion, was to arraign the Juſtice of the Nation, the Wiſdom of the Parliament, and the Honeſty of the Juries, who convicted thoſe he had accuſed. But the Sollicitor urged, That if the Thing was duly conſidered, the not puniſhing this heinous Offence with the utmoſt Severity the Law would allow, now theſe Circumſtances had appeared to make it evident, would be a much more greater Reproach to the Nation.

That it was ſtrange, indeed, that the Defendant ſhould ever obtain that Credit he once had: But it was not then imagined, that any Man on Earth could become ſo impudent as to expoſe himſelf before the High Court of Parliament, and the great Courts of Juſtice, and there tell a moſt infamous Lie, to deprive Men of their Lives. The Hardineſs of the Attempt, was one great Inducement to the Belief of it; becauſe no Man could be preſumed to dare the doing of ſuch a Thing, if he had not had ſome Foundation of Truth to build upon. And when he had made this Diſcovery of a moſt horrid and bloody Conſpiracy, to murder the King, overturn the Government, and maſſacre all the Proteſtants in the Kingdom; it was natural enough for the Parliament to be alarmed, and take all imaginable Care to prevent the Accompliſhment of ſo much Miſchief. If we conſider too, how much eaſier it was for him to relate his Evidence in a continued Story, than afterwards it was to maintain it, when he was oppoſed by them that were accuſed, who beſt knew by what Means to prove him falſe.

That the Care the Parliament took to diſappoint any Deſigns of this Nature, and the Means they uſed for the Security of the King and Kingdom, and the Preſervation of our Religion and Lives (which was previous to the Trials) naturally put the whole Nation under great Apprehenſions of Danger, and made the Way much eaſier for him to be believed. Under theſe Circumſtances (and theſe improved by deſigning Men) came thoſe unhappy Perſons to be tried; which leſſens our Wonder, if under theſe Diſadvantages, while the Men who tried them were under theſe Fears and Apprehenſions, they had the ill Fortune to be convicted. But when Men had a little overcome their Fears, and began to conſider his Evidence more calmly, Oates ſoon loſt his Credit, and the Men he afterwards accuſed, were all acquitted.

Nor was this Proſecution any Reflection on the Proteſtant Religion, whoſe Cauſe he falſely falſly aſſumed. The Proteſtant Religion had no Share in the Invention, and needed not the Support of a Lie. It was rather a Vindication of our Religion, to puniſh ſuch Offenders; and the proper Way to maintain the Juſtice of the Nation, and wipe off that Reproach that this Man's Perjury has brought upon it.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

Then my Lord Chief Juſtice ſummed up the Evidence, and gave his Directions to the Jury: And to the Obſervations Mr. Sollicitor had already made, he added, That the dreadful Apprehenſions People were under of their Religion, the Subverſion of the Government, of the King's being murdered, and of their Throats being to be cut by the Papiſts, at the Time of Ireland's Trial, was arrived to that Height, and Oates's Diſcovery of thoſe impending Dangers ſo much credited, that all other People appeared below him; and greater Reſpect was ſhewn him, than to the Branches of the Royal Family. And in publick Societies, ſometimes, this profligate Villain was careſſed and drank to, and ſaluted by the Name of THE SAVIOUR OF THE NATION. And that it was no Wonder, if under ſuch a Conſternation, or rather Infatuation, of all ſorts of People, all of the Romiſh Perſuaſion were looked on with an evil Eye; and the Conviction of thoſe who were accuſed, rendered too eaſy. He obſerved, That the principal Part of Oates's Defence conſiſted in this, That becauſe he was believed formerly, before his Villany was detected, they therefore ſhould believe him now, notwithſtanding his Perjury had been diſcovered; and that, to the poſitive Teſtimony of twenty-two Witneſſes, who had ſworn he was at St. Omers, he had not made the leaſt Shadow of an Objection, but only that they were Papiſts, and he was a Proteſtant. But his Lordſhip obſerved, there were Raſcals of all Perſuaſions; and he thought it not much for the Honour of the Church, that Oates called himſelf a Proteſtant: That they knew Dr. Oates had been very liberal to himſelf; he had given himſelf Baptiſm, and given himſelf the Doctor's Degree, and now he gave himſelf the Title of the Reforming Proteſtant, Mr. Oates. That we had Proteſtant Shoemakers, and Proteſtant Joiners, and all ſorts of true Proteſtant Raſcals; but it would become the Jury to aſſert the Honour of their Religion, by diſowning any Fellowſhip with ſuch Villains, or their Actions.

That beſides the Evidence againſt him, they ſhould conſider the Improbability of his Teſtimony: That fifty Perſons ſhould meet together at a Tavern, and come to a Reſolution to kill the King, and ſubvert the Government, and alter the Religion: And that this Reſolution being drawn up at the Tavern, they ſhould ſeparate themſelves into leſſer Club and Companies, and none of them ſign it when they were all together, and among themſelves; but ſhould afterwards have it carried up and down from one Houſe to another, and find no Body to truſt with it but Mr. Oates, who was not one of their Order, and did not appear to have any Credit amongſt them; when the Affair was of that Importance, that, if diſcovered, it muſt ſubject them to preſent Deſtruction, and ruin their whole Party. Could it be believed, that any Man ſhould be ſo void of Senſe and Reaſon, and that of fifty together, and thoſe reputed the ſubtileſt of Mankind, there ſhould not be one Man that ſhould take Care of a more rational Management of ſo great and hazardous an Undertaking? When they were met together, and might have diſpatched the Buſineſs in a quarter of an Hour, that they ſhould ſeparate themſelves into ſeveral Parts of the Town, and truſt a Reſolution of that Nature in Mr. Oates's Pocket; in whom, if they had more Confidence than they ſeemed to have, yet it was Folly and Madneſs to give him that Opportunity of deſtroying them all, and making his own Fortune: And that, if there were no other Evidence than the Teſtimony of the Thing, his Lordſhip ſaid, it would have gone a great Way with him; but that there being the ſuperadded Teſtimony of twenty-two Witneſſes, there was no room left to doubt of the Falſity of his Evidence.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

That as to the Buſineſs of Smith, though the Court, in their private Judgments, did believe the Thing, yet they thought it not fit to permit, that Perſons ſhould, upon their Oaths, confeſs themſelves guilty of Perjury, and afterwards give Evidence againſt others; yet by the Records of Parliament, and other Evidence, there was enough to make that Matter clear. For by Oates's Narrative, it appears, That his firſt Evidence tended to bring Smith into the Diſpleaſure of the People; for his way was to frighten thoſe he deſigned to deal with, and thereby force them to comply with his Deſigns. And there could not be a more plauſible Accuſation at that Time, than to charge a Man with ſaying ſomething againſt the Parliament, or with being in a Combination to ſubvert the Proteſtant Religion: But when he has a Turn to ſerve by him, then this Man, on whom he had fixed ſuch an odious Character, he tells us is really no Papiſt, but is engaged in Service for his King and Country; and has Mr. Oates's Paſs-port, which was a thing of no ſmall Advantage to him at that Seaſon. This was, with great Reaſon, made uſe of by the King's Counſel, as an Evidence of his tampering: For the Man ſuddenly alters his Opinion of one he had before accuſed, and produces him as an honeſt Man to give Evidence for him. And this, they urge, muſt be intended to be done by Practice and Threatnings: And the rather, for that it had been proved, that he did actually practiſe upon Clay in like Manner. And my Lord Chief Juſtice concluded, that if the Witneſſes for the King ſwore true, as he ſaw no Colour of an Objection againſt their Teſtimony, then Oates was the moſt perjured Villain upon the Face of the Earth.

Then the Court told the Jury, they might drink before they went from the Bar, but they did not deſire it; and having withdrawn a quarter of an Hour, they returned with this Verdict. Oates convicted.

That the Defendant was GUILTY of the Perjury whereof he was Indicted.

The Chief Juſtice told them, he was ſatisfied in his Conſcience, they had given a juſt Verdict, to which the reſt of the Judges Aſſented; and then the Court aroſe.

Oates's 2d Trial for Perjury.

The Trial of TITUS OATES for Perjury, in the Court of King's-Bench, on the 9th of May, 1685. 1. Jac. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment ſet forth, that the Defendant Titus Oates, at the Trials of Ireland, Pickering, and Grove, on the 17th Day of December, in the 30th Year of the late King Charles II. did falſly ſwear, and give Evidence to the Jury who tried that Cauſe, That the ſaid William Ireland, was in Town upon the firſt or ſecond Day of September 1678. Whereas in Truth, the ſaid William Ireland was not in Town on the firſt or ſecond Day of September 1678; and ſo the ſaid Titus Oates, did commit wilful and corrupt Perjury.

The Indictment further ſets forth, That the ſaid Titus Oates, at the Trials of Whitebread, Fenwick, and other Jeſuits, on the 13th of June, in the 31ſt Year of the late King, did falſly ſwear, and give Evidence to the Jury who tried that Cauſe, That William Ireland took his Leave of him, the ſaid Titus Oates, and others, at the Chamber of the ſaid Ireland, then being in Ruſſel-Street, Weſtminſter, between the 8th and 12th Days of Auguſt, 1678. Whereas in Truth, the ſaid William Ireland, did not take his Leave of the ſaid Titus Oates, or any other Perſon at his Chamber in Ruſſel-Street, between the ſaid 8th and 12th Days of Auguſt, and ſo the ſaid Titus Oates did again commit wilful and corrupt Perjury.

The King's Counſel, having opened the Indictment and the Evidence, produced the Records of the ſaid two Trials mentioned in the Indictment, and then called the Witneſſes:

The Evidence.

Whereupon Mr. Harriot and Mr. Waterhouſe were ſworn, and Mr. Harriot depoſed, That at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, Oates did poſitively ſwear, That Mr. Ireland the Jeſuit did take Leave of him and others at the ſame Ireland's Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, betwixt the 8th and 12th of Auguſt 1678. He was Foreman of that Jury.

Sol. Gen. What ſay you, Mr. Waterhouſe?

Waterhouſe. I was of that Jury too. Oates depoſed, that Mr. Ireland took his Leave of him the 12th of Auguſt. My Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs then asked him, Are you ſure it was the Twelfth? And then he ſaid, he would not be poſitive it was the 12th; but between the 8th and 12th it was, I am poſitive upon my Oath.

Oates. Mr. Harriot, did I ſwear that he took his Leave of me, or I took my Leave of him?

Mr. Harriot. You ſwore that Ireland took his Leave of you and others.

Oates. Did Mr. Harriot take Notes at the Trial?

Mr. Harriot. Yes, I did; and it was my Manner, in all Trials I was concerned as a Juryman, to read the Trials ſtrictly over when they were printed, and compare them with my Notes: And this I found to be in the printed Trial, according to my Notes.

Oates. Mr. Waterhouſe, you did not take Notes: Pray, how come you to remember that I was ſo poſitive, as to the Time betwixt the 8th and 12th of Auguſt?

Mr. Waterhouſe. Becauſe my Lord Chief Juſtice made a Stop, when you ſaid it was the 12th of Auguſt, and bid you conſider; and you conſidered it, and did affirm poſitively, That it was between the 8th and 12 of Auguſt.

Mr. Foſter was ſworn.

Sol. Gen. Pray tell what you remember Mr. Oates ſwore at Mr. Ireland's Trial, about Mr. Ireland's being in Town.

Mr. Foſter. I was one of the Jury at the Trial of Mr. Ireland, Pickering, and Grove; and Mr. Oates and Mr. Bedloe were ſworn as Witneſſes for the King: And Mr. Bedloe depoſed, That there was a Meeting at Harcourt's Chamber, and Ireland, Pickering, and Grove were there; and that this was the latter End of Auguſt. Mr. Ireland made his Defence, and endeavoured to prove, That he was not in Town from the Beginning of Auguſt to the Middle of September, and brought ſeveral Witneſſes. But upon his denying to be here the latter End of Auguſt, Mr. Oates did come and ſwear; I am certain (ſays he) that the 1ſt or 2d of September he was in Town; for then I had of him twenty Shillings.

Oates. Was I poſitive that he was here in Town the firſt or ſecond of September?

Mr. Foſter. You were poſitive to the firſt or ſecond; I have it in my Notes.

Mr. Byfield, another of Ireland's Jury, was ſworn.

L. C. J. What did Oates ſwear?

Mr. Byfield. Mr. Oates did poſitively aſſert, That Ireland was here in Town the firſt or ſecond of September; and to confirm it, he ſaid he received of him twenty Shillings.

Then Mrs. Ireland, the Mother of him that was executed, his Siſter Anne Ireland, and two more Women, depoſed, that the ſaid Mr. Ireland went out of Town on Saturday the 3d of Auguſt 1678, and that he returned to his Lodgings in Town again, being in the ſame Houſe where his ſaid Mother and Siſter lodged, on the 14th of December following. The Lord Aſton depoſed, that Mr. Ireland came to his Houſe, at Stnaden in Hertfordſhire, on the 3d of Auguſt: That on Monday the 5th of Auguſt, Mr. Ireland, accompanied him to St. Albans, where he met his Brother and Siſter Southcoat, and that they all travelled together to Tixhall, his Lordſhip's Houſe in Staffordſhire, where they arrived the 8th of Auguſt.

Sir Edward Southcoat depoſed, That on Monday, the 5th of Auguſt, he lay with the Lord

1685. Jac. II.

Lord Aſton and Mr. Ireland, at the Bull at St. Albans; and that they ſet out together the next Day, and travelled to Tixhall, the Lord Aſton's Seat, in Staffordſhire, where they arrived on Thurſday following: That they remained there till Tueſday after, and then went to St. Winifred's Well in Wales, returning to Tixhall again the 16th of Auguſt; and Sir Edward named every Houſe they lay at on the Road in this Journey. He alſo depoſed, That he ſet out with Mr. Ireland, from Tixhall, on Monday the 9th or 10th of September; and the fourth Day they reached his Father's Houſe, at Kingſton in Surry; and, on Saturday following, Mr. Ireland went from his Father's Houſe to London.

Mr John Southcoat gave the ſame Account of the Journey with the Lord Aſton and Mr. Ireland, from St. Alban's to Tixhall, and St. Winifred's Well; and of Mr. Ireland's returning to London in the Middle of September; which he remembered the better, having bought Mr. Ireland's Horſe at the Time he returned to Town: And this Circumſtance Sir Edward alſo remembered.

Oates demanding if Mr. Southcoat was ſure that Ireland was in his Company from the 5th of Auguſt to the 16th? Mr. Southcoat anſwered, Yes, every Day; he remembered it very well; but where Mr. Ireland was from the 16th of Auguſt to the Time he returned to London, theſe Witneſſes could not ſay; only that they ſaw him ſeveral Times in Staffordſhire during that Interval.

Harriſon, Sir John Southcoat's Coachman, depoſed, That he drove his Maſter from St. Alban's to Tixhall, and from thence to Holywell in Wales, in Auguſt 78; and that Mr. Ireland was in their Company all the Time.

The former Witneſs depoſed, That in September he returned, with Mr. Ireland, to his Maſter's Houſe, near Kingſton in Surry; and that Mr. Ireland having ſold his Horſe to Mr. John Southcoat, his Maſter's Son, he went with Mr. Ireland to his Lodgings in Ruſſel-Street, in Town, on Saturday the 14th of September, and brought the Horſe back to his Maſter's.

This Account, the Chief Juſtice obſerved, agreed with what the Women depoſed, That Ireland returned to his Lodgings, in Town, a Fortnight before Michaelmas; and, directing his Speech to the Defendant Oates, ſaid: Thus far it is as clear as the Sun at Noon-day. —— I muſt tell you, prima facie, it is ſo ſtrong an Evidence, that, if you have any Senſe, you muſt be concerned at it.— Upon my Faith, I have ſo much Charity for you, as my Fellow Creature, as to be concerned for you.

Oates anſwered, 'Tis not two Straws Matter whether you are or no; I know my own Innocence.

The Chief Juſtice replied, Thou art the moſt impudently hardened Wretch that ever I ſaw.

Oates replied, You may think what you will, my Lord; but theſe Popiſh Traitors will ſwear any thing, and ſuborn Witneſſes upon Witneſſes againſt me, to diſcredit the Popiſh Plot.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

George Hobſon depoſed, That he lived at the Lord Aſton's, and that Mr. Ireland came to his Lordſhip's Houſe, at Standen in Hertfordſhire, on Saturday the 3d of Auguſt, 78; and he travelled with the Lord Aſton, and Mr. Ireland, to Tixhall, and ſaw Ireland every Day, from the 3d of Auguſt to the 16th.

Several other Witneſſes depoſed, That Mr. Ireland came to Tixhall the 8th of Auguſt, 78, where he ſtaid till the 13th, then went to Holywell in Wales, and returned to Tixhall the 16th.

Mrs. Harwell depoſed, That Mr. Ireland came to her Houſe, at Wolverhampton in Staffordſhire, on the 17th of Auguſt, 78, and ſtaid there till Monday the 26th, and then returned to Tixhall, as he ſaid: That he came to her Houſe again on the 4th of September, and on the 7th of September went away from her Houſe for good and all.

Oates demanding, if this Witneſs was at Ireland's Trial, ſhe anſwered, No; but ſaid ſhe heard, on the 19th of December, 78, that Mr. Ireland was tried the 17th, two Days before; and Mr. Oates had ſworn he was in Town, when they could prove he was in Staffordſhire: And ſhe ſent away a Meſſenger immediately to a Friend in London, to acquaint him, that Mr. Ireland was falſly accuſed, and to petition his Majeſty, that they might bring up Witneſſes to prove Mr. Ireland was in Staffordſhire when Oates ſwore he was in Town: And the King ſtaid the Execution five Weeks; but at length he was executed.

A great many more Witneſſes depoſed, They ſaw Mr. Ireland at Wolverhampton at the Times the laſt Witneſs mentioned.

Sir Thomas Whitegrave, a Juſtice of Peace, depoſed, He ſaw Mr. Ireland on Tixhall Bowling-Green, on Thurſday the 29th of Auguſt.

Mr. Fowler depoſed, He ſaw him at Etchinghill in Staffordſhire, the 27th of Auguſt, 78, and at Tixhall Bowling-Green the 29th.

Several other Witneſſes confirmed the Teſtimony of the two laſt.

Mr. Fallas depoſed, That on Saturday, the 31ſt of Auguſt, 78, he was hunting with Mr. Ireland in Mr. Gerrard's Park, and they killed a Buck.

Other Witneſſes depoſed, They ſaw Mr. Ireland at Dinner at Mr. Gerrard's, on the 1ſt of September 78.

Other Witneſſes depoſed, They ſaw Ireland at Dinner, at Mrs. Crompton's Houſe, at Millage in Staffordſhire, on Monday the ſecond of September, 78.

Mr. Pendrel, and Mrs. Pendrel, depoſed, That Mr. Ireland came to their Houſe, at Boſcobel in Staffordſhire, the 2d of September, 78, and went from thence the 4th of September.

The King's Evidence being finiſhed, Mr. Oates proceeded in his Defence, and ſaid,

Mr. Oates's Obſervations on the King's Evidence.

I am not the only Evidence of Mr. Ireland's being in Town in the Month of Auguſt; nor the only Witneſs that he was in Town about the Time I mentioned in September.

My Lord, the firſt Thing I ſhall offer to your Conſideration is, the Hardſhip I lie under, of being put to diſprove what the King's Counſel 1685. 1 Jac II. Counſel now charge me with, after ſix Years Time. Now, Why has the Proſecution of this pretended Perjury been delayed ſo long? When it appears, the Witneſſes to prove it were known ſix Years ſince; and there has been no new Fact diſcovered that was not then known: There is no Reaſon can be aſſigned for this Delay, but to render it the more difficult for me to maintain the Evidence I then gave, ſo many Perſons being ſince dead, or gone beyond the Seas; and many things that were then freſh, now grown out of Memory: And if ſuch Practice is to be admitted, no Witneſs is ſafe in giving his Teſtimony againſt a Conſpirator.

And here, my Lord, is only a bare Point of Time upon which this Perjury is aſſigned; the Subſtance of the Evidence, I gave at the Trial of Mr. Ireland, and the reſt, about the Popiſh Plot, is not pretended to be diſproved: Let it be remembered, that Ireland was convicted of a treaſonable Reſolution to murder the late King, and not for being in Town in Auguſt or September, 78; which is the Perjury now aſſigned. And, my Lord, 'tis unreaſonable to tie up Witneſſes, who come to diſcover Conſpiracies, to ſpeak poſitively to every little Circumſtance of Time and Place, and ſuch Niceties; it is uſual to ſpeak with Latitude in thoſe Caſes; and, I believe, I did not confine my ſelf either to the 1ſt or 2d, 5th, 6th, 7th or 8th; but, my Lord, that he was in September there, I am poſitive; therefore I muſt beg the Opinion of the Court, Whether Mr Foſter did prove I was poſitive to the 1ſt and 2d Days of September, 78.

L. C. J. The Evidence is plain, that you did ſwear poſitively to thoſe two Days, and mentioned this material Circumſtance to confirm it, That either the 1ſt or 2d of September you received 20 Shillings of him in Town. Now, that Circumſtance of his Kindneſs, was not a Circumſtance either of Time or Place.

Oates. Then, my Lord, the firſt thing I ſhall offer, is the Record of Mr. Ireland's Conviction of High Treaſon.

L. C. J. It is admitted, of all Sides, that Ireland was convicted and attainted of Treaſon.

Oates. Then, my Lord, let it be obſerved, that the principal Part of Mr. Ireland's Defence, was an Endeavour to prove, he was not in Town between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, nor the 1ſt or 2d Days of September, which are the Times now in Iſſue; and to prove this, Mr. Gifford and his Siſter and Mother were produced at Mr. Ireland's Trial; and Mr. Whitebread's Trial being ſix Months after, he endeavoured alſo to prove, that Mr. Ireland was out of Town at thoſe Times, and produced Mr. Gifford, and ſeveral other Witneſſes, to prove it, to the Number of ſixteen: And, notwithſtanding all thoſe Witneſſes, the Jurors who tried Mr Ireland, and the Jurors who tried Mr Whitebread and the other four Jeſuits, found them all Guilty. And my Lord Chief Juſtice Scroggs obſerved, That the Priſoner's Defence conſiſted only in catching at a Point of Time; and that it was moſt plain, a villanous Plot was diſcovered: All which ſhews the Fullneſs and Satisfactorineſs of the Proof given by me and Bedloe. And, I muſt further obſerve, That though Mr. Ireland, by his falſe Witneſſes, preſſed this Matter as far as he could then, yet, when the Jury brought him in Guilty, the Chief Juſtice expreſſed the Satisfaction of the Court, and ſaid, Gentlemen, You have done like very good Chriſtians, that is, like very good Proteſtants. And, at the Trial of the five Jeſuits, the Chief Juſtice ſays, That the Jeſuits were very exact at catching at a Point of Time; but that was a thing which no Man could preciſely charge his Memory withal; and therefore perſuades the Jury, that That ſhould not be too ſtrictly the Meaſure of their Judgments about Truth and Falſhood, (the Miſtake of 7 or 8 Days); and that they were not to lay too great a Weight upon the Point of Time: Now if too great a Weight be not to be laid upon a Point of Time, then this Charge againſt me is of no Weight at all. Beſides, my Lord, it ought to be conſidered, That if this were the great Objection then, and then anſwered, it ceaſes to be an Objection now. 1685. 1 Jac II.

I ſhall offer the Teſtimony of Mr. Bedloe, who is dead, and at his Death confirmed all that he had ſworn of the Popiſh Plot to be true; and affirmed, he had rather ſpoken leſs than the Truth, than more: And to this I deſire my Lord Keeper may be called, who took his Examination.

L. C. J. It is very well known to the World, and particularly to a worthy Gentleman who ſits by you, (pointing to Mr. North) That Mr Bedloe, when he was ſick, did make ſome ſuch Proteſtations.

Then Mr. Blaney was ſworn.

Oates. Pray, Mr. Blaney, ſee in your Notes of Ireland's Trial, if Bedloe did not ſwear, that Mr. Ireland was in Town the latter end of Auguſt, 78.

Mr. Blaney. He ſaid it was in Auguſt: He would not be poſitive to a Day; but he thought it the latter end.

Oates. Then, my Lord, I deſire Mr. Jenniſon's Depoſition of Mr Ireland's being in Town, taken before Sir Edmund Warcup, I may call ſome Witneſſes to make Proof of.

L. C. J. We cannot admit that in Evidence, unleſs the King's Counſel will conſent.

Oates. Then I ſhall prove what he ſwore at another Trial.

L. C J. Why, is he dead?

Oates. It has coſt me a great deal of Money to ſearch for him, but I cannot hear of him.

L. C. J. Though in Strictneſs, we ſhould not admit ſuch Evidence, unleſs the Party be dead; yet, if you can prove any thing he ſwore at another Trial, we will indulge you ſo far.

Oates. Have you the Record of Sir George Wakeman's Trial, Sir Samuel Aſtry?

L. C. J. Put it in: And now, Mr. Oates, prove what you can.

Then Mr. Oates demanded of Mr. Blaney, If he could remember what Jenniſon ſwore at that Trial; but Mr. Blaney could remember nothing of it.

Mr.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Mr. Oates desired Sir Edmund Warcup might be examined about the Deposition he took of Jennison, concerning Ireland's being in Town the 19th of August: Which the King's Counsel said they would consent to, if Oates would admit Jennison's Letter under his Hand to be read, wherein he owned he was mistaken in his whole Evidence about that Matter.

To which Mr. Oates consented; and Sir Edmund Warcup was examined; but he said, he had delivered the Deposition to the King and Council, and could not remember the Particulars.

Then Mr. Oates called Sarah Batten.

He demanded of her, If her Name was not Pain formerly; and, if she did not give Evidence at Mr. Ireland's Trial? But it appearing he was mistaken in the Person, he examined her no further.

Mr. Oates called Mr. Percival, Mr. Vaughan, Sir Michael Wharton, and several others; but they did not appear: He said he had served them all with Subpœna's, but they would not come; and then he proceeded in his Defence.

His further Defence.

My Lord, Both Bedloe and Sarah Pain have sworn, That Ireland was in Town in August, as well as my self; and, I think, I am hardly used, that after Witnesses are dead, or gone out of the Way, I should have such a Part of my Testimony called in Question. Jennison's Evidence has formerly been made use of, and approved, as is well known to those who sat Judges upon my Lord Viscount Stafford. And, my Lord, as I hope for Salvation, all that I have sworn about Mr. Ireland's being in Town, between the 8th and 12th of August, 78, and the Beginning of September, is true; and though there are a great many Witnesses produced against me this Day, a great Part of them do not come up to the 8th or 12th of August: And, I desire your Lordship will remark to the Jury, what little Credit these Witnesses had at the Trials of Ireland and the five Jesuits: And, I believe, I am the first Precedent, of a Person's being indicted for Perjury, for being a Witness for the King, in such a Case as this, after six Years elapsed, and Verdict upon Verdict, and Judgment and Execution upon those Verdicts; and when no new Objection is offered, but what was then urged; and no Circumstance occurs now, but what was as conclusive then, unless the Change of the Season. And at those Trials all the Judges of England were Commissioners of Oyer and Terminer; and fully debated and discussed these Matters, and saw all these Objections fully answered and confuted. Had I been Witness in any Cause but a Popish Conspiracy, I had met with fairer Quarter: But at this Rate, it is safer for a Papist to be a Traitor, than for a Protestant to discover a Popish Plot. I hope you will consider my Witnesses are either in Places unknown, or, are such as, considering the Times, dare not appear; yet, I hope, you that are sworn to do Justice, will not suffer me to be ruined, by the false Testimony of the Papists, who are Parties; for they have a Turn to serve, and are resolved to wreak their Vengeance upon me: Now they have Hopes of bringing in their Religion, and would welcome it with my Ruin: Their Eyes now see what their Hearts so long have wished, the Death of a great Man, who died lately, and against whose Life they so often and so long conspired. Had this been their first Conspiracy, the Truth of it might have been disputed; but if you cast your Eyes upon the Reigns of Queen Elizabeth, King James, and King Charles, what can be averred against those numerous Records of their Conspiracies? And then surely, my Discovery will not be deemed so improbable a Thing. And I hope the Jury will consider, That the Men who are Witnesses against me, their very Religion is Rebellion; and their Principles and Practices pernicious to our Government. And, my Lord, if Coleman's Correspondence with La Chaise, the French King's Confessor, for promoting Popery in England, be considered, it is a Demonstration of the Plot, and sufficiently vindicates me. ——My Lord, I have a Favour to beg: I had but an ill Night, and am now in great Pain; I desire you would assign me Counsel to argue the Errors in Yesterday's Indictment; and give me a Week's Time to prepare and instruct my Counsel: To which the Court agreed; but told him, by the Rules of the Court, he ought to have but four Days. Then he desired he might have Liberty to withdraw; to which also the Court agreed.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Mr. Solicitor's Reply.

Then Mr. Solicitor proceeded to make his Observations on the Evidence, and the Prisoner's Defence, and said,

Gentlemen of the Jury, you have seen between forty and fifty Witnesses produced, to shew that it is impossible, that what Oates did swear can be true: He says, indeed, that this is in a Circumstance of Time wherein it is difficult for a Man to be positive to a Day; and that, it is usual with Witnesses, in Points of Time, to swear with a Latitude: But, Gentlemen, should we grant this false Doctrine to be true, (and false certainly it is, and of most pernicious Consequence it must be, if, when Men are charged with Things that depend upon Time and Place, the Witnesses should not be kept to those Circumstances) yet this, I say, if granted, can do him no manner of Service in the Case before you: For between the 3d of August and the 14th of September, which includes both Times he swears to, and gives him a Latitude of above twenty Days besides, there is not a Moment of Time wherein his Oath can be true.

Gentlemen, you have observed how the Witnesses have given you an Account of every particular Day of both Months, from the 3d of August, that Mr. Ireland left London, to the 14th of September, when he returned thither again. And, that their Testimony might the more evidently appear to be true, they have given you such remarkable Circumstances, why they remembred the particular Times they swear to, as renders it impossible they can be mistaken. Then Mr. Solicitor summed up the Evidence that had been given; after which he proceeds: And now let the World judge, if there be any Room left to suppose, that any one Word Mr. Oates has deposed can be true; even allowing him that Latitude of Time he desires, and says all Witnesses ought to be allowed: No, there is not a Moment wherein he can verify one Tittle of his Evidence, as to Ireland's being in Town; and this sure, I may call Demonstration, that what Oates has sworn is utterly falſe. Gentlemen, the Jury that tried Ireland had not this Evidence: Indeed, ſome that went out of Town with him, and one or two from Wolverhampton, were at the Trial of the five Jeſuits; but not more than five or ſix in all of the forty odd that now appear; and for want of theſe, Ireland unfortunately ſuffered: For ſo, I ſhall take leave to ſay, it was unfortunately.

And there is one Thing Mr. Oates lays great Streſs upon, and would have you think he is hardly dealt with; becauſe this Proſecution has been ſo long delayed.——But, Gentlemen, with Sorrow we muſt remember, that there was a Time when the City of London was ſo corrupted, that it was made a Refuge and a Sanctuary for High-Treaſon: When the King could have no Juſtice there, and Men lodged themſelves within thoſe Walls as a Protection for their Conſpiracies. The Time has been, when Indictments were preferred, and the moſt convincing Evidence given the Grand Jury, even to the Satisfaction of all who heard it, and yet they have refuſed to find the Bill; and not only ſo, but they were ſo abetted by the Rabble, that it was ſcarce ſafe for a Judge to ſit upon the Bench; and therefore it is no Wonder an Indictment was not preferred againſt Oates at that Time, when the plaineſt Proof againſt ſuch Criminals could not be admitted. This may give ſufficient Satisfaction Why it has been delayed; and may caution every Man, how they fall into the ſame Circumſtances again.

But Gentlemen, you have heard the Evidence to prove this Fact: And it is plain to a Demonſtration, If you believe that Mr. Ireland was ſeen by theſe People at all, he was ſeen at thoſe very Times they have particularly declared: For, upon Conſideration of the Circumſtances, it is impoſſible it ſhould be at any other Times: And ſo I leave it to you to conſider, whether the Defendant be perjured, or not.

The Chief Juſtice directs the Jury.

Then the Chief Juſtice proceeded to direct the Jury, and obſerved, That every Perſon that had been executed for the Popiſh Plot, truely called Oates's Plot, had to a Man denied it at their Deaths; and took it upon their Salvations they were innocent: Whereas, there was not a Man concerned in the Rye-Houſe Plot, who had the Confidence to deny it at his Execution: And as to Mr. Oates's Inſinuation, That it was hard he ſhould be brought to Trial, after ſo much Time elapſed; ſuch were the Misfortunes of thoſe Times, when theſe Perjuries were committed, that even the Fountain of Mercy itſelf was ſtopped; and even that compaſſionate Prince King Charles II. was compelled to permit the Execution of Ireland, againſt his Inclinations, rather than give Diſturbance to his People; there having been a Verdict and Judgment in the Caſe: But it was well known by them that were near his Perſon, how often he expreſſed his Concern for having conſented to this Execution; and that he reflected on it with Regret to his dying Day, as his Royal Father did on the Buſineſs of my Lord Strafford: Nor ought theſe Things to be remembered as a Reflection on the Memory of thoſe Princes, but with Infamy to thoſe who were the Cauſes of them. Unhappy was it for the Prince, when the Times were ſo tumultuous, that he was compelled to reſtrain his Mercy, where he thought it due, rather than ſeem to ſtop the Current of Juſtice: And as to Oates's Objection, that the Witneſſes were Papiſts, it happened that ſeven or eight of them were Proteſtants: Not but he thought Roman Catholicks good Witneſſes in Point of Law: And he was ſatisfied, Lying was as much the Talent of a Presbyterian, as it could be of a Papiſt. Nay (it was as inſeparably incident to a Presbyterian) and ſuch ſniveling, canting, whining Knaves, to lye, as it was to ſpeak: That Oates mightily inſiſted, that, becauſe he was believed before, it would caſt a Reflection on former Juries to disbelieve him now: But if that Opinion was to prevail, it were impoſſible Perjury could ever be detected. The Nation was then in a Hurry and Surprize; and it was not then ſuppoſed there could be ſuch Villains upon Earth, as impudently to ſwear High-Treaſon againſt their Fellow-Subjects, when there was no Truth in the Accuſation. But the Eyes of all honeſt Men were now opened: They had ſeen the Effects of their Credulity; and it concerned them to ſhew their Reſentment to the World. And having ſummed up the Evidence, he concluded in this Manner: It is incumbent on you, Gentlemen, to try theſe Facts according to your Evidence; and it is incumbent on us, who ſit here as Judges, to ſee the Law executed. And God forbid, but we ſhould uſe our utmoſt Endeavours to inflict the greateſt Vengeance, that the Juſtice of the Nation can permit us to inflict upon ſuch Villains, who have contracted ſo much Miſchief and Reproach on us, and ſo much Guilt upon themſelves.

The Jury withdrawing, returned in half an Hour, and gave a Verdict, that the Priſoner was GUILTY.

Oates convicted.

Mr. Oates's Counſel afterwards moving in Arreſt of Judgment, was allowed a conſiderable Time to prepare his Exceptions to the Indictment; and being brought into Court on the 26th of May, Mr. Attorney ſaid, that four Exceptions were delivered to him the Night before by Mr. Wallop; but neither Mr. Wallop, nor any of the Defendants Counſel, thought fit to argue them. The Exceptions were theſe:

His Exceptions to the Indictment,

1. That a Witneſs ſworn on Behalf of the King in a Proceſs of High-Treaſon, cannot be puniſhed for Perjury by the King.

2. That it does not appear, that the Indictments of Ireland, &c. found in Middleſex, were legally tranſmitted into London; and conſequently, all the Proceedings thereupon, were coram non Judice.

3. That the Perjuries aſſigned, are foreign to the Iſſue.

4. It is Reſolutio Signat' in that Part of the Indictment, that mentions what the Defendant ſwore; and in the Perjury aſſigned, it is Reſolutio ſignand'; which is no good Aſſignment of the Perjury.

anſwered

To theſe Exceptions it was anſwered by Mr. Attorney and the Court.

1. That the firſt Exception was a plain Miſtake of the Indictment; for the Defendant was not indicted upon the Statute: And, at Common Law, he might be proſecuted for the King, though he was a Witneſs for the King before: And that, if Witneſſes, who came and forſwore themſelves to take away Mens Lives, could not be 1685. 1 Jac. II. be called in Queſtion Criminally for the King, (at whoſe Suit only, a Man could be proſecuted for his Life, unleſs in Caſe of Appeals) it would be an Encouragement to Villany, and make the Proceſs of Law to become an Inſtrument of the greateſt Cruelty in the World.

2. As to the ſecond Exception, That it did not appear, Ireland's Indictment, &c. was well tranſmitted from Middleſex to London, that was well enough; for it being recited they were ſo, and ſo indicted, it ſets forth, That the Trials were had upon Records there depending, before the Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, and Goal-Delivery: And it ſhall be intended, that they were well brought before them.

3. That as to the third Exception, That the Perjuries aſſigned were foreign to the Matters in Iſſue; it was apparent, that one of the Indictments was in the expreſs Points of the great Treaſon charged againſt them, viz. The Conſult on the 24th of April. And that for the other, the Time was very material; becauſe it was impoſſible that Ireland could be Guilty of the Treaſon ſworn againſt him at his Chamber in Ruſſel-ſtreet, between the 8th and 12th of Auguſt, if he were not then in Town. Nor could he be privy to the Treaſon ſworn by Bedloe, the latter End of Auguſt, or the Beginning of September, in Harcourt's Chamber, if he were out of Town from the 3d of Auguſt, to the 14th of September.

4. To the fourth Exception, That he ſwore he ſaw them ſign it, and the Perjury aſſigned is, that he did not carry it to be ſigned; they anſwered, That it was alledged, that he falſly and corruptly ſwore that he was preſent; and that he carried the Reſolution to be ſigned, and ſaw them ſign the Reſolution. Now, 1. It is ſaid he was not there. 2. He carried no ſuch Reſolution to be ſigned; and that there was no Occaſion to ſay he did not ſee it ſigned; for, if he was not there, nor did carry it, he could not ſee them ſign it. Beſides that, if any one Part of the Oath he ſwore proved falſe, that was ſufficient to maintain the Verdict; but here it was notoriouſly plain, that it was falſe throughout.—— And my Lord Chief Juſtice ſaid, That all the Judges of England had been conſulted, That if the Law would admit of it, he might receive ſuch a Judgment for this Offence, as might be adequate to the Crime, and deter others from committing the like again.

That by the ancient Laws of England, Perjury was puniſhed with Death: That, afterwards, it was puniſhed by cutting out the Tongue. And now, by the unanimous Opinions of all the twelve Judges, it was reſolved, that by the Law, Crimes of this Nature were left to be puniſhed according to the Diſcretion of this Court, provided ſuch Judgment extend not to Life or Member.

Then, the Judges having conſulted together, Mr. Juſtice Wythens pronounced the Sentence, viz.

That the Defendant ſhould pay 1000 Marks upon each Indictment: That he ſhould be ſtripped of his Canonical Habits: That he ſhould ſtand in the Pillory before Weſtminſter-Hall Gate, on the Monday following, for an Hour, with a Paper over his Head, declaring his Crime; but that, firſt, he ſhould walk with it round all the Courts in the Hall.

On the ſecond Indictment, the Judgment was, That he ſhould ſtand in the Pillory, the Tueſday following, at the Royal-Exchange: That the next Wedneſday, he ſhould be whipped from Aldgate to Newgate; and on the Friday following, he ſhould be whipped from Newgate to Tyburn, by the Hands of the Common Hangman: That the 9th of Auguſt, every Year of his Life, he ſhould ſtand in the Pillory before Weſtminſter-Hall Gate; the 10th of Auguſt at Charing-Croſs; and the 11th, over againſt the Temple; and the 2d of September, at the Royal-Exchange; and on the 24th of April, every Year, at Tyburn.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Remarks on the two Trials of Oates for Perjury.

Biſhop Burnet ſeems to be one of thoſe who believed the Popiſh Plot, in Part, and yet did not give much Credit to Oates's Teſtimony; but rather thinks he was perjured in ſome Particulars, as appears from his firſt Volume of Poſthumous Hiſtory. In the Character he gives Oates, he ſays,

He was an ignorant Man; proud, ill-natured, and haughty; and Complaints had been exhibited againſt him, for very indecent Expreſſions concerning the Myſteries of Chriſtianity. He had been alſo preſented for Perjury (before the Popiſh Plot was heard of), and, being Chaplain to a Man of War, was diſmiſſed upon Complaint of ſome very Unnatural Practices, not to be named. That being admitted Chaplain to the Duke of Norfolk, and diſcovering an Inclination to Popery, Hutchinſon, a Jeſuit of that Family, had the Honour of his Converſion. That Hutchinſon told him, (the Biſhop) that Oates was in ill Terms with the Jeſuits: They allowed him but nine Pence a Day, of which he complained, and Hutchinſon often relieved him: That the Jeſuits wanting to get rid of Oates, ſent him beyond Sea, &c.

In another Part of that Hiſtory, the Biſhop relates, That Oates came to him, and ſaid, He was one of them that was marked out to be killed; and the ſame Compliment he had paid to Stillingfleet before; but he thought he made that Honour too cheap, when he told them Tongue was to be ſerved in the ſame Manner: That the ſame Time Oates broke out into a mighty Fury againſt the Jeſuits, and ſaid, He would have their Blood: And he (Dr. Burnet), to divert him, demanding What it was that prevailed on him to change his Religion, and turn Papiſt? Oates ſtood up, and laying his Hands on his Breaſt, ſaid, God and his holy Angels knew he never changed, but went amongſt them on Purpoſe to betray them: Which (the Biſhop ſays) gave him ſuch a Character of Oates, That he never after gave any Regard to what he ſaid, or ſwore.

The Authors of Rapin, on the other Hand, though they profeſs the greateſt Veneration for Biſhop Burnet; and ſometimes inſinuate, that the Facts related by that illuſtrious Hiſtorian (as they call him) ought to be received without Heſitation, by all Mankind; take the Liberty here to contradict him, and pay no Regard to the Opinion he had conceived of Oates. They do not only ſay, that the Sentence, and the Execution of it, was barbarous; but affirm it to be miraculous, that Oates eſcaped with his Life, after ſo ſevere a Whipping; from whence, I preſume, they would have us infer, that Heaven

1685. 1 Jac. II. ven wrought a Miracle, to aſſert the Innocence of the Man, and the Juſtice of his Cauſe.

But ſurely the Compilers of Rapin, if they had not been partial to Oates, would have given us Biſhop Burnet's Opinion of him, on whoſe Authority they rely abſolutely in other Caſes; nor would they have repreſented ſome Parts of the Evidence againſt Oates, as they do; particularly where they inſinuate, that the Witneſſes from St. Omers were the very ſame, that had appeared and given the ſame Evidence at the Jeſuits Trials: Whereas ſeveral of thoſe Witneſſes were not the ſame; and there were a great many more, and other Witneſſes from St. Omers at this Trial, than were at the Trials of the Jeſuits; and their Teſtimony differed in ſeveral Circumſtances: And this the Authors of Rapin could not but know, as they appear to have peruſed all thoſe Trials. To ſuch Lengths will Party carry ſome People, to aſſert downright Falſities, and hazard their Reputation to ſuch a Degree, as to render all the other Facts they relate ſuſpected! 1685. 1 Jac. II.

But that which muſt ſatisfy all the World, that both Houſes of Parliament, even after the Revolution, were convinced that Oates was guilty of the Perjuries wherewith he was charged, is, That when he applied to them to get the Judgment againſt him reverſed, they refuſed it, and he remained perjured upon Record to his dying Day; though the Miniſtry thought fit to allow him three hundred Pounds per Annum for his Life, becauſe ſome People imagined he was inſtrumental in the Revolution.

And notwithſtanding the Authors of Rapin think the Puniſhment was too ſevere, Biſhop Burnet, whoſe Authority they rely upon in other Caſes, ſays, he thought it too little, if he was guilty; intimating, that nothing leſs than his Life could atone for the many Murders he had committed by his Perjuries.

1685. 1 Jac. II. Liſle's Trial.

The Trial of ALICE LISLE, Widow, for High-Treaſon, before the Lord Chief Juſtice Jeffries, the Lord Chief Baron, and other Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer, held at the City of Wincheſter, for the County of Southampton, on the 27th of Auguſt, 1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges, That Alice Liſle, of the Pariſh of Ellingham in the County of Southampton, Widow, did, on the twenty-eighth Day of July, in the firſt Year of the King, intend to depoſe and put his Majeſty to Death; and the Overt-Act, laid as an Evidence of this, was, that ſhe, the ſaid Alice Liſle, well knowing one John Hicks of Keinſham in the County of Somerſet, Clerk, to be a falſe Traitor, and to have traitorouſly conſpired the Death of the King, and raiſed War and Rebellion againſt him, did, at her Dwelling-Houſe in Ellingham aforeſaid, entertain, conceal, and comfort, the ſaid John Hicks, and gave him Meat and Drink, againſt the Duty of her Allegiance, &c.

Pollexfen opens the Evidence.

Mr. Pollexfen, of Counſel for the King, in opening the Evidence, obſerved, That the Priſoner Alice Liſle, was the Widow of one Liſle ſufficiently known, (being one of the Regicides that ſat in Judgment againſt King Charles I. and afterwards condemned the Lord Capel, &c.) That the Perſon ſhe was charged with entertaining, was a Conventicle-Preacher, and one of the moſt active in Monmouth's late Rebellion, being perſonally in the Battel, and perſuading and inciting others to join with the Rebels.

The Witneſſes being called, Mr. Pope, Mr. Fitzherbert, and Mr. Taylor, were ſworn; who depoſed, That being taken Priſoners by the Rebels, Mr. Hicks came to them, and would have perſuaded them to have been of that Party; telling them that Monmouth was a good King, and a Proteſtant, and a great deal to that Purpoſe; reflecting on the Government and the Perſon of the King; and ſaying, He wondered what they (the Priſoners) could ſay for themſelves, who being Proteſtants, ſerved a Popiſh Prince, and would not obey a Proteſtant King; or to that Effect.

Then James Dunne, a Baker, was ſworn, who depoſed, That a ſhort black Man came to his Houſe at Warminſter in Wiltſhire, and deſired him to go on a Meſſage to Mrs. Liſle's at Ellingham in Hampſhire, being about thirty Miles from Warminſter; and the Subſtance of his Meſſage was, to enquire of Mrs. Liſle, whether ſhe would entertain one Hicks: That he went to Ellingham accordingly on the Saturday, and met with one Carpenter the Lady's Bailiff; and asking him, if his Lady would entertain Hicks? Carpenter ſaid, He would have nothing to do with it; and thereupon he (the Witneſs) went to Mrs. Liſle, and asked her the Queſtion; and ſhe anſwered, He ſhould tell the Man, that they ſhould come the Tueſday following, in the Evening, and ſhe would entertain him: That he thereupon came back to his Houſe, and returned this Anſwer to the Man that employed him to go to Mrs. Liſle's.

Dunne being asked, If there were one or two Men that came to his Houſe, to enquire what the Lady ſaid? he anſwered, There were three in all: There was the little black Man, that brought the Meſſage firſt, and two more; one was a fat black Man (Hicks) and the other was a thin black Man (Neltborp:) That they ſtaid at his Houſe about three or four Hours; viz. from ſeven to eleven, on the Saturday Morning, and then they all ſet out together on Horſe-back 1685. 1 Jac. II. back to go to Mrs. Liſle's: That they went through Deverel, Chilmark, and Sutton, and came to Saliſbury-Plain; and not knowing the Way further, he hired one Barter to be their Guide.

It being demanded, How he came not to know the Way, when he went to the Lady's Houſe but the Saturday before?

He anſwered, The ſame Barter was his Guide the Saturday before, and had appointed to meet him again at the Plain the Tueſday following, and conduct him and his Friends to the Lady Liſle's Houſe, (Moyle's-Court) at Ellingham: That they did not go the ſame Way to the Lady's the laſt Time, as they did the firſt, the Gentlemen being unwilling to go that Way, and ſo they went a good Way about.

Being asked what Reward they gave Barter for his Pains? Dunne anſwered, He gave Barter half a Crown the firſt Time, and the fat black Man gave him a Crown the laſt Time; and they parted with Barter, before they came to Mrs. Liſle's Houſe, having got another Guide.

It being demanded, If he did not ask the Gentlemen the Reaſon they deſired to be concealed, and to go to the Lady's privately? He ſaid, Yes; and that the fat Man anſwered him, they were in Debt: That he came to the Lady Liſle's Houſe with the Gentlemen, and put his Horſe in the Stable; but the Gentlemen alighted at the Gate, and what became of their Horſes he could not tell, it being dark: That he ſaw nobody at the Houſe till next Morning, but Carpenter the Lady's Bailiff, who came with a Candle and Lanthorn, and gave his Horſe Hay; and a young Girl that ſhewed him (Dunne) the Way to his Chamber: That he neither eat nor drank in the Houſe, only ſome Cake he carried in his Pocket.

This he averred in the moſt ſolemn Manner, upon his Oath ſeveral Times; but being ſtrictly examined by the Chief Juſtice, after the other Witneſſes had given ſome Light into the Matter, he acknowledged, That it was Hicks that employed him to go to the Priſoner's, the Lady Liſle's Houſe, to know whether ſhe would entertain him: That the Lady asked him, Whether Hicks had been in the Army, or not? And he told her, He did not know that he was; and ſhe replied, They might come: That when they came to the Lady Liſle's on Tueſday Night, ſome-body took the Gentlemen's Horſes at the Gate, and they went in; and when he (Dunne) had put up his Horſe, he went up with Carpenter to the Lady's Chamber, where were both Hicks and Nelthorp: That he heard the Lady bid them Welcome to her Houſe; and either Carpenter or the Maid brought up the Supper; and he (Dunne) eat and drank with them. It being demanded, What Diſcourſe they had at the Table? He ſaid, at firſt, he could not remember; but, at length, he ſaid there was ſome Diſcourſe about Nelthorp, who went by the Name of Crofts, but he thought he was called Nelthorp in the Chamber; adding, That the Lady asked Hicks, Who that Gentleman was? and he ſaid it was Nelthorp, as he remembered.

The Chief Juſtice demanded, If there was no Diſcourſe about the Battel, and of their being in the Army?

Dunne anſwered, There was ſome ſuch Diſcourſe. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Chief Juſtice asking again, What the Diſcourſe was? Dunne replied, They did talk of Fighting; but he could not exactly tell what the Diſcourſe was.

Barter being ſworn, depoſed, That he ſhewed Dunne the Way to the Lady Liſle's Houſe, at Moyle's-Court, on the Saturday: That he met him the Tueſday after with two Gentlemen, and conducted them towards Moyle's-Court; but deſiring to go a more private Way than he knew, they got another Guide, and diſmiſſed him; whereupon he went to Colonel Penruddock's, and informed him that the Men were gone to the Lady Liſle's Houſe: For he had acquainted the Colonel the Day before, that Dunne had deſired him to conduct two Men thither on the Tueſday, whom he ſuſpected to be Rebels; and the Colonel had agreed to take them on the Plain; but they going another Way, he apprehended them the next Morning at the Lady's Houſe.

That when this Witneſs (Barter) came to Moyle's-Court with Dunne on the Saturday, Dunne produced a Letter, but Carpenter the Bailiff would not meddle with it; and he ſuppoſed Dunne gave it to the Lady himſelf: That the Lady came out into the Kitchen, and asked them ſeveral Queſtions; and talking with Dunne apart, ſhe laughed; and he (Barter) asking Dunne as they went Home, what ſhe laughed at? Dunne anſwered, She aſked him, If he (Barter) knew any thing of the Concern; and he anſwering, No, ſhe laughed.

Being asked, What Diſcourſe he had with Dunne, the firſt Day he went to Mrs. Liſle's, Barter anſwered, He told him the Men had half a ſcore thouſand Pounds a Year a-piece: That he (Dunne) ſhould make a very fine Booty of it; he ſhould never want Money again; and that he had concealed the Men in his Houſe ten Days: But Dunne denied he ever concealed them, or ſaid any Thing about the Value of their Eſtates, or that ever he produced a Letter at the Lady Liſle's, but delivered his Meſſage by Word of Mouth: And ſaid, the Queſtion the Lady asked him was, Whether Barter knew Hicks was a Presbyterian Preacher?

Colonel Penruddock being ſworn, depoſed as follows: Barter came to my Houſe on the Monday Morning, and told me he had been with one Dunne, upon a Journey to Mrs. Liſle's Houſe, to get Entertainment for ſome People; and that they had appointed to meet him the Tueſday following, between Eleven and Twelve upon Salisbury-Plain; and there, if I pleaſed, I might take them. I ordered him to go according to the appointed Time, and withall I ſent a Servant of my own, to watch when they came by; but it happened, I ſuppoſe by their taking another Way, that he miſſed of them; but Barter left Word that, in caſe he did not find them there, we muſt conclude he was gone with them to my Lady Liſle's Houſe: And he told me withall, ſays he, I believe they are Rebels, becauſe he that deſired me to be their Guide, ſaid the ſame to me: So early the next Morning I took ſome Soldiers with me, and beſet my Lady Liſle's Houſe: It was a pretty while before I could get any body in the Houſe to hear: At length that Man that they ſay was 1685. 1 Jac. II. the Bailiff, Carpenter, came out; and I ſaid to him, Friend, you had beſt be free and ingenuous, and diſcover who are in your Lady's Houſe; for I am ſure there were ſome Strangers came thither laſt Night: Let me know who they are, and ſhew me what Part of the Houſe they are in? He did confeſs to me there were Strangers in the Houſe, and pointed to ſuch a Part of the Houſe: But pray, ſays he, do not tell my Miſtreſs of it. Accordingly we went in, and immediately we took Mr. Hicks and this ſame Dunne in the Malt-houſe.

L. C. J. Was Dunne taken in the Malt-houſe?

Col. Penruddock. Yes; he had covered himſelf with ſome ſort of Stuff there.

L. C. J. Well, what did you do then?

Col. Penruddock. My Lady coming to us, I told her, Madam, you have done very ill in harbouring Rebels, and giving Entertainment to the King's Enemies. Saith ſhe, I know nothing of them; I am a Stranger to it. Pray, ſaid I, Madam, be ſo free and ingenuous with me, and ſo kind to yourſelf, as, if there be any other Perſon that is concealed in any Part of your Houſe (for I am ſure there is ſome body elſe) to deliver him up, and you ſhall come to no further Trouble: She denied it, and ſaid, I know nothing of them; but he went on and ſearched; and at laſt diſcovered the other Man Nelthorp, hid in a Hole by the Chimney.

Dowding being ſworn, depoſed, That he was with Colonel Penruddock when he beſet the Lady Liſle's Houſe: That they called almoſt half an Hour before they got in: That having found two Men, they came to the Lady; and ſhe ſaid, She knew nothing of any Body's being in the Houſe; and that Dunne the Witneſs had covered himſelf up in a Hole in the Malt-Houſe: He depoſed further, That he ſaw Hicks at Salisbury the Day before this Trial; and that he acknowledged his being in the Duke of Monmouth's Army.

Mrs. Carpenter, the Bailiff's Wife, being ſworn, depoſed, That the Night Mr. Hicks and Mr. Nelthorp came to her Lady's, ſhe dreſſed the Supper, and carried it up to their Chamber, and her Husband took the Diſhes of her at the Door; and that my Lady was there. It being asked if her Lady uſed to ſup below Stairs or above? She anſwered, Her Lady uſed to ſup below.

The Chief Juſtice demanding of Carpenter the Husband, If Dunne offered him a Letter for his Lady? He anſwered, No; Dunne asked him, if his Lady would give Entertainment to one Hicks and another Perſon; and he asked, who the other Perſon was? But Dunne ſaid, He did not know him.

The Chief Juſtice asking Carpenter, Where he ſaw the two Gentlemen? He ſaid, He ſaw them firſt in the Room, where they ſupped and lay; and that his Lady was there at Supper: But that he never heard Nelthorp's Name mentioned, till after he was taken next Morning.

Mrs. Liſle's Defence. Mrs. Liſle entring upon her Defence, ſaid, She did not know of any body's coming to her Houſe but Hicks; and had never heard that he was in the Army: She was informed he abſconded, and Warrants were out againſt him, for preaching at private Meetings; and for that Reaſon ſhe ſent to him to come at Night: As to Nelthorp, ſhe did not know who he was, till after he came into her Houſe: That ſhe abhorred both the Principles and Practices of the late Rebellion; ſhe ſhould have been the moſt ingrateful Perſon living, had ſhe acted any thing againſt the preſent King, conſidering how much ſhe was obliged to him for her Eſtate: Had ſhe been tried in London, ſhe could have had my Lady Abergavenny, and ſeveral other Perſons of Quality, to have proved how much ſhe deteſted the late Rebellion, and ſpoke againſt it; for ſhe was all that Time at London, and ſtaid there till after the Duke of Monmouth was beheaded. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

That ſhe was adviſed, and ſo ſhe thought it would have been, That ſhe ſhould not have been tried as a Traitor for harbouring Hicks, till he was convicted of being a Traitor: That ſhe did not know it was Nelthorp that came to her Houſe; had ſhe heard his Name, ſhe ſhould have remembred he was in a Proclamation. As to what had been teſtified, that ſhe denied Nelthorp to be in her Houſe; ſhe was then in a great Conſternation and Fear of the Soldiers, who were very rude, and could not be reſtrained by their Officers from robbing and plundering her Houſe. She begged the Court would not entertain an ill Opinion of her, becauſe of thoſe falſe Reports relating to the late King, as if ſhe was conſenting to the Death of King Charles I. for ſhe was not out of her Chamber that Day the King was beheaded, and believed ſhe ſhed more Tears for him than any Woman then living, as the Lady Marlborough, the Lord Chancellor Hyde, and twenty more, could teſtify, if they were living.

That ſhe was come down into the Country but a Week when Dunne came to her from Mr. Hicks, to know if he might be received at her Houſe; and ſhe told him he might come on Tueſday in the Evening, and he ſhould be welcome: That ſhe had no Intention to harbour him, but as a Nonconformiſt Miniſter; which ſhe knew was not Treaſon. It could not be imagined ſhe ſhould hazard her own Life, and the Ruin of her Children, to harbour Nelthorp, a Man ſhe never knew, but had heard he was in a Proclamation.

Then ſhe called George Creed, as a Witneſs for her; who teſtified, That he heard Nelthorp ſay, that the Lady Liſle (the Priſoner) did not know of his coming, or know his Name; nor did he tell his Name, till he was taken by Penruddock.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, She was not indicted for harbouring Nelthorp, but Hicks.

Mrs. Liſle went on, and ſaid, She never ſo much as wiſhed the Rebels Succeſs: She knew the King was her Sovereign, and ſhe would have ventured her Life to ſerve him: She knew it was his Due, and ſhe owed him all ſhe had in the World; and though ſhe could not fight for him herſelf, her Son did; he was actually in Arms on the King's Side in this Buſineſs; ſhe inſtructed him early in the Principles of Loyalty, and ſent him thither; it was ſhe that bred him up to fight for the King: And, ſhe obſerved, That Keynſham, where Hicks was ſaid to be in Arms, was not in this County.

The

1684. 1 Jac. II.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, The Treaſon ſhe committed was in this County; and then proceeded to ſum up the Evidence, and direct the Jury. He ſaid, this was a Caſe of very great Example, and very great Weight; wherein the Intereſt of the Publick, and the Life of a Perſon of Quality and Fortune, was put into their Hands: That they were not to be moved by Compaſſion for the Priſoner, or the Allegations and Proteſtations of her Innocence, on the one Hand, or to be influenced by any Thing that came from the Court or the learned Counſel, on the other; but were to be guided entirely by the Evidence, which he ſhould repeat with all Faithfulneſs and Integrity, as he ſhould anſwer it before the great Judge of Heaven and Earth.

The Chief Juſtice directs the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice proceeded to ſhew the Miſeries that attended the Grand Rebellion; which, he obſerved, would have been all repeated, if the Rebels under Monmouth had met with Succeſs: And, having gone through the Evidence, made ſome ſevere Reflections on the Priſoner and her Family. He ſaid, ſhe pretended much to Religion and Loyalty, and declared how much ſhe wept at the Death of King Charles the Martyr, owning the great Obligations ſhe had to the late King, and the preſent; and that ſhe had not had a Being, or any Thing to maintain it for twenty Years paſt, but from their Bounty; and yet, no ſooner was one in the Grave, but ſhe forgot all Gratitude, and entertained thoſe that were Rebels againſt his Brother and Succeſſor. He would not ſay what hand her Husband had in the Death of that bleſſed Martyr; ſhe had enough to anſwer for her own Guilt: And, he confeſſed, it ought not to be any Ingredient in this Caſe, what ſhe was in former Times: Whether ſhe rejoiced at the Death of King Charles I. or not; that ought not to influence them in this Caſe.

But he thought it a great Aggravation of her Fault, that when Colonel Penruddock came to ſearch the Houſe, ſhe denied the Traitors: And obſerved, that the Father of this very Penruddock alſo was a Martyr, and died for his Fidelity to the Crown: And who was his Judge they all knew, (Liſle the Regicide, the Priſoner's Huſband). God Almighty was a juſt God; and it might be worth her Conſideration, how God had been pleaſed to make uſe of the Colonel as the Inſtrument in this Buſineſs.

Our Forefathers, (ſays the Chief Juſtice), have been deluded; but the Deception, I hope, is now at an End. Gentlemen, upon your Conſciences be it: The Preſervation of the Government, the Life of the King, the Safety and Honour of our Religion, and the Diſcharge of our Conſciences, as loyal Men, good Chriſtians, and faithful Subjects, are at Stake: Neither Age or Sex are to move you, who have nothing elſe to conſider, but the Evidence of the Fact you are to try: I charge you, therefore, as you will anſwer it at the Bar of the Laſt Judgment, to deliver your Judgment according to Conſcience and Truth.

The Jury put ſome Caſes of Law.

The Jury being about to withdraw, one of them deſired his Lordſhip to inform them, Whether, in Point of Law, it was the ſame Thing, and equally Treaſon, to relieve and harbour a Traitor, before he was convicted, as as it was to relieve and harbour him after Conviction?

1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, It was the ſame Thing: For, if Hicks had been wounded in the Rebels Army, and had come to the Priſoner's Houſe, been entertained, and died there of his Wounds, and ſo could never have been convicted, ſhe was nevertheleſs a Traitor.

The Jury having been out a conſiderable Time, returned into Court; and ſaid, they had ſome Doubt upon them, Whether there was ſufficient Proof, that the Priſoner knew Hicks had been in the Army? The Chief Juſtice anſwered, they were Judges of the Proof; but he thought there was no Difficulty in it: Did not ſhe, (ſays he), enquire of Dunne, whether Hicks had been in the Army? and when he told her, he did not know, ſhe did not ſay, ſhe would refuſe him if he had been there, but ordered him to come by Night? By which it was evident ſhe ſuſpected it; and when he and Nelthorp came, diſcourſed with them about the Battel and the Army? He thought this a plain Proof. The Foreman anſwered, They did not remember it was proved ſhe asked any ſuch Queſtions when they were there.

The Chief Juſtice replied, Sure, you do not remember any Thing that is paſſed. Did not Dunne tell you there was ſuch Diſcourſe, and ſhe was by, and Nelthorp's Name was named? But, if there was no ſuch Proof, the Circumſtances, and Management of the Thing, was as full a Proof as could be.

Here Mrs. Liſle would have ſpoke; but the Chief Juſtice told her, ſhe muſt not ſpeak now.

Then the Jury laid their Heads together; and, after a quarter of an Hour's Debate among themſelves, they gave a Verdict, that ſhe was GUILTY.

She is convicted.

The Chief Juſtice commended the Verdict; and ſaid, he thought the Evidence full and plain; and if he had been amongſt them, ſhould have found her guilty, if ſhe had been his own Mother; and on Friday, the 28th of Auguſt, paſſed Sentence upon her, that ſhe ſhould be burnt as a Traitor that Afternoon: But, upon the Interceſſion of ſome of the Prebendaries of the Church of Wincheſter, ſhe was reprieved till Wedneſday the ſecond of September.

Sentenced to be burnt.

In the mean Time a Letter was ſent by the Lords St. John and Abergavenny, to the Earl of Clarendon, to deſire him to repreſent to his Majeſty, that the Priſoner had been a Favourer of the Royaliſts in the late Times of Uſurpation: Which Letter the Earl of Clarendon read to his Majeſty. A Petition was alſo preferred to the King, that the Execution might be changed from Burning to Beheading; and might be reſpited four Days. To which his Majeſty anſwered, That he would not reprieve her one Day; but for altering the Sentence, he would do it, if there were any Precedents for it. Whereupon ſeveral Precedents were offered of altering the Sentence; as that of the Duke of Somerſet, who was condemned to be hanged for Felony in the Reign of Edw. VI. and that of the Lord Audley, for Felony, 7 Car. I. Queen Catharine Howard, condemned for Treaſon, in the Reign of Hen. VIII. The Counteſs of Saliſbury, 32 Hen. VIII. and Jane Grey in the firſt

Precedents of altering the Sentence.

" IT may be expected that I ſhould ſay ſomething at my Death, my Birth and Education being near this Place. My Parents inſtructed me in the Fear of God; and I now die of the reformed Religion; always being inſtructed in that Belief, that if Popery ſhould return into this Nation, it would be a great Judgment. I die in Expectation of Pardon of my Sins, and Acceptation with the Father, by the imputed Righteouſneſs of Jeſus Chriſt; he being the End of the Law for Righteouſneſs to every one that believeth. I thank God, through Chriſt Jeſus, I depart under the Blood of Sprinkling, that ſpeaketh better Things than that of Abel; God having made this Chaſtiſement an Ordinance to my Soul. I did as little expect to come to this Place, on this Occaſion, as any Perſon in this Nation; therefore let all learn not to be high-minded, but fear. The Lord is a Sovereign, and will take what Way he ſeeth beſt to glorify himſelf by his poor Creatures; therefore I humbly deſire to ſubmit to his Will, praying of him, that in Patience I may poſſeſs my Soul.

" The Crime was, my entertaining a Non-conformiſt Miniſter, who is ſince ſworn to have been in the Duke of Monmouth's Army. I am told, if I had not denied them, it would not have affected me: I have no Excuſe but Surprize and Fear; which I believe my Jury muſt make uſe of to excuſe their Verdict to the World. I have been told, that the Court ought to be Counſel for the Priſoner: Inſtead of Advice, there was Evidence given from thence; which, (though it was but Hearſay), might poſſibly affect my Jury. My Defence was ſuch as might be expected from a weak Woman; but, ſuch as it was, I never heard it repeated again to the Jury.

" But I forgive all Perſons that have wronged me; and I deſire that God will do ſo likewiſe. I forgive Colonel Penruddock, although he told me, he could have taken thoſe Men before they came to my Houſe.

" As to what may be objected, that I gave it under my Hand, that I diſcourſed with Nelthorp; that could be no Evidence to the Court or Jury, it being after my Conviction and Sentence.

" I acknowledge his Majeſty's Favour in revoking my Sentence; and I pray God to preſerve him; and that he may long reign in Peace, and the true Religion may flouriſh under him.

" Two Things I have omitted to ſay, which is, That I forgive him who deſired to be taken from the Grand Jury, and put upon the Petty Jury, that he might be the more nearly concerned in my Death; and return humble Thanks to God, and the Reverend Clergy that aſſiſted me in my Impriſonment. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

Sept. 1685. ALICIA LISLE.

This Attainder of Mrs. Liſle was made void by an Act of 1 W. & M. reciting, that ſhe was indicted of High-Treaſon, for entertaining the ſaid John Hicks, though he was not at the Time of her Trial attainted, or convicted of any ſuch Crime; and this by a Verdict injuriouſly extorted and procured by the Menaces and Violences, and other illegal Practices of the Lord Jeffries, Baron of Wem, then Chief Juſtice, and Chief Commiſſioner of Oyer and Terminer. The Attainder reverſed.

This Trial ſufficiently manifeſts the little Care Biſhop Burnet uſed, to inform himſelf of the Truth of the Facts he relates, even in Inſtances where he might have done it with all the Eaſe imaginable. Either he thought it beneath him to aſk a Queſtion, and that it might be a Reflection on his Underſtanding, to be thought ignorant of any Occurrence that happened in his Times, as he calls them; or he deſignedly relates the Facts directly contrary to the Truth, for the Sake of his Party; or purely for the Sake of Lying; it not being eaſy to conceive why he ſhould miſreport ſome Paſſages, where the Truth would not have been at all diſadvantagious to his Friends, if it had appeared in its proper Colours. Remarks

Speaking of this Trial, he ſays, That the Night after Monmouth's Defeat, Hicks and Nelthorp eſcaped from the Army, and came to Mrs. Liſle's Houſe for Shelter: That Hicks told her the Occaſion; whereupon ſhe immediately ordered a Servant to give an Information againſt them to a Juſtice of Peace, and in the mean while to ſuffer them to eſcape; but on a ſudden the Houſe was ſurrounded by a Party, who took both them, and her for harbouring them: That Jeffries procured a Promiſe from the King not to pardon her: That there was no Proof ſhe knew the Perſons were Rebels; nor were they in any Proclamation: But Jeffries charged the Jury in a violent Manner; and turned them back twice, threatening them with an Attaint: Whereupon at length they brought her in guilty; and ſhe expreſſed great Joy, that ſhe ſuffered for an Act of Charity and Piety.

Now, in the firſt Place, Hicks and Nelthorp did not come to Mrs. Liſle's Houſe the Night after Monmouth's Defeat; for the Battle of Sedgmore was fought on the 6th of July, and Hicks and Nelthorp did not come to her Houſe till the 28th of July. Mrs. Liſle ſays in her Defence, That ſhe was at London at the Time of the Battel, and when the Duke of Monmouth was beheaded; and did not come into the Country above a Week before theſe two Gentlemen were taken at her Houſe; which was three Weeks after the Battle of Sedgmore: How the Biſhop, therefore, came to ſay they fled to her Houſe the Night after the Battel; or for what Reaſon he forged this Tale, I cannot conceive.

1685. 1 Jac. II. Fernley's Trial. The Indictment.

He

1685. Jac. II.

It is equally true, that they were not in any Proclamation; for Mrs. Liſle herſelf ſays in the Trial, She knew Nelthorp was in a Proclamation.

He ſays alſo, that Jeffries gave Evidence himſelf, that they confeſſed they were with Monmouth: But I cannot ſee what Occaſion there was for this, when there were three Witneſſes, that ſwore poſitively Hicks was in Monmouth's Army; and would have perſuaded them to join the Rebels.

As to Mrs. Liſle's ſending to inform a Juſtice of Peace, that Hicks and Nelthorp were at her Houſe, as ſoon as they came; it appears, they ſupped and lay all Night in her Houſe; and were not taken till the next Morning: Nor did ſhe ever mention her ſending to inform a Juſtice of the Peace of there being there, as ſhe certainly would have done, in her Defence at the Trial, if ſhe had ever given any of her Servants ſuch Orders.

He alſo abuſes his Friend, Mrs. Liſle, when he ſays, ſhe expreſſed great Satisfaction, that ſhe died for performing an Act of Piety and Charity: For it is evident, ſhe expreſſed herſelf quite otherwiſe; declared her Deteſtation of Treaſon and Rebellion, and prayed for the King with her laſt Breath; which does not agree with that pretended Joy, for having harharboured and concealed his Enemies.

Nor is it true, that the Jury were turned back twice, and threatened with an Attaint: They, indeed, deſired to be ſatisfied in two Points. 1. Whether it was Treaſon to receive a Rebel before he was convicted: To which the Court anſwered, It was. 2. They doubted whether ſhe knew Hicks was in the Army: To which the Chief Juſtice anſwered, The Priſoner's ordering them to come in the Night, was a ſtrong Preſumption of it; but the talking of the Battel at Supper, left them no Room to doubt of it. Whereupon the Jury, without withdrawing again, gave their Verdict, that ſhe was guilty. And perhaps the only Thing that deſerves Cenſure in this Trial was, the convicting her of High-Treaſon, for harbouring Hicks before he was convicted of Treaſon. There is no Doubt to be made that it is High-Treaſon, knowingly to harbour a Traitor before he is convicted: But the Act for reverſing the Attainder ſeems to intimate, that a Perſon cannot be tried for receiving or harbouring a Traitor till that Traitor is convicted; and in this I am apt to think Mrs Liſle had Injuſtice done her. I do not doubt her Guilt; but yet I think ſhe was not legally convicted. As to the other Inducements mentioned in the Act, relating to the Chief Juſtice's Menaces, theſe, poſſibly, were thrown in by Friends. I do not find the Chief Juſtice uſed any Threats, either to the Jury or Witneſſes; unleſs when he examined Dunne, who notoriouſly prevaricated, and forſwore himſelf at this Trial, by his own Confeſſion; and from whom the Truth was extorted with the utmoſt Difficulty.

1685. 1 Jac. II. Fernley's Trial.

The Trial of JOHN FERNLEY, Barber-Surgeon, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 18th of October, 1685. 1 Jac. II.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the ſaid John Fernley with High-Treaſon; for that, on the 20th of Auguſt, in the firſt Year of the King, at the Pariſh of St. Mary White-Chapel, in the the County of Middleſex, knowing one James Burton to be a falſe Traitor and Rebel, he did harbour, conceal, and ſuſtain him, in his Manſion-Houſe, ſituate in the ſaid Pariſh; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

The King's Counſel firſt produced the Record of Burton's Outlawry: After which Burton himſelf was ſworn as a Witneſs againſt the Priſoner.

Burton depoſed, That coming home to his Houſe in Wapping, from Monmouth's Army in the Weſt, his Wife got him a Lodging at Mr. Fernley's: That he dined with Fernley on the Sunday, and they diſcourſed of Monmouth's Army being routed; and he believed he told Fernley he was there.

Burton's Wife depoſed, That ſhe took the Lodging for her Husband, at Fernley's, becauſe ſhe thought he was not ſafe at Home: That Mrs. Fernley was her Acquaintance; and they dined together at Fernley's on Sunday.

Mr. Reynolds depoſed, That having a Warrant from the Lieutenant of the Tower, in Auguſt laſt, he apprehended Burton in Fernley's Houſe: That he was got up a Chimney, and fell down with the Soot about his Ears, as they were looking for him.

Then Burton's Pardon was produced, to make him a Legal Witneſs.

Fernley, in his Defence, ſaid, That Burton came to lodge at his Houſe on the Friday; but he knew nothing of his being there till the Sunday following, when they dined together; and Burton told him how he made his Eſcape: That one Gaunt came to his Houſe after Dinner, and asked for Mr. Burton; and being brought in, Gaunt told him, in a little Time he ſhould have a Paſſage for him beyond the Sea: That ſome Gentlemen were gone, and others were about going; particularly Colonel Danvers and Major Wildman: That he intended, the next Morning, to have acquainted a Magiſtrate with this, and have apprehended them all; for Gaunt had promiſed to come again, and he had Burton ſecure in his Houſe already, being himſelf a Conſtable: He had no Deſign to conceal Burton; eſpecially, as he knew there was an 100 l. offered in the Proclamation for taking him; and he was a poor Man, and had no Obligation to conceal him, and ruin himſelf and his Family. Fernley's Defence.

The Court told him, if he had had a loyal Heart, he would have ſecured both Burton and Gaunt, and not have concealed Burton ſeven 1685. 1 Jac. II. or eight Hours in his Houſe after he knew of his Treaſons.

The Priſoner anſwered, He propoſed to have ſeized both Danvers and Wildman, when he had learned of Gaunt where they were; for he knew there was a Proclamation out againſt them; and this Deſign would have been defeated, if he had taken up Gaunt or Burton that Evening: What he had done, was with a Deſign to ſerve the King.

The Court replied, If he had had an honeſt Intention, he would have acquainted ſome Juſtice of Peace with the Matter.

Then the Priſoner called Witneſſes to his Reputation: One of them ſaid, Fernley was a Barber, and uſed to ſhave him; and he looked upon him to be a ſober Man: Another teſtified, That he went to Church, behaved himſelf very well, and he never heard him ſpeak againſt the Government. He called ſome others; but they did not come into Court. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice Jones directed the Jury, and obſerved, That Burton, whom the Priſoner harboured, was not only in Monmouth's Rebellion; but was outlawed for being in the Rye-Houſe Conſpiracy; and had been abſent from his own Houſe two Years on that Account: That he confeſſed Burton's being in his Houſe, and his acquainting him that he had been in the Rebellion; and left it to them, whether there was not ſufficient Evidence againſt him. The Chief Juſtice directs the Jury.

The Jury found him GUILTY. He is convicted.

The Sentence and Remarks will be found at the End of Alderman Corniſh's Trial, who was tried the ſame Day.

1685. 1 Jac. II. Ring's Trial.

The Trial of WILLIAM RING, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 19th of October, 1685. 1 Jac. II. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charges the ſaid William Ring with High-Treaſon; for that on the 20th of July, in the firſt Year of the King, in the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, he, well knowing Joſeph Kelloway and Henry Lawrence to be Traitors and Rebels, did harbour, conceal, and ſuſtain them in the Dwelling-Houſe of him the ſaid William Ring, ſituate in the Pariſh and County aforeſaid; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

The Conviction of Kelloway and Lawrence. The King's Counſel producing the Records of Kelloway's and Lawrence's Convictions, it appeared they had been indicted of High-Treaſon, in levying War againſt the King; and that they confeſſed the Indictment on the Araignment; and the uſual Judgment of High-Treaſon had been pronounced on them.

The Evidence. Then the Witneſſes were called to prove that William Ring, the Priſoner, did receive and harbour them, between the Time the Treaſon was committed, and their Conviction.

Barrington depoſed, He ſaw Kelloway and Lawrence at Ring's Houſe in Wyche-Street, the Day after they came to London from the Duke of Monmouth's Army in the Weſt.

Barrow depoſed, That he heard Ring confeſs before the Lord Mayor, that Lawrence and Kelloway told him, they had both been in the late Weſtern Rebellion in Monmouth's Army; and that he had lodged them two or three Nights afterwards in his own Houſe. The Evidence.

Criſp alſo depoſed, That Ring confeſſed he lodged them ſeveral Nights after they told him they fled from Monmouth's Army in the Weſt.

Then Ring's Examination was read: Wherein he confeſſed he lodged Lawrence and Kelloway ſeveral Nights after they had told him they had been in Monmouth's Army, (which was routed); and that they left their Horſes at Newbury.

Ring, in his Defence, ſaid, That he acknowledged he lodged them; but he did not know they had been in the Rebellion; and that he was frighted, when he ſet his Hand to the Examination, and did not know what he did. Ring's Defence.

The Jury found Ring GUILTY.

The

1685. 1 Jac. II. Gaunt's Trial.

The Trial of ELIZABETH GAUNT, Wife of William Gaunt, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 19th of October, 1685. 1 Jac. II.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charges the ſaid Elizabeth Gaunt with High-Treaſon; for that, on the 24th Day of September, in the 30th Year of the late King Charles II. in the Pariſh of St. Mary White-Chapel, in the County of Middleſex, ſhe, the ſaid Elizabeth Gaunt, well-knowing one James Burton to be a falſe Traitor and Rebel, in a certain Houſe, to the Jurors unknown, did, knowingly, ſecretly, and traitorouſly ſuſtain and maintain, and Meat, Drink, and five Pounds in Money, for the Maintenance and Suſtinence of the ſaid James Burton, to him did maliciouſly and traitorouſly deliver; againſt the Duty of her Allegiance, &c.

The Attorney-General, in opening the Evidence, obſerved, That the Priſoner and her Husband were the great Brokers for carrying over Traitors beyond Sea; ſuch as the Lord Shafteſbury, and others.

The Evidence. Burton being ſworn, depoſed, That he was concerned with the two Rumbolds, and others, in the Rye-Houſe Plot; and that the Conſpirators intended to have killed the late King Charles II. That Keeling making a Diſcovery, he (the Witneſs) was put into a Proclamation, and thereupon abſconded: That about two Months afterwards, the Priſoner, Mrs. Gaunt, came to him, and told him, there were ſome Perſons about to make their Eſcape; and took him along with her to a little Brewhouſe in Half-Moon-Alley in Biſhopſgate-Street, and carrying him up Stairs into a Room, he found the two Rumbolds there: That he lay there all Night, and went with one of the Rumbolds next Morning to Whitechapel, where they took Horſe, and rode to Rochford-Hundred, and waited there two Days, when a Veſſel they were to embark on, came down; but finding it leaky, and ill-mann'd, and the Weather bad, they came back to London, where he (this Witneſs) lay a great many Months after: And Mrs. Gaunt came to him again, and told him, there were two Perſons going, and he might have a Paſſage: And a Boat being ready at the Water-ſide, carried him to Graveſend, from whence he went to Amſterdam; and that Mrs. Gaunt furniſhed him with about five Pounds in Money.

It being demanded, How Mrs. Gaunt came to take ſo much care of him? He ſaid, he ſuppoſed, becauſe ſhe knew her Husband was concerned: That her Husband would have gone with him and Captain Walcot to view what Condition the Tower was in: And Capt. Walcot, when Gaunt was with them, ſaid, he had a Deſign to take a Houſe over againſt the Tower, and put ſome Men into it, to break into the Tower.

Mary Gilbert, Burton's Daughter, depoſed, That Mrs. Gaunt came to their Houſe, the Night her Father went away, and carried him to a Houſe without Biſhopſgate; where ſhe (the Deponent) ſaw a Man with one Eye, a full-ſet Man, full of Pockholes, (Rumbold): And being asked, Why her Father went away? She ſaid, on account of the Proclamation.

Mrs. Burton, the Wife of Burton, being ſworn, depoſed, That Mrs. Gaunt came to enquire after her Husband, and told her, if he was willing to go away, ſhe would take care: And it being demanded, Why Mrs. Gaunt came to ſecure her Husband? ſhe ſaid, It was becauſe he was in the Proclamation; and for Fear her Husband ſhould know any Thing againſt Mrs. Gaunt's Husband.

Then Burton's Pardon was produced, to ſhew he was a Legal Witneſs.

Mrs. Gaunt's Defence. The Court demanding of the Priſoner, What ſhe ſaid to this Evidence? ſhe anſwered, She did not contrive to ſend Burton away.

Being told, Two Witneſſes had ſworn it, and again demanded, Whether ſhe did or not? ſhe anſwered, She did not come there to tell them what ſhe did: And being asked, If ſhe did not know Burton was in the Proclamation about Rombold's Plot? She anſwered, It's like I might.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury. The Chief Juſtice, in his Direction to the Jury, told them, If they thought ſhe did know, or believe, Burton to have been guilty of that Treaſon, and that ſhe did help to convey him away, as the Witneſſes had ſworn, by giving him Money, and ſolliciting him ſeveral Times to be gone, they ought to find her guilty.

The Jury brought her in GULTY.

1685. 1 Jac. II. Cornish's Trial.

The Trial of HENRY CORNISH, Esq; for High-Treason, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 19th of October, 1685. 1 Jac. II.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charges the said Henry Cornish with High-Treason, in compassing the Death of the late King Charles II. And the Overt-Act laid as an Evidence of it, was, That on the 30th of May, in the 35th Year of the said King Charles II. at the Parish of St. Michael Bassishaw, London; he did maliciously and traitorously (knowing James late Duke of Monmouth, William Russel Esq; Sir Thomas Armstrong Knight, and divers other Traitors and Rebels, to have conspired the Death of the said King), then and there promise, That he the said Henry Cornish would be aiding and assisting to them in carrying on the said Treason; against the Duty of his Allegince, &c.

Moves to put off his Trial. Mr. Cornish being arraigned, moved to put off his Trial: He said, He had no Counsel, no Pen, Ink, or Paper, allowed him: That his Children had petitioned his Majesty last Night, and he referred them to the Judges.

The Attorney-General answered, He had Pen and Ink as soon as he petitioned for it; and the King had left him to the Course of the Law, that he could not consent to put off the Trial; nor did he see any Reason, why Mr. Cornish should be in a better Condition than other Prisoners; he had not deserved so well of the Government.

Refused.

Mr. Cornish replied, The Lord Russel had seven or eight Days allowed him.

The Court said, My Lord Russel's Trial was put off but till the Afternoon, and those that were tried there, had generally no Notice at all: However, if one Man had a particular Favour, another could not claim it: That it was almost a Week since he was apprehended, and he knew what he was charged withall.

Mr. Cornish said, It did not appear by the Warrant, Whether he was committed for Treason against this King, or the last: But not being able to obtain more Time, the Jurors were called; of whom Mr. Cornish having challenged thirty-five, the following Gentlemen were sworn.

John Price,	Robert Clavel,
Thomas Oneby,	William Long.

Colonel Rumsey's Evidence. Mr. Rumsey being called as a Witness for the King, deposed, That the latter End of October, or the Beginning of November, 1682, he was sent by the Lord Shaftesbury to the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Russel, Lord Grey, Sir Thomas Armstrong, and Mr. Ferguson, (who were then met at Mr. Sheppard's House) to know their Resolution: And that they told him, they were disappointed by Mr. Trenchard: He had not been there a Quarter of an Hour, but Mr. Sheppard was called, who went down, and brought up Alderman Cornish: The Alderman coming into the Room, made his Excuse he did not come sooner; and said, He could not stay with them, because they were to meet that Night about their Charter: Whereupon Ferguson pulled a Paper out of his Bosom; which the Company told him they had read, and desired the Alderman to read it; but Ferguson read it to him, and being asked, how he liked it, he said, very well: That in this Paper there were two Points, which he remembred very well, one was, That they would declare for Liberty of Conscience; and the other was, That all those that would assist in the Insurrection, who had any Church or Crown-Lands, in the late War, should have them restored: It was a Declaration to be dispersed on the Rising.

Mr. Attorney demanding, If there was a rising intended at that Time? Rumsey answered, Yes; and they met therefore for that Purpose: And Mr. Trenchard was the Man to manage the Business about Taunton; and he disappointed them

Being asked again, What his Message to them from the Lord Shaftesbury was? he answered, It was to know what Issue they had come to about the Rising, and to press them to it; and represent that such a Matter was not to be long kept on Foot; either they should come to a Resolution to rise, or let it fall for Good and all: And Mr. Cornish said, He liked it very well, and that poor Interest he had, he would join with it.

Here Mr. Cornish declared, he never was at any Consult at Mr. Sheppard's; but he had had great Dealings with him: Mr. Rumsey said, Mr. Cornish and he had great Concerns together, while he (Rumsey) managed the Customs at Bristol: Mr. Cornish had returned between three and four thousand Pounds for him: He was a very honest Gentleman; and Rumsey appealed to himself, If he thought he took any Delight in appearing against him?

Cornish demanded, Why he had not accused him all this while? Rumsey answered, I think I suffer for it, and not you: You say I accuse you falsly: Then Mr. Cornish you don't stand there, nor I here.

Mr. Attorney demanding, If he never had any Discourse with the Prisoner at other Times? Rumsey answered, They had been acquainted fourteen Years, but he never heard him speak any Thing of this Nature before.

Goodenough, who had been Under-Sheriff to Mr. Cornish, being sworn a Witness for the King, deposed, That he knew nothing of the Business of the Lord Russel; but that an Insurrection was intended in London: They designed to divide the City into twenty Parts; and out of each Part to raise 500 Men, to make an Insurrection: They were to take the Tower, and drive the Guards out of Town.

That some Time before this, in Easter-Term, 1682, he happened to be at Mr. Cornish's House,

1685. 1 Jac. II.

House, and saying to him, the Law will not defend us now, though never so innocent; some other Way must be thought on; Mr. Corniſh answered, I wonder the City is so unready, and the Country so ready: And he (this Witness) replied, There was something thought of to be done here; and in the first Place the Tower ought to be seized: Whereupon Mr. Corniſh, after a short Pause, said, I will do what I can, or, what Good I can: That afterwards Mr. Corniſh meeting him on the Exchange, asked how Affairs went, which he understood to relate to what they discoursed of before; but he never met him afterwards.

Here Mr. Corniſh bid Goodenough remember all his Tricks; and demanded, If any one was present when he had that Discourse with him? Goodenough answered, No; it was in his little Room in his own House.

Mr. Corniſh's Defence.

Mr. Corniſh, in his Defence, said, It was strange he should meet Rumsey and the rest of the Conspirators at Mr. Sheppard's; and yet, by Rumsey's own Evidence, never speak to him of the Matter afterward; and declared solemnly, in the Presence of God, he knew nothing of it: He objected also, that Rumsey was not a good Witness, because he had not his Pardon: But the Court ruled, he was a good Witness, if he could shew no Record of his Conviction.

His Witnesses.

Then the Prisoner called several Witnesses, to shew he had no Intimacy or Friendship with Goodenough; and that Bethel, the other Sheriff, in a Manner compelled him to suffer Goodenough to be their Under-Sheriff.

Mr. Jekyl, and others, deposed, That Mr. Corniſh declared, Bethel would put Goodenough upon him for his Under-Sheriff; and he said, he would not have him (as he remembred), because he was obnoxious to the King and Government: And Mr. Gosfright deposed, That Mr. Corniſh told Bethel he would fine, and not hold the Shrievalty, if Goodenough was Under-Sheriff; and he believed Mr. Corniſh was never reconciled to him; from whence Mr. Corniſh inferred, how unlikely it was, he should trust him with Secrets of this Nature.

Dr. Calamy, the Minister of his Parish, deposed, That Mr. Corniſh came to Church constantly with his Family, received the Sacrament once a Month; and he never heard him say a disrespectful Word of the Government, during the two Years he was Minister there.

Some other Witnesses gave the Prisoner a good Character, as to his Loyalty and Reputation in the World.

Mr. Sheppard examined after the Jury were withdrawn.

Then the Chief Justice directed the Jury, and seemed to be of Opinion, the Prisoner was guilty. The Jury being withdrawn a considerable Time, were returning with their Verdict; when Mr. Corniſh desired Mr. Sheppard might be examined, as an Evidence for him: Which Mr. Attorney opposed, as very irregular, after the Jury was gone out: However, Mr. Sheppard appearing, the Jury came into Court again; and the Prisoner was indulged so far, as to have Mr. Sheppard examined.

Mr. Sheppard deposed, That at one of the Meetings of the Conspirators at his House, Mr. Corniſh came thither, to speak with the Duke of Monmouth, or some of the Company; but did not stay half a quarter of an Hour: That he (Sheppard) came up, and went out with him; and, that there was not one Word read, or any Paper produced, while he was there: He remembred indeed, there was a Declaration read; Ferguson pulled it out of his Shoe: But he was positive there was no Paper read to Mr. Corniſh; for he was not looked upon to be of the Company: And Mr. Corniſh was at his House but once, when the Duke of Monmouth was there.

The Lord Chief Justice Jones then observed, There was a Cabal of Rebels met together, and Mr. Sheppard brought up the Prisoner to them without their Leave; which was scarce credible, unless he knew him to be one of the Company.

Mr. Attorney also observed, That Sheppard swore at a former Trial, he had Orders from the Company not to bring up any Person.

Sheppard answered, They desired he would let none of his Servants come up; and that he fetched them Wine, and what they wanted: But he could safely say, Mr. Corniſh knew nothing of their Business.

Rumsey examined again.

Mr. Rumsey, being confronted with Mr. Sheppard; again deposed, That as soon as Mr. Corniſh had made an Excuse for not coming sooner, all the Company gathered about him; and somebody said, They would tell him what they had done: They said, the Declaration had been read, which Ferguson had prepared, and that Mr. Corniſh should hear it read; and with that Mr. Sheppard, though he denied it, did take the Candle and hold it; and while the Company stood round the Prisoner, Ferguson pulled the Declaration out of his Pocket, and it was read, and Mr. Corniſh approved it; and said, With that small Interest, or little Interest, he had, he would assist; or Words to that Effect.

Then Mr. Solicitor made his Observations on the Evidence, and said,

Mr. Solicitor's Observations on the Evidence and Defence.

Gentlemen, There hath been a very great Indulgence given to the Prisoner, and it is to shew you what Tenderness a Court of Justice hath, and always will have, of the Lives of the King's Subjects: After a full Evidence, though he had neglected his Defence, yet you were again sent for into Court, to hear what further Evidence he had to offer to you; I cannot but observe, this looks like a subtile Contrivance on the Prisoner's Part: You see what Endeavours have been made by Mr. Attorney General, to have had Sheppard here a Witness for the King; you have observed he hath told you he had a Subpœna for him, but he was absent; in what Company he was absent Yesterday, he hath told you, with Mr. Corniſh's Son: This Morning he was not to be found after he had received this Subpœna from Mr. Corniſh; he stays without, and gives no Notice; but when you are withdrawn, can send Intelligence to Mr. Corniſh, that he had something to say, that he hopes will excuse him now: What that is, I must beg you a little to observe. Truly, I am very glad, for the Satisfaction of all Men, that Mr. Sheppard hath now been here; and he is so far from invalidating any one Part of the Testimony, that by all the Circumstances you can collect from this Evidence that is given, it is a Corroboration of it: Mr. Corniſh was accused of being present at Consultations that have been held against the Life of the King, and for raising Rebellion at Mr. Sheppard's House: His excusing his not coming there, is a sufficient Argument, to prove he was privy to their Meeting; he hath gone on further, and proved to you the reading the Declaration. Now what ſays Sheppard to this Witneſs? Mr. Corniſh, by the Way, I muſt obſerve to you, before did deny his being there: He had been ſometimes in Company with Ferguſon; but he did not like the Man, he ſays, becauſe of his Morals: Now the Witneſs he hath produced, hath given you this Teſtimony, That Mr. Corniſh hath been there in that Company; That he came in ſuch a Manner, that no Man but muſt be ſatisfied he was privy to their Deſigns, and did know of their Meeting; for he came when the Duke of Monmouth, and the reſt of the Conſpirators, were there met in private, with a direct Charge to Mr. Sheppard, that is the Witneſs, that they ſhould be ſo private, that no one Servant ſhould come up into the Room; yet Mr. Sheppard tells you, That when Mr. Corniſh came, he carried him up into the Room, without ſo much as acquainting any one of the Company, that Mr. Corniſh had a Deſire to come; but brings him up as if he were (and I make no Doubt, but you will imagine he was) one of the Company: When he comes there, he ſays, his Buſineſs is with the Duke of Monmouth, the Head of that Conſpiracy: And he himſelf tells you, he never had any Dealings with the Duke of Monmouth in his Life; What can a Man imagine of that Man, that had no Dealings with the Duke of Monmouth, to find him out in a Place where no Mortal could know, and none was to know; and coming to him at that Time, and at that Place, under thoſe Circumſtances of Concealment; no Man almoſt but, out of his own Mouth, muſt believe that he was privy to that Conſpiracy: Therefore, though this Witneſs doth ſeem to forget ſome Part of the Evidence, the reading the Declaration and holding the Candle, yet theſe are ſuch Circumſtances, that in themſelves do carry a Proof of the Charge, and do confirm all the reſt that the Witneſs hath ſaid; and this muſt be a great Satisfaction to you, that he was there preſent, and privy to that Deſign. And ſo I leave it to your Conſideration.

He is convicted.

The Jury withdrawing again, returned in a ſhort Time, and brought in Mr. Corniſh GUILTY.

Sentence paſſed on Fernley, Ring, Gaunt, and Corniſh.

Then all the Priſoners that had been tried that Day, were ſet to the Bar, viz. John Fernly, William Ring, Elizabeth Gaunt, and Mr. Corniſh; and Sentence was pronounced on them as Traitors.

The three firſt executed at Tyburn.

Fernley and Ring were afterwards executed at Tyburn; and Mrs. Gaunt was burnt, in Purſuance of her Sentence.

Mr. Corniſh executed in Cheapſide.

Alderman Corniſh was drawn from Newgate to Cheapſide, where a Gallows was erected for his Execution, on the 25th of October, 1685; where he began a Speech, to the People, but did not finiſh it. He ſaid,

His Speech.

" I AM come here this Day, condemned " to die; but God is my Witneſs, the " Crimes laid to my Charge, were falſly and " maliciouſly ſworn againſt me by the Witneſ- " ſes: For I never was at any Conſult, nor any " Meeting, where Matters againſt the Govern- " ment were diſcourſed of. I never heard or " read any Declaration, nor ever acted any " Thing wilfully againſt the Government. I " confeſs, through the Juſtice of God, my pri- " vate Sins have brought me to this infamous " End: Yea, it were juſt with God, not only to " deprive me eternally of his Preſence, but to " condemn me to everlaſting Torments; but " through Jeſus Chriſt, I hope to be eternally " bleſſed: Yea, as to the Crimes for which I " ſuffer, on the Words of a dying Man, I am " altogether innocent. I bleſs God I was from " my younger Years brought up, and have " for ſome Years continued, a Proteſtant, in " the Communion of the Church of England; " in which Communion I now die. I bleſs God, I was " born under a Government, in the Conſtitu- " tion of which I did ever acquieſce, and in " which I was once a Member; at which Time, " I did according to the beſt of my Under- " ſtanding: (Here, it is ſaid, he was interrupted " by one of the Sheriffs. Then he went on, and " ſaid,) I bleſs God, I was born in a Land of " Light, where the Goſpel hath been preach- " ed in Power and Purity: He might have " brought me forth in a Land of Darkneſs and " Ignorance; but bleſſed be God, for Jeſus " Chriſt — (The Perſon who publiſhes this Speech ſays, more of it could not be taken, becauſe of the Noiſe of the People, and Interruption of one of the Sheriffs; and whether thus far be genuine, we have a great deal of Reaſon to queſtion: He adds,) That the Alderman intreated the Sheriff to intercede with his Majeſty, to be kind to his poor Wife and Children: And the Sheriff promiſing him to wait on his Majeſty the next Day about it, he replied, " Mr. Sheriff, " I thank you; the Lord reward you a thou- " ſand fold: The Lord put it into your Hearts " to be kind to the Widows and Fatherleſs; " it is your Duty. The Lord put it into the " Hearts of all good People to pray for me".

1685. 1 Jac. II.

And having finiſhed his Devotions, the Executioner did his Office.

His Attainder reverſed.

The Attainder of Alderman Corniſh was reverſed by Act of Parliament, in the firſt Year of King William and Queen Mary.

Remarks on the firſt laſt Trials.

Biſhop Burnet, mentioning theſe Trials, in his Poſthumous Hiſtory, Vol. 1. ſays, That Mrs. Gaunt was a mighty pious charitable Woman; and that there was no other Witneſs againſt her, but the Perſon ſhe harboured, beſides her Maid, which he thinks was not legal Evidence; and reflects on the Court, for directing the Jury to convict her; eſpecially there being no Proof, that ſhe knew the Perſon ſhe harboured was a Rebel. He adds, That Woman died with great Conſtancy, and rejoyced ſhe was made the firſt Martyr for Religion.

This is another notorious Inſtance of this Right Reverend Prelate's being given to Leaſing-making, as his Countrymen call it: For, in the firſt Place, Mrs. Gaunt was not ſo much as charged with harbouring Burton, but with maintaining him and giving him Money; which Facts were proved upon her by Burton, his Wife, and Daughter; nor was there any Maid of Mrs. Gaunt's called as an Evidence againſt her. It was alſo proved, that ſhe aſſiſted Burton to make his Eſcape; and that the the Priſoner and her Husband made it their Buſineſs to conceal and convey Rebels and Traitors beyond Sea, and actually conveyed over the Lord Shaftesbury, and ſeveral more of the Biſhop's Friends; for which Reaſon, I preſume, he gives her thoſe Epithets, of Pious and Charitable. It is plain alſo, from the Trial, that ſhe knew Burton was in the Proclamation: She did not deny it, when the Court demanded, if ſhe did not know that Burton's Name was in the Proclamation about Rumbold's, or the Rye-Houſe Plot; but anſwered, It's like, I might: Which ſurely, the Biſhop could never look upon as a Proof of her being unacquainted with it. But there was further Evidence, that ſhe knew of the Proclamation, and the Priſoner's Guilt: It appears in the Trial, that the Reaſon ſhe maintained Burton, and took ſuch Care to ſend him away, was, for Fear he ſhould become an Evidence againſt her own Husband, and not out of Friendſhip to Burton; much leſs did ſhe do it as an Act of Piety and Charity, unleſs ſhe looked upon the concealing and conveying away Traitors and Rebels, to be Acts of Piety and Charity.

But, whatever were the Motives ſhe went upon, it muſt be acknowledged to be a very baſe Action in Burton, to come in as a Witneſs againſt a Perſon who had maintained him in his Diſtreſs, and ſaved him from the Gallows: A Man of any Spirit or Generoſity, would have choſen Death rather than Life, upon ſuch Terms. And ſuch Inſtances as this, and that other of Fernley, who harboured the very ſame treacherous Burton, would make Men very cautious how they harboured their beſt Friends on ſuch Occaſions as theſe. William Ring, who harboured Lawrence and Kelloway, alſo is another unhappy Inſtance of the Ingratitude and Baſeneſs of ſome Men, who can ſacrifice their beſt Friends and Benefactors, to ſave their own Lives.

As to Mr. Corniſh, it was certainly his own Witneſs, Mr. Sheppard, that hanged him. There was but one Witneſs againſt him, namely, Colonel Rumſey, till Sheppard appeard; for as to Goodenough, his Teſtimony was trifling; and no Jury would ever have found a Man guilty of High-Treaſon upon it. But when Colonel Rumſey had ſworn, that Alderman Corniſh was at that treaſonable Conſultation at Mr. Sheppard's with the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Ruſſel, Armſtrong, and Ferguſon; and that he heard the Declaration read, which they deſigned to publiſh on the intended Inſurrection, and approved of it: And Mr. Sheppard depoſed alſo poſitively, that the Alderman was at his Houſe; and, that he carried him into that very Company, without asking any Queſtions, as Rumſey had depoſed: Here were two poſitive Witneſſes of his being at that treaſonable Conſult: And his Friend Sheppard's diſagreeing with Rumſey, as to that Circumſtance of his hearing the Declaration read, could not avail him: There was ſo ſtrong a Preſumption that Corniſh was an Accomplice, that the Jury could ſcarce doubt of it, after both Witneſſes had ſworn poſitively he was there, and introduced without any Queſtions asked, when the Company, met upon ſuch a Deſign, deſired they might be private; and that even Sheppard's own Servants might not come up: Is it to be ſuppoſed, after this, that Mr. Sheppard would have carried up a Gentleman, without their Leave, who was not a Confederate with them? However, if it was not ſuch Teſtimony as ought to have prevailed on the Jury to convict him, it was certainly legal Evidence at leaſt. We have ſeen Men convicted upon Evidence in other Reigns, that has neither been ſo ſtrong, or ſo legal as this.

The Alderman's Friends were apprehenſive Sheppard's Evidence would do him more Hurt than Good, and had kept him out of the Way till the Jury were juſt returning: And, as one obſerves, there was a kind of Fatality in his appearing then; for, if he had not, his Friend probably had been acquitted.

The Trial of CHARLES BATEMAN, Surgeon, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 9th of December, 1685. 1 Jac. II.

1685. 1 Jac. II. Bateman's Trial.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the ſaid Charles Bateman with High-Treaſon, in conſpiring the Death of the late King Charles II. for that he, the ſaid Charles Bateman, on the 30th Day of May, in the 35th Year of the ſaid late King, at the Pariſh of St. Dunſtan's in the Weſt, in the Ward of Farringdon-without, being aſſembled with divers other Rebels and Traitors, did promiſe and undertake to be aiding and aſſiſting in ſeizing the Perſon of the ſaid King, taking the Tower of London, ſurpriſing the City, the Savoy, and the Royal Palace of Whitehall, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

Keeling's Evidence.

The King's Witneſſes being called, Joſiah Keeling was ſworn, who gave a General Account of the Plot, and depoſed, That the Conſpirators having divided the City into twenty Parts, Mr. Bateman was pitched upon as a fit Perſon to manage one of theſe Diviſions, in order to an Inſurrection, the ſeizing of the City, &c.

The Priſoner obſerving, that this Evidence did not affect him; the Court declared the Jury were to take no further notice of it, than as a General Proof of the Plot.

Lee's Evidence.

Thomas Lee being ſworn, depoſed, That he was ſent by Sheriff Goodenough to the Priſoner, to diſcourſe with him concerning the intended Diviſion of the City into twenty Parts; and he obſerved the Priſoner was no Stranger to the Deſign: That he conſented to it, and deſired to talk with Mr. Goodenough about it: That he went with the Priſoner, at another Time, to the late Duke of Monmouth's, and having diſcourſed with ſome of his Grace's Family, he told this Witneſs, that the Duke was willing to engage in the Buſineſs; and had ſeveral Horſes kept kept in the Country, to be in a Readineſs when Things ſhould come to Extremity: That he went with the Priſoner alſo to a Tavern, where was propoſed, the ſeizing the King, the Tower, Whitehall, &c. and the Priſoner ſaid, he would not be wanting therein: And that they had other Diſcourſe tending to an Inſurrection; and particularly the Priſoner ſaid, he intended to take a Houſe near the Tower, and place Men in it, in order to ſurprize it; and that he had had ſeveral Conferences with Sea-Captains about that Affair.

Goodenough's Evidence.

Goodenough depoſed, That being at the Tavern with Wade, the Priſoner, and other Conſpirators, the Priſoner did not only approve of their Deſign, but promiſed to uſe his Intereſt in raiſing Men; and ſaid, he would not only aſſiſt in the Diviſion allotted him, but in ſurpriſing the Savoy, and driving the Guards out of Town.

Bateman's Defence.

Mr. Bateman urged, in his Defence, the Improbability of his being engaged in ſo deſperate a Deſign; and demanded the Reaſon he was not proſecuted ſooner, the Witneſſes having ſworn they were ſpoken ſo long ſince.

The King's Counſel replied, That Goodenough was not to be had, till after the Rebellion in the Weſt; and Keeling's ſingle Teſtimony was not ſufficient to convict him.

Then the Priſoner called one Baker, a broken Shoe-maker, to invalidate Lee's Teſtimony, who ſaid, That Lee deſired him to inſinuate himſelf into the Priſoner's Company, and talk with him of State Affairs, in order to entrap him; but no great Weight was laid upon this Evidence, it being ſuppoſed the Witneſs was hired to blaſt Lee's Credit.

He is convicted,

The Priſoner was found GUILTY: And being called to hear Judgment on Friday the 11th of December, he objected, That Goodenough was not fully pardoned: But the Court informed him, that, as to the Outlawry, he was pardoned, and the Pardon allowed in the Court of King's-Bench; and for any thing elſe he was not proſecuted. Then Sentence was paſſed on the Priſoner as a Traitor; and he was executed at Tyburn on the 18th of December.

condemned, and executed.

Remarks on Bateman's Trial.

The Enemies of the Government reported, that Mr. Bateman was a Madman; and charged it on the Miniſtry, as a great Piece of Barbarity, to try and execute a Man that was diſtracted: But it is evident Bateman was not mad, when he was commited to Newgate, by the Confeſſion of his Friends; nor at the Time of his Execution: For they tell us, he made a very Pious and Chriſtian Exit: And ſhould the Court neglect to try a Man that pretends to be mad, when he is brought before them, every Criminal would make the ſame Pretence. No doubt the Court were ſatisfied Mr. Bateman counterfeited; and it is a ſtrong Preſumption he did, ſince it appears he was not mad before or after: The Court were ſo indulgent, indeed, to allow his Son to write for him, and aſſiſt him in his Defence, when he affirmed he was not well, which ſome make an Argument of the Priſoner's Madneſs: Particularly thoſe worthy Hiſtorians, the Authors of Rapin, who turn every Favour their Friends receive, into a Hardſhip; and clamour againſt their Governors, for what they ought to return them Thanks.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Biſhop Burnet ſays, The ſending Mr. Bateman to that diſmal Priſon of Newgate made him mad: I preſume he means, he was ſeized with Horror at the Thoughts of his approaching Trial; for a Friend of his, that has given us the following Character of the Man, only ſays, He grew melancholy; and appeared little leſs than diſtracted, when he came upon his Trial.

Mr. Bateman's Character, by a Friend,

" Mr. Bateman was a Man of good Senſe, " good Courage, and good Company; of a very " large and generous Temper, and of conſider- " able Repute and Practice in his Calling; a " great Lover and Vindicator of the Liberties " of the Kingdom; and of more Intereſt than " moſt of his Station. Being kept cloſe Priſo- " ner in Newgate, the Windows and Rooms " all dark, and little or no Company, having " been a free, jolly Man, and uſed to Conver- " ſation and Diverſion, he ſoon grew deeply " melancholy, that when he came on his " Trial, he appeared little leſs than diſtracted. " However, he was found guilty; and juſt be- " fore his Execution, very much recovered " himſelf, dying as much like a Chriſtian, and " with a Preſence of Mind inferior to few that " have ſuffered."

1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the Priſoner with High-Treaſon, in conſpiring the Death of the late King Charles II. and the Subverſion of the Government; for that the ſaid John Hampden, on the 20th of July, in the 35th Year of the ſaid late King, at the Pariſh of St. Giles's in the Fields, in the County of Middleſex, did traitorouſly meet, and conſult with James Duke of Monmouth, and divers other Traitors, how to procure great Sums of Money, and levy Forces to raiſe a Rebellion within this Kingdom, againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

Objects, he had been fined &c. ready for this Offence.

Mr. Hampden objected, That he ought not to be queſtioned for this Fact again, becauſe he had been tried and convicted of the ſame two Years ſince; and was now a Priſoner in Execution for his Fine: But he ſhould wave all Manner of Pleas, and throw himſelf upon the King's Mercy.

He confeſſes the Charge. Is condemned.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, He had never yet been tried for Treaſon; (but for a Miſdemeanor); and he muſt either plead Guilty or Not guilty: Whereupon he pleaded GUILTY; acknowledged, he had highly offended his Majeſty, and begged the Chief Juſtice would intercede for him. Whereupon his Plea was recorded; and Mr. Recorder pronounced the uſual Sentence in Caſes of High-Treaſon.

Is it poſſible, after the Convictions and Confeſſions of ſo many principal Conſpirators, to doubt of the Plot that was carried on by the Duke of Monmouth, the Lord Shaftesbury, &c. againſt King Charles II?

Mr. Hampden was afterwards pardoned by King James, and yet appeared one of his greateſt Enemies at the Revolution.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment was found by the Grand Jury of the County Palatine of Cheſter, and charged the Priſoner with High-Treaſon, in compaſſing the Death of the King; for that, on the 14th Day of April, in the firſt Year of his Majeſty's Reign, at Mere, in the ſaid County of Cheſter, he, the ſaid Henry Lord Delamere, did traitorouſly aſſemble, conſult, and agree, with Charles Gerrard Eſq; and others falſe Traitors, to raiſe Money and Forces to make a Rebellion, and to ſeize the City of Cheſter, with the Magazines there; and that afterwards, on the 27th of May, in the Year aboveſaid, he took a Journey from London to Mere aforeſaid, to accompliſh his ſaid traitorous Intentions; and that, on the 4th of June, in the ſaid Year, at Mere aforeſaid, in further Proſecution of his ſaid traitorous Purpoſes, he did invite divers of his Majeſty's Subjects to join with him and the ſaid other Traitors; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

His Lordſhip being arraigned, and required to hold up his Hand, inſiſted, that by his Privilege of Peerage, he need not hold up his Hand; and the Lord High Steward was of Opinion, it was not material, whether he did or not, if they were ſatisfied he was the ſame Perſon that was indicted.

The Lord Delamere deſiring to be informed, Whether he was to addreſs himſelf to his Grace, or to the Lords Triers, was anſwered, He muſt direct what he had to ſay, to the Lord High Steward, who was Judge of the Court, but not one of the Triers.

A Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

Then his Lordſhip preſented a Plea in Paper, ſigned with his own Hand, to the Juriſdiction of the Court; inſiſting, 1. That he ought to be tried by the whole Body of the Peers in Parliament; becauſe the Parliament was ſtill in Being, under a Prorogation, and not diſſolved. 2. Becauſe the Houſe of Lords was already poſſeſſed of the Cauſe, it having been agitated there the laſt Seſſion:

To which it was anſwered, That, if the King pleaſed to try a Peer in Parliament, the Record was brought into the Houſe, and they proceeded there as in other Caſes; all the Peers being Judges. Thus it was in a Time of Seſſion of Parliament; but when the Parliament was prorogued, then the Proceedings were before the Lord High Steward: Nor was the Houſe of Lords poſſeſſed of the Cauſe: There was nothing depending there, that could ouſt this Court of its Juriſdiction: Nothing but a Petition, and the King's Anſwer, that he intended a ſpeedy Proſecution of this Lord: There was not ſo much as an Indictment returned thither, or found during that Seſſion. And Inſtances were given of the Lord Cornwallis, and the Lord Morley being tried by Commiſſion during a Prorogation of Parliament.

The Lord Delamere obſerved, That in theſe Trials the Queſtion never came under Debate: To which the Lord High Steward anſwered, That it would have been Error in the whole Proceedings, if the Court had not Juriſdiction; and the Judges would not have let Things paſs in that Manner, if they had been erroneous: Beſides, there were a great many other Inſtances to be given; he had only mentioned theſe as late Precedents within Memory.

Then the Priſoner deſired, he might have Counſel to argue theſe Points; but was anſwered, the Objections were trifling: However, if he had Counſel ready, they would hear them; for a Priſoner muſt always be ready to anſwer a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court; and his Lordſhip having no Counſel ready, his Plea was over-ruled: And his Lordſhip pleaded Not-guilty.

The Plea over-ruled.

Then the Lord High Steward made the following Speech upon the Occaſion.

Lord High Steward.

My Lords,

Lord High Steward's Speech.

" I KNOW you cannot but well remem" ber, what unjuſt and inſolent Attempts
" were made, upon the rightful and unalter-
" able Succeſſion to the Imperial Crown of theſe
" Realms, under the Pretence of that, which " has been ſo often found to be the Occaſion of " Rebellion, I mean the ſpecious Pretence of " Religion, by the fierce, froward, and fa-
" natical Zeal of ſome Members of the Houſe
" of Commons, in the laſt Parliaments, under " the late King Charles II. of ever bleſſed Me" mory.

" Which, by the wonderful Providence of " Almighty God, not prevailing, the chief
" Contrivers of that horried Villany conſulted

1685. 1 Jac. II.

" together, how to gain that Advantage upon " the Monarchy by open Force, which they " could not obtain by a pretended Courſe of " Law.

" And, in order thereto, it is too well known, " how they had ſeveral treaſonable Meetings, " made bold and riotous Progreſſes into ſeve- " ral Parts of the King's Dominions; thereby " endeavouring to debauch the Minds of the " well-meaning, though unwary and ignorant, " Part of the King's Subjects.

" But theſe their evil Purpoſes, it pleaſed " God alſo to fruſtrate, by bringing to Light " that curſed Conſpiracy againſt the Life of his " Sacred Majeſty, King Charles II. as alſo a- " gainſt that of our Dread Sovereign, that now " is, whom God long preſerve.

" Theſe helliſh and damnable Plots, one " would have thought, could not have ſurvi- " ved the juſt Condemnation and Execution of " ſome of the chief Contrivers of them; eſpe- " cially conſidering, that, after it had pleaſed " Almighty God to take to himſelf our late " merciful and dread Sovereign, no ſooner was " his Sacred Majeſty, that now is, ſeated in the " Royal Throne of his Anceſtors, but he made " it his utmoſt Endeavours, not only to con- " vince the World, that he had quite forgot " thoſe impudent and abominable Indignities " that had been put upon him, only for being " the beſt of Subjects, and the beſt of Bro- " thers; but did alſo give forth the moſt be- " nign Aſſurances imaginable to all his loving " People, that he would approve himſelf to " be the beſt of Kings.

" And farther to evince the Reality of theſe " his gracious and heroick Reſolutions, he im- " mediately called a Parliament; and therein " repeated and ſolemnly confirmed his former " Royal Declarations, of having a particular " Care of maintaining our eſtabliſhed Laws " and Religion: With which that wiſe, great, " and loyal Aſſembly were ſo fully and per- " fectly ſatisfied, that they thought they could " not make ſufficient Returns of Gratitude for " ſuch gracious and Princely Condeſcenſions.

" And yet, my Lords, while the King and " the Parliament were thus, as I may ſay, en- " deavouring to out-do each other in Expreſ- " ſions of Kindneſs, that wicked and unnatural " Rebellion broke out; and thereupon, the " Arch-Traitor, Monmouth, was by a Bill, " brought into the Lower Houſe, and paſſed " by the general Conſent of both Houſes, (and " I could wiſh, my Lords, for the Sake of " that Noble Lord at the Bar, that I could ſay " it had paſſed by Conſent of every particular " Member of each Houſe), juſtly attainted " of High-Treaſon.

" My Lords, What Share my Lord at the " Bar had in thoſe other Matters, I muſt ac- " quaint you, is not within the Compaſs of this " Indictment, for which you are to try him as " his Peers; for that is for a Treaſon alledged to " have been committed by him in his Majeſty's " Reign that now is.

" Give me Leave, my Lords, to detain you " with a Word or two more upon this Occa- " ſion; and that is, To let you know, That " as my Lord at the Bar may with great Safety " and Security to himſelf, rely on your Lord- " ſhip's Candour and Integrity, that you will " be tenderly careful, and ready to acquit him " of the Treaſon whereof he is accuſed, if up- " on the Evidence that ſhall be given you, you " ſhall find him innocent: So I muſt tell you, " the King has an entire Confidence in your " Reſolution, Fidelity, and good Affections " to him, that you will not, by Reaſon of the " Priſoner's Quality, and Nearneſs to you, as " being a Peer of this Realm, acquit him if he " ſhall appear to be guilty.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

" My Lords, I have one Thing further to " mind your Lordſhips of; That, according to " the uſual Forms of Proceedings in theſe " Caſes, if your Lordſhips have any Queſtions " to propound, wherein you would be ſatis- " fied, as to any Matter either of Fact or Law, " your Lordſhips will be pleaſed to put thoſe " Queſtions to me; and I ſhall take Care to " give your Lordſhips the beſt Satisfaction I " can."

The Lord Delamere deſiring he might have one to write for him, it was granted.

Then the King's Witneſſes were called; and firſt the Lord Howard of Eſcrick was ſworn, who gave a General Account of the Lord Shafteſbury's Conſpiracy, as at the Trials of the Lord Ruſſel and Colonel Sidney, which Plot was previous to this for which the Priſoner was indicted; but it was ſuggeſted by the King's Counſel, that the Conſpirators were, many of them, the ſame in both Conſpiracies. Lord Howard's Evidence.

The Lord Grey being ſworn next, depoſed as follows. About the Time when the Election of Sheriffs was ſo much conteſted in the City of London, the Duke of Monmouth and my Lord Shaftesbury began to diſcourſe about making uſe of that, as an Opportunity to accompliſh their Deſign; for they thought the Ferment ſo high, that Men would eaſily be diſpoſed to an Inſurrection: And they propoſed to procure a Riſing in three Parts of the Kingdom at once: One in Cheſhire, where the Duke of Monmouth was to be; and there he was to be adviſed by my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, my Lord Delamere that then was, and the Priſoner at the Bar, what Gentlemen were proper to apply to for joyning in the Deſign: The ſecond was in London, which was the Province aſſigned my Lord Shafteſbury: And the third in the Weſt, which was committed to the Care of my Lord Ruſſel. The Duke of Monmouth did accordingly go his Progreſs into Cheſhire; and on his Return, was taken into Cuſtody of the Serjeant at Arms. Upon which Sir Thomas Armſtrong was ſent Poſt to Town to get an Habeas Corpus, and to deliver a Meſſage to me, to be communicated to my Lord Ruſſel and my Lord Shaftesbury, which was to this Effect: That he had been kindly received by the Gentlemen of the County, and had diſcourſed the Matter with them; and found them all inclined very much to his Satisfaction: That upon his being arreſted, he had been adviſed to make his Eſcape into Cheſhire and riſe immediately; but that he would not do a Matter of that great Importance without the Approbation of his Friends. Lord Grey's Evidence.

Soon after the late King's Death, the Duke of Monmouth was at Amſterdam with my Lord Argyle; 1685. 1 Jac. II. Argyle; and underſtanding an Inſurrection was deſigned in Scotland, he ſent Captain Matthews into England, with a Meſſage to Major Wildman, deſiring him to procure a Meeting with my Lord Macclesfield, my Lord Brandon, my Lord Delamere and Mr. Charlton, and acquaint them, that he had received a full Account of my Lord Argyle's Affairs, and the Preparations that had been made for it; and accordingly he had ordered his own Affairs to join with him. He likewiſe ſent Craig with a Meſſage to the ſame Purpoſe, to other Friends in London; and he diſpatched one Batteſcomb into the Weſt, to prepare Things there. When Craig returned back again to the Duke, he gave him an Account, that Major Wildman had procured a Meeting with thoſe Lords and Gentlemen that I mentioned before, who were all of Opinion that the Duke ſhould go for Scotland: There was likewiſe a particular Meſſage from Major Wildman to the Duke of Monmouth, that he deſired he would bring over with him a Broad Seal, to ſeal Commiſſions with, and to take upon him the Title of King. The other particular Branches of the Meſſage I do not ſo well remember; but only this, He was particularly asked, If the Priſoner at the Bar was there? And he ſaid, He was.

Jones came ſome Time after Craig, and gave an Account of other Things conformable to what Craig had ſaid; and was ſent back again to England by the Duke of Monmouth, to give an Account of his being ready to ſail. By all Diſcourſes with the Duke, he depended very much upon Cheſhire; and was reſolved to have landed and begun there; but he conſidered the Perſons to be applied to there, were Men of great Quality and Intereſt in their Country, and able to manage Things without his Aſſiſtance. But in the Weſt, the Friends he relied on, were not of that conſiderable Quality, and therefore he choſe to land there.

Wade's Evidence. Mr. Wade being ſworn, depoſed, That he was with the Duke of Monmouth and the Earl of Argyle in Holland, when they were concerting Meaſures for the Invaſion of Great Britain; and that, after a Conference on this Subject, the Duke of Monmouth ſent over Captain Matthews to his Friends in Cheſhire, and amongſt the reſt to the Lord Delamere by Name, deſiring them to be in Readineſs to aſſiſt him when he ſhould land: That when the Duke landed at Lyme, he ordered his March ſo that he might meet with his Cheſhire Friends, namely, towards Glouceſter, to gain the Poſſeſſion of Glouceſter-Bridge; which giving him the Command of the River Severn, the Cheſhire-Men, if they had roſe, as was expected, might have eaſily aſſembled, and joined him: That Jones coming over to Holland, to know the Reaſon the Duke ſtaid ſo long, his Friends in England expecting him long before; he was diſpatched to England again, to aſſure Major Wildman, the Lord Macclesfield, the Lord Delamere, and Lord Brandon, that he was coming, and deſired their Forces might be ready to aſſiſt him.

Goodenough's Evidence. Richard Goodenough alſo depoſed, That Jones was ſent by the Duke of Monmouth from Holland, to give the Lord Delamere Notice to be ready againſt the Time he landed; and to deſire he would take Care of himſelf, that he was not ſecured by the Government at London: Adding, That he heard the Duke of Monmouth ſay, He hoped my Lord Delamere would not break his Promiſe with him. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

Jones, being ſworn, depoſed, That being ſent over from Holland by the Duke of Monmouth, he ordered him, as ſoon as he came to London, to ſee for Captain Matthews, Sir Thomas Armſtrong's Son-in-Law, and deſire him to acquaint the Lord Macclesfield, the Lords Brandon, and Delamere, that he was reſolved to ſet out for England, the Day after this Witneſs came away: That the Duke alſo gave him a Paper of Inſtructions ſealed up, which he was not to open, till he came to Sea; and told him Captain Matthews was to ſend one Poſt to the Place named in his Inſtructions, to receive Intelligence of his Landing, that the Lords above-mentioned might have Notice of it before the Court, and repair to their reſpective Stations: And the Duke directed, that if Matthews was out of the Way, he ſhould apply himſelf to Wildman; but that he ſhould not, by any Means, deliver the Meſſage to thoſe Lords himſelf.

That the Deponent coming from Holland, the 22d of May, broke open his Inſtructions, when he was at Sea; wherein was written to this Effect: Taunton in Somerſetſhire is the Place to which all are to reſort: The Perſons to be acquainted with the Time of landing, are, the Lords Macclesfield, Brandon, and Delamere: The Coach to be ſent to Mr. Savage's, the Red-Lion in Taunton: The Expreſs was appointed to return to Captain Matthews's Lodgings, at Mr. Blake's; and if he did not receive the Meſſage, he was to appoint one to receive it.

That this Witneſs arrived at London, the 27th of May, and ſent for Mr. Diſney; who told him, Matthews and Wildman were both out of Town: Whereupon he delivered his Meſſage to Diſney; who ſaid, He would do what he could to convey the Meſſage to them: And the Witneſs then went out of Town, and met the Duke of Monmouth at Lyme, where he landed; and acquainting the Duke with what he had done, he ſeemed troubled, that Matthews was out of Town.

Story's Evidence. Story, being ſworn, depoſed, That on the 28th of May laſt, one Brand told him, That Jones was returned from Holland, with a Meſſage from the Duke of Monmouth; and that the Duke had reſolved to march to Taunton: That this Meſſage was delivered to Diſney, in the Abſence of Captain Matthews; and, that Diſney, after he received the Meſſage from Jones, had ſome Diſcourſe with the Lord Delamere: That the ſame Night the Lord Delamere went out of Town with two Friends, a By-way through Enfield-Chace to Hatfield. And this Witneſs heard the Duke of Monmouth ſay, at Shipton-Mallet, That his great Dependance was upon the Lord Delamere, and his Friends in Cheſhire; but he was afraid they had failed him, or betrayed him, or ſome ſuch Words; adding, That he could have been ſupplied elſewhere, if he had not depended on them.

The Evidence of Vaux. Vaux depoſed, That he went out of Town with Lord Delamere, on the 27th of May, about nine or ten o' Clock at Night; That his Lordſhip went by the Name of Brown: They came came to Hoddesdon the same Night about twelve, and from thence went to Hitchin, and the next Day this Witness returned to London; and his Lordship continued his Journey into Cheshire to see his Son: That two Gentlemen went out of Town with him, one of their Names Edlin.

Edlin deposed, That he went with his Lordship and Vaux to Hitchin, on the 27th of May, as Vaux had testified.

Other Witnesses deposed, That his Lordship went by the Name of Brown; and that the Duke of Monmouth's Declarations were directed to him by that Name.

Hope's Evidence.

Hope, the Landlord of the Three-Tuns in Coventry, deposed, That his Lordship went to and from London five Times, between the Coronation and the first of June: And, that he was at his House the 21st of June, and talked with this Witness, concerning an Encounter between the King's Troops, and those of the Duke of Monmouth; particularly he said, If the Duke of Albemarle was killed, as was reported, he was killed by his own Men; and that the Duke had several Field Pieces and Arms for 30,000 Men; shewed him the Towns the Duke marched through in a Map; and said, He was afraid there would be a great many bloody Noses, before the Business was ended.

Saxon the principal Witness.

Then Saxon, the principal Witness, was sworn, and deposed, That about the third or fourth of June last, he was sent for to Mere, the Lord Delamere's House; and when he came there, he was carried into a lower Room; where he saw my Lord Delamere, Sir Robert Cotton, and Mr. Crew Offley: They told this Witness, he had been recommended to them by the Lord Brandon, as an honest useful Man, and they hoped he would prove so.

That they had sent to the Duke of Monmouth in Holland, and received an Answer by Jones; and, on the Receipt of that Answer, the Lord Delamere came Post from London, under a borrowed Name: That they designed to have raised 10,000 Men for the Duke, by the first of June; but found they should not be able to raise them till Midsummer; because they must get 40,000 l. first, for their Subsistence: And asked the Witness, if he would undertake to carry a Message to the Duke of Monmouth? And when he told them he would, the Lord Delamere gave him eleven Guineas, and five Pounds in Silver, for his Journey: And he did hire a Horse, and delivered his Message to the Duke of Monmouth.

The Lord High Steward demanding, How the Lord Brandon came to recommend him to these Gentlemen? he answered, That being in private with the Lord Brandon, he complained of the Unfairness of an Election, that had been carried against him at Lancaster; and said, The Country were resolved to make it a Pretence for an Insurrection: They had an Intention to send for the Duke of Monmouth and make him King; and they must make use of such Men as him, (the Witness) that had an Interest in the Country, to stir up the People to Arms; and that the Lord Gerrard shewed him a Letter he had written to the Duke of Monmouth, which he saw afterwards at Bridgwater.

The Lord Delamere demanding of Saxon, If he ever employed him before, that he should trust him with such Secrets? And what was the Business he was to do?

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Saxon answered, He never was employed by his Lordship before, nor in his Company: But his Business now was, to inform the Country of the Time of the Rising: He was a publick Tradesman at Middlewich, and much acquainted with the ordinary Sort of People.

Lord Delamere desires Time to make his Defence.

The Lord Delamere being ordered to enter upon his Defence, desired he might have Time till the next Morning, to review his Notes.

To which the Lord High Steward answered, He doubted, whether that could be done by Law: For he took this Court to be of the same Nature as the ordinary Courts of Judicature; and in those Courts, after Evidence given, the Jury could not be adjourned; but must proceed in their Enquiry, till they were agreed on their Verdict: And the Matter being proposed to the Judges, they withdrew into the Exchequer-Chamber to consider of it: The Lords Triers also withdrew, leaving the Lord High Steward upon the Bench.

The Judges being returned, declared, That this was a Matter wholly new to them: They did not remember, whether it had ever been done; or that it had been questioned, whether it might be done? That where the Trial was by a Jury in an Inferior Court, the Law was clear, the Jury, once charged, can never be discharged, till they have given their Verdict: And the Reason was, for Fear of Corruption, and tampering with the Jury: But that was no Reason in this Case; because the Lords Triers were Persons of that Integrity and Honour, that it was not to be presumed, they could be prevailed on by such Means.

That in the Trials of Peers in Parliament, the Matter had been adjourned from Day to Day, and the Evidence given by Parcels; and there the Danger of tampering was equal: But whether the Lords, being Judges in that Case, and in this, only in the Nature of a Jury; whether that made any Difference, they submitted to his Grace; who being of Opinion, that they ought not to adjourn, the Lord Delamere proceeded in his Defence, and observed,

No Time being allowed him, he enters upon his Defence.

That there had been a great many Witnesses produced; but little legal Evidence that affected him: That Saxon was the only Man that said any thing positively against him: The rest was but Hear-say, or such remote Circumstances as might be talked to any Evidence against another Person; were only urged, for want of greater Matters to charge him with.

Witnesses produced to discredit Saxon.

Then he called several Witnesses to discredit Saxon. One deposed, He pretended to have Orders to receive Money, and had no such Orders: Another, That Saxon owed him seven Pounds, and gave him Bond but for six: To which Saxon replied, There was but six due: A third said, That an Old Woman told him, Saxon received five and twenty Shillings for her, of one Hildage, and never paid it her: And a fourth, That Saxon sent him a Letter for Money he owed him, and set a Bailiff's Name to it: And another, That Saxon owed several People Money; and did not pay them, as he had promised.

Whereupon the Lord High Steward said, They must not think to take off the Credibility of a Witness by an Old Woman's Tale; and,

it

1685. 1 Jac. II.

it was a hard Caſe, if any one owed Money, and could not pay it, his Teſtimony was not to be credited for that Reaſon.

Then the Lord Delamere called Witneſſes, to prove that neither Sir Robert Cotton, or Mr. Offley, were at his Houſe, at the Time that Saxon had ſworn he ſaw them with him at Mere.

Billing, a Servant of Sir Robert Cotton's, depoſed, That he came to his Houſe at Weſtminſter, the tenth of April, and remained there till the latter End of July.

Margaret Davis depoſed, That Sir Robert came to Town the tenth of April, and did not go out of Town till Auguſt.

Mrs. Sidney Lane depoſed, That Sir Robert Cotton came to Town in April, and remained there till the latter End of June.

Several other Witneſſes confirmed the Teſtimony of theſe. Sir Willoughby Aſton depoſed, That Mr. Offley was at his Houſe, from the twenty-fourth of May, to the fourth of June, and then returned to his own Houſe at Crew-Hall; which was confirmed by Mr. Offley's Servant.

Two of the Lord Delamere's Brothers, and other Witneſſes, depoſed, That his Lordſhip was in London, the third, fourth, and fifth of June.

Then the Lord High Steward acquainted the Lord Delamere, That he would do well to give an Account where he was, from the twenty-eighth of May, to the third of June.

Lord Delamere ſpeaks in his Defence.

Lord Delamere. If your Grace pleaſe, I hope I ſhall give you full Satisfaction in that, by and by: But I hope now I have ſatisfied your Grace, and the reſt of my Lords, that none of us three, whom this Fellow has mentioned, were at Mere, when he ſays we were.

My Lord, I cannot help it, if People will tell falſe Stories of me; but I hope your Lordſhips will conſider the Credibility of it. Is it to be imagined, I would take a Man I knew nothing of, upon another Man's Word, into ſo great a Confidence, as to employ him about a Buſineſs of this Nature? I beſeech your Lordſhips to look upon him; Does he look as if he were fit to be employed for the raiſing 10,000 Men? Does he ſeem to be a Man of ſuch conſiderable Intereſt in his Country? A Fellow, that I have ſhewn to be of no Reputation in his Country; nay, of a very ill one. And could we have none to employ, in a Matter of this Moment, but ſuch a Fellow, as his Neighbours would not take his Word for any Thing? Beſides, he is ſtill a Priſoner; and your Lordſhips will not forget, he ſwears to ſave himſelf, having been a Rebel by his own Confeſſion; and has not, as I am informed, his Pardon yet, which renders his Teſtimony ſuſpected.

As to my going down on the 27th of May, and my frequent riding Poſt to and fro, I ſhall now ſatisfy your Lordſhips of the Reaſon of my Journies. The firſt Time I went down, which was between the Coronation and the Meeting of the Parliament, was to take Poſſeſſion of a Leaſe, of a conſiderable Value, which was renewed to me by the Biſhop: I made ſome Haſte, becauſe of an Intimation that the Biſhop lay very ill; and this I ſhall prove.

Mr. John Edmonds was called.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Other Witneſſes of the Priſoner's.

He depoſed, That upon the fifth of May, my Lord Delamere deſired him to be Witneſs to his taking Poſſeſſion of an Eſtate, upon a Leaſe of my Lord Biſhop of Cheſter's; and that my Lord went into a Houſe, next to the Deponent's (at Boden in Cheſhire), and there did take Poſſeſſion: That it was a Leaſe for Lives; and the Biſhop was ſo ill at that Time, that he ſpoke to no body.

Mr. Henry was called.

He depoſed, That he was appointed Attorney, and delivered the Poſſeſſion to my Lord Delamere, the fifth of May.

Lord De la Mere. The next Time I have to ſpeak to, is the 27th of May, when I went down to ſee a ſick Child; but had not gone ſo ſuddenly, if I had not had Notice there was a Warrant out againſt me. And when I was at my Houſe in Cheſhire, my Wife ſent me Word my eldeſt Son was ſo ill, that I muſt make Haſte up, if I would ſee him alive; and that as to the Warrant, it was a Miſtake.

Mrs. Kelſey was called.

She depoſed, That ſhe was at my Lord's Houſe in the Country, when he came down; and he ſaid, the Reaſon of his coming was, becauſe he heard there was a Warrant for taking him up: And beſides, his little Son was ill.

My Lord Delamere deſired his Mother might be a Witneſs.

She depoſed, That ſhe ſent him Word his little Son was ill; and that thereupon my Lord came down; and that, while he was in the Country, my Lady, her Daughter, ſent for her Son up Poſt, becauſe his eldeſt Son was dangerouſly ill in Town.

Mrs. Kelſey depoſed further, That my Lord came down on Sunday Night, and ſtaid till Tueſday Morning.

L. H. S. Tueſday the ſecond, you came away, ſhe ſays; and upon Wedneſday, the third of June, your Brother ſays you were in Town.

Lord Delamere. It was ſo, my Lord: I came Poſt through Coventry; and that was the Time Hope ſpeaks of, that I told him I had come another Way into Cheſhire. I came back the common Way, my Wife having ſent me Word, the Buſineſs of the Warrant was a Miſtake.

Mr. Kelſey was called.

He depoſed, That my Lord came down to his Houſe, at Eleven on Sunday Night, and took Horſe for London at three on Tueſday Morning; and that the Deponent had Letters by him, which gave an Account my Lord was in Town on the Wedneſday.

Sir Thomas Millington, the Phyſician, was called.

He depoſed, That my Lord's Son was ſo very ill at that Time, that he acquainted my Lady, he thought he would not recover.

Then my Lord Delamere proceeded in his Defence, and ſaid:

Lord Delamere's Obſervations on the Evidence.

My Lords, I acknowledge, I did go at that Time privately, a By-Road, and by the Name of Brown: But as for Jones, who, it is ſaid, came from Holland that Day, I appeal to himſelf, and I call God to Witneſs, I never ſaw the Man before now; never in my Life: Nay, till after I was made a

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Priſoner upon this Account, I never ſo much as heard of his Name: And your Lordſhips ſee by the Proofs, that all that has been ſaid againſt me, except what this Fellow Saxon has teſtified, is but Hear-ſay, nay indeed, but Hear-ſay upon Hear-ſay, at the third and fourth Hand.

My Lords, if People will make uſe of my Name, and ſay this, and that, and the other, and among themſelves talk of Meſſages ſent to me; can I, or any Man in the World help it? At this Rate, who can be innocent? If a Man muſt be guilty, becauſe others intend to draw him into Treaſon: For there is no more in the utmoſt, that this Proof can amount to. It is at the Pleaſure of any two Men in the World, to take away the Lives, Honours, and Eſtates, of any of your Lordſhips, if it be a Proof ſufficient, to make you guilty of Treaſon, for them to ſwear you were intended to be drawn into Treaſon.

And my Lords, as to the Truth of the Thing itſelf, that there was any Meſſage or Correſpondence between the late Duke of Monmouth and me, I call God to Witneſs, I have neither wrote nor ſent Letter or Meſſage to him, or received Letter or Meſſage from him theſe three Years. I cannot tell what Expectation he might have concerning me, or any body elſe: It is very probable he might have Expectation of Aſſiſtance from ſome body; and that, without ſuch Expectations, he would not have made the Attempt he did: But, my Lords, all that is nothing to me; I had no Correſpondence, either by Letters, or Meſſages, with him: So that all that has been ſaid upon that Point of his Expectations, and what he declared, I muſt give the ſame Anſwer to, that I gave to the Evidence about Jones's Meſſage; That admitting it to be true, he did declare ſo, yet, no Proof being made of an actual Correſpondence, it is no more but an Intention in him to draw Men into Commiſſion of Treaſon; and, if that be allowed for Proof of Guilt, I muſt repeat it again, There's no Man can be innocent.

Upon the whole Matter, my Lords, I muſt leave my Caſe to the Conſideration of your Lordſhips: I am not Maſter of ſo much Law or Rhetorick as the King's Counſel, to plead in my own Cauſe: And I have had but little Time to recollect, and apply my Defence to my Accuſation: But I hope, what Evidence I have offered, has given your Lordſhips full Satisfaction, that I am not guilty of what I ſtand charged with.

And, after all that has been ſaid, my Lords, I would beg your Lordſhips to conſider this, That, in caſe I were guilty of theſe Things, and were conſcious to myſelf of having been engaged in an Affair of this Nature; can any Man imagine, I could have been ſo hardy, as to have ſurrendred myſelf upon the King's Proclamation: Nay, if I, with thoſe two other Gentlemen, that he has named, had had any Tranſactions of this Kind, with ſuch a Fellow as he has been made appear to be by his Neighbours, that muſt needs be thought a Man of no Faith, becauſe of no Reputation; though he gives himſelf a great Character, as a Man of great Intereſt, of wonderful Diſpatch and Dexterity, in the Management of ſuch Matters; ſo as at the firſt Sight to put this large Confidence in him; Can it be imagined, I ſo little regarded my own Life, and all that is dear to me, as to have ſurrendred myſelf, were it not that I was certain of my own Innocence and Integrity? Life itſelf, my Lords, is to be preferred above all Things, but Honour and Innocence: And Job ſaith, Skin for Skin, and all that a Man hath, will he give for his Life; and why ſhould I be preſumed to have ſo little a Value for it, as voluntarily to deliver up myſelf to Deſtruction, had I been conſcious that there was any one who could really teſtify any thing that could hurt me.

1685. 1 Jac. II.

Beſides, my Lords, this very Fellow Saxon is but one Evidence; and how far you will believe him, I muſt ſubmit it to you; but ſurely one Witneſs will never be ſufficient to convict a Man of Treaſon, though Thouſands of Hear-ſays, and ſuch trivial Circumſtances, be tacked to it; eſpecially when they are tacked to an Evidence, which, I dare ſay, your Lordſhips are far from thinking deſerves any Credit. My Lords, I deſire your Leave to ask this one Queſtion; Would not any of your Lordſhips think himſelf in a bad Condition, as to his Fortune, if he could produce no better Evidence to prove his Title to his Eſtate, than what has been produced againſt me this Day, to take away my Life? And if ſuch Evidence as this would not be ſufficient to ſupport a Title to an Eſtate, certainly it never can be thought ſufficient to deprive a Man of Life, Honour, Eſtate, and all.

My Lords, I am not the only Man that has been, or may be, falſly accuſed: God knows how ſoon the Misfortune of a falſe Accuſation may fall to the Lot of any of your Lordſhips; I pray God it never may: But ſince that may happen, I queſtion not, but your Lordſhips will be very cautious, how, by an eaſy Credulity, you give Encouragement to ſuch a Wickedneſs: For Knights of the Poſt will not end in my Trial, if they proſper in their Villany; and perhaps it may come home to ſome of your Lordſhips, if ſuch Practices be encouraged, as I cannot but firmly believe they will not.

My Lords, the Eyes of all the Nation are upon your Proceedings this Day; nay, I may ſay, your Lordſhips are now judging the Cauſe of every Man in England, that ſhall happen to come under like Circumſtances with myſelf, at any Time hereafter: For accordingly as you judge of me now, juſt ſo will inferior Courts be directed to give their Judgments, in like Caſes, in Time to come.

Your Lordſhips very well know, Blood once ſpilt can never be gathered up again; and therefore, unleſs the Caſe be very clear againſt me, you, I am ſure, will not hazard the ſhedding of my Blood upon a doubtful Evidence. God Almighty is a God of Mercy and Equity: Our Law, the Law of England, is a Law of Equity and Mercy; and both God and the Law require from your Lordſhips, Tenderneſs in all Caſes of Life and Death; and, if it ſhould be indifferent, or but doubtful to your Lordſhips (which, upon the Proofs that I have made, I cannot believe it can be) Whether I am innocent or guilty, both God and the Law require you to acquit me.

My

1685. 1 Jac. II.

My Lords, I leave myſelf, my Cauſe, and all the Conſequences of it, with your Lordſhips; and I pray the All-wiſe, the Almighty God, direct you in your Determination.

Mr. Solicitor ſums up the Evidence, and applies it.

Then Mr. Solicitor ſummed up the Evidence for the King, and ſaid:

May it pleaſe your Grace, and you, my Noble Lords, the Peers of my Lord Delamere, the Priſoner at the Bar;

The Evidence that hath been given againſt this Noble Lord, is of two Natures. Part of it is poſitive Proof, and Part is Circumſtantial: And, though it be allowed, there muſt be two Witneſſes in Caſes of Treaſon; and that Circumſtances, though never ſo ſtrong and ſufficient to fortify one poſitive Proof, do not, nor can make a ſecond poſitive Witneſs; yet, I crave leave to ſay, that there may be Circumſtances ſo ſtrong and cogent, ſo violent and neceſſary, to fortify a poſitive Teſtimony, that will in Law amount to make a ſecond Witneſs, ſuch as the Law requires.

My Lords, I do not ſay every Circumſtance will do it; but ſuch as is neceſſarily and violently tending to the ſame Thing that was poſitively proved. As for Example:

If a Man comes and ſwears againſt another, that he ſaid he would go immediately and kill the King; and another Man, that did not hear thoſe Words, comes and teſtifies his lying in Wait, which was an Action indifferent in itſelf, yet, when applied to the poſitive Proof, he will be a ſecond Witneſs to ſatisfy the Law, which requires two Witneſſes in Treaſon.

I muſt confeſs, my Lords, when we would make Circumſtances to be a ſecond Evidence, they muſt be ſuch as are neceſſarily tending to fortify the poſitive Evidence, that was given by the ſingle Witneſs. Now, whether that be ſo in this Caſe, I muſt, as becomes me, leave to your Lordſhips Conſideration: It is not my Buſineſs to carry the Evidence farther than it will go; and, I am ſure, it is not my Duty to let it loſe any of its due Weight; and if it have not that Force it ought to have, I ſhould be to blame, as not having done what belongs to me to do: I will therefore ſtate the Fact to your Lordſhips plainly, as it ſtands upon the Proof, and ſubmit the whole to your Lordſhips Determination.

My Lords, our poſitive Proof, with which I crave Leave to begin, is but one ſingle Witneſs; and that is Saxon; and his Evidence is this: That being in Cheſhire, where he lives, he was ſent for, about the 3d or 4th of June laſt, to my Lord Delamere's Houſe at Mere, and there he was brought into a lower Room, where he ſaw my Lord Delamere, Sir Robert Cotton, and Mr. Crew Offley: That my Lord Delamere told him he had received a Meſſage lately by one Jones, that was ſent from the Duke of Monmouth, whereby he underſtood that the Duke would ſpeedily be in England; and that they muſt provide Men and Arms to aſſiſt him when he came: That he was a Man recommended to them by my Lord Brandon; and that, upon his Recommendation, they had thought fit to intruſt him in the Matter; and withall told him, they were to raiſe 40,000 l. and 10,000 Men in that County. He telis you, likewiſe, theſe Gentlemen gave him eleven Guineas, and five Pounds in Silver, to go of an Errand for them to the Duke of Monmouth; which he undertook to do, and hired a Horſe to that Purpoſe. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

This, my Lords, is the poſitive Proof; and this, I muſt acknowledge, ſtanding ſingle, and by itſelf, will make but one Witneſs; but, whether the Circumſtances that have been offered to your Lordſhips by the other Witneſſes, be ſuch violent Circumſtances as neceſſarily tend to fortify and ſupport that poſitive Evidence, and ſo will ſupply the Defect of a ſecond Witneſs, is the next Queſtion that I am to conſider; and I ſhall take them into Conſideration in the ſame Order that the Evidence was delivered.

The firſt Step, my Lords, that was made, as to any Evidence that toucheth this Noble Lord at the Bar, was what was teſtified by my Lord Grey; for as to the other Part of the Evidence, that related to the Conſpiracy in general, I need not trouble your Lordſhips with a Repetition of it. That there was ſuch an one is notoriouſly known; but, I ſay, that Part of the Evidence in his Hiſtory of the Conſpiracy, which my Lord Grey brought home to my Lord Delamere, was this:

That upon the firſt Meetings and Conſultations, it was reſolved upon, That the Duke of Monmouth ſhould go into Cheſhire, to make an Intereſt there; and among the Perſons that he was directed to go to, and to apply to for Advice there, as Perſons fit to be truſted, this Noble Lord was one.

That upon the Duke of Monmouth's Return out of Cheſhire, he did give his Confederates here in Town an Account how well he had been received; and, that he liked all Things very well there. This, my Lords, is the firſt Circumſtance that has been offered to you, to ſhew that he had a Confidence in my Lord Delamere, as a principal Support of his Deſigns at that very Time.

The next that we offer is, this Meſſage of Jones; and for that our Evidence has fully and plainly made it out to your Lordſhips, that Jones did go over into Holland; and his Buſineſs there was an Errand from Diſney and Major Wildman, and the Confederates here. The Effect of his Meſſage was, That it was their Opinion, that the Duke of Monmouth ſhould go for Scotland and join with my Lord Argyle: But upon the Receipt of the Meſſage, he being angry, ſaid, it was too late for ſuch a Meſſage now, and he would come into England, for he was ready to ſail; and thereupon he did ſend this ſame Jones back again into England, upon a Meſſage, to inform the Lords, and others of his Party, among whom my Lord Delamere was one, that he would have them betake themſelves into their ſeveral Countries, and not ſtay to be taken or clapped up here; for that he did underſtand was the Deſign: And this Meſſage was delivered in Writing: How that the Duke of Monmouth did write a Note, and give it to Jones, is verified by my Lord Grey's Teſtimony too; and this ſealed up; and he was not to open it till he came to Sea; and when he did open it, he found it containing a Signification of the Place where he was to land, and where he was to rendezvous, which was Taunton, and who were the Perſons that were to have Notice of it; among whoſe Names we find my Lord 1685. 1 Jac. II. Lord Delamere's to be one: But he likewiſe tells you, he was not the Man that was to carry the Meſſage to theſe Perſons, but he was to deliver it to Matthews or Wildman; and they were to tranſmit it to the other Perſons.

He tells you, likewiſe, That when he came to Town, which was the 27th of May, he met neither with Matthews nor Major Wildman: Whereupon being at a Loſs what he ſhould do with his Meſſage, for want of thoſe other Perſons, he acquainted Diſney, that was executed, with his Errand, who promiſed to take Care that it ſhould be delivered.

This, my Lords, is all Jones's Evidence: For Jones does not ſay, that he himſelf acquainted, or that Diſney did acquaint my Lord Delamere with the Meſſage.

But here, my Lords, is the main Circumſtance that renders the Matter ſuſpicious: That very Night Jones came to Town, and Diſney, being acquainted with the Meſſage, had undertaken to get it delivered, does my Lord Delamere, at ten of the Clock at Night, go out of Town, in Company with two Friends, under the Diſguiſe of the Name of Brown, and by a Bye-Road, and ſo goes down to his own Houſe in Cheſhire: This, I ſay, is the Circumſtance that renders the Thing ſuſpicious.

Now, my Lords, if we do prove, by ſuch ſufficient Evidence as may make the Matter manifeſt to you, that my Lord Delamere had Notice of Jones's Meſſage; (for, upon that Point, the Caſe will turn, whether he had Notice, ſuch a Meſſage was brought, that ſuch Things were in Agitation, ſuch Preparations made, and that they were all to go into the Country), then, I ſay, his going down is a violent Preſumption he had an Intent to comply with the Meſſage, and join in the Deſign.

But now, my Lords, comes the Queſtion, the main Queſtion, How it is made out that he had Notice, Jones brought ſuch a Meſſage?

Jones, indeed, my Lords, does not ſay, that he himſelf imparted it to him, or that Diſney told him he had communicated it; but I think there is another Witneſs, and that is Story, who ſaith, That Brand, one that knew of the Meſſage, did acquaint him, that my Lord had received it at the Coffee-Houſe, and that Night went out of Town.

It is true, my Lords, this is but a Hearſay; but that which followed being Matter of Fact, my Lord's going out of Town that Night, ſo late in the Night, and in ſuch an unuſual ſuſpicious Manner, gives more Credit to the Relation, than a bare Hearſay could have of itſelf.

For, unleſs there be ſome good Account given of my Lord's thus going out of Town, it is a kind of neceſſary Preſumption that he was acquainted with the Meſſage, part of which was, that he ſhould go out of Town; and if ſo, it can have no other Conſtruction, with Submiſſion, than to be in purſuance of, and complying with, the Directions of that Meſſage brought him from the Duke of Monmouth.

My Lords, to carry this a little farther: There were two Witneſſes produced, that went out of Town with him: They ſeem, indeed, unwillingly to give their Evidence; but I ſhall faithfully repeat what Teſtimony they gave: Their Names were Vaux and Edlin.

Vaux ſaith, He met my Lord Delamere at the Rummer-Tavern in Queen-Street the 26th Day of May, which was the Day before Jones came to Town; and that then he appointed to go out of Town the next Day, which was the 27th, and accordingly he did go. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

Edlin ſaith, He met Vaux at the Cuſtom-Houſe upon the 27th of May in the Morning; and being deſired by him to go with him out of Town, he did ſo, and there was with him a Gentleman whoſe Name was Brown, and who now appears to be my Lord Delamere; they went in Company with him as far as Hitchin, where they left him upon Thurſday the 28th at Noon.

This Evidence is produced to ſhew, that my Lord did go out of Town at that Time, and in that Manner, as has been alledged; and that theſe Perſons went with him, to conduct him a private Way, that he ſhould not go the common Road. Your Lordſhips will conſider what Anſwer hath been given to this, and what Account my Lord Delamere has given of himſelf.

Another Thing, my Lords, that renders this Matter ſuſpicious, is the Name which my Lord was pleaſed to aſſume to diſguiſe himſelf by; it being a Name by which the Party uſe to call my Lord in their Diſcourſes of him; and to prove that, we have likewiſe produced two Witneſſes, Babington and Paunceford.

Babington ſays, That in their Conſultation there were Diſcourſes of my Lord Delamere, under the Name of Brown; and once at a Tavern, when my Lord Delamere was named by one of the Company, he was preſently catched up for it, and replied to, You mean Mr. Brown; and, it ſeems, that was the Canting Name under which they diſcourſed of my Lord Delamere.

The other Witneſs, Paunceford, tells you, That being at Diſney's Houſe, and concerned with him in Printing the late Duke of Monmouth's Declarations, (for the Printing of which Diſney was executed) one Lock came for ſome of thoſe Declarations for Mr. Brown; and they were to be ſent into Cheſhire. So that, though your Lordſhips obſerve the Witneſs ſaith ſome body elſe was called by the Name of Brown, yet you have had no Account given you, that there was another Brown in Cheſhire.

It is true, indeed, my Lords, that theſe are only Things that Diſney ſaid, and Lock ſaid: But I muſt take leave to ſay, it is very ſuſpicious, that if my Lord went out of Town into Cheſhire, under the Name of Brown, and ſome Perſons did, on the Behalf of Brown, come for Declarations to be ſent into Cheſhire, and my Lord commonly, in that Part, went by the Name of Brown, that thoſe Declarations were for my Lord; and that will be a great Evidence of his Correſpondence with Monmouth.

But, I confeſs, my Lords, all this while our Proof is Circumſtantial; and, indeed, there is no poſitive Proof but that of Saxon; and in him our Proof muſt center; for without him, I muſt acknowledge, nothing that has been offered will be Proof againſt my Lord upon this Indictment: For bare Circumſtances, and bare Suſpicions, will be no Proof againſt any Man, but 1685. 1 Jac. II. but ſuch as are violent and neceſſary; and thoſe joined to a poſitive Proof, ſuch as the Law requires.

Now then, my Lords, I come to the Conſideration of what Weight and Streſs is to be laid upon this poſitive Evidence of Saxon: And here, I muſt confeſs, there are Objections made to this Teſtimony, to which I cannot readily give an Anſwer; for Saxon has ſworn, that he was there at ſuch a Time; and that he was ſent for and entertained, as a Perſon recommended by my Lord Brandon, as fit to be entruſted with the Secret, and capable of being imployed to ſtir up the Country, in order to the Proſecution of a Deſign they had on Foot to raiſe a Rebellion; and he does charge Sir Robert Cotton and Mr. Crew Offley to have been there at the ſame Time.

The Evidence, my Lord, that has been produced to falſify this poſitive Witneſs, in the Point of Sir Robert Cotton's being there, has been five or ſix Witneſſes, who teſtify Sir Robert Cotton's being in Town, and not elſewhere, from the 10th of April to the latter End of July: And I do not ſee what we have to ſay in anſwer to their Teſtimony. I muſt agree the Proof to be full in that Point; and if the Evidence they give be true, I cannot ſay that Saxon's Evidence can be true in that Point.

Likewiſe, as to Mr. Offley, Sir Willoughby Aſton and others have teſtified, that he was not at my Lord Delamere's at the Time Saxon ſpeaks of; for he gives you an Account where he was every Day, from the 26th of May to the 4th of June; and his own Servants bring him to his Houſe upon the 4th of June in the Evening, which is quite another Way than from Sir Willoughby Aſton's to my Lord Delamere's: If this likewiſe be true, what Saxon ſays cannot be true; I muſt agree to it.

There is another Thing that is offered on my Lord Delamere's Part; That he was himſelf in Town at that Time that Saxon ſays he was at Mere. But here, indeed, the Matter ſeems to be a little more ſtrange and dubious, that my Lord ſhould make ſo much Haſte down, as to go out late at Night, and ſo cautiouſly as to go by a wrong Name; and yet to ride to Town again the Poſt-way, to be here juſt the 3d of June, when Saxon ſwears he was in Cheſhire.

I muſt confeſs there is the Proof of his two Brothers, that ſay, they ſaw him in Town the 3d and 4th of June. There is, likewiſe, ſome Account given of his going out of Town; that it was upon a Meſſage received from his Mother, that his Child in the Country was ſick; and indeed he did go a By-way, and change his Name, for fear of a Warrant, in a Meſſenger's Hand, that was out againſt him to apprehend him.

Now, my Lords, I do not hear any Thing that has been offered, that there was any ſuch Warrant, or any Diſcourſe to ground that Apprehenſion upon: My Lord had the firſt and only Apprehenſion of a Warrant; but upon what Reaſons, he himſelf beſt knows, this Apprehenſion made him go out of Town ſo privately: He ſays, becauſe he would not be prevented of ſeeing his ſick Child.

But how comes it to paſs, that my Lord makes ſuch a ſpeedy Return? By the Proofs it appears, he did not get there till Sunday Night, and upon the Tueſday Morning comes Poſt for London.

The Account he gives of that, is this, his Haſte was to ſee another Child that was here ſick in Town. For he had received an Expreſs from his Wife on the Monday, to acquaint him that the Coaſt was clear, and there was no Warrant out againſt him; but, if he intended to ſee his Child alive, he muſt make haſte up to Town; and, accordingly, upon the Tueſday Morning early he ſets out, and upon the Wedneſday in the Evening is here in Town again. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

But with Submiſſion, my Lords, there is no good Account given by this Noble Lord, what Reaſon there was for ſo many Poſt-Journeys backward and forward, as had been teſtified to have been made within a very little Compaſs of Time: For, beſides this of his Return Poſt upon the 2d of June, there is only an Anſwer given to one of the reſt, which is that of the 5th of May, when, he ſaith, he went to take Poſſeſſion of the Land that he held by Leaſe, then renewed to him by the Biſhop; which being of ſome Value to his Lordſhip, and the Biſhop being ſick, he thought it neceſſary to go down Poſt himſelf, and would not be content to receive Livery by Attornment. This is the only Anſwer that is given to all thoſe Times of his riding Poſt, that have been given in Evidence.

Theſe are Matters of Suſpicion that are offered to your Lordſhips; but, I confeſs, Matters of Suſpicion only, unleſs clear, poſitive, probable Proof be joined with them, will not weigh with your Lordſhips to convict a Man of High-Treaſon, where two Witneſſes are required. But whether theſe Matters of Suſpicion be ſuch violent and neceſſary Preſumptions as tend to fortify the poſitive Teſtimony, I muſt leave that to the Conſideration of your Lordſhips.

Mr. Solicitor having finiſhed his Obſervations, The Lord High Steward, in his Directions to the Lord's Triers, ſaid, That he thought fit to rectify that Miſtake of the Priſoner's, that there was a Neceſſity of having two poſitive Witneſſes to convict a Man of Treaſon; for that there may be ſuch other ſubſtantial Circumſtances joined to one poſitive Teſtimony, that, by the Opinion of all the Judges of England, ſeveral Times has been adjudged and held to be a ſufficient Proof.

Then the Peers withdrew; and within half an Hour returned with their Verdict; that my Lord Delamere was NOT GUILTY.

Remarks on Lord Delamere's Trial.

There is not much queſtion to be made, but there was a Correſpondence between the Duke of Monmouth and the Lord Delamere. We find, that the Duke bent his March towards Glouceſter, in order to poſſeſs that Bridge, which would have opened a Communication with his Cheſhire Friends; but meeting with a Repulſe at Briſtol and Bath, he was forced to return to Bridgwater; and the Cheſhire Gentlemen were ſo fortunate, as not to declare themſelves till the Duke was defeated.

The Evidence of Saxon might be true in the main; but it was plain he was miſtaken in Point of Time, and was a Man but of an indifferent Character, which gave the Lords a fair Handle to acquit his Lordſhip: But, had Saxon's Teſtimony been credited, the Circumſtances ſworn to by the other Witneſſes were ſo ſtrong, that he might have been convicted upon them:

1685. 1 Jac. II. them: Had the Lords Tryers believed, that the Lord Delamere went out of Town on purpose to prepare Matters for the Reception of the Duke of Monmouth, and believed Saxon's positive Testimony, That he was sent by the Lord Delamere on a Message to the Duke of Monmouth, who was then in actual Rebellion, they must have convicted him: Several Men have been convicted, both before and since, on Circumstances that were not so strong, when added to one positive Proof. 1685. 1 Jac. II.

1686. 2 Jac. II. Godwin and Hales.

The Trial between ARTHUR GODWIN, Plaintiff, and Sir EDWARD HALES, Bart. Defendant, in an Action of Debt for 500 l. grounded upon the Act of 25 Car. II. for not taking the Oaths and Tests; in the Court of King's-Bench, Pasch. 1686. 2 Jac. II.

1686. 2 Jac. II.

The Declaration for the Penalty of 500 l. incurred by the Defendant's not taking the Oaths.

THIS was an Action popular brought against Sir Edward Hales, upon the Statute 25 Car. II. cap. 2. for the Penalty of 500 l. wherein the Plaintiff declares, That whereas it was provided by the said Statute, that every Person in Office, &c. shall within three Months after his Admittance into such Office, take the Oaths and Test, on Pain of Disability, and the Forfeiture of 500 l. to him that will sue for it: The Defendant, notwithstanding, having a Commission to serve the King as a Colonel of Foot, and not having taken the said Oaths and Test, did execute the said Office, and continue to act by colour of the said Commission, after the Expiration of the said three Months, for which he was indicted and convicted at the Assizes for Kent, whereby the Action accrued to the Plaintiff for the Penalty of 500 l.

A Dispensation pleaded.

The Defendant pleaded, That before the Time limited by the said Acts was expired, he had a Dispensation under the Broad Seal, to act Non obstante that Statute.

The Plaintiff demurs, and the Defendant joins in Demurrer.

To which Plea the Plaintiff demurred; and the Defendant joined in Demurrer.

Mr. Northey's Argument for the Plaintiff.

This Case coming to be heard before the Court of King's-Bench, Mr. Northey, who argued for the Plaintiff, insisted, That the Defendant could not be admitted to plead this Matter in Bar of the Action; because he ought to have pleaded it to the Indictment; and he having not pleaded it, then the Law would construe it to be a Waiving of the Pardon, as the Case was in Brook's Abridgment, Charter of Pardon 15. In Case of an Indictment for Murder, one that has pleaded Not guilty, cannot plead a Pardon afterwards, unless dated after the Plea of Not guilty: That this Action was in the Nature of an Execution on a Judgment; and if the Defendant should be received to plead this Plea now, he would falsify the Indictment that was found against him; for, if the Offence was pardoned, he ought not to have been indicted.

But, admit the Defendant might plead this Plea, it was no Bar to the Plaintiff's Action; for though the King might dispense with several Penal Laws in some Cases, that Prerogative was bounded with some Statutes he could not dispense, wherein the Subject was interested, 4 Inst. 135. So the King could not license a Man to make a Nusance, or commit a Murder; and this was an Act wherein all the King's Subjects had an Interest.

The King could not dispense with the Statute against Simony; or with the Statute against Buying and Selling of Offices: A Man that was disabled to take an Office, the King could not capacitate him; and cited the Case of Thomas and Sorrel, Vaughan 534.

That by this Statute it was enacted, That every Officer should take the Oaths; and if he neglected it, he was disabled to hold his Office: And the King could never enable a Man whom the Law had disabled, 3 Inst. 154. As to the Case in 12 Coke 18. where it is said, That no Act of Parliament can bind the King from any Prerogative which is solely and inseparably annexed to his Person, but that he may dispense with it by a Non obstante; and the Instance in the Case of Sheriffs upon the Statute 23 Hen. VI. He held, That this Case was not Law: But, admitting it was Law, that could be no Rule to guide this Case by; for that Statute was made rather to deprive the King of his Power of making Sheriffs, and so consequently commanding his Sheriffs not to serve him, than to disable the Subject, and thereby restraining the King's Prerogative, which was so inherent in him.

But by this Statute of 25 Car. II. the King's Prerogative was not touched; for the King might grant the Office to any of his Subjects; and it was only a Direction to the Subject to qualify himself for the King's Service: And, if he was incapable of serving the King, it was through his own Fault and Neglect, and he was punishable for the same, as in the Case of Sir John Read, in 27 & 28 Car. II. In the Exchequer: He was made and sworn Sheriff of Hertfordshire, and neglected to take the Oaths, by reason whereof the Office became void; and afterwards there was an Information exhibited against him upon this Statute, for neglecting to take the said Oaths, and execute the said Office; whereupon he was convicted, and fined. And the Court was of Opinion, that no Subject could put himself out of a Capacity to serve the King, but for so doing he was punishable: That in the Law relating to Sheriffs, the Dispensation was in the Patent; but in this Case the Dispensation was after the Patent, which made made a Difference; and for theſe Reaſons, he prayed Judgment for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Solicitor General, Sir Thomas Powis, argued on the other Side, and inſiſted, That though it was admitted the Defendant ought to have pleaded the Diſpenſation to the Indictment, it did not appear but that he did.

That, if they ſtood upon this as an Eſtoppel, they ought to have relied upon it, and replied, that he had the Diſpenſation at the Time of the Indictment, and refuſed to plead it.

And as to the ſecond Point, Whether the King can diſpenſe with the Statute? It was admitted, that the King might in many Caſes diſpenſe with an Act of Parliament: It was obſerved in 2 Inſt. 496. that the King's Prerogative was as much the Law of England as any other Law whatſoever; and the King may, upon any Cauſe moving him, in reſpect of Time, Place, or Perſon, by a Non obſtante, diſpenſe with any particular Perſon, ſo that he ſhall not incur the Penalty of the Statute. Coke 36, 37. Vaughan 333, 347. And Glanvile, in his Argument p. 205. admits a Power in the King to diſpenſe with Penal Laws: Though the Conſent of the Lords and Commons was required to the making an Act of Parliament, yet it was the King that gave Sanctions to the Laws: And moſt of the antient Statutes began in the Form of Charters or Grants, as appeared by 8 Coke 19. And the Intent and Meaning of Acts of Parliament were every Day extended and altered by the Deciſions of the Judges, according to a better Rule of Reaſon and Juſtice than the Words would bear, Hob. 229. And Statutes which have been made againſt Common Right, have been conſtrued void. 8 Coke 118.

That there was a Diſtinction made in our Books between Malum in ſe and Malum prohibitum. The former the King cannot diſpenſe with; but the latter he may: As where the Statute generally prohibits any Thing under a Penalty, which was lawful before; there the King may diſpenſe with ſuch an Act, the Subject receiving no Injury by ſuch Diſpenſation, Vaughan 343. Dyer 5. 2. It was enacted, that none ſhould convey Wine into England out of Gaſcony, but in Engliſh Ships, and the King granted a Licence to one to import Wine in any Ships, notwithſtanding the Statute, 28 Coke 32. Vaughan 352, 353. That the Caſe in queſtion was a Malum prohibitum; neither was the Diſpenſation any Damage to the Subject: If it was a Wrong, it was to the King himſelf; and the King might diſpenſe with what related to himſelf.

Mr. Solicitor alſo diſtinguiſhed between Acts of Parliament which concerned Property, and thoſe which concerned Government: Acts of Parliament which concerned Property, he admitted, the King could not diſpenſe with; but thoſe which concerned Government he might; otherwiſe great Inconveniencies muſt often happen. There might be ſuch Exigencies of State, as might force him to it, ſuch as were unforeſeen at the Time of the making the Law: It might ſo happen by a Viciſſitude of Times, that thoſe Laws which were made for the Preſervation of the Government, might turn to the Deſtruction of the Government, if the King could not diſpenſe with them: By the Law of England, every Merchant was at Liberty to trade with Countries in Amity with England; and yet it was admitted on all Hands, if the King was apprehenſive of an Invaſion, he might lay an Embargo upon their Shipping, take their Men out of them, and put a Stop to their Trade, for the Defence and Preſervation of the whole Kingdom. The King alſo might dig in any Man's Lands for Salt-Petre, to enable him to defend the whole Kingdom: The common Law, in ſuch Caſes, had ſuch a Regard for the Prerogative, that the Intereſt of private Perſons was not conſidered.

1686. 2 Jac. II.

That this Statute of 25 Car. II. was made indeed to diminiſh the King's Prerogative; but at the ſame Time to ſecure him from his Enemies, and for the Preſervation of the Government; and the King was the beſt Judge what was for his own Security, and the Preſervation of the Government.

No Act of Parliament could diſcharge the Subject from his Allegiance he owed the King; every one was bound to ſerve his Prince when required: Therefore no Act of Parliament could diſable any Man to ſerve the King.

But it was objected, That this did not make a Man incapable, but by his own Election: If this were ſo, it would be in the Election of one or all the King's Subjects, to incapacitate themſelves to ſerve the King, and ſo the King would be unſerved; as in the Caſe of Sir John Read, cited on the other Side: He neglected to take the Oaths, and ſo the Office of Sheriff became void; and if the next, and every other ſucceeding Sheriff, had neglected to take them, how could the King's Buſineſs, or the Bnſineſs of the County, have been done? There were ſeveral Statutes, which the King by his Prerogative might diſpenſe with: As the Statute of 36 Hen. VI. which enacted, That no Man ſhould be Sheriff of one County two Years: Yet it was reſolved by all the Judges, that the King might diſpenſe with it. The Statute of 4 Hen. IV. 31. enacts, That no Welchman ſhall be a Juſtice of Peace, or Civil Officer in Wales; and yet the King diſpenſes with it. The Statutes of 8 Rich. II. and the 33 Hen. VIII. 24. enact, That no Man ſhall be Juſtice of Aſſize in the County where he was born; and yet the King, by a ſpecial Non obſtante, diſpenſes with it.

As to the Statutes mentioned, which the King could not diſpenſe with, as thoſe relating to Simony and Uſury; here was no Reſtriction of the Subject's Service; but the King might have the Benefit of it notwithſtanding: As to the Statute of 5 Edw. VI. 16, againſt buying and ſelling Offices; that Statute diſabled the Party on doing ſuch an Act to take an Office; the making the Bargain being prior to the taking of the Office; ſo that he could never legally have the Office veſted in him; which made a wide Difference between that Statute and this: Here the Defendant was actually poſſeſſed of the Office, and the King only diſpenſed with his taking the Oaths and Teſt: And for theſe Reaſons he prayed Judgment for the Defendant.

The Chief Juſtice delivers his Opinion.

The Chief Juſtice, in delivering his Opinion of this Caſe, ſaid, If the King could not diſpenſe 1686. 2 Jac. II. diſpenſe with this Statute, he could not diſpenſe with any Penal Law: And he was of Opinion, the Defendant might plead this Diſpenſation and Pardon to the Action of Debt, though he did not plead it to the Indictment: For the Jury below might have gone againſt the Direction of the Court; and that ſhould not conclude the Court of King's-Bench: That this being urged as an Eſtoppel, it could not bind, becauſe the Plaintiff was not Party to the firſt Suit.

As to the ſecond Point, There was no Law whatever, which the ſupreme Law-giver might not diſpenſe with; as the Laws of God might be diſpenſed with by God, as was done in the Caſe of Abraham's offering up Iſaac.

It was impoſſible for the wiſeſt Lawgiver, to foreſee all Caſes that may happen; and therefore there muſt be a Power lodged ſomewhere to diſpenſe with the Laws: As to the Caſe of Simony, he did agree it was malum in ſe; and therefore the King could not diſpenſe with it: Nor could he diſpenſe with the Statutes of Uſury, or Non-Reſidence, becauſe the Subject had a Benefit by the Obſervation of them: And as to the buying and ſelling Offices, the Party was diſabled to take any ſuch Office by the Contract; ſo that the Diſability was incurred, before the Office was veſted in him, which Diſability the King could not remove: And ſo he agreed it would have been in this Caſe, if the Defendant had, by his Neglect, or Refuſal to take the Oaths, rendered himſelf incapable, before he had received a Diſpenſation: But the King's Diſpenſation, coming before the Diſability incurred, did prevent it.

That the Caſe of a Sheriff was much ſtronger than this; for that Statute diſabled the Party to take, and the King to grant; and ſays expreſly the King ſhall not diſpenſe with it by a Non obſtante; and yet it was the Opinion of all the Judges of England, That the King had Power to diſpenſe with that Statute, which had been accounted good Law, ever ſince the Reign of Hen. VII. and never queſtioned till now: The Practice had ever been, according to that Reſolution: And, if that were not Law, ſome Sheriffs would not be lawful Sheriffs; and conſequently could have no Power to return Jones; nor had the Judges Power conſequently, to try and give Judgment upon Offenders; they ſhould take the Opinion therefore of the reſt of the Judges: And, if that Caſe was not Law, the Judges Patents, who went into their own Counties, were alſo illegal; for their Patents were Non obſtante's to 23 Hen. VIII. 34. and ſo they had no Authority to go their Circuits.

His Lordſhip, having conſulted the Judges, delivered their Opinions in open Court, on Monday the 21ſt of June, in the following Manner.

The Judgment of the whole Court of King's-Bench.

In the Caſe of Godwin and Hales, wherein the Defendant pleads a Diſpenſation from the King, It is doubted, whether or no the King had ſuch a Prerogative? Truly, upon the Arguments before us, it appeared as clear a Caſe as ever came before the Court: But becauſe Men fancy I know not what Difficulty, when really there is none, we were willing to give ſo much Countenance to the Queſtion in this Caſe, as to take the Advice of all the Judges of England: They were all aſſembled at Serjeant's-Inn, and this Caſe was put to them; and the great Caſe of the Sheriff's was put, Whether the Diſpenſation in that Caſe were legal? becauſe upon that depended the Execution of all the Law of the Nation: And I muſt tell you, that there were ten upon the Place that clearly delivered their Opinions, That the Caſe of the Sheriffs was good Law; and, that all the Attainders grounded upon Indictments, found by Juries returned by ſuch Sheriffs, were good and not erroneous; and conſequently, that Men need not have any Fears or Scruples about that Matter. And, in the next Place, they did clearly declare, that there was no imaginable Difference between that Caſe and this; unleſs it were, that this were the much clearer Caſe of the two, and liable to the fewer Exceptions.

1686. 2 Jac. II.

My Brother Powel ſaid, He was inclined to be of the ſame Opinion: But he would rather have ſome more Time to conſider of it: But he has ſince ſent my Brother Holloway, to let us know that he does concur with us. To theſe eleven Judges there is one Diſſenter, Brother Street; who yet continues his Opinion, That the King cannot diſpenſe in this Caſe: But that is the Opinion of one ſingle Judge, againſt the Opinion of eleven. We were ſatisfied in our Judgments before; and having the Concurrence of eleven out of twelve, we think we may very well declare the Opinion of the Court to be, That the King may diſpenſe in this Caſe; and the Judges go upon theſe Grounds.

Five Reſolutions of the Judges.

1. That the Kings of England are Sovereign Princes.

2. That the Laws of England are the King's Laws.

3. That, therefore, it is an inſeparable Prerogative in the Kings of England, to diſpenſe with penal Laws in particular Caſes, and upon particular neceſſary Reaſons.

4. That of thoſe Reaſons, and thoſe Neceſſities, the King himſelf is ſole Judge: And then, which is conſequent upon all,

5. That this is not a Truſt inveſted in, or granted to the King by the People; but the antient Remains of the Sovereign Power and Prerogative of the Kings of England; which never yet was taken from them, nor can be. And therefore ſuch a Diſpenſation, appearing upon Record to come Time enough to ſave him from the Forfeiture, Judgment ought to be given for the Defendant,

Quod querens nil capiat per billam.

The Chief Juſtice's Vindication of this Judgment.

The Chief Juſtice, Sir Edward Herbert, being very ſeverely reflected on for this Judgment, as if he had thereby eſtabliſhed a Diſpenſing Power, and entirely ſubverted the Engliſh Laws and Conſtitution, publiſhed a Vindication of it.

And firſt, to ſhew what this Diſpenſing Power was, he cited the Caſe in the Lord Coke's 11th Report, Pag. 88. where it is ſaid, Diſpenſatio mali prohibiti eſt, de jure Domino Regi conceſſa propter impoſſibilitatem prævidendi de omnibus particularibus: And Diſpenſatio eſt mali prohibiti provida relaxatio, utilitate, ſeu neceſſitate penſata: For true it is, (ſays the Book), That inaſmuch as an Act of Parliament, which generally prohibits hibits any Thing upon a Penalty that is popular, or only given to the King, may be inconvenient to divers particular Perſons, in Reſpect of Perſon, Time, or Place; for this Purpoſe, the Law gives a Power to the King, to diſpenſe with particular Perſons: And in the 7th Rep. p. 63. in the Caſe of Penal Statutes, it was reſolved 2 Jac. I. by all the Judges of England, That the King may diſpenſe with any particular Perſon: That he ſhall not incur the Penalty of the Statute, though it be an Act made pro bono publico: And that this is a Truſt and Confidence inſeparably annexed to the Royal Perſon of the King. He cited theſe two Caſes, he ſaid, To ſhew that a Diſpenſation was, in its own Nature, particular, and given to particular Perſons by Name; which was all the Power that was aſcribed to the King, by their Judgment. And it was an unreaſonable Miſtake in People, who talked of a diſpenſing Power: As if the King's Declaration of Liberty of Conſcience (whereby all the Laws that concern Religion, were at once totally ſuſpended, and laid to Sleep) were warranted by it; whereas this Caſe had no Reſemblance of that.

Then he cites the Caſe in the Year-Books of Hen. VII. Fol. 11. & Hen. VII. Fol. 12. which ſay, The King may diſpenſe with a prohibited Evil; though not with that which was evil in itſelf: And Vaughan's Reports, in the Caſe of Thomas and Sorrel, p. 333. who diſcourſing of this Caſe, ſhews, how a Diſpenſation differs from a Pardon.

That a Diſpenſation does Jus dare, and makes a Thing, prohibited to all others, lawful to be done by him that hath it: And therefore the King cannot diſpenſe with mala in ſe; becauſe they never were, and can never be lawful.

From which Caſes he forms this Syllogiſm; Whatever is not prohibited by the Law of God, but was lawful before any Act of Parliament made to forbid it; the King, by his Diſpenſation granted to a particular Perſon, may make lawful again to that Perſon, who hath ſuch Diſpenſation, though it continues unlawful to every body elſe: But to execute any Office without taking the Oaths and the Teſt, antecedent to any Act of Parliament made to forbid it, was lawful.

Therefore the Diſpenſation granted to Sir Edward Hales, did make it lawful for him to do ſo; though it continued unlawful for any body elſe.

In this Argument, the Premiſes were none of their own, he obſerved: The Authority of the Books they had them from, were never queſtioned; and it could not be criminal in the Judges, to draw a neceſſary Concluſion from Premiſes and Book-Caſes, that have been taken for Law ſo many Ages.

Then he cited the aboveſaid Caſe, Where it was reſolved by all the Judges of England, 2 Hen. VII. That the King might diſpenſe with the Statute of 23 Hen. VI. which enacted, That no Man ſhould be Sheriff for above one Year.

That this Caſe had been cited, as adjuged in ſeveral Books of great Authority; and it had been the conſtant Practice to have Diſpenſations in all Kings Reigns, ever ſince that Reſolution.

Then, having anſwered ſome leſs material Objections that were made to this Doctrine, he comes to the grand Point, namely, That if the King have a Power to diſpenſe with one, he may diſpenſe with twenty, or with an hundred; and ſo the Deſign of the Statute would be entirely defeated.

1686. 2 Jac. II.

The grand Objection

To this the Chief Juſtice anſwers, That from the Abuſe of a Thing, to draw an Argument againſt the Thing itſelf, is no Conſequence at all. It muſt be acknowledged, that there was a high Truſt repoſed in the King; and if the King would violate his Truſt, there were none of his Prerogatives but might be abuſed, to the Ruin of his People; of which he gave theſe Inſtances.

1. He obſerved, That it was granted, the King might pardon Murder or Robbery; and yet, if the King ſhould pardon every Murder and every Robbery, it were better to live among Savages.

2. The King might create any Man a Peer, and thereby give him a Vote in Parliament: And if the King ſhould abuſe his Power, ſo far as to create 10,000 Peers, or confer that Honour upon every body that asked it; no Doubt, but this would tend to the Deſtruction of the Conſtitution: And yet, in either of theſe Caſes, if the Judges ſhould determine, the King had ſuch a Prerogative, it would be unreaſonable to object, That theſe Prerogatives might be abuſed; and therefore the Judges had given a pernicious Judgment.

When they gave Judgment in Sir Edward Hale's Caſe, they could neither know, nor prevent (if they did) any ill Uſe the King might make of his Power: They could only ſay upon their Oaths, whether the King had ſuch a Power or not; and for this they had not only the great Authorities above cited; but much greater than thoſe, namely, two Conceſſions of all the Commons of England aſſembled in Parliament, That this diſpenſing Power was lodged in the King; and that too, when they were contending with the Crown, about the Violation of the Laws.

1. The firſt was Rot. Parl. 1 Hen. V. n. 15. Tit. Prerogative. "There the Commons pray, "That the Statute for voiding Aliens out of the "Kingdom, may be kept: To which the King "agrees, ſaving his Prerogative, That he may "diſpenſe with whom he pleaſes; and upon "this the Commons anſwered, That their In"tent was no other, nor ever ſhould be, by "the Grace of God. And in the ſame Parlia"ment, when the Commons prayed, That the "Statutes of Proviſors, Statutes of the ſame "Nature as that in this Caſe, (for they were "made againſt the Court of Rome's encroaching "Juriſdiction in England); when they prayed, "That theſe might be put in Execution; they "themſelves inſerted in their Petition, a Saving "for the King's Prerogative, and then he a"greed to it.

2. "The next and plaineſt Conceſſion of the "Commons, is 3 Car. I. upon a Debate be"tween the two Houſes, concerning the Pe"tition of Right: Where the Commons ſay, "p. 205. There is a Truſt inſeparably repoſed "in the Perſons of the Kings of England; but "that Truſt was regulated by Law: For Ex-

" bit Things, not mala in ſe, but only mala
" quia prohibita, under certain Forfeitures and " Penalties, to accrue to the King, and to the " Informers that ſhall ſue for the Breach of " them; The Commons muſt, and ever will,

" Perſons, with the Clauſes of Non obſtante, to " do as they might have done before thoſe Sta-
" tutes, wherein his Majeſty's conferring Grace
" and Favour to one, does no Wrong to o" thers: But there is a Difference between thoſe
" Statutes, and the Laws and Statutes whereon
" the Petition is grounded: By thoſe Statutes,
" the Subject has no Intereſt in the Penalties
" (which are all the Fruit ſuch Statutes can pro-
" duce, until by Suit or Information, he be" come entitled to the particular Forfeitures);
" whereas the Laws and Statutes mentioned in " the Petition, are of another Nature: Laws
" not inflicting Penalties on Offenders, in malis
" prohibitis; but Laws conferring or confirm-
" ing an inherent Right and Intereſt of Liber" ty and Freedom on the Subjects of this " Realm, as their Birth-Rights and Inheritan-
" ces deſcendible to their Heirs and Poſterity;
" Statutes Incorporate in the common Law,
" over which, with Reverence be it ſpoken,
" there is no Truſt in the King's Sovereign
" Power, or Prerogative Royal, to enable " him to diſpenſe with them; or to take from " his Subjects, that Birth-Right or Inheritance
" which they have in their Liberties, by Vir-
" tue of the common Law, and of theſe Statutes.

As to that Objection, That this Law was made for the Intereſt of Religion; and all Offences againſt Religion were mala in ſe, and therefore not to be diſpenſed with:

He anſwered, It was true, That all Offences directly againſt Religion, as it was conſtituted ſuch by the divine Law, were mala in ſe, and not to be diſpenſed with; and in this Caſe the Parliament was bound, as well as the King; an Act of Parliament, made in that Senſe, againſt Religion, was utterly void: But human and politick Conſtitutions, though made for the Intereſt of Religion; as they had a Beginning, ſo they were alterable by the ſame Power that made them. The King might diſpenſe with a Prieſt's holding two Benefices, though the Laws againſt Pluralities were made for the Intereſt of Religion; and he might diſpenſe with a Baſtard's entering into Prieſt's Orders.

But he found it was further objected, That though theſe high Truſts and Prerogatives might be allowed to a Proteſtant Prince; yet, the acknowledging them to be veſted in a Prince of a contrary Religion to that eſtabliſhed by Law, muſt end in the Deſtruction of that eſtabliſhed Religion.

To which he anſwered, That the Promoters of the Bill of Excluſion urged the ſame Argument: If you leave him King (ſaid they), he will have all the Prerogatives of a King, and thoſe Prerogatives may be made inſtrumental, to the Ruin of your Religion; which could not be denied by the Gentlemen on the other Side, that oppoſed that Bill: Their only Reply was, Fiat Juſtitia, ruat Cœlum: It is his Right, and we muſt not do Evil that Good may come: we muſt not do Wrong, no not to promote the Intereſt of Religion itſelf. 1686. 2 Jac. II.

The ſame Argument, (ſays the Chief Juſtice), that weighed with them, to aſſert the Right of Succeſſion to the Crown; and conſequently to all Prerogatives together, was the Rule we had to guide us in giving Judgment in this Caſe, concerning a particular Branch of them. We muſt not break our Oath, or give Judgment contrary to what ſeemed to us to be Law, let the Conſequence be what it will.

Laſtly, he obſerved, it had been objected, That all this was a Contrivance, an Informer ſet up; and all but a feigned Action.

But he could truely ſay, he never heard of this Action till it was actually brought; however, he ſaw no Hurt in it, if it had been ſo: The Law was well tried, and ſettled in a feigned Action, as in a true: There were feigned Actions directed every Day out of Chancery for this Purpoſe; and why the King might not direct ſuch an Action to be brought to ſatisfy himſelf, whether he had ſuch a Power; and, if he had, that the People might acquieſce in it, he could not conceive: And, if there were any indirect Means uſed for obtaining Opinions, he declared he knew nothing of it: He ſtood upon his Innocence, and defied all the World to lay any thing of this Nature to his Charge.

It ſeems to be admitted on all Hands, that where the Subject had any Property or Intereſt veſted in him by a Statute, the King could not diſpenſe with ſuch Statute: And, if this be ſo, ſurely the King cannot diſpenſe with a Statute, in which all, or moſt of his Subjects are concerned in Point of Intereſt; with a Statute made for the Preſervation of that Religion, which is a Part of our Conſtitution; and by the ſuſpending whereof, the Enemies of the Government are let in to ruin it: Had not King James Proteſtant Subjects enough (ſays Sir Robert Atkyns) to bear Offices? and are Popiſh Recuſants the fitteſt Perſons to be truſted with the Defence of the Proteſtant Religion, and with our Lives and Eſtates; which are all concerned more or leſs in every publick Office and Truſt? Remarks on the Reſolutions of Goodwin and Hale.

Are thoſe Perſons, who have a Dependance on the See of Rome, and a foreign Power, fit to be truſted with the Militia, with our Fortreſſes and Sea-Ports? Is not this to commit the Lamb to the Cuſtody of the Wolf?

The Act of 25 Car. II. is not levelled againſt the Opinions of the Roman Catholicks; they may keep their Religion ſtill, if they like it. But is there any Neceſſity of their being in Offices: Muſt they needs be Guardians of the Proteſtant Religion? The Penalties laid on them by this Act, as has been obſerved, is not purely for their Opinion, but for their preſuming to undertake Offices and Truſts, for which they have been adjudged and declared unfit, both by King and Parliament. I ſhall only add, That the very ſame Arguments hold againſt admitting the Diſſenters of any Kind into Offices and Places of Truſt: Nay, they may be juſtly looked upon as the more dangerous Enemies to the Church of England of the two; inaſmuch as they are more numerous, have a greater Intereſt and Influence in the Kingdom, and can ſwallow any Oaths and Teſts occaſionally; and even even commit, what they call, the groſſeſt Idolatry, to poſſeſs themſelves of Places, which may give them Opportunities of diſtreſſing and betraying that eſtabliſhed Church, which they thus occaſionally intrude into. They take the Sacramental Teſt, as Judas did the Sop, with Malice in their Hearts againſt the very Prieſthood from whoſe Hands they receive it; which is ſuch an abominable Piece of Hypocriſy, that even Jeſuits abhor; and the Diſſenters are conſcious that all Mankind muſt deteſt and abhor them for it: Which is one great Reaſon, no doubt, of their labouring ſo indefatigably, and employing every Artifice to get thoſe Teſts repealed, which are acknowledged to be the beſt Barrier of the Conſtitution in Church and State.

1686. 2 Jac. II.

The Indictment.

THIS is a very imperfect Piece. The Editors of the State-Trials only tell us, an Information was preferred againſt Mr. Johnſon, for a Miſdemeanor, in publiſhing two ſeditious Libels: The one, An Addreſs to the Army and Navy; inciting the Soldiers to mutiny againſt their Popiſh Officers, and not be made Tools to introduce Popery: And the other declaring, that Reſiſtance was lawful, where their Religion and Rights were invaded.

His Condition, and Sentence.

Of which being convicted, he was ſentenced to pay 500 Marks, to ſtand three Times in the Pillory, and to be whipped from Newgate to Tyburn: That he was afterwards degraded by the Biſhops of Durham, Rocheſter, and Peterborough; and then whipped with a Whip of nine Cords, and received 317 Laſhes.

The Execution of it.

The Judgment voted cruel and illegal.

That after the Revolution, viz. on the 11th of June 1689, the Parliament voted, That the Judgment given againſt Mr. Johnſon, was illegal and cruel; and that the degrading him by a Power derived from the High Commiſſion, was illegal.

That he was recommended to King William for Preferment; but never had any given him: However, that Prince ſettled three hundred Pounds a Year upon him out of the Poſt-Office for his own and his Son's Life; gave Mr. Johnſon a thouſand Pounds in Money, and his Son a Place of an hundred Pounds per Annum.

The Authority of the High-Commiſſion.

THE King's Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion was directed to William Lord Archbiſhop of Canterbury, George Lord Jeffries Lord High Chancellor, Lawrence Earl of Rocheſter Lord Treaſurer, Robert Earl of Sunderland Lord Preſident of the Council and Principal Secretary of State, Nathanael Lord Biſhop of Durham, Thomas Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, and Sir Edward Herbert Lord Chief Juſtice; who were impowered to exerciſe all Manner of Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction, and puniſh all Offences puniſhable by the Eccleſiaſtical Laws, and to correct and alter the Statutes in the Univerſities, and of all Cathedrals, Colleges, and Schools, &c.

The Biſhop's Caſe.

The Caſe of the Biſhop of London was this: Mr. Atterbury, the Meſſenger, delivered a Letter from his Majeſty to his Lordſhip on the 17th of of June, 1686, wherein the King obſerved, That, notwithſtanding his Directions concerning Preachers, dated the 15th of March, 1685, Dr. John Sharp had, in ſome Sermons, preſumed to make unbecoming Reflections, and uſed ſuch Expreſſions, as tended to beget in the Minds of his Hearers, an evil Opinion of his Majeſty and his Government, and to diſpoſe the People to Rebellion; and therefore commanded the Biſhop to ſuſpend the ſaid Dr. John Sharp from Preaching, till his Majeſty's Pleaſure were further known.

In anſwer to which my Lord Biſhop of London wrote to my Lord Sunderland the next Day, being the 18th of June, and ſent the Letter by Dr. Sharp; wherein he acquaints my Lord Sunderland, "He was concerned he could not "comply with his Majeſty's Commands: That "being to act as a Judge in this Caſe, he could "not condemn the Dr. till he had been cited, "and he had Knowledge of the Cauſe; but that "he had ſent to the Dr. and acquainted him "with his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure; and found "him ſo ready to make all reaſonable Satiſfaction, that he thought fit to make him the "Bearer of this Anſwer."

The Sunday following Dr. Sharp carried a Petition to Windſor, which was not permitted to be read.

On Wedneſday, the 4th of Auguſt, 1686, my Lord Biſhop of London, upon a Summons, appeared before the Commiſſioners at the Council-Chamber at Whitehall: Preſent the Lord Chancellor, 1686. 2 Jac. II. cellor, Lord Biſhop of Durham, Lord Treaſurer, Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter, Lord Preſiden, and Lord Chief Juſtice Herbert.

The Lord Chancellor demanded, Why my Lord Biſhop of London had not ſuſpended Dr. Sharp, according to the King's Command?

The Lord Biſhop of London anſwered, That he was adviſed, he could not legally do it but by Way of Citation, and hearing him.

Lord Chancellor: You ought to have known the Law better: The King is to be obeyed; and, if you have any Reaſons to offer, we are ready to hear you.

The Lord Biſhop of London deſired a Copy of their Commiſſion, and a Copy of his Charge: And, if he might not have a Copy of their Commiſſion, that he might read it, or hear it read. Then he was ordered to withdraw; and being called again in about a Quarter of an Hour, the Lord Chancellor acquainted him, That the Commiſſioners were of Opinion, his Requeſt could not be granted: That, if every one that appeared there ſhould demand a Sight of their Commiſſion, their whole Time would be taken up in reading of it: That the Proceedings of Courts of this Kind were not by Libels and Articles, but by Word of Mouth: And it was a ſhort Queſtion only they asked; Why he did not obey the King?

My Lord Biſhop of London deſired the Commiſſioners to conſider, he was a Peer, and a Biſhop; and he deſired to behave himſelf as becomes one in thoſe Capacities; and hoped, they would give him Time till the next Term to make his Defence.

The Commiſſioners ſaid, they thought that unreaſonable; but they would give his Lordſhip a Week's Time; and then adjourned to the 9th of Auguſt.

On the 9th of Auguſt, the ſame Commiſſioners being preſent, my Lord Biſhop of London came before them, attended by his Nephew, the Earl of Northampton, Sir John Nicholas, and his Brother, Sir Francis Compton.

My Lord Biſhop of London ſaid, He had not been able to meet with their Commiſſion till the Night before; though he was told, he might ſee it in every Coffee-Houſe.

The Lord Chancellor anſwered, They would admit no quarrelling at their Commiſſion; they were well aſſured of the Legality of it, or they would not be ſuch Fools to ſit there.

My Lord Biſhop of London ſaid, He deſired a Sight of their Commiſſion, becauſe, poſſibly, it might not reach him, being a Peer, and a Biſhop; and that he had not had Time to adviſe about it; and therefore deſired a Fortnight longer, (which was granted).

On Tueſday, the 23d of Auguſt, my Lord Biſhop of London appeared before the ſame Commiſſioners again.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I have conſulted thoſe that are very learned in the Laws, who tell me, that your Proceedings in this Court are directly contrary to the Statute Law; and they are here to plead it, if your Lordſhip will admit them.

Lord Chancellor. We will neither hear your Lordſhip, nor your Counſel, in the Matter: We are ſufficiently ſatisfied of the Legality of our Commiſſion.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, I am a Biſhop of the Church of England; and by all the Law in the Chriſtian Church in all Ages, and by the particular Law of this Land, I am, in caſe of Offence, to be tried by my Metropolitan and Suffragans: I hope your Lordſhip will not deny the Rights and Privileges of Chriſtian Biſhops. 1686. 2 Jac. II.

Lord Chancellor. My Lord, you know our Proceedings are according to what has been done formerly, and that we have an Original Juriſdiction: This is ſtill queſtioning our Court.

Lord Biſhop. My Lords, Proteſting in my own Right to the Laws of the Realm, as a Subject, and the Rights and Privileges of the Church, as a Biſhop, I ſhall give in my Anſwer.

The Anſwer was accepted, and the Biſhop withdrew; and after half an Hour the Biſhop and his Counſel were called in; who were Dr. Oldys, Dr. Hodges, Dr. Price, and Dr. Newton; whom the Biſhop deſired might be heard.

They argued, That the Words of the King's Letter being, That you ſuſpend him from Preaching; this could not be done by our Laws without a Citation, and proceeding to Judgment thereupon: But if by that Expreſſion, only the Silencing the Dr. was intended, then the Biſhop had executed the King's Command in ſuch a Method as is obſerved in their Courts. The Arguments at the Biſhop's Council.

For where an eminent Perſon is accuſed, the Judges ſend him a Letter; and if he appears, and complies with the Judges Order, the Law is ſatisfied. Here the Biſhop ſent for Dr. Sharp, and adviſed him not to preach, till the King had received Satisfaction; and he had obſerved his Lordſhip's Directions, and has not preached to this very Day; ſo that his Majeſty's Command was in Effect fulfilled. That the Biſhop had done what was his Duty; he was bound to return his Reaſon to the King, why he did not do that which he commanded, and to expect his further Anſwer; which was done.

That if a Prince, or Pope, command any Thing unlawful, it is the Duty of a Judge Reſcribere Principi, and attend his further Pleaſure; and this is all he can do: That as in Nature no Man can be obliged to do that which is impoſſible, ſo in Policy no Man can be obliged to do an unlawful Act.

Lord Biſhop. If through Miſtake I have erred in any Circumſtance, I am ready to beg his Majeſty's Pardon; and ſhall be ready to make any Reparation I am capable.

The Biſhop withdrew for half an Hour, and then was called in, and acquainted, that the Commiſſioners would be there again on Wedneſday next, when his Lordſhip was directed to attend.

Die Lunæ, 6 Septem. 1686.

Lord Chancellor. You were deſired to appear this Day to hear your Sentence; which, to prevent Miſtake, we have ordered to be put in Writing. He is ordered to attend his Sentence.

Lord Biſhop. My Lord, may I have leave to ſpeak, before Sentence is read?

Lord Chancellor. My Lord, we have heard you and your Counſel already.

Then the Inſtrument of Suſpenſion was read by Mr. Bridgman, their Lordſhips Regiſter; viz.

By

1686. 2 Jac. II.

By his Majesty's Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Affairs, &c.

The Sentence.

Whereas, Henry Lord Bishop of London, hath been convened before us for his Disobedience, and other his Contempts, mentioned in the Proceedings of this Cause; and the said Bishop being fully heard thereupon, We have thought fit, upon mature Consideration of the Matter, to proceed to this our Definitive Sentence; declaring, pronouncing, and decreeing, That the said Henry, Lord Bishop of London, shall, for his said Disobedience and Contempt, be suspended during his Majesty's Pleasure: And accordingly we do, by these Presents, suspend him the said Lord Bishop of London; peremptorily admonishing and requiring him, hereby, to abstain from the Function and Execution of his Episcopal Office, and from all Episcopal and other Ecclesiastical Jurisdiction, during the said Suspension, upon Pain of Deprivation and Removal from his Bishoprick.

1686. 2 Jac. II.

Doctor Sharp was also suspended for a Time; but suffered afterwards to preach and exercise his Function again. Dr. Sharp suspended, & restored.

And the Bishop of London's Suspension was taken off in the Year 1688, upon Advice of the Prince of Orange's intended Imbarkation to invade England. The Bishop's Suspension taken off.

The Remarks on this Prosecution of the Bishop of London, will be found intermixed with those on the Trials of the Seven Bishops, in the Year 1688.

Proceedings against the University of Cambridge, for not obeying the King's Mandate, in the Year 1686. 3 Jac. II.

1686. 3 Jac. II.

The Case of the University of Cambridge.

THE University received a Letter Mandatory by Atterbury the Messenger, from his Majesty, on the 9th of February, 1686-7, commanding them to admit Alban Francis, a Benedictine Monk, to the Degree of Master of Arts, without administring to him any Oath whatever: Whereupon the Senate being assembled, resolved to send up their Sense of this Matter to Doctor Peachel, the Vice-Chancellor, who was then in London; and Doctor Smoult, Professor of Divinity, was made Choice of by the Non-Regents, and Mr. Norris, Fellow of Trinity-College, by the Regents, to carry the Message; the Substance whereof was, That the House apprehended the Admission of Mr. Francis, without his taking the usual Oaths, was illegal and unsafe, and advised the petitioning his Majesty upon it; declaring, they were ready to join in the Petition, and make it their Act: And the Beadles were ordered to acquaint Mr. Francis, that the Senate were ready to admit him, provided he would take the Oaths. But Father Francis refused, insisting on the King's Dispensation.

The same Afternoon the Heads met, and sent a Letter to the Duke of Albemarle, their Chancellor, and another to the Earl of Sunderland, Secretary of State, by their Beadles; but they could not get Admission to the Earl of Sunderland: And soon after the University received another Letter from the King, dated the 24th of February, exactly the same as the Former, only with this Addition, That they should do it at their Peril. Whereupon a Letter was prepared for the Duke of Albemarle, and another for the Lord Sunderland, and sent up by Mr. Braddock, Fellow of Catherine-Hall, and Mr. Stanhope of King's College; and on Sunday the 3d of March, these Gentlemen waited on the Duke of Albemarle, who attended the King on Behalf of the University on the 14th, when his Majesty commanded his Grace to give him the Letter he received from the University; which he did, but received no Answer. They afterwards attended the Lord Sunderland, who told them, the King had seen the Vice-Chancellor's Letter, and was offended at the Proceedings of the University, and would shortly give them a further Answer: But they received no other Answer till Sunday the 9th of April, when Atterbury the Messenger came down to Cambridge with a Summons for the Vice-Chancellor to appear in Person, and the Senate by themselves, or their Deputies, before the Lords Commissioners for Ecclesiastical Affairs, in the Council-Chamber, on the 21st of April, to answer such Things as should be objected against them by his Majesty. Summoned to appear before the High Commission.

Whereupon the Senate deputed Dr. John Peachel, Vice-Chancellor; Dr. John Eachard, Master of Catherine-Hall; Dr. Humphry Babington, Fellow of Trinity College; Dr. Thomas Smoult, Fellow of St. John's College; Doctor William Cook, Doctor of Civil Law, and Fellow of Jesus College; Mr. John Billers, Fellow of St. John's, and publick Orator; Mr. Isaac Newton, Fellow of Trinity College, and Mathematical Professor; Mr. James Smith, Fellow of Queen's; and Mr. George Stanhope, Fellow of King's College. The Deputies that attended.

These Deputies appearing in the Council-Chamber on Thursday the 21st of April, before the Lord Chancellor Jefferies, the Lord Sunderland, President, the Lord Mulgrave, the Earl of Huntington, the Bishops of Durham and Rochester, and the Lord Chief Justice Herbert, Ecclesiastical Commissioners, the Summons was read; after which the Lord Chancellor demanded of Mr. Vice-Chancellor, Why he had not obeyed his Majesty's Commands in admitting Mr. Francis? The Names of the High Commissioners. The Vice-Chancellor examined.

1686. 3 Jac. II.

Mr. Vice-Chancellor anſwered, It was a Matter of great Concern, and deſired they might have Counſel and Time to prepare their Anſwer; and Time was given them till the Wedneſday following.

The Vice-Chancellor, &c. appearing again before the ſame Commiſſioners on Wedneſday the 27th of April, put in their Anſwer, which was entitled, The Anſwer of the Univerſity and Senate of Cambridge to the Queſtion, Why they did not admit Alban Francis to the Degree of Maſter of Arts, without taking the ſaid Oaths, &c.

The Anſwer of the Univerſity.

They anſwer, That by the Statutes of the 1ſt and 5th of Eliz. every Perſon, promoted to a Degree in the Univerſity, is required to take the Oath of Supremacy; and by 3 Jac. I. the Oath of Allegiance: That the Vice-Chancellor, and every Member of the Senate, had taken the ſaid Oaths, and were entruſted to ſee others take them in the Univerſity: And that in order to admitting the ſaid Alban Francis to the Degree of Maſter of Arts, the ſaid Oaths were offered to be adminiſtered to him; but he refuſed to take them.

That the admitting him without taking the ſaid Oaths, would have been contrary to the ſaid Statutes, and a Breach of Truſt in the Vice-Chancellor and Senate; and whether this Matter was proper for their Lordſhips Cognizance, they entreated them to conſider; inaſmuch as the taking the Degree of Maſter of Arts in the Univerſity, or the admitting and refuſing ſuch a Degree, was not a Matter Eccleſiaſtical, but of Lay and Temporal Cognizance.

And it was alſo enacted by a Statute of the 16 Car. I. That no new Court ſhould be erected within this Realm, which ſhould have like Power as the High Commiſſion Court then had, or pretended to have; but that every ſuch Commiſſion and Grant ſhould be void.

A further Examination.

The Anſwer being read, the Deputies were ordered to withdraw; and appearing at the Council-Chamber again on the 27th of May, the Lord Chancellor obſerved, that they alledged that their Oath prevented their obeying the King's Mandate, and demanded what that Oath was.

The Vice-Chancellor anſwered, He could not remember the very Words; but the Subſtance of it was, That he ſhould well and faithfully præſtare, or adminiſtrare, munus, or officium, Procancellarium.

Lord Chancellor. And do not you remember any Maſter of Arts made without Oaths?

Dr Cook. Not under the Quality of an Univerſity-Nobleman.

Lord Chancellor. Nay, good Doctor, you never were Vice-Chancellor yet; when you are, we will conſider you.

Vice-Chancellor. I cannot ſay I remember any.

Lord Chancellor. Did you never hear of Dr. Light oot?

Vice-Chancellor. My Lord, he did ſubſcribe the Th rty-nine Articles; and the Firſt of them is the King's Supremacy.

Lord Chancellor. And is Subſcribing Swearing, Doctor? 1686. 3 Jac. II.

Mr. Stanhope. As for Dr. Lightfoot, we were aware of that Objection, and therefore have provided an Anſwer to it, and are ready to make Proof that he did ſwear.

Lord Chancellor. Nay, look you now, that young Gentleman expects to be Vice-Chancellor too: When you are, Sir, you may ſpeak; but till then it will become you to forbear. Mr. Vice-Chancellor, when was it you received the Firſt of the King's Letters?

Vice-Chancellor. It was on Aſhwedneſday.

Lord-Chancellor. When you had read the Letter, why was not the Gentleman admitted?

Vice-Chancellor. The Senate ſent to deſire me I would forbear admitting Mr. Francis, till I had petitioned the King to revoke the Mandate.

Lord-Chancellor. Did you ever know any Mandate of the King's refuſed by the Univerſity before?

Vice-Chancellor. Yes, my Lord, about 15 or 16 Years ago, in the late King's Reign, a Mandate was given to one Tatnel, a Nonconformiſt Miniſter, and he refuſed to ſubſcribe and take the Oaths; whereupon the Univerſity petitioned the King, and he was pleaſed to recall his Mandate.

Lord Chancellor. How was it you knew the Minds of the Senate in this Buſineſs?

Vice-Chancellor. My Lord, the Houſe ſent up their Opinions by Dr. Smoult and Mr. Norris.

Lord Chancellor. But, Mr. Vice-Chancellor, you ought to take an Account of what is done in the Houſe yourſelf, and not from others: And how came this new Way of giving Opinions? Are not the Proctors uſually the Men that bring the Senſe of the Houſe to the Vice-Chancellor?

Vice-Chancellor. Not the Non-Regent, my Lord; they are not admitted into that Houſe, nor have any Thing to do there.

Then the Vice-Chancellor, &c. were ordered to withdraw; and being called in again half an Hour afterwards, to hear the Determination of the Commiſſioners, the Lord Chancellor pronounced the following Sentence.

Sentence pronounced against the Vice-Chancellor.

That the Vice-Chancellor ſhould be deprived of his Office, and not meddle afterwards with any Publick Buſineſs in the Univerſity: That he ſhould be ſuſpended ab officio & beneficio, of his Maſterſhip of Magdalen-College, during his Majeſty's Pleaſure; and abſtain from the Function of Maſter of the ſaid College, during the ſaid Suſpenſion, on Pain of Deprivation of his Maſterſhip. And it was further decreed, That the Profits belonging to the ſaid Maſterſhip, ſhould, during the Suſpenſion, be applied to the Uſe of the College.

The Deputies of the Senate appearing again before the Commiſſioners on Thurſday the 12th of May, and with them Dr. Peachel the Vice-Chancellor, the Lord Chancellor ſaid, The laſt Time they appeared there, the Lords Commiſſioners had thought fit to ſet a Mark of their Diſpleaſure on the Vice-Chancellor:

1686. 3 Jac. II. Univerſity reprimanded.

Chancellor: And that all the World muſt be ſenſible how obſtinate the Univerſity had ſhewn themſelves in refuſing to obey the King's Commands: But their Lordſhips conſidered there was a Difference between the Vice-Chancellor's Caſe and theirs; and therefore did not conclude them who repreſented the Senate with him. However, their beſt Courſe would be, by a ready Obedience to his Majeſty's Commands for the future, to make amends for the ill Example that had been given; and therefore, in the Words of the Scripture, he bid them Go their way, and ſin no more, leſt a worſe thing come unto them, directing them to ſend Copies of the Univerſity Statutes to be laid before the Commiſſioners.

1686. 3 Jac. II.

Two Orders of the Commiſſioners were afterwards ſent down to Cambridge by Mr. Atterbury the Meſſenger; the firſt directed to the Proctors, to proceed to the Choice of a new Vice-Chancellor, and the other to the Fellows of Magdalen-College.

To each of which was annexed a Copy of the Sentence, to be fixed upon the School-Doors, and the Gates of Magdalen-College: And on the 17th of May Dr. Balderſon, Maſter of Emanuel, was elected Vice-Chancellor.

The Remarks on theſe Proceedings will be ſeen at the End of the Trial of the ſeven Biſhops.

Proceedings againſt St. Mary Magdalen College in Oxford. 1687. 3 Jac. II.

1687. 3 Jac. II.

UPON the Death of Dr. Henry Clerk, Preſident of St. Mary Magdalen College, Charles Aldworth, Doctor of Laws, the Vice-Preſident, gave Notice of it in the Chapel on the 31ſt of March 1687. Whereupon the Fellows agreed to proceed to the Election of a Preſident on the 13th of April following; and the abſent Fellows were ſummoned to be preſent at it.

In the mean time, (viz.) on the 11th of April, came the King's Letter Mandatory, requiring the Fellows to elect Mr. Anthony Farmer their Preſident: And the Vice-Preſident read the Letter the ſame Day before the Fellows, in the Chapel after Evening Service, requiring them to attend again next Morning, in order to give their Anſwer to it.

All the Fellows meeting accordingly the next Morning, the Vice-Preſident read the Statute, De electione Preſidentis, and the Statute of 5 Eliz. againſt Corrupt Elections, as alſo the King's Letter: And their Anſwer being demanded, the Fellows ſaid, That they had a Petition lying before his Majeſty, and they ought not to proceed to Election till they had received his Majeſty Anſwer.

The Vice-Preſident and Fellows meeting again on Friday April 15, Dr. Thomas Smith, and Capt. Bagſhaw, two of the Fellows, acquainted the reſt from the Lord Preſident of the Council, That the King, having ſent his Letter to the College in Anſwer to their Petition, expected to be obeyed.

The Vice-Preſident demanding again, Whether they would elect and admit Mr. Farmer, in Obedience to the King's Letter? They anſwered, They deſired to proceed to Election; and Mr. Farmer not being a Perſon capable of being choſen by their Statutes, and this the laſt Day limited for the Election, they elected Mr. John Hough, Batchelor of Divinity; and he was immediately declared Preſident; and Mr. Maynard was appointed by the thirteen ſenior Fellows to preſent him to the Viſitor, in order to his Admiſſion. Mr. Thomſon and Mr. Charnock only declaring for Mr. Farmer; and on Saturday the 16th of April Mr. Hough was preſented to the Viſitor, and ſworn and admitted Preſident by his Lordſhip.

Mr. Hough elected Preſident.

The Vice-Preſident and Fellows were thereupon ſerved with a Citation dated 28 May, 1687. requiring them, or ſuch of the ſaid Fellows as they ſhould depute, to appear before his Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, in the Council-chamber at Whitehall, on the 6th of June following. The Fellows ſummoned, before the High Commiſſion.

Where the Vice-Preſident and Fellows deputed by the ſaid College appearing, and it being demanded, Why they did not obey his Majeſty's Letters, requiring them to elect and admit Mr. Anthony Farmer their Preſident, they gave in an Anſwer of the following Tenor, (viz.) Demanded why they did not elect Farmer.

That their College was a Body Corporate, governed by Local Statutes, granted and confirmed to them by King Henry VI. and other Kings of this Realm. That by thoſe Statutes the Perſon elected Preſident ought to be a Man of good Life and Converſation, and one who had been Fellow of the ſaid College, or of New College. To the Obſervation of which Statutes all the Fellows were ſworn, as well as that they would neither procure or conſent to any Diſpenſation of the ſaid Oath. Their Anſwer.

That inaſmuch as the ſaid Mr. Farmer had neither been Fellow of this College, or of New College, and had not thoſe Qualifications their Statutes required; and they could not comply with his Majeſty's Letter without violating their Oaths, and hazarding their legal Intereſt and Property; which they were bound by their Oaths to maintain: They repreſented the ſame in their humble Petition to his Majeſty. And having deferred their Election

3 1687. Jac. II.

Election of a Preſident to the laſt Day limited by their Statutes, they did then elect the Rev. Mr. John Hough, B. D. a Fellow of their College, and every Way qualified, to be their Preſident, who had ſince been confirmed by the Biſhop of Winton their Viſitor. And that they might not lie under his Majeſty's Diſpleaſure, they did, on the 18th of April, make an humble Repreſentation thereof to his Majeſty by his Grace the Duke of Ormonde, their Chancellor, ſetting forth the indiſpenſable Obligations they were under to obſerve their Founder's Statutes. And to this Anſwer they added the following Reaſons, why they could not elect Mr. Farmer, viz.

They ſhew Farmer was diſqualified.

That he ſo misbehaved himſelf in Trinity College in Cambridge, that he received an Admonition from the Maſter of that College, in order to his Expulſion: And having left Cambridge, he taught School at Chippenham in Wiltſhire, under a Non-conformiſt Miniſter, without Licence. That in September 1683, the ſaid Farmer was entered in St. Mary Magdalen Hall in Oxford, where ſuch frequent Complaints were brought againſt him for his troubleſome and unquiet Temper, that, to preſerve the Peace of that Society, he was deſired to leave the ſaid Hall. That after he was admitted of Magdalen College, he declared that there was no Proteſtant but would cut the King's Throat. But at other Times he declared to the Fellows of the ſame College, that whatever he pretended, he was really a Member of the Church of England, and that he made Intereſt with ſome Roman Catholicks only to get Preferment by their means; and for that Reaſon was willing to be of their Religion.

That at the very Time his Majeſty's Letter came to the College in his Behalf, he was at Abington in very ill Company, where he continued drinking to Exceſs two or three Days and Nights, and among other Diſorders, was one of thoſe who in the Night-time threw the Stocks into the River: And that in general the ſaid Farmer was of ill Fame, as appeared by Letters and Certificates the ſaid Fellows were ready to produce, and which were actually produced.

The High Commiſſion decree Hough's Election void.

The Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, however, proceeded on the 22d of June to declare the Election of Mr. Hough void, and decreed, that he ſhould be removed from the Preſidentſhip of the ſaid College: They likewiſe decreed, that Dr. Aldworth, the Vice-Preſident, ſhould be ſuſpended from that Office, and that Dr. Fairfax's Fellowſhip ſhould be ſuſpended for not obeying his Majeſty's Letters Mandatory for electing Farmer: His Majeſty alſo iſſued his Inhibition, forbidding the Fellows to elect any Perſon into a Fellowſhip, or other Place in the College, till his further Pleaſure was known.

The King's Mandate, to elect the Biſhop of Oxford their Preſident.

On the 14th of Auguſt following, the King ſent down another Mandate, authorizing and requiring the College to admit the Lord Bp. of Oxford, their Preſident; and with this Mandate came a Letter from the Lord Sunderland to the Fellows, directing them immediately to aſſemble and pay a ready Obedience to his Majeſty's Pleaſure herein, and ſend him an Account of their Proceedings. The Biſhop of Oxford alſo ſent them a Letter acquainting them he was indiſpoſed, and therefore deſired they would admit him their Preſident by Proxy. 1687. 3 Jac. II.

The Fellows attend the King at Chriſt-Church.

In the beginning of September 1687, his Majeſty, going to the Bath, and taking Oxford in his Way, ſent an Order to the Fellows of Magdalen College on the 4th of that Month, to attend him at Chriſt-Church that Afternoon; and the Fellows attending accordingly, the following Conference happened between his Majeſty and the Fellows.

King. What's your Name? Are you Dr. Pudſey?

Dr. Pudſey. Yes, may it pleaſe your Majeſty.

King. Did you receive my Letter?

Dr. Pudſey. Yes, Sir, we did.

King. Then you have not dealt with me like Gentlemen: You have done very uncivilly by me, and undutifully—Here they all kneeled, and Dr Pudſey offered a Petition, which his Majeſty refuſed to receive, and ſaid, You have been a ſtubborn turbulent College, I have known you to be ſo theſe Twenty-ſix Years; you have affronted me in this. Is this your Church of England Loyalty? One would wonder to find ſo many Church of England Men in ſuch a Buſineſs: Go Home, and ſhew your ſelves good Members of the Church of England: Get you gone; know I am your King; I will be obeyed, and I command you to be gone. Go, and admit the Biſhop of Oxford Head, Principal, I mean Preſident of the College. Let them that refuſe it look to it; they ſhall feel the Weight of their Sovereign's Diſpleaſure. As they were going, the King ſaid, he heard they had admitted a Fellow ſince his Inhibition: To which they anſwered, it was only a Confirmation of a former Election: The King ſaid, That was downright Diſobedience.

The Fellows offered again their Petition on their Knees.

King. Get you gone; I will receive nothing from you, till you have obeyed me, and admitted the Biſhop of Oxford. Upon which they went to their Chapel, and Dr. Pudſey propoſing, Whether they would obey the King, and elect the Biſhop of Oxford? They agreed, That the electing the Biſhop of Oxford being directly contrary to the Statutes and their Oaths, they could not apprehend it in their Power to obey his Majeſty in this Matter.

A Commiſſion from the High Commiſſion Court at Oxford.

October 19, Mr. Atterbury the King's Meſſenger fixed a Citation on the College and Chapel Doors, requiring the pretended Preſident and Fellows, and other Members of the College to appear before the Lords Commiſſioners, the Lord Biſhop of Cheſter, the Lord Chief Juſtice Wright, and Mr. Baron Jenner, in the Chapel on Friday Morning, Oct. 21.

On Thurſday the Lords Commiſſioners came to Oxford, attended with Three Troops of Horſe, which were quartered there.

They repair to Oxford.

On Friday Morning at Nine, they came into the outward Chapel; but no Seats being prepared there, they adjourned into the Hall, where their Commiſſion was read, which in general was the ſame with the former; only

theſe

1687. 3 Jac. II.

these Three, who came down, had been added to the other Lords, and were particularly impowered to visit Magdalen College only. Then the President and Fellows were called over, and all appeared who were in Town, except Dr. Fairfax; and Excuses were made for the absent.

Then the Bishop of Chester made a Speech, wherein he reprimanded them for their Disloyalty, affirmed that the Church of England taught an unlimited and unconditional Obedience; and laboured by Threats and Promises to induce them to comply with his Majesty.

The Fellows desiring a Copy of their Lordship's Commission, it was denied them; after which happened the following Dialogue between the Commissioners, and Dr. Hough the President.

Bishop of Chester. Dr. Hough, will you submit to this Visitation?

Dr. Hough. I do declare here, in the Name of my self and the greater Part of the Fellows, That we submit to the Visitation, as far as it is consistent with the Laws of the Land, and the Statutes of the College.

L. C. J. You cannot imagine that we act contrary to the Laws of the Land; and as to the Statutes, the King has dispensed with them.

Dr. Hough. My Lords, I find that your Commission gives you Authority to change and alter the Statutes, and make New ones, as you think fit. Now, we have taken an Oath not only to observe these Statutes, but to admit of no new Ones, or Alterations in these. This must be my Behaviour here; I must admit of no Alteration, and by the Grace of God never will.

Bishop of Chester. You have a Statute there for Mass, why don't you say Mass?

Dr. Hough. That Statute is taken away by the Laws of the Land, which oblige us to say Common-Prayer.

Bishop of Chester. Do you allow that an Act of Parliament can free you from the Obligation of a Statute?

Dr. Hough. I do not say but that his Majesty may alter our Statutes, or the Parliament may do it; but I, who have already taken an Oath to observe these Statutes as they now stand, and to admit of no Alteration by any Authority whatever, can obey no other: But those, who shall come after such Alterations shall be made, are not obliged to observe them; and that is our Case, as to the Statutes for Mass.

Then the Decree of the 22d of June, declaring the President's Election to be void, was read.

Bishop of Chester. Why did you not obey this Decree?

Dr. Hough. I was never cited before their Lordships, or heard in Person, or by Proxy: And I am the first Instance of any Man that was ever deprived of a Freehold (whereof he had been legally invested, and was possessed) without being summoned or heard.

Bishop of Chester. The King has, for the most Part, recommended to the Presidentship of this College.

Dr. Hough. I am the twentieth President, and only four of that Number have been recommended by the Crown; whereof Three were qualified for that Office.

The Petition of the College to his Majesty, before any Election.

Then the Petition of the College to his Majesty, dated the 9th of April was read, wherein they set forth, That having heard that his Majesty was about to recommend Mr. Farmer to them, (a Person who was incapable of that Office) they did humbly beseech him, either to leave them to a free Election, or to recommend a qualified Person.

Bishop of Chester. Why did you not stay for his Majesty's Answer?

Dr. Hough. We did, till the very last Day wherein we are limited to finish the Election; and my Lord Sunderland returned this Answer, in the King's Name, That his Majesty expected to be obeyed. Now, my Lord, We did no longer defer the Election, because our Statutes enjoin us to elect within such a Time; and we could not chuse the Person his Majesty recommended, because he was unfit: The Society therefore proceeded to the Election of another Person.

The Commissioners meeting again in the Common Room, on Saturday the 22*d of* October, and the Fellows attending, they were all ordered to withdraw, except Dr. Hough.

Bishop of Chester. Do you submit to the Decree of the Commissioners, whereby the Election is delared Null.

Dr. Hough. I cannot submit to that Sentence; because I think I cannot be deprived of my Freehold, but by Course of Law in Westminster-Hall, or by being some way incapacitated by the Founder's Statutes.

Bishop of Chester. Will you deliver up the Keys to the President whom his Majesty hath appointed?

Dr. Hough. There neither is, nor can be a President, so long as I live and obey the Statutes; and therefore I do not think fit to give up my Right, the Keys of my Lodgings.

Then the Fellows were called in; and the Bishop demanded again, Whether he would deliver up the Keys, and quit Possession of the Lodgings? The Doctor refusing it a second Time, the King's Proctor charged him with Contumacy, and the Bishop of Chester gave him the following Admonition.

Bishop of Chester. Dr. Hough, I admonish you to depart peaceably out of the Lodgings, and to act no longer as President, or pretended President of this College. Then they struck his Name out of the Book, and admonished the Fellows, and the rest of the Society, not to submit to his Authority.

Dr. Fairfax was afterwards called in and examined alone.

Bishop of Chester. What was the Cause of your Contempt, in not appearing Yesterday?

Dr. Fairfax. I thought my Suspension had eased me of that Trouble.

L. C. J. You must make your Supplication and Submission to the King.

Dr. Fairfax. They tell me this Business lies in your Lordship's Court (the King's-Bench) and only there.

Bishop of Chester. But will you submit to this Visitation?

1687. 3 Jac. II. Here Dr. Fairfax read the following Words out of a Paper he held in his Hand.

My Lords,

" I Have been ſummoned, and appeared in " this Cauſe, before the Lords Eccleſiaſtical " at Whitehall, with whom your Lordſhips " are now joined in Commiſſion; and then " gave in my Anſwer: I have nothing to add " to it, and find no Reaſon to retract it."

Biſhop of Cheſter. If your Suſpenſion was taken off, would you ſubmit to the Biſhop of Oxford?

Dr. Fairfax. Truly, my Lord, I cannot do it.

Then the Fellows were called in again; and it was demanded, Whether they would aſſiſt at the Admiſſion of the Biſhop of Oxford when he ſhould be inſtalled Preſident, by Virtue of the King's Mandate: To which they anſwered, They were under Oaths to the contrary; and therefore could not do it, (except Dr. Pudſey and Dr. Smith, who anſwered dubiouſly, and Charnock, who ſaid, He would aſſiſt).

At another Meeting of the Commiſſioners the ſame Afternoon, a Letter from Dr. Pudſey to the Earl of Sunderland was read, dated the 2d of Auguſt) importing that the Society, in anſwer to his Majeſty's Letter commanding them to admit the Biſhop of Oxford, agreed unanimouſly in this Anſwer, That the Place was full: Whereupon the Commiſſioners demanded of the Fellows ſeverally, If this was their Anſwer? And as many of them as were preſent acknowledged it was.

Dr Hough proteſts againſt the Proceedings of the Commiſſioners.

During this Examination, Dr. Hough the Preſident came into Court, and proteſted againſt all their Proceedings in Relation to his Deprivation, declaring they were illegal, unjuſt, and null; and appealed to the King in his Courts of Juſtice: At which the young Students and the Strangers giving a loud Hum, their Lordſhips were ſo incenſed, that they bound over Dr. Hough in the Sum of a 1000 l. to appear at the King's-Bench Bar on the 12th of November.

Then the Fellows were required to ſign the abovementioned Anſwer; which they all did, except Charnock: Wereupon the Biſhop of Cheſter ſaid, It was an unmannerly Anſwer, or to that Effect.

The Court meeting again on the 25th of October, Mr. Wiggins, Chaplain to the Biſhop of Oxford, produced an Inſtrument, impowering him to be inſtalled Preſident in the Room of his Lordſhip: Which being read, together with the King's Mandate for the Biſhop of Oxford, the Queſtion was put to two or three of the Seniors, Whether they would aſſiſt at this Inſtallment? Which they refuſing, the Court adjourned to the Chapel, where the Biſhop of Cheſter put Mr. Wiggins into the Preſident's Stall, and he took the Oath which the Statutes enjoin the Preſident at his Admiſſion, and the Oaths of Allegiance and Supremacy; and then their Lordſhips conducted him to the Door of the Preſident's Lodgings, where knocking three Times, and it not being opened, Mr. Atterbury and a Tipſtaff were ordered to fetch a Smith, and force it open, which was done, their Lordſhips being preſent: But none were aſſiſting except Mr. Charnock.

The Preſident's Ledge broke open and the Biſhop of Oxford's Proxy put in Poſſeſſion.

It being demanded of Dr. Fairfax, If he would ſubmit to the New Preſident? he ſaid he could not; becauſe he had a Legal Preſident already. Then the ſame Queſtion was put to the Society, who in the Afternoon returned this Anſwer, That whereas his Majeſty had been pleaſed by his Royal Authority to cauſe the Right Reverend the Lord Biſhop of Oxford to be inſtalled Preſident, They whoſe Names where thereunto ſubſcribed, did ſubmit to it as far as was lawful and agreeable to the Statutes of the College.

It being again demanded of Dr. Fairfax, if he would obey the Court and the Biſhop of Oxford, and he refuſing both, the Lords Commiſſioners ordered his Name to be ſtruck out of the Buttery-Book, and declared his Place to be void; which the Doctor proteſted againſt as illegal and unjuſt.

Then the Commiſſioners adjourned till Wedneſday Morning, requiring the Society to bring in their Anſwers to the following Queſtions: 1*ſt*, What Gifts and Proviſions have you for Entertainment of Strangers? 2*dly*, What is the Value of them? 3*dly*, How applied? 4*thly*, Where is the Place of Entertainment?

Wedneſday Octob. 26. 1687.

It was made appear to the Commiſſioners, that the Society was obliged to give in Charity 2 l. 3 s. 4 d. and that they gave, beſides Communib Annis almoſt 100 l. Upon which their Lordſhips commended their Liberality, and ſaid that Complaint was groundleſs.

Friday, October 28.

The Fellows were called in, and the Biſhop of Cheſter told them, His Majeſty expected ſome further Submiſſion; and that they ſhould own the Proceedings and Legality of the Court, and implore his Majeſty's Pardon: Whereupon they withdrew, and gave in the following Anſwer.

May it pleaſe your Lordſhips,

" WE have endeavoured in all our " Actions to expreſs our Duty in all " Humility to his Majeſty, and being con- " ſcious to our ſelves, that in the whole Con- " duct of the Buſineſs before your Lord- " ſhips, we have done nothing but what our " Oaths and Statutes indiſpenſably oblige us " to; we cannot make any Declaration, " whereby we acknowledge we have done any " Thing amiſs, having acted according to the " Principles of Loyalty and Obedience, ſo far " as we could, without doing Violence to our " Conſciences, or Prejudice to our Rights, " (One of which we conceive the electing " a Preſident to be) from which we are " ſworn upon no Account whatſoever to de- " part. We therefore humbly beg your " Lordſhips to repreſent this favourably, " with our utmoſt Duty to his Majeſty, whom " God grant long and happily to reign."

Upon

1687. 3 Jac. II.

Upon their Lordſhips peruſing the Anſwer, they expreſſed their Diſlike; and ſaid, It did not come up to what they had delivered on Tueſday.

To which Dr. Bailey ſaid, By the Word Submit, in their Anſwer on Tueſday, they did not intend any future Obedience to the Biſhop of Oxford; but meant it in Reverence to the King's Authority, inaſmuch as they did not oppoſe the Biſhop of Oxford's Inſtallment. Upon this a freſh Queſtion was put to the Fellows, Whether they would obey the Biſhop of Oxford, as their Preſident, licitis & honeſtis? To which all, except one or two, anſwered, They could not obey the Biſhop of Oxford as their Preſident: And Mr. Fulham in particular being asked the Queſtion, ſaid, That Dr. Hough, being duly elected and admitted Preſident, had obtained ſuch a Right, that he could obey no other Perſon as Preſident.

Whereupon Mr. George Fulham was ſuſpended from the Profits of his Fellowſhip, during the King's Pleaſure: And the Court adjourned till Wedneſday, November the 16th, when Mr. Joyner and Mr. Allibone were entered Fellows in the Room of Dr. Fairfax and Mr. Ludford, deceaſed; all Oaths being diſpenſed with, beſides that of a Fellow.

Wedneſday, November 16*th*, at Nine o'Clock in the Morning.

The Lords Commiſſioners being ſate, ſent for the Buttery-Book; then called for Mr. Joyner and Mr. Allibone, and entered them actual Fellows: That done, the Fellows being called, and Reaſons given in for thoſe that were abſent, the Biſhop of Cheſter made a Speech to this Effect.

GENTLEMEN,

The Biſhop of Cheſter's Speech to the Fellows.

YOUR many Contempts, and wilful Diſobedience, have occaſioned this Viſitation, which will end at laſt in your Ruin. This Society of yours has been long exerciſed in the Methods of Quarrelling; has always been troubled with factious Spirits and teſty Mutineers, ever ſince the Reſtoration of the late King: You have encouraged Quarrels among yourſelves; Quarrels between yourſelves and Preſident; Quarrels, at length, between yourſelves and Viſitor: For I have often heard your late Viſitor complain, that this Society was ever ſtocked with an unquiet and turbulent Generation. By theſe Steps, from quarrelling with the Preſident and Viſitor, you have at laſt advanced to the higheſt Pitch of Inſolence, to quarrel with your Prince, and affront his Sacred Majeſty. I endeavoured before, at the Opening our Commiſſion, to make you ſenſible of the Scandal that your Diſobedience will bring upon your Religion; how much you ſtain and diſhonour your liberal and ingenuous Education in this Society.

You cannot but know his Majeſty is your Supream Ordinary; you cannot but have read in Bracton, who was 20 Years Lord Chief Juſtice under King Henry III. Nemo preſumat de factis ejus diſquirere, nedum contra factum ejus venire. All Diſobedience implys Pride; for no Man can diſobey his Governor, but he who thinks himſelf wiſer. The Reputation and Honour of a Prince at home, and his Reſpect abroad, are chief Standards of a Government; but theſe Pillars, as much as in you lies, you have endeavoured to ſhake; and unleſs his Majeſty's Honour and Right be vindicated by us, he can neither be feared at home, nor obſerved abroad. Your Puniſhment muſt be as publick as your Crime. It cannot be conceived but his Majeſty, in Juſtice, in Honour, in Clemency, and in his Royal Tenderneſs, could have proceeded otherwiſe than he has done. On the 1ſt of April it was publiſhed, that Dr. Clerk was dead; on the 11th, a Mandamus was directed to you, for chuſing Mr. Farmer; on the 9th, you preſented a Petition to the Lord Preſident; wherein you laid yourſelves proſtrate at his Majeſty's Feet, repreſenting to him the Incapacity of Mr. Farmer, deſiring the Benefits of his Gracious Declaration for preſerving your Rights and Properties, and beſeeching him to nominate another Perſon, qualified according to your Statutes, in the Election of whom you would ſhew your ready Obedience. So ſaid, and ſo done, Gentlemen, had been very well.

1687. 3 Jac. II.

But immediately after the Delivery of the Petition, you, not waiting his Majeſty's Anſwer, proceeded on April the 15th, to an Election of Dr. Hough: So that by this Act, which was plainly contrary to his Majeſty's Authority, whoſe Mandate did certainly imply an Inhibition, you directly confronted your former Promiſes of ready Obedience, and were reſolved to give the King nothing but good Words. When you had done this, as Men of ill Deſigns are always in Haſte for a Confirmation of it, you immediately went and ſurprized your Viſitor, and by that Means perſuaded him to confirm Dr. Hough, that very Day he received an Order from the Lord Preſident to the contrary.

Upon this News the King was much amazed, and required an Account of your Proceedings; therefore the Lords Commiſſioners iſſued out a Citation, and after hearing the Plea, upon mature Conſultation with the Learned of both Laws, judged the pretended Election of Dr. Hough, to be void and null, and him to be removed, by an Inſtrument dated the ———, which was affixed on the Gate. After this a Mandate was ſent on the —— to you, to elect the Biſhop of Oxford; upon which Terms his Majeſty was graciouſly pleaſed to diſpenſe with your Diſobedience thitherto; but this being diſobeyed, his Majeſty in Perſon, the 14th of September, ſent for you to Chriſt-Church, and required you immediately to elect the Biſhop of Oxford Preſident. You went ſtraight to the Chapel, a Place one would think ſhould have inſpired more Devotion and Awe of his Sacred Majeſty in you, and there contemptuouſly ſubſcribed and ſigned a Paper, directly thwarting his Majeſty's Command. The Ground of your Diſobedience you pretend, that you could not elect him; whereas you could not but know by a written Mandate that lay by you, that Admiſſion would have ſatisfied his Majeſty's Con-

1687. 3 Jac. II. Conſcience; the ſtale Topick of Rebellion was here brought to vindicate your petulant and contumacious Behaviour. You pretended that you were obliged by Oaths, and I am ſorry that at the ſame Time you forgot that of Allegiance: And, indeed, there is not a greater Sign of Hypocriſy, than partial Obedience. Had you any Reſpect to the Father of your Country, and your Mother the Church, you would have ſacrificed your pretended Scruples, as a Peace-Offering to the King. The beſt of us, I am ſure, have Reaſon to beg God and the King's Pardon; but you, as if his Majeſty reigned by Courteſy, would have a King under you, but none over you. You urged the Obſervance of your Statutes, of which, as it hath appeared, you have not been ſo conſtant obſervers. When your own Humour prompts you to a Diſpenſation, then you can readily embrace it; witneſs but that of being ſerved per Maſculos, by which great Scandals have come to this Society, by reaſon of Baſtards.

But when the King interpoſed, in whoſe Power alone it is to diſpenſe with them, then you preſently act according to ſuch Methods as theſe. None of theſe Pretences will eaſe you with wiſe and ſober Men.

This was the only Oppoſition his Majeſty in his Progreſs received: Wherever his Sacred Majeſty came, he worked a miraculous Converſion, except in Oxford; and ſo far ſatisfied every one with the Equity of his Proceedings, that none went away diſcontented from his Preſence, unleſs it was for this Reaſon, that they could not enjoy it any longer.

October the 20th, we came down, and upon opening our Commiſſion, I took care to repreſent to you the Heinouſneſs of your Offence, and to perſuade you to a ſerious Repentance; but all in vain.

For on Saturday Morning, we required you to admit and inſtall the Biſhop of Oxford; which all, except Three, refuſed. In the Afternoon Dr. Hough, having been deprived, and by us commanded to depart the College, came unto us without any Leave, but not without great Attendance; Circumſtances, I think, much unbefitting a Man pronounced Expelled, and there entered a Proteſtation againſt all that we had done, or hereafter ſhould do, as illegal, unjuſt, and null; which he delivered not in Writing, but by Word of Mouth, a Thing repugnant to the Nature of all Appeals, and, which was worſe, without the uſual Salvo to his Majeſty's Supream Power. When he had ſpoken it, there followed ſuch a tumultuous, ſeditious, and inſolent Hum, which if you yourſelves had not applauded, or at leaſt conſented to, it was impoſſible but that you would have diſcovered ſome of thoſe Mutineers. However, ſince his Carriage and Language gave Occaſion to it, it was thought fit that he only ſhould be obnoxious; and accordingly he was bound over.

On Tueſday we ourſelves cauſed the Biſhop of Oxford to be inſtalled by his Proxy; after which we propoſed to you, Whether, being nowinſtalled, you would ſubmit to him licitis & honeſtis? To which you gave an Anſwer under your Hands in the Affirmative. 1687. 3 Jac. II. You then alſo deſired us to repreſent your Caſe favourably to his Majeſty, giving all Aſſurance of your Loyalty and Obedience: But this Aſſurance of Submiſſion laſted not long; for on Thurſday, being required of us to ſubſcribe ſuch a Submiſſion to his Majeſty as we thought agreeable to your Duty, you required Time to conſult of it; and after Deliberation ſigned ſuch a Paper, which ſeemed rather to be a Proteſtation againſt your former Submiſſion, than an Acknowledgment of your Crime: Upon this we might juſtly, then, have proceeded to an Expulſion; but we thought fit, in Compaſſion to you, to take a Journey to London, and acquaint his Majeſty with your Diſobedience and ungrateful Behaviour. His Majeſty was extreamly amazed that his Clemency ſhould be deſpiſed; but yet, to your Comforts be it ſpoken, his Patience and Goodneſs extends as far as your Provocations can: But if you ſtill perſiſt in your Obſtinacy, thoſe that are too tall to ſtand, and too ſtubborn to bend, deſerve to be broken. And now I think I have ſaid enough to let you know, that the Fig-Leaves you have ſo artificially ſtitched together, are not ſufficient to cover your Nakedneſs. I wiſh to God you had the ſame Tenderneſs for your Concerns, as his Majeſty's Commiſſioners have for you; but if you ſtill perſiſt to oppoſe the Royal Power of the King, we, who are come to vindicate the Right and Honour of his Majeſty, reſolve to diſcharge our Conſciences and Duties to God and the King, without any Reſpect of Popularity; that is but the Paradiſe of Fools and Scorn of wiſe Men; and therefore, as for us, we have no more Regard to Peoples Diſlike, than what they dream. By Reaſon, therefore, of your late hypocritical Submiſſion, the Commiſſioners have thought fit, upon mature Conſideration, to draw up an Inſtrument which ſhall be read to you, to which if you ſhall immediately ſubſcribe, before you leave the Room, we ſhall leave you to his Majeſty's Pardon; and this we expect from you all, except Dr. Thomas Smith and Mr. Charnock, with whoſe Behaviour the King is ſo well ſatisfied, that he expect no more from them.

After which, a Form of Submiſſion was tendered to the Fellows, which all of them refuſed to ſubſcribe, except Dr. Thomas Smith and Mr. Charnock, and thereupon Sentence of Expulſion was pronounced againſt them by the Court.

In anſwer to which, one of the expelled Fellows, in the Name of the reſt, ſpoke to this Effect.

My LORDS,

" We profeſs all Duty to the King, and The Proteſt of the Fellows.
" Reſpect to your Lordſhips; but muſt beg " Leave to declare, That we think ourſelves
" injured in your Lordſhips Proceedings, and
" therefore proteſt againſt them, and ſhall
" take all juſt and legal Ways to be relieved.

Soon after an Inſtrument was fixed on the College Gates, of the following Tenor.

By

1687. 3 Jac. II.

By his Majeſty's Commiſſioners of Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes, &c. particularly authorized and impowered to viſit St. Mary Magdalen College, in the Univerſity of Oxon.

The Sentence of Expulſion.

Whereas, in our Viſitation of the ſaid College, it appeareth unto us, that Dr. Charles Aldworth, Dr. Alexander Pudſey, Dr. John Smith, Dr. Thomas Bailey, Dr. Thomas Stafford, Mr. Robert Almond, Mr. Manwaring Hammond, Mr. John Rogers, Mr. Richard Strickland, Mr. Henry Dobſon, Mr. James Bailey, Mr. John Davies, Mr. Francis Bagſhaw, Mr. James Fayrer, Mr. Joſeph Harwar, Mr. Thomas Bateman, Mr. George Hunt, Mr. William Cradock, Mr. John Gillman, Mr. George Fulham, Mr. Charles Pennyſton, Mr. Robert Hyde, Mr. John Terbury, Mr. Robert Holden, and Mr. Stephen Wilks, Fellows of the ſame College, have been ſeverally guilty of Diſobedience to his Majeſty's Commands, and obſtinately contemned his Royal Authority, and do ſtill perſiſt in the ſame: We have thought fit, upon mature Conſideration thereof, to declare, pronounce, and decree, that the ſaid Charles Aldworth, &c. and every of them, be deprived and expelled from their reſpective Fellowſhips. Dated the 16th of November, 1687.

WHITEHALL, December 10.

His Majeſty's Commiſſioners for Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, and for Viſiting all Cathedral and Collegiate Churches and Chappels, &c. met this Day, and taking into their Conſideration all that had paſſed in the Buſineſs of St. Mary Magdalen-College in Oxford, and the contemptuous and diſobedient Behaviour of Dr. John Hough, and ſeveral of the Fellows of that College, throughout the whole Proceeding, their Lordſhips declared, decreed, and pronounced, That Dr. Hough, Dr. Charles Aldworth, Dr. Henry Fairfax, Dr. Alexander Pudſey, Dr. John Smith, Dr. Thomas Bailey, Dr. Thomas Stafford, Mr. Robert Almond, Mr. Manwaring Hammond, Mr. John Rogers, Mr. Richard Strickland, Mr. Henry Dobſon, Mr. James Bailey, Mr. John Davies, Mr. Francis Bagſhaw, Mr. James Fayrer, Mr. Joſeph Harwar, Mr. Thomas Bateman, Mr. George Hunt, Mr. William Cradock, Mr. John Gillman, Mr. George Fulham, Mr. Charles Pennyſton, Mr. Robert Hyde, Mr. Edward Terbury, Mr. Henry Holden, and Mr. Stephen Wilks, ſhould be uncapable of receiving, or being admitted to, any Eccleſiaſtical Dignity, Benefice, or Promotion: And ſuch of them, who are not yet in Holy Orders, were adjudged incapable of receiving or being admitted into the ſame: And all Archbiſhops, Biſhops, and other Eccleſiaſtical Officers and Miniſters, were required to take Notice of the ſaid Sentence, and yield Obedience thereto.

1887. 3 Jac. II.

On the 17th of January, 1687, being the Day that the Thirty Demies of Magdalen-College, were, by Summons from the Biſhop of Oxford, their new Preſident, commanded to appear before him, and none appearing, Mr. Charnock, the new Vice-Preſident, ſtruck out of the Buttery-Book, the Names of Mr. ———, Mr. Holt, Mr. Adams, ſen. Mr. Veſey, and Mr. Brabourn, Maſters of Arts; Mr. Hyde, Mr. Woodward, Mr. Watkins, Mr. Stacey, Mr. Sherwin, and Mr. Kenton, Bachelers of Arts; and Mr. Croſs, Mr. Buſh, and Mr. Wells, Under Graduates.

Names of the Fellows and Students ſtruck out.

However, in the memorable Year 1688, when the King received Advice that the Prince of Orange was coming over, and that the Affections of his Subjects were generally alienated from him, by theſe and the like Arbitrary Proceedings, the Biſhop of Winchester, the Viſitor of Magdalen-College, was ordered to reſtore the excluded Fellows.

The Remarks on theſe Proceedings, will be found at the End of the Trial of the Seven Biſhops.

A ſhort ſtate of the Caſe.

KING James II. publiſhed a Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, on the 27th of April, 1688. (in which was recited a former Declaration): And an Order of Council was made on the 4th of May following, commanding it to be read in the Time of Divine Service in all Churches and Chapels in the Cities of London and Weſtminſter, and within ten Miles thereof, on the 20th and 27th of May (being Sundays); and in all other Churches and Chapels in England on the 3d and 10th of June, which were likewiſe Sundays: And that the Biſhops ſhould cauſe the ſaid Declaration to be ſent to, and diſtributed in their reſpective Dioceſes, and order the ſame to be read by their Clergy.

The Biſhops and Clergy, about Town, aſſembled hereupon at the Archbiſhop's Palace at Lambeth, to adviſe what was proper to be done on this Occaſion: And after ſome Debate, the Archbiſhop, by the Advice of his Brethren that were preſent, wrote to all the Biſhops of his Province to come to Town, or ſend their Opinions of the Matter: And it being found that eighteen of the Biſhops, and the main Body of the Clergy, concurred in a Reſolution not to read the Declaration, his Grace the Archbiſhop, with Dr. Lloyd, and the other five Biſhops above-mentioned, drew up and ſigned the following Petition.

To the King's Moſt Excellent Majeſty;

The Biſhops Petition.

THE humble Petition of William Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and of divers of the Suffragan Biſhops of that Province (now preſent with him) in the Behalf of themſelves and others of their abſent Brethren, and of the inferior Clergy of their reſpective Dioceſes, humbly ſheweth,

That the great Averſeneſs they find in themſelves to the diſtributing and publiſhing in all their Churches Your Majeſty's late Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, proceedeth neither from any Want of Duty and Obedience to your Majeſty, our Holy Mother the Church of England being both in her Principles, and in her conſtant Practice, unqueſtionably Loyal, and having (to her great Honour) been more than once publickly acknowledged to be ſo by Your Gracious Majeſty; nor yet from any Want of due Tenderneſs to Diſſenters, in relation to whom they are willing to come to ſuch a Temper as ſhall be thought fit when that Matter ſhall be conſidered and ſettled in Parliament and Convocation: But amongſt many other Conſiderations, from this eſpecially, becauſe that Declaration is founded upon ſuch a diſpenſing Power as hath been often declared illegal in Parliament, and particularly in the Years 1662, and 1672, and in the Beginning of your Majeſty's Reign; and is a Matter of ſo great Moment and Conſequence to the whole Nation both in Church and State, that Your Petitioners cannot in Prudence, Honour, or Conſcience, ſo far make themſelves Parties to it, as the Diſtribution of it all over the Nation, and the ſolemn Publication of it once and again, even in God's Houſe, and in the Time of his Divine Service, muſt amount to, in common and reaſonable Conſtruction.

Your Petitioners therefore moſt humbly and earneſtly beſeech Your Majeſty, that you will be graciouſly pleaſed not to inſiſt upon their diſtributing and reading Your Majeſty's ſaid Declaration.

And your Petitioners (as in Duty bound) ſhall ever pray, &c.

Committed to the Tower, by theſe Lords.

They are brought before the Court of King's-Bench.

On the 18th of May, two Days before the Declaration was to be read, the ſix Biſhops (the Archbiſhop being indiſpoſed) attended his Majeſty at Whitehall with their Petition; at which he appeared highly incenſed, and angrily told them, He had heard of it before, but did not believe it: He did not expect this from the Church of England, eſpecially from ſome of them: If he changed his Mind, they ſhould hear from him: If not, he expected his Commands ſhould be obeyed. To which the Biſhops replied, They reſigned themſelves to the Will of God, and then withdrew. The King finding his Declaration neglected, reſolved to proſecute the ſeven Biſhops,

They ſeverally except.

1688. 4 Jac. II. Bishops, whom he looked upon as the Occasion of it: And they were accordingly summoned to appear before the Council on the 8th of June, when these Prelates attending the Board, it was demanded of them, If they owned the Petition? To which they answered, As they stood there as Criminals, they hoped his Majesty would not take Advantage against them: But being pressed to own it by the Lord Chancellor Jeffries, the Archbishop at length confessed that it was written with his own Hand, and that the rest had signed it; and he hoped they had done nothing but what they could justify: Whereupon the Lord Chancellor demanded, If they would enter into Recognizances to appear in the Court of King's Bench, to answer this Misdemeanor? The Bishops answered, As they were Peers, they were not obliged to give Security on being charged with a Misdemeanor in the first Instance, and looked upon themselves to be bound in Duty to maintain the Rights of the Peerage, as well as the Rights of the Church. And Jeffries threatening to send them to the Tower, unless they withdrew their Petition, and obeyed the King's Declaration, they answered, They were ready to go where-ever his Majesty pleased: That they hoped the King of Kings would be their Protector and Judge: They had acted according to Law and their own Consciences; and no Punishment should ever shake their Resolutions. Whereupon a Warrant was drawn up to commit them to the Tower for framing and publishing a seditious Libel against his Majesty and his Government, as the Petition was called. Which Warrant was signed by the Lord Chancellor Jeffries, the Earl of Sunderland, President of the Council; the Lord Arundel, the Marquis of Powis, the Earls of Mulgrave, Huntington, Peterborough, Craven, Murray, Middleton, Melfort and Castlemain; the Lords Dartmouth, Godolphin and Dover, Sir John Ernle, Sir Edward Herbert, and Sir Nicholas Butler.

Summoned before the Council.

Committed to the Tower, by these Lords.

And as a Tumult was expected on the Commitment of the Bishops, they were ordered to be carried to the Tower by Water: However, the People came in Crowds to the Thames-side, applauding the Courage of the Bishops, and wishing them a happy Deliverance: And they were no sooner landed at the Tower, but the Officers and Soldiers of that Garrison fell upon their Knees, and begged the Blessing of those Right Reverend Fathers: Whereupon the King commanded some other Companies of Soldiers to march into the Tower, in whom he had more Confidence.

This short State of the Case seemed necessary to be premised, for the better understanding of the following Trial.

They are brought before the Court of King's-Bench.

On the first Day of Trinity Term, which fell on Friday the 15th of June this Year, the Court of King's-Bench being set, and all the four Judges upon the Bench, viz. The Lord Chief Justice (Sir Robert Wright), Mr. Justice Holloway, Mr. Justice Powell, and Mr. Justice Allybone.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Mr. Attorney General, Sir Thomas Powis, moved the Court for an Habeas Corpus, returnable immediate, to bring up my Lords the Bishops; which being granted, Sir Edward Hales, the Lieutenant of the Tower, brought my Lord Archbishop, and the other six Bishops, into Court about Eleven o'Clock the same Day: And the Return being read, it appeared that their Lordships were committed to the Tower by Virtue of a Warrant under the Hands and Seals of George Lord Jeffries, Baron of Wem, Lord High Chancellor of England; Robert Earl of Sunderland, Lord President of the Council, and the rest of the Privy Council above-mentioned, For contriving, making and publishing a seditious Libel in Writing, against his Majesty and the Government.

The Return being filed, Mr. Attorney moved, That the Information he had preferred against his Grace, and the rest of my Lords the Bishops, might be read.

Whereupon Sir Robert Sawyer, of Counsel for my Lords the Bishops, moved that they might be discharged before any thing was read, because they were not legally committed. Mr. Sollicitor, Sir William Williams, said, in Behalf of the King, That this was an Habeas Corpus brought by his Majesty, and not by the Prisoners; and therefore they must see first what the King had to say to them.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton, and Mr. Finch, two more of the Bishop's Counsel, still insisted that their Lordships ought to be discharged before the Information was read, 1. Because the Return said they were committed by such and such Lords of the Council, but not in Council; and those Lords had no Power (out of Council) to commit.

2. Because a Peer cannot be committed for a Misdemeanor, but ought to be served with the usual Process of a Subpœna.

Mr. Pollexfen, another of the Bishops Counsel, also urged, that my Lords the Bishops ought to be discharged before the Information was read: But it was ruled by the Court, 1. That every Commitment should be presumed to be pursuant to the Power of the Persons committing. And, 2. That the making a Seditious Libel was a Breach of the Peace, for which Security of the Peace might be required of them, notwithstanding their Privilege of Peerage: And thereupon the Information was ordered to be read.

Ruled, that the Bishops ought to give Security for their Appearance.

The Information set forth, That the King, out of his signal Clemency and gracious Intention towards his Subjects, by his Royal Prerogative on the 4th Day of April, in the 3d Year of his Reign, did publish his Royal Declaration, entitled, His Majesty's Gracious Declaration to all his loving Subjects for Liberty of Conscience. [Then the Declaration it self is inserted, the Purport whereof was] That it had always been his Majesty's Opinion, that Conscience ought not to be constrained, or People forced in Matters of meer Religion. That it was contrary to the Interest of Government, by spoiling Trade, depopulating Countries, and discouraging Strangers; gers; and that it never obtained the End: That his Majeſty therefore had thought fit to iſſue forth this Declaration of Indulgence, making no doubt of the Concurrence of the two Houſes of Parliament, when they ſhould meet.

And firſt he declared, That he would protect and maintain the Clergy, and other Members of the Church of England, in the free Exerciſe of their Religion as by Law eſtabliſhed, and in the full Enjoyment of all their Poſſeſſions; but that the Execution of all Manner of Penal Laws for Nonconformity in Religion, ſhould be immediately ſuſpended: Provided that ſuch Nonconformiſts meet with their Doors open, and preach nothing that ſhould tend to the Diſturbance of the Government; and ſignify their Place of Meeting to ſome neighbouring Juſtice of Peace. And that his Majeſty might have the Benefit of the Service of all his Subjects, he further declared, That neither the Teſt, or the Oaths of Supremacy or Allegiance, ſhould be required to be taken or ſubſcribed by any Perſon, on their Admiſſion into Offices, for the future; and did grant a free Pardon to all thoſe who had committed any thing contrary to the ſaid Penal Laws: And he thought fit further to declare, That he would maintain all his Subjects in their Properties and Poſſeſſions, as well of Church and Abby-Lands, as in any other their Lands and Property whatſoever. and the Information further ſets forth, That on the 27th of April, in the 4th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, he publiſhed another Declaration, (which is recited in the Information) the Purport whereof was, That ever ſince his Majeſty had granted the aforeſaid Indulgence, he had made it his principal Care to ſee it obſerved without Diſtinction; which his Majeſty was encouraged to do by the Multitudes of Addreſſes he daily received from his Subjects of all Perſuaſions. That in purſuance of this great Work, he had been forced to make many Changes both of Civil and Military Officers, throughout his Dominions; not thinking any ought to be employed in his Service, who would not contribute towards the Peace and Greatneſs of his Country: And he conjured all his Subjects to lay aſide all private Animoſities and groundleſs Jealouſies, and to chuſe ſuch Members of Parliament, as might do their Part, to finiſh what he had begun, being reſolved to call a Parliament, which ſhould meet the following November at fartheſt.

And the Information further ſets forth, That on the 4th of May, 1688, it was ordered by his Majeſty in Council, That the ſaid laſt mentioned Declaration, bearing Date the 27th of April laſt, (in which the firſt is recited) ſhould be read in the uſual Time of Divine Service, on the 20th and the 27th of the ſaid Month of May, in all Churches and Chapels within the Cities of London and Weſtminſter and ten Miles thereof; and upon the 3d and 10th of June then next, in all other Churches and Chapels throughout the Kingdom; and that the Right Reverend the Biſhops ſhould cauſe the ſaid Declaration to be ſent and diſtributed throughout their ſeveral Dioceſes, to be read accordingly: And that the ſaid Archbiſhops and Biſhops, the 18th Day of May, in the ſaid 4th Year of his Majeſty's Reign, having conſpired and conſulted among themſelves to diminiſh the King's Power and Prerogative, did falſly, unlawfully, maliciouſly, and ſcandalouſly, make, compoſe, and write, a falſe, ſcandalous, malicious, and ſeditious Libel, under Pretence of a Petition, ſtiled, The humble Petition, &c. (which was alſo recited in the Information.)

1688 4 Jac II.

Which ſaid Libel, the ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops, having reſpectively ſubſcribed, did, on the ſaid 18th Day of May, in the ſaid 4th Year of the King, cauſe to be publiſhed in the Preſence of our ſaid Lord the King, in manifeſt Contempt of his Majeſty and of the Laws of this Kingdom, to the evil Example of others, and againſt the King's Peace, &c. Whereupon the ſaid Attorney General, in behalf of the King, prays Advice of the Court and Proceſs of Law, to be made out againſt the ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops, to anſwer the ſaid Lord the King, concerning the Premiſes, &c.

Signed { Thomas Powis, William Williams.

(The Attorney and Sol. Gen.)

The Biſhops move for Time to plead.

After the reading the Information, Mr. Attorney moved that my Lords the Biſhops might plead to it immediately; which was oppoſed by the Biſhops Counſel, and Time deſired to put in their Plea till the next Michaelmas Term.

but told, they muſt plead immediately.

But the King's Counſel inſiſting, That where a Man appeared upon a Recognizance, or was in Cuſtody, or appeared in propria Perſona, as a priviledged Perſon, he ought to plead at the firſt Inſtance: And Sir Samuel Aſtry, and the reſt of the old Officers of the Court affirming, That this was the conſtant Practice, it was ruled, That my Lords the Biſhops ſhould plead immediately, which Mr. Sollicitor obſerved, was no Hardſhip; for it was agreed on all hands, that in caſe of Life and Death, a Man muſt plead preſently; and a fortiori, he held it was ſo in the Caſe of a Miſdemeanor; for if a Perſon was not to be allowed Time when he pleaded for his Life, there was much leſs Reaſon he ſhould have Time to anſwer a Treſpaſs; (though where one appears upon a Summons indeed, according to the Practice of the Court, he has an Imparlance of courſe.)

The Biſhops offer a Plea in Paper.

This Point being ruled againſt the Biſhops, his Grace the Archbiſhop ſtood up, and offering a Paper to the Court, he ſaid,

My Lords,

" I tender here a ſhort Plea in Behalf of " myſelf and my Brethren the other De- " fendants; and I humbly deſire the Court " will admit of this Plea.

And the Chief Juſtice ſaying, It ſhould have been in Parliament; his Grace replyed, We will ſtand by it, my Lord; it is ſubſcribed by our Counſel, and we pray it may be admitted by the Court.

Then

1688. Jac. II.

Then a Tranſlation of the Plea was read, which was as follows:

" And the aforeſaid William Archbiſhop of " Canterbury, William Biſhop of St. Aſaph, " &c. being preſent in Court in their own " Perſons, pray Oyer of the Information a- " foreſaid; and it is read to them: Which " being read and heard by them the ſaid " Archbiſhop and Biſhops, the ſaid Arch- " biſhop and Biſhops ſay, That they are " Peers of this Kingdom of England, and " Lords of Parliament; and each of them is " one of the Peers of this Kingdom of Eng- " land, and a Lord of the Parliament; and " that they being (as before is manifeſt) " Peers of this Kingdom of England, and " Lords of Parliament, ought not to be com- " pelled to anſwer inſtantly for the Miſde- " meanor aforeſaid, mentioned in the ſaid " Information exhibited here againſt them " in this Court; but they ought to be re- " quired to appear by due Proceſs in Law " iſſuing out of this Court here, upon the In- " formation aforeſaid, and upon their Ap- " pearance to have a Copy of the ſaid Informa- " tion exhibited againſt them, and reaſon- " able Time to imparl thereupon, and to ad- " viſe with Counſel learned in the Law con- " cerning their Defence in that Behalf, be- " fore they be compelled to anſwer the ſaid " Information. Whereupon, for that the " ſaid Archbiſhop and Biſhops were impri- " ſoned, and by Writ of our Lord the King " of Habeas Corpus, directed to the Lieute- " nant of the Tower of London, are now " brought here in Cuſtody without any Pro- " ceſs upon the Information aforeſaid iſſued " againſt them, and without having any " Copy of the ſaid Information, or any Time " given them to imparl or be adviſed: They " pray Judgment, and the Privilege of Peers " of this Kingdom, in this Caſe to be allowed " them; and that they the ſaid Archbiſhop " and Biſhops may not be compelled inſtant- " ly to anſwer the Information aforeſaid, &c.

Rob. Sawyer,
Hen. Finch,
Hen. Pollexfen.

Upon reading this Plea, Mr. Attorney ſaid, This was ſuch an unfair Way of Proceeding as would not be endured in an ordinary Caſe: And he hoped ſuch a Plea would not have ſo much Countenance as to be received in Court.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton anſwered, They put in that Plea, and were ready to abide by it: That it was according to the Courſe of the Court, and ought to be received: That it was no ſuch great Diſreſpect to the Court to put the ſame Matter into a Plea, which had been deſired upon a Motion. But the Chief Juſtice replied, The Biſhops Counſel had not dealt ingenuouſly with the Court after four Hours Debate, and the Opinion of the Court delivered, to come and ſum up all the Arguments in ſuch a Plea as this; and ſo put them upon debating the Matter over again: And he thought the Court was not bound to receive this Plea, but might reject it, and oblige the Lords the Biſhops to plead over. And Mr. Juſtice Holloway and Allybone being of the ſame Opinion, (and only Juſtice Powel for receiving the Plea) it was agreed: After which the Biſhops ſeverally pleaded, Not Guilty. And the Trial was ordered to be at the Bar of the Court of King's-Bench that Day Fortnight. It was alſo ordered, that forty-eight Gentlemen ſhould be returned on the Pannel, and a Jury ſtruck in the Preſence of the Attornies and Sollicitors on both Sides: And the Biſhops in the mean time were admitted to Bail, his Grace of Canterbury entering into a Recognizance of 200 l. and the reſt of the Biſhops in 100 l. a-piece, to appear in Court that Day Fortnight; and ſo from Day to Day, till they ſhould be diſcharged. And the King's Counſel did not inſiſt on their giving any Security but their own Recognizances.

1688. 4 Jac II.

The Plea being rejected, the Biſhops plead, Not Guilty.

They are bailed.

The Court ſitting again on Friday the 29th of June, and the Biſhops appearing, the Jury were called, conſiſting of the following Gentlemen, viz.

Sir Roger Langley, Bart. William Avery, Eſq;
Sir William Hill, Kt. Thomas Auſten, Eſq;
Roger Jennings, Eſq; Nicholas Grice, Eſq;
Thomas Harriot, Eſq; Michael Arnold, Eſq;
Jeof. Nightingale, Eſq; Thomas Done, Eſq; &
William Withers, Eſq; Rich. Shoreditch, Eſq;

The Jury being ſworn, the Information was read (which ſee above.) Then Mr. Wright opened the Information, and Mr. Attorney General ſpoke as follows on the Occaſion.

Mr. Attorney opens the Cauſe.

Mr. Att. Gen. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Information read by the Clerk, and it has been likewiſe opened to you at the Bar; but before we go to our Evidence, perhaps it may not be amiſs for us, that are of Counſel for the King, now in the beginning of this Cauſe, to ſettle the Queſtion right before you, as well to tell you what my Lords the Biſhops are not proſecuted for, as what they are. Firſt, I am to tell you, and I believe you cannot your ſelves but obſerve, that my Lords are not proſecuted as Biſhops, nor much leſs are they proſecuted for any Point or Matter of Religion; but they are proſecuted as Subjects of this Kingdom, and only for a Temporal Crime, as thoſe that have injured and affronted the King to his very Face; for it is ſaid to be done in his own Preſence. In the next place, they are not proſecuted for any Non-feaſance, or not doing, or omitting to do any thing, but as they are Actors for cenſuring of his Majeſty and his Government, and for giving their Opinion in Matters wholly relating to Law and Government. And I cannot omit here to take Notice, that there is not any one thing which the Law is more jealous of, or does more carefully provide for the Prevention and Puniſhment of, than all Accuſations and Arraignments of the Government: No Man is allowed to accuſe even the moſt inferior Magiſtrate of any Misbehaviour in his Office, unleſs it be in a legal Courſe, though the Fact is true; no Man may ſay of a Juſtice of Peace to his Face, that he is unjuſt in his Office; no Man may come to a Judge, either by Word or Petition, and tell him, You have given an unjuſt, or an ill Judgment, and I will not obey it; it is againſt the Rules and Law of the Kingdom, or the like; no Man may ſay of the great Men of the Nation, much leſs of the great Officers of the Kingdom, that they do act unreaſonably, or unjuſtly, or the like; leaſt of all may any Man ſay any ſuch Thing of the King; for theſe Matters tend to poſſeſs the People, that the Government is ill adminiſtered, and the Conſequence of that is, to ſet them upon deſiring a Reformation, and what that tends to, and will end in, we have all had a ſad and too dear bought Experience; the laſt Age will abundantly ſatisfy us whither ſuch a Thing does tend: Men are to take their proper Remedies for Redreſs of any Grievances they lie under; and the Law has provided ſufficiently for that. Theſe Things are ſo very well known to all Men of the Law, and indeed to all the People of England of any Underſtanding, that I need not, nor will not, ſtand any longer upon it, but come to the Matter that is now before you Gentlemen to be tried. The Fact that we have laid, we muſt prove, rather to keep to the Formality of a Trial, than to pretend to inform you, or tell you what you do not know. It is publickly notorious to the whole World; but becauſe we muſt go on in the regular Methods of Law, we ſhall prove the Facts in the Order they are laid in the Information. Firſt, we take Notice, that his Majeſty, of his great Clemency and Goodneſs to his People, and out of his Deſire that all his Subjects might live eaſily under him (of which, I think, never Prince gave greater or more plain Evidence of his Intentions that way) the 4th of April, 1687. He did iſſue forth his Royal Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience; this Matter, without all Queſtion, was welcome to all his People that ſtood in Need of it; and thoſe that did not, could not but ſay the Thing, in the Nature of it, was very Juſt and Gracious; but preſently it muſt be ſurmiſed, That the King was not in earneſt, and would not, nor could not, make good his Promiſe. But, to take away all Surmiſes, his Majeſty was pleaſed, by his Declaration of the 27th of April laſt, not only to repeat his former Declaration, but likewiſe to renew his former Promiſes to his People, and to aſſure them, that he ſtill was, and yet is, of the ſame Opinion, that he had at firſt declared himſelf to be of.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Nay, we further ſhew you, that to the end that this Thing might be known to all his People, even to the meaneſt Men, who, it may be, were not willing, or able, to buy the Declaration; and that the King himſelf might be under higher Obligations, if it were poſſible, than his own Word, he was deſirous it ſhould be repeated in the Churches, and read in that Sacred Place, that all his People might hear what he had promiſed, and given his own Sacred Word for; and he himſelf might be under that ſolemn Tie and Obligation to keep his Word, by remembering, that his Promiſes had, by his own Command, been publiſhed in the Time of Divine Service, in the Houſe of God; and thereupon was the Order of Council made, that has been likewiſe read to you, which does direct, That it ſhould be read in all the Churches and Chapels in the Kingdom; and you have heard, and we ſhall prove, what a Return his Majeſty has had for this Grace and Kindneſs of his: You will find, when we come to read that which they call a Petition, all their Thanks his Majeſty had for his Favour and Goodneſs to his People, it is only hard Words and a heavy Accuſation, ſuch as a private Perſon would be able to bear; I will not aggravate the Matter, but only ſay thus much, That his Majeſty, who was always a Prince of as great Clemency as ever this Kingdom had, and who was repreſented, for all that, as a Prince of the greateſt Cruelty before his Acceſſion to the Crown by his Enemies, is now accuſed by his Friends for this Effect of his Mercy. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, his Majeſty reſented this ill Uſage ſo far, that he has ordered and thought fit to have a publick Vindication of his Honour in this Matter, by this Trial; and we ſhall go on to our Proofs, and we do not doubt, but you will do his Majeſty (as you do all other Perſons) Right.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Then Proof was made of printing the two Declarations for Liberty of Conſcience, by the King's Order; and the Order of Council for reading the laſt Declaration, was proved. The Biſhops Counſel object a Similitude of Hands is no Evidence.

The Petition ſigned by the Biſhops alſo was produced in Court; and Sir John Nicholas depoſed, That he had it from the King's own Hand.

Mr. Attorney. I ſuppoſe my Lords the Biſhops will not put us to prove it; they will own their Hands.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Yes, Mr. Attorney, their Counſel will put you to prove it. I perceive your beſt way is to ask nothing of them.

Then Sir Thomas Exton was ſworn, and depoſed, that he believed the Body of the Petition to be the Archbiſhop's Hand-writing, as alſo the Archbiſhop's Name which was ſubſcribed to it.

Mr. Brooks depoſed, That he knew the Archbiſhop's Hand; and he believed the Name ſubſcribed to the Petition, was his Hand, as alſo the Petition itſelf: That he had alſo ſeen the Biſhop of St. Aſaph's Hand-writing, and believed the Name ſubſcribed to the Petition, was his Hand: And he had ſeen a Letter from the Biſhop of Ely to the Biſhop of Oxford, and believed the Name ſubſcribed, to be the Biſhop of Ely's Hand.

Mr. Chetwood depoſed, That he had formerly ſeen a Hand, ſaid to be the Biſhop of Ely's, and he believed the Name ſigned to the Petition was his Hand.

Mr. Middleton depoſed, He had ſeen both the Archbiſhop's, and the Biſhop of Ely's Hand-Writing; and believed the Names ſubſcribed to be theirs.

Mr.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Mr. Clavel depoſed, That he knew the Biſhop of Peterborough's Hand, and believed this to the Petition to be his.

Mr. James depoſed, That he had ſeen the Biſhop of Briſtol write ſeveral Times, and he believed the Hand to the Petition to be his.

Mr. Powel depoſed, That the Name ſubſcribed to the Petition, was like the Biſhop of Chicheſter's Hand, he believed.

Mr. Sollicitor ſaid, This was not to be endured; there would be an End of all Teſtimony, if Witneſſes did not anſwer fairly the Queſtions they were asked.

Mr. Attorney ſaid, They had given Evidence ſufficient to have the Petition read, and deſired it might be read.

The Biſhops Counſel' object a Similitude of Hands is no Evidence.

Mr. Serjeant Levinz, We pray it may not be read till they prove it better, for they have only given Proof by Compariſon of Hands, which in Criminal Matters ought not to be received; and even that Compariſon is proved in ſuch an uncertain Manner, that it can be no Evidence to charge us.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton. My Lord, in every petty Cauſe, where it depends upon Compariſon of Hands, they uſe to bring ſome of the Parties Hand-writing, and compare it in Court with what is endeavoured to be proved, that the Jury may compare them together and judge of the Likeneſs.

Lord Chief Juſtice. I take it, that the Witneſs himſelf is judge of the Compariſon; for if he does know the Parties Hand, and a Paper be offered him to prove it, he is to compare it in his own Mind.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton. It was never admitted to be ſo, that I know of.

Mr. Sollicitor. You may remember ſeveral Caſes, and particularly Sidney's.

Mr. Pollexfen. As to Sidney's Caſe, that was in Treaſon; now in Treaſon there is always other Evidence brought, and this comes in but to ſtrengthen the other; but in this Caſe, it is the ſingle Evidence; there is nothing more for ought appears, but whether another believes this to be their Hands: Now, ſhall any one be condemned for what another believes, without other Proof?

Mr. Sollicitor. They ſay, proving of Similitude of Hands is no Evidence. When Witneſſes are dead, is it not the common Practice to produce Witneſſes to prove ſuch Men are dead, whoſe Names are ſet as Witneſſes to Deeds; and then ſwear they believe it to be the Hand-writing of thoſe Witneſſes?

Mr. Finch. The Evidence they have given of the Biſhops writing this Paper, they have laid to be done in Middleſex; and this being local, they muſt prove it to be written in Middleſex, where they have laid it, or they fail in their Proof. If they have given Proof of the Hand-writing, there is no Proof where that Hand was written; and therefore they are not yet got ſo far as to have it read againſt my Lords.

The Chief Juſtice and Mr. Juſtice Allybone were of Opinion, that there was Proof enough to have the Petition read; but Mr. Juſtice Holloway and Mr. Juſtice Powel being of another Opinion, the Chief Juſtice directed the King's Counſel to go on to ſome other Proof. Whereupon Mr. Sollicitor ſaid, They would prove the Confeſſions of the Biſhops; which he hoped would be believed by all Mankind.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

The Evidence of the Clerks of the Council, &c.

Then Mr. Blathwayte was ſworn, and depoſed, That on the 18th of this Inſtant June, my Lord Archbiſhop acknowledged his Hand to the Petition, (before the Council); and the reſt of the Biſhops, whoſe Hands were ſubſcribed to it, did then alſo reſpectively acknowledge, That it was ſubſcribed by them.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton. What did my Lords the Biſhops ſay at the Time of their appearing in Council concerning the King's Pleaſure, Whether they ſhould anſwer or not?

Mr. Blathwayte. The firſt Time my Lords the Biſhops came into the Council, they anſwered, They humbly hoped, as they ſtood there as Criminals, his Majeſty would not take Advantage againſt them; however they would obey his Majeſty's Commands, and thereupon they were commanded to withdraw. The ſecond Time, as near as I can remember, they ſaid the ſame.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Were they asked, whether they publiſhed it?

Mr. Blathwayte. I think they were, and they denied it.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton. When they came in the ſecond Time, did they deſire to know, If it were his Majeſty's Command they ſhould own it?

Lord Chief Juſtice. That I muſt not permit you to ask, Brother.

Mr. Attorney. I oppoſe the asking this Queſtion, unleſs they tell us what Uſe they would make of it.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton. We ſhall make this Uſe of our Queſtion; if they anſwered under a Promiſe from his Majeſty, that it ſhould not be given in Evidence againſt them, I hope they ſhall not take Advantage of it.

Mr. Sollicitor. That is a very unmannerly Queſtion; this is to put ſomething upon the King, which I dare hardly name; and if they will be ſo preſſing, I deſire for the King that the Queſtion may be ſo entered.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton. Record what you will; I am not afraid of you, Mr. Sollicitor.

Mr. Attorney. Mr. Blathwayte, anſwer, Whether there was any Promiſe made to my Lords the Biſhops from the King?

Mr. Blathwayte. There was none made; it was the third Time they came in that they owned it. My Lord Chancellor required them to anſwer, Whether they owned that Paper or no? and they, having prayed the King that no Advantage ſhould be taken againſt them for what they ſhould ſay, owned it: And his Grace the Archbiſhop ſaid, as to publiſhing it, That it was written with his own Hand, and that he had not made uſe of his Clerk.

Mr. Attorney. Did the King make any Promiſe or Declaration, that no Advantage ſhould be taken, or Uſe made of it?

Mr. Blathwayte. The King did not.

Then

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Then Mr. Sollicitor desired the Petition might be read; but the Bishop's Counsel answered, That the Writing and Contriving must be proved to be in Middlesex, for all was local, and the Party was to be acquitted, if it was not proved to be done in the County where it was laid.

The Chief Justice said, It was too soon to make these Objections, and that the Paper ought to be read.

The Bishops Counsel answered, If the Objection was saved to them, they should not oppose the Reading of it.

Then the Petition was read, and the Jury viewed it themselves.

Mr. Attorney. We shall leave our Evidence here, and hear what they can object to it.

Lord Chief Justice. What say you for the Defendants?

The Bishops Counsel proceed in their Defence.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, in short, we say, that hitherto they have totally failed, for they have not proved any Fact done by us in Middlesex; nor have they proved any Publication at all.

Lord Chief Justice. You hear that Mr. Blathwayte says, They owned it in Middlesex.

Mr. Finch. That is not a Publication sure, or any Evidence where it was done.

Mr. Serjeant Levinz. My Lord, in the first Place, we insist upon it, there is no Proof of the Fact being done in the County of Middlesex; and, in the next Place, this Information and Petition do not agree; for they set forth in their Information, That my Lords the Bishops, under Pretence of a Petition, did make a Libel, and have set forth no Petition at all; the Petitionary Part is omitted.

Sir Robert Sawyer. The Truth of it is, this Information has made a very deformed Thing of it; has left it neither Head or Tail: They stile it a Petition, but it is without any Direction to any body, and without any Prayer, for any Thing appears: There may be more in the Paper, than in the Information: If all were in, one Part might explain another.

Mr. Sollicitor. I wonder to hear that Objection from Sir Robert Sawyer, who has exhibited so many Informations for Libels in Pieces taken out of Books.

Mr. Attorney. Is there any Thing more frequent than only to recite the material Part, without setting forth the whole Book. They tell us we have set forth a Petition; we say no such Thing: We say in the Information, you composed a certain Libel, pretensu petitionis; in which are contained such and such Things.

Mr. Sollicitor. Take the Information as we have laid it, and I believe there are twenty Precedents of late Days; so was the Information against Baxter, so was the Information against Johnson, against Dr. Eades, and against Sir Samuel Barnardiston: They are all in this Form, sic continetur; but they say, we do not set out the Petition. We say, it is a Libel; and it is not the Name we rely on, but there is such a Libel, so we in our Information call it: If it be not a Libel, then are they very innocent; but if it be as we say, then it is not the Speaking ill Things in the Body of a Petition, and then giving it a good Title, and concluding it with a good Prayer, will sweeten this Crime, nor alter or alleviate it at all: We say a Libel is made pretensu petitionis, call it what you will; and that these Things are a Libel upon the King and Government. 1688 4 Jac. II.

As to the other Objection that is made, That here is no Evidence of a Publication; my Lord, I take it to be a Publication in itself: Is it possible for a Man to write a Libel, to set his Name, and part with it, and it shall come to the King's Hands, and this not to be deemed a Publication?

Attorney General. They bid us make out where this Libel was written or composed: Put the Case, a Man is found in Middlesex with a Treasonable Paper in his Pocket, and the Man is indicted here in Middlesex, for framing and composing such a Treasonable Libel, shall he be admitted to say, Pray prove where I made and composed it? For though you found it in my Pocket, yet I might do it in the County of York. This had been a very good Defence for Mr. Sidney, who was indicted, convicted, and attainted, for a Treasonable Paper, found in his Study, if this Doctrine were true; but then the King would be in a very woful Case. Here is a Paper that is found in the County of Middlesex, and this is there owned by you to be written and subscribed by you. Pray do you prove that it was written elsewhere?

Serjeant Pemberton. We will do it, for once: We will prove that my Lord Archbishop was not out of Lambeth-House in two Months before the Petition was delivered.

Then Mr. Nicholls was sworn.

He deposed, That his Grace of Canterbury did not stir out of Lambeth from Michaelmas last, till the Time he was before the Council.

Mr. Finch. This is ex abundanti; for in Point of Law, it is incumbent upon them to prove where it was done: And as to the 2d Part, the Publication, there is not a Tittle of Proof offered, but only their owning their Hands upon their Examination at the Council; and no Man did ever yet think, that the answering a Question and owning a Paper at the Council-Table, upon a Question put by the King himself, was a Publication of a Libel.

Sollicitor General. If the Paper be Libellous, wherever it is found, that is a Publication. These Gentlemen fancy, that unless there was a publick Delivery of this Paper abroad, nothing can be a Publication: But I rely upon it, their setting their Names to it made it their Paper, and wherever it went, that was a Publication of it: There is the Case of Williams, made use of by Mr. Finch in Sidney's Trial, who wrote a Treasonable Letter, sealed it up, and sent it to the King: And there is Sir Baptist Hicks's Case, and my Lady Hatton's; there was only a Letter sealed up and delivered to the Party.

Mr.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Mr. Recorder. Suppoſe a Man write a ſcandalous Letter from London, to a Judge at Exeter, and ſends it by the Poſt, and the Letter is received from the Poſt at Exeter, and there opened; would any Man make a Queſtion, Whether the Gentleman that ſent the Letter, may not be indicted and proſecuted for a Libel at Exeter, where the Libel was received?

Juſtice Powel. There is no Queſtion of that; but that comes not Home to our Caſe.

Sol. Gen. The Publication, we ſay, was here in Middleſex; and of that there is a clear Evidence, becauſe it was found there, and came from the King's Hand, to whom it was directed; and it could not come to the King's Hand out of their Cuſtody, without their Conſent.

Serjeant Levinz. My Lord, the Caſes that have been cited are all Law, but not one Tittle to this Purpoſe. In Sir Baptiſt Hicks's Caſe, and Williams's Caſe, it was proved, they all ſent them to the Places whither they were directed; but is there a Tittle of Proof that the Biſhops ſent it here? And for Sidney's Caſe, there was Treaſon in the very Libel and Book that he made; and he was not indicted for Publiſhing, but for Treaſon in the Place where it was found, becauſe it was found in his Poſſeſſion: But was this ever in my Lord Archbiſhop's Poſſeſſion in Middleſex, or the reſt of the Biſhops, and were they publiſhing of it? If it had, then it had been their Act clearly: But that is the Thing wherein they are defective, that they do not prove that my Lords the Biſhops ſent or brought it here; but upon the Queſtion asked them by the King, they acknowledged it to be their Hands: So that there is no Proof of a Fact done here, but an Acknowledgment of a Fact done, nobody knows where.

Mr. Pollexfen. It cannot be a Crime to anſwer a Queſtion put by Authority; for it is the Duty of all Men to anſwer, when examined by a lawful Authority. If a Man comes before a Magiſtrate, and confeſſes any Thing, that indeed is Evidence, but it is not a Crime; for there is a great deal of Difference between Evidence and the Crime; but that this ſhould be both an Evidence and a Crime too, is a very ſtrange Conſtruction; and for the other Part, the writing it (I ſuppoſe) the Court is ſatisfied it was in another County.

Sir George Treby. The Evidence they have offered to prove the Publiſhing it, is a Confeſſion; this Confeſſion is teſtified by Mr. Blathwayte, who ſays, The Biſhops were asked at the Council, Whether they did ſubſcribe and publiſh this Paper? and that their Anſwer was, That they did ſubſcribe, but not publiſh it. Now a Confeſſion muſt be taken together, and muſt be admitted to be entirely true by them that produce it: They ſhall never be allowed to take out and uſe one Piece, and wave the reſt: So that the King's Counſel have plainly proved that the Biſhops did not publiſh this Paper; and yet this is the only Evidence upon which they would infer that they did publiſh it.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

L. C. J. It lies upon the King's Counſel to prove that my Lords the Biſhops did cauſe it to be publiſhed; for their owning their Hands does not amount to a Publication.

Further Evidence.

Then the Clerks of the Council were called in again; namely, Mr. Blathwayte, Mr. Bridgman, Sir John Nicholas, and Mr. Pepys; and it was demanded of them, Whether the Queſtion put to the Biſhops at the Council Board was, Whether this was the Paper they delivered to the King? Or, Whether thoſe were their Hands that were to it?

They all anſwered, That they owned their Hands; but they could none of them remember, that the Biſhops ſaid, That was the Paper they delivered to the King: At which there was a great Shout. Mr. Sollicitor ſaid, Here's wonderful great Rejoicing that Truth cannot prevail.

The Chief Juſtice beginning to direct the Jury, Mr. Finch interrupted his Lordſhip, and demanded, Whether this was Evidence or not? For if it was admitted to be Evidence, they had other Matter to offer in Anſwer to that Evidence, and in their own Defence.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered; If they had more to offer, Why did they conclude, and let him begin to direct the Jury? But ſince they ſaid, they had other Matter to offer, the Court would hear it.

Here Serjeant Levinz, perceiving that the King's Counſel had ſent away for other Evidence, deſired his Lordſhip would go on with his Directions.

But Mr. Sollicitor ſaid, he was glad the Biſhop's Counſel had given this Interruption; becauſe they ſhould now be able to clear this Point. There was a Fatality, he obſerved, in ſome Cauſes, and particularly in this: They muſt beg the Patience of the Court a little while; for they had Notice a Perſon of very great Quality was coming, that would make it appear, the Biſhops made their Addreſſes to him, that they might deliver the Petition to the King.

The Court ſtay for a Witneſs.

There being a conſiderable Pauſe, which the Biſhop's Counſel were uneaſy at, Oath was made, that Mr. Graham went for my Lord Sunderland, and he was coming.

Lord Sunderland's Evidence.

The Lord Sunderland appearing ſome Time afterwards, was ſworn, and depoſed, That before the Biſhops appeared in Council, the Biſhop of St. Aſaph and Chicheſter came to his Office (the Secretary's), and told him, they came in the Name of the Archbiſhop, and four more of their Brethren, viz. the Biſhops of Ely, Bath and Wells, Briſtol, and Peterborough, with a Petition to deliver the King, if he would give them Leave; and deſired to know of him, which was the beſt Way to do it; and he anſwered, he would know the King's Pleaſure, and bring them Word. That they offered him their Petition to read; but he would not read it, and went immediately to his Majeſty, and acquainted him with it: That the King commanded him to let them know, they might come when they would; which he acquainted them with, and they went for their Brethren, and attended his 1688. 4 Jac. II. Majeſty with their Petition in about an Hours time; but he was not in the Room when it was delivered to the King.

L. C. J. Truly there was a great Preſumption before, but there is a greater now; and I think I ſhall leave it with ſome Effect to the Jury. I cannot ſee but here is enough to put the Proof upon you: I think this is ſufficient Evidence of the Publication.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Archbiſhop was not there; and ſo there is no Evidence againſt him: And for the other ſix Lords, my Lord Preſident (Sunderland) does not ſay, That this is the Petition that they ſaid they had to deliver to the King; nor did he ſee them deliver it.

Mr. Attorney. Then we leave it fairly to the Jury on this Fact.

Mr. Pollexfen. If ſo, then we deſire to be heard in our Defence.

Sir Robert Sawyer. May it pleaſe your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, you have heard this Charge which Mr. Attorney has been pleaſed to make againſt my Lords the Biſhops, and that is this: That they did conſpire to diminiſh the Royal Authority, and Regal Prerogative, Power, and Government of the King, and to avoid the Order of Council; and in Proſecution of this, they did falſely, maliciouſly, and ſeditiouſly, make a Libel againſt the King, under Pretence of a Petition, and did publiſh the ſame in the King's Preſence.

This, Gentlemen, is a very heinous and heavy Charge; but you ſee how ſhort their Evidence is: The Evidence they bring forth is only, that my Lords the Biſhops preſented the Paper to the King in the moſt private and humble manner they could; that which they have been ſo many Hours a proving, and which they cry up to be as ſtrong an Evidence as ever was given, proves it to be the fartheſt from Sedition in the doing of it, that can be; and you ſee what it is, it is a Petition to be relieved againſt an Order of Council, which they conceive they were aggrieved by: They indeed do not deal fairly with the Court, nor with us, in that they do not ſet it forth that it was a Petition.

L. C. J. That was over-ruled before.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. I do not inſiſt upon it now, ſo much as an Exception to the Information, as I do to the Evidence: They ſet this forth to be a ſcandalous Matter; but it only contains their Reaſons, whereby they would ſatisfy his Majeſty, why they cannot comply in a Concurrence with his Majeſty's Pleaſure; and therefore they humbly beſeech the King, and beg and requeſt him (as the Words of it are) that his Majeſty would be pleaſed not to inſiſt upon their diſtributing and reading of this Declaration; ſo the Petitioners on behalf of themſelves, and the whole Clergy of England, beg of the King that he would pleaſe not to inſiſt upon it.

Gentlemen, you may obſerve it, that there is nothing in this Petition that contains any Thing of Sedition in it, and it would be ſtrange this Petition ſhould be Felo de ſe, and by one Part of it deſtroy the other. It was laid indeed in the Information, that it was with Intent and Purpoſe to diminiſh the King's Royal Authority; but I appeal to your Lordſhip, the Court, and the Jury, whether there be any one Word in it that any way touches the King's Prerogative, or any Tittle of Evidence that has been given to make good the Charge: It is an Excuſe barely for their Non-compliance with the King's Order, and a begging of the King, with all Humility and Submiſſion, That he would be pleaſed not to inſiſt upon the reading of his Majeſty's Declaration upon theſe Grounds, becauſe the Diſpenſing Power, upon which it was founded, had been ſeveral Times in Parliament declared to be againſt Law; and becauſe it was a Caſe of that Conſequence, that they could not in Prudence, Honour, or Conſcience, concur in it. 1688. 4 Jac. II.

My Lord, Mr. Attorney has been pleaſed to charge in this Information, that this is a falſe, malicious, and ſeditious Libel; both the Falſity of it, and that it was malicious and ſeditious, are all Matters of Fact, which, with Submiſſion, they have offered to the Jury no Proof of: And I make no Queſtion but eaſily to demonſtrate the quite contrary.

For, my Lord, I think it can be no Queſtion, but that any Subject that is commanded by the King to do a thing which he conceives to be againſt Law, and againſt his Conſcience, may humbly apply himſelf to the King, and tell him the Reaſon why he does not that Thing he is commanded to do; why he cannot concur with his Majeſty in ſuch a Command.

My Lord, that which Mr. Attorney did inſiſt upon in the beginning of this Day (and he pretended to cite ſome Caſes for it) was, that in this Caſe, my Lords the Biſhops were not ſued as Biſhops, nor proſecuted for their Religion. Truly, my Lord, I do not know what they are ſued for elſe: The Information is againſt them as Biſhops; it is for an Act they did as Biſhops, and no otherwiſe; and for an Act they did, and do conceive they lawfully might do, with relation to their Eccleſiaſtical Polity, and the Government of their People as Biſhops.

The next thing Mr. Attorney offered was, That it was not for a Non-feaſance, but for a Feaſance. It is true, my Lord, it is for a Feaſance, in making of the Petition, but it was to excuſe a Non-feaſance, the not reading according to the Order; and this, ſure, was lawful for all the Biſhops, as Subjects, to do: And I ſhall ſhew it was certainly the Duty of my Lords the Biſhops, or any Peer of this Realm, to do the ſame in a like Caſe. It was likewiſe ſaid, They were proſecuted here for affronting the Government, and intermeddling with Matters of State: But I beg your Lordſhip and the Jury to conſider, whether there is one Tittle of this mentioned in the Petition, or any Evidence given of it: The Petition does not meddle with any thing of any Matter of State, but refers to an Eccleſiaſtical Matter, to be executed by the Clergy, and to a Matter that has Relation to Eccleſiaſtical Cauſes: So that they were not Buſy-bodies, or ſuch as meddled in Matters that did not relate to them, but that which was properly within their Sphere and Juriſdiction.

But

1688. 4 Jac. II.

But after all, there is no Evidence, nor any ſort of Evidence that is given by Mr. Attorney, that will maintain the leaſt Tittle of this Charge; and how he comes to leave it upon this ſort of Evidence, I cannot tell: All that it amounts to is, That my Lords the Biſhops being grieved in this Manner, made this Petition to the King in the moſt private and reſpectful Manner: And for him to load it with ſuch horrid black Epithets that it was done libellouſly, maliciouſly, and ſcandalouſly, and to oppoſe the King and Government, 'tis very hard; 'tis a Caſe of a very extraordinary Nature; and I believe my Lords the Biſhops cannot but conceive a great deal of Trouble, that they ſhould lie under ſo heavy a Charge, and that Mr. Attorney ſhould draw ſo ſevere an Information againſt them, when he has ſo little Proof to make it out.

My Lord, by what we have to ſay to it, we hope we ſhall give your Lordſhip and the Jury Satisfaction, that we have done but our Duties, ſuppoſing here has been a ſufficient Evidence of the Fact given, which we leave to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

My Lord, we ſay in ſhort, that this Petition is no more than what any Man, if he be commanded to do any thing, might humbly do, and not be guilty of any Crime. And my Lord, as to the Matter of our Defence, it will conſiſt of theſe Heads:

Firſt, We ſhall conſider the Matter of this Petition.

Secondly, The Manner of the delivering it, according as they have given Evidence here.

And, Thirdly, The Perſons that have delivered this Petition. And we hope to make it appear beyond all Queſtion, that the Matter contained in this Petition is neither falſe, nor contrary to Law, but agreeable to all the Laws of the Land in all Times. We ſhall likewiſe ſhew you, (though that appear ſufficiently to you already), that the Manner of delivering it was ſo far from being ſeditious, that it was in the moſt ſecret and private Manner, and with the greateſt Humility and Duty imaginable: And then, as to the Perſons, we ſhall ſhew you that they are not ſuch as Mr. Attorney ſays, who meddle with Matters of State that are out of their Sphere, but they are Perſons concerned, and concerned in Intereſt in the Caſe, to make this humble Application to the King. And when we have proved all this Matter, you will ſee how ſtrangely we are blackned with Titles and Epithets which we no ways deſerve, and of which, God be thanked, there is no Proof.

For, my Lord, for the Matter of the Petition we ſhall conſider two Things,

The firſt is, The Prayer, which is this: They humbly beg and deſire of the King, on Behalf of themſelves and the reſt of the Clergy, That he would not inſiſt upon the reading and publiſhing of this Declaration.

Surely, my Lord, there is nothing of Falſity in this, nor any thing that is contrary to Law, or unlawful for any Man that is preſſed to any thing, eſpecially by an Order of Council: And this is nothing but a Petition againſt an Order of Council; and if there be an Order that commands my Lords the Biſhops to do any thing that ſeems grievous to them, ſurely they may beg of the King that he would not inſiſt upon it.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

And for this Matter, they were ſo well ſatisfied about it, and ſo far from thinking that it was any Part of a Libel, that they left it out of the Information; and ſo have made a deformed and abſurd Story of it, without Head or Tail, a Petition directed to no body, and for nothing, it being without Title or Prayer; ſo that this is plain, it was lawful to petition.

Then, my Lord, the next thing is, the Reaſons which my Lords the Biſhops come to acquaint the King with, Why in Honour and Conſcience they cannot comply with, and give Obedience to this Order: And the Reaſons, my Lord, are two.

The firſt Reaſon that is aſſigned, is, the ſeveral Declarations that have been in Parliament (ſeveral of which are mentioned), that ſuch a Power to diſpenſe with the Law, is againſt Law; and that it could not be done but by an Act of Parliament; for that is the Meaning of the Word Illegal, that has no other Signification but unlawful; the ſame Word in Point of Signification with the Word Illicite, which they have uſed in their Information, a Thing that cannot be done by Law; and this they are pleaſed to tell the King, not as declaring their own Judgments, but what has been declared in Parliament; though if they had done the former, they being Peers of the Realm, and Biſhops of the Church, are bound to underſtand the Laws, eſpecially when (as I ſhall come to ſhew you), they are made Guardians of theſe Laws; and if any thing go amiſs, and contrary to theſe Laws, they ought to inform the King of it.

My Lord, the next thing is, becauſe it is a Thing of ſo great Moment, and the Conſequences that will ariſe from their publiſhing of this Declaration; and that too, my Lord, (for the latter I ſhall begin firſt with) there can be no Queſtion about, or any Pretence that this is libellous or falſe; for certainly it is a Caſe of the greateſt Conſequence to the whole Nation that ever was, therefore it cannot be falſe or libellous to ſay ſo.

My Lord, I would not mention this, for I am loth to touch upon things of this Nature, had not the Information it ſelf made it the Giſt of the Charge; for the Information (if there be any thing in it) ſays, That it was to diminiſh the King's Prerogative and Regal Power in publiſhing that Declaration.

Now, my Lord, what the Conſequence of this would be, and what my Lords the Biſhops meant by ſaying, It was a Cauſe of great Moment, will appear, by conſidering that which is the main Clauſe in the Declaration, at which my Lords the Biſhops ſcrupled, which is the main Stumbling-block to my Lords, and has been to many honeſt Men beſides, and that is this:

We do likewiſe declare, It is our Royal Will and Pleaſure, That from henceforth the Execution of all and all manner of Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, for not coming to Church, or not receiving the Sacrament, or for any other Non-conformity to the Religion eſtabliſhed; or for 4 1688. Jac. II for or by Reaſon of the Exerciſe of Religion in any Manner whatſoever, be immediately ſuſpended, and the further Execution of the ſaid Penal Laws, and every of them, is hereby ſuſpended.

Now, my Lord, this Clauſe is of ſome legal Effect and Signification, or it is not. If Mr. Attorney, or the King's Counſel, do ſay it is of no Effect in Law, then there is no Harm done: Then this Petition does no ways impeach the King's Prerogative, in ſaying it has been declared in Parliament, according as the King's Counſel do agree the Law to be.

But, my Lord, if it have any Effect in Law, and theſe Laws are ſuſpended by Virtue of this Clauſe in the Declaration, then certainly, my Lord, it is of the moſt diſmal Conſequence that can be thought of; and it behoved my Lords, who are the Fathers of the Church, humbly to repreſent it to the King.

For, my Lord, by this Declaration, and particularly by that Clauſe in it, not only the Laws of our Reformation, but all the Laws for the Preſervation of the Chriſtian Religion in general are ſuſpended, and become of no Force: If there be ſuch an Effect in Law wrought by this Declaration as is pretended, (that is) that the Obligation of Obedience to them ceaſeth; the Reaſon of it is plain, the Words cannot admit of ſuch a Quibble as to pretend that the Execution of the Law is not the ſuſpending of the Law; and that the ſuſpending the Execution of the Law is not a ſuſpending of the Law; for we all know the Execution of every Law, in its primary Intent, is Obedience to it; that of the Penalty comes in by way of Puniſhment and Recompence for their Diſobedience.

Now, my Lord, if this Declaration does diſcharge the King's Subjects from their Obedience to, and the Obligation from, thoſe Laws; then pray, my Lord, where are we? Then all the Laws of the Reformation are ſuſpended, and the Laws of Chriſtianity it ſelf, by thoſe latter Words [or for or by Reaſon of Religion, in any Manner whatſoever]; ſo that is not confined to the Chriſtian Religion, but all other Religions are permitted under this Clauſe: And thus all our Laws for keeping the Sabbath, and which diſtinguiſh us from Heathens, will be ſuſpended too.

My Lord, this is ſuch an Inconvenience as (I think) I need name no more; and it is a very natural Conſequence from that Clauſe of the Declaration; it diſcharges at once all Miniſters and Clergymen from performing their Duty in reading the Service of the Church; it diſcharges their Hearers from attending upon that Service.

When a Law is ſuſpended, the Obligation thereof is taken away; and thoſe that before thought themſelves bound to obey, now conclude they are not ſo obliged; and what a Miſchief that will be to the Church, which is under the Care of my Lords the Biſhops, your Lordſhip will eaſily apprehend.

Theſe Things, my Lord, I only mention, to ſhew the great and evil Conſequences that apparently follow upon ſuch a Declaration; which made my Lords the Biſhops decline obeying the Order, and put them under a Neceſſity of applying thus to the King, to acquaint him with the Reaſons why they could not comply with his Commands, to read this Declaration to the People, becauſe the Conſequences of it were ſo great, it tending naturally to lead the People into ſo great an Error, as to believe thoſe Laws were not in Force, when in Truth and Reality they are ſtill in Force, and continue to oblige them. 1688. 4 Jac II.

And that being the ſecond Reaſon in this Petition, I come next to conſider it, to wit, that the Parliament had often declared this pretended Power to be illegal; and for that, we ſhall read the ſeveral Records in Parliament, mentioned in their Petition, and produce ſeveral ancient Records of former Parliaments that prove this Point, and particularly in the Time of Richard II. concerning the Statute of Proviſors, where there were particular Diſpenſations for that Statute; the King was enabled to do it by Act of Parliament, and could not do it without.

L. C. J. Pray, Sir Robert Sawyer, go to your Proofs, and reſerve your Arguments till afterwards.

Sir Rob. Sawyer. My Lord, I do but ſhortly mention theſe Things; ſo that, my Lord, as to the Matter of this Petition, we ſhall ſhew you, that it is true, and agreeable to the Laws of the Land.

Then, my Lord, as to the Manner of delivering it, I need ſay no more, but that it is plain from their Evidence, that it was in the moſt private and humble Manner: And, as my Lord Preſident ſaid, Leave was asked of the King for them to be admitted to preſent it: Leave was given, and accordingly they did it.

We come then, my Lord, to the third Thing, the Perſons, theſe Noble Lords; and we ſhall ſhew they are not Buſy-bodies, but in this Matter have done their Duty, and meddled with their own Affairs: That, my Lord, will appear,

Firſt, by the general Care that is repoſed in them by the Law of the Land: They are frequently, in our Books, called The King's Spiritual Judges; they are intruſted with the Care of Souls, and the Superintendency over all the Clergy is their principal Care.

But beſides this, my Lord, there is another ſpecial Care put upon them, by the expreſs Words of an Act of Parliament; for, over and above the general Care of the Church, by Virtue of their Offices as Biſhops, the Act of 1 Eliz. cap. 2. makes them ſpecial Guardians of the Law of Uniformity, and of that other Law in his late Majeſty's Reign, where all the Clauſes of the Statute of 1 Eliz. are revived, and made applicable to the preſent State of the Church of England. Now in that Statute of 1 Eliz. there is this Clauſe:

And for the due Execution hereof, the Queen's Moſt Excellent Majeſty, the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and all the Commons in this preſent Parliament aſſembled, do, in God's Name, earneſtly require and charge all the Archbiſhops and Biſhops, and other Ordinaries, that they do 1688. 4 Jac. II. do endeavour themſelves, to the utmoſt of their Knowledges, that the due and true Execution hereof may be had throughout their Dioceſes and Charges, as they will anſwer before God for ſuch Evils and Plagues wherewith Almighty God may juſtly puniſh his People, for neglecting this good and wholſome Law.

This is the Charge that lies upon the Biſhops, to take Care of the Execution of that Law; and I ſhall pray, by and by, that it may be read to the Jury.

Mr. Sol. Gen. That is very well indeed! To what Purpoſe?

Sir Robert Sawyer. So that, my Lord, by this Law it is plain, that my Lords the Biſhops, upon Pain of bringing upon themſelves the Imprecation of this Act of Parliament, are obliged to ſee it executed; and then, my Lord, when any Thing comes under their Knowledge, eſpecially if they are to be Actors in it, that has ſuch a Tendency to deſtroy the very Foundations of the Church, as the Suſpenſion of all the Laws that relate to the Church muſt do, it concerns them, that have no other Remedy, to addreſs the King, by Petition, about it.

For that, Mr. Attorney, my Lord, has agreed, That if a proper Remedy be purſued in a proper Court, for a Grievance complained of, though there may be many hard Words that elſe would be ſcandalous, yet, being in a regular Courſe, they are no Scandal: And ſo it is ſaid in Lake's Caſe, in my Lord Hobart.

My Lord, we muſt appeal to the King, or we can appeal to nobody, to be relieved againſt an Order of Council, with which we are aggrieved; and it is our Duty ſo to do, according to the Care that the Law hath placed in us.

Beſides, my Lord, the Biſhops were commanded by this Order, to do an Act relating to their Eccleſiaſtical Function; to diſtribute it to be read to their Clergy: And how could they in Conſcience do it, when they thought Part of the Declaration was not according to Law?

Pray, my Lord, what has been the Reaſon of his Majeſty's conſulting of his Judges? And if his Majeſty, or any the great Officers, by his Command, are about to do any thing that is contrary to Law, was it ever yet an Offence to tell the King ſo? I always looked upon it as the Duty of an Officer or Magiſtrate, to tell the King what is Law, and what is not Law.

In Cavendiſh's Caſe, in the Queen's Time, there was an Office granted of the Return of the Writs of Superſedeas, in the Court of Common-Pleas; and he comes to the Court and deſires to be put into the Poſſeſſion of the Office: The Court told him, They could do nothing in it, but he muſt bring his Aſſize: He applies to the Queen, and ſhe ſends, under the Privy Seal, a Command to ſequeſter the Profits, and to take Security to anſwer the Profits as the Judgment of the Law ſhould go: But the Judges there return an Anſwer, That it was againſt Law, and they could not do it: Then there comes a ſecond Letter reciting the Former, and commanding their Obedience: The Judges returned for Anſwer, They were upon their Oaths, and were ſworn to keep the Laws, and would not do it. 1688. 4 Jac. II.

My Lord, the like was done in the Time of my Lord Hobart: We have it reported in Anderſon, in a Caſe where a Prohibition had gone: There came a Meſſage from Court, that a Conſultation ſhould be granted; and that was a Matter wherein there were various Opinions, whether it was ex neceſſitate, or Diſcretionary: But there they returned, That it was againſt Law for any ſuch Meſſage to be ſent.

Now here, my Lord, is a Caſe full as ſtrong: My Lords the Biſhops were commanded to do an Act, which they conceived to be againſt Law, and they declined it, and tell the King the Reaſon; and they have done it in the moſt humble Manner that could be, by way of Petition. If they had done (as the Civil Law terms it) reſcribere generally, that had been lawful; but here they have done it in a more reſpectful Manner, by an humble Petition: If they had ſaid the Law was otherwiſe, that ſure had been no Fault: But they do not ſo much as that, but they only ſay, It was ſo declared in Parliament; and they declare it with all Humility and Dutifulneſs. So that, my Lord, if we conſider the Perſons of the Defendants, they have not acted as Buſy-bodies; and therefore, as this Caſe is, when we have given our Evidence, here will be an Anſwer to all the Implications of Law that are contained in this Information: For they would have this Petition work by Implication of Law, to make a Libel of it; but, by what I have ſaid, it will appear, there was nothing of Sedition, nothing of Malice, nothing of Scandal in it; nothing of the Salt, and Vinegar, and Pepper, that they have put into the Caſe. We ſhall prove the Matters that I have opened for our Defence; and then, I dare ſay, your Lordſhip and the Jury will be of Opinion, we have done nothing but our Duty.

Mr. Finch ſeconded Sir Robert Sawyer, and inſiſted, That the Power of abrogating Laws was as much a Part of the Legiſlature, as the Power of making Laws: That a Power to lay the Laws aſleep and ſuſpend Laws, was equal to the Power of abrogating them; for they were no longer in Being as Laws, while they are ſo laid aſleep or ſuſpended: Then if this Declaration was founded upon a Part of the Legiſlature, which muſt by all Men be acknowledged not to reſide in the King alone, but in the King, Lords, and Commons, it could not be a legal and true Power and Prerogative.

Mr. Serjeant Pemberton and Mr. Pollexfen, two more of the Biſhops Counſel, alſo maintained, That the Kings of England had no Power to ſuſpend or diſpenſe with the Laws; and that it was no Crime to petition the King, or inform him if he was miſtaken in Law: That it was allowed daily in Weſtminſter-Hall to argue againſt the King's Grants, and ſay he was deceived in his Grants: That the Laws of Uniformity were made upon a Foreſight of the Miſchiefs that might come by 1688. 4 Jac. II. falſe Religions in this Kingdom, and particularly to keep out the Romiſh Religion (which was the very worſt of all Religions) from prevailing amongſt us: That this was the very Deſign of the Act for eſtabliſhing the Teſt, entitled, An Act to prevent Dangers that may happen from Popiſh Recuſants; and if the King might ſuſpend the Laws of England which concerned Religion, they knew no other Laws but he might ſuſpend; and then how precarious the Lives, Liberties, and Properties of the Subjects would be, ought to be conſidered.

The Evidence produced for the Biſhops.

Then the Biſhops Counſel produced ſome Records, Statutes, and Declarations of Parliament, to ſupport the Doctrines they had advanced.

And firſt the Record impowering King Richard II. to diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors, was read.

By this Record it appears, That a Power was given by the Commons to the King, that he, with the Aſſent of the Lords, might diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors till the next Parliament, reſerving a Power to the Commons to diſagree to, and retract that Conſent of theirs, in the next Parliament, if they thought fit: And they proteſt that this Aſſent, which was a Novelty, and had not been done before that Time, ſhould not be drawn into Example or Conſequence for the Time to come; and pray the King, that their Proteſtation may be entered on Record in the Roll of Parliament; and the King commanded it to be done as they deſired.

Sir George Treby obſerved hereupon, That the Statute of Proviſors, thus diſpenſed with, was a Penal Law, and concerned Eccleſiaſtical Affairs, viz. The Collating and Preſenting to Biſhopricks, Benefices, &c.

Then the Journal of the Houſe of Lords being produced, his late Majeſty's Speech of the 18th of February, 1662, was read; wherein was a Clauſe, from whence the Defendants argued, That the King himſelf did not apprehend he had a diſpenſing Power, (viz.) And yet, if the Diſſenters will demean themſelves peaceably and modeſtly under the Government, I could heartily wiſh I had ſuch a Power of Indulgence, to uſe upon Occaſion.

Then the Biſhops Counſel proceeded to ſhew, That the Lords, in Compliance with the King's Deſire, ordered a Bill to be brought in, to enable his Majeſty to diſpenſe with the Act of Uniformity, or with any other Laws requiring Oaths, or Subſcriptions, or Conformity to the Diſcipline of the Eſtabliſhed Church.

Then Part of an Addreſs of the Commons, in Anſwer to the King's Speech, was read; wherein they tell his Majeſty, That it was not adviſable to grant any Indulgence to thoſe Perſons, who preſumed to diſſent from the Act of Uniformity and the Religion eſtabliſhed: And that the Act of Uniformity could not be diſpenſed with, but by Act of Parliament.

And Part of the King's Speech on the 5th of February, 1672, was read; wherein he ſays, He had put forth a Declaration for Indulgence to Diſſenters.

An Addreſs of the Commons, of the 4th of February, in Anſwer to it, was alſo read; wherein they ſay, That they found themſelves bound in Duty to inform his Majeſty, That Penal Statutes, in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, cannot be ſuſpended but by an Act of Parliament; and therefore beſeech his Majeſty that the ſaid Laws may have their free Courſe, untill it ſhall be otherwiſe provided for by Act of Parliament. 1688. 4 Jac. II.

The King's Meſſage in Anſwer to that Addreſs, was alſo read; (viz.) That his Majeſty did not pretend to the Right of ſuſpending any Laws, wherein the Properties, Rights, or Liberties of any of his Subjects, were concerned; nor to alter any Thing in the eſtabliſhed Doctrine or Diſcipline of the Church of England: But his only Deſign in this was, to take off the Penalties the Statutes inflicted on Diſſenters.

The the Commons Anſwer of the 26th of February, 1672, in Anſwer to the ſaid Meſſage, was read; wherein they tell his Majeſty, That the aboveſaid Anſwer to their Petition and Addreſs, is not ſufficient to clear the Apprehenſions that may juſtly remain in the Minds of his People, by his Majeſty's having claimed a Power to ſuſpend Penal Laws in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, and which his Majeſty did ſtill ſeem to aſſert in the ſaid Anſwer to be entruſted in the Crown, and never queſtioned in the Reigns of any of his Anceſtors: Wherein they humbly conceived his Majeſty had been miſinformed; ſince no ſuch Power was ever claimed or exerciſed by any of his Majeſty's Predeceſſors; and if it ſhould be admitted, might tend to the interrupting the free Courſe of the Laws, and altering the Legiſlative Power, which had been always acknowledged to reſide in the King and the two Houſes of Parliament: They therefore, with an Unanimous Conſent, became again moſt humble Suitors unto his Sacred Majeſty, that he would be pleaſed to give them a full and ſatisfactory Anſwer to their ſaid Petition and Addreſs; and that his Majeſty would take ſuch effectual Order, that the Proceedings in this Matter, might not for the future be drawn into Conſequence.

His Majeſty's Speech of the 8th of March, 1672, alſo was read; wherein he ſays, If there were any Scruple remaining with them concerning the Suſpenſion of Penal Laws, he then faithfully promiſed them, that what had been done in that Particular, ſhould not for the future be drawn either into Conſequence or Example; and that, as he daily expected from them a Bill for his Supply, ſo he aſſured them he ſhould as willingly paſs any other Bill they ſhould offer him, that might tend to the giving them Satisfaction in all their juſt Grievances.

Another Meſſage from his Majeſty to the Houſe, the next Day, by the Lord Chancellor, was alſo read; wherein he ſays, That he had the laſt Night, in Purſuance of what he then intended and declared in the Morning, concerning the Suſpenſion of Penal Laws not being for the future drawn either into Conſequence or Example, cauſed the Original Declaration under the 1688. 4 Jac. II. Great Seal, to be cancelled in his Preſence: Whereof the ſaid Lord Chancellor and ſeveral other Lords of the Council were Witneſſes.

Great

Then his Majeſty King James II's Speech to both Houſes, 9 Nov. 1685. after the ſuppreſſing Monmouth's Rebellion, was read; wherein he ſays, Let no Man take Exceptions that there are ſome Officers in the Army not qualified according to the late Teſts.

And afterwards the Commons Addreſs thereupon, 16 Nov. 1685. wherein they ſay, That as to Part of his Majeſty's Speech, relating to the Officers of the Army not qualified for their Employments, They did, out of their bounden Duty, humbly repreſent unto his Majeſty, that thoſe Officers could not by Law be capable of their Employments; and that the Incapacities they bring upon themſelves thereby, can no ways be taken off, but by Act of Parliament.

That they were ready to paſs a Bill to indemnify them from the Penalties they had incurred; but did beſeech his Majeſty to give ſuch Directions therein for the future, that no Apprehenſions or Jealouſies might remain in the Hearts of his Majeſty's Subjects.

Then a Paragraph out of the Statute of 1 Eliz. chap. 2. was read, Whereby the Biſhops are charged to ſee the Laws in relation to Uniformity executed, as they will anſwer it before God, for ſuch Evils and Plagues wherewith Almighty God may juſtly puniſh his People for neglecting that good and wholeſome Law.

After which the Biſhops Counſel proceeded to make their Obſervations on the Whole; and firſt Mr. Serjeant Levinz.

Serjeant Levinz's Argument.

Mr. Serjeant Levinz. Now, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, the Charge is a Charge for a Libel; and there are two Things to be conſidered.

Firſt, Whether the Biſhops did deliver this Paper to the King? But that we leave upon the Evidence that has been given; only we ſay, there has been no direct Proof of that.

In the next place, ſuppoſing they did deliver this Petition to the King, Whether this be a Libel, upon the Matter of it, the Manner of delivering it, or the Perſons that did it?

And with Submiſſion, my Lord, this cannot be a Libel, although it be true that they did ſo deliver it.

Firſt, my Lord, there is a little Diſingenuity offered to my Lords the Biſhops in only ſetting forth Part, and not the Whole; in only reciting the Body, and not the Prayer.

But, my Lord, with your Lordſhip's Favour, taking the Petitionary Part, and adding it to the other, it quite alters the Nature of the Thing; for it may be, a Complaint without ſeeking Redreſs might be an ill Matter; but here taking the Whole together, it appears to be a Complaint of a Grievance, and a Deſire to be eaſed of it.

With your Lordſhip's Favour, the Subjects have a Right to petition the King in all their Grievances; ſo ſay all our Books of Law; and ſo ſays the Statute of the 13th of the late King: They may petition, and come and deliver their Petition under the Number of Ten, as heretofore they might have done (ſays the Statute): So that they at all Times have had a Right ſo to do; and indeed if they had not, it were the moſt lamentable Thing in the World, that Men muſt have Grievances upon them, and yet they not to be admitted to ſeek Relief in an humble Way. 1688. 4 Jac. II.

Now, my Lord, this is a Petition ſetting forth a Grievance, and praying his Majeſty to give Relief. And what is this Grievance? It is that Command of his, by that Order made upon my Lords the Biſhops, to diſtribute the Declaration, and cauſe it to be read in the Churches. And pray, my Lord, let us conſider what the Effects and Conſequences of that Diſtribution and Reading is: It is to tell the People, that they need not ſubmit to the Act of Uniformity, nor to any Act of Parliament made about Eccleſiaſtical Matters, for they are ſuſpended and diſpenſed with. This my Lords the Biſhops muſt do, if they obey this Order: But your Lordſhip ſees, if they do it, they lie under an Anathema by the Statute of 1 Eliz. for there they are under a Curſe if they do not look to the Preſervation and Obſervation of that Act: But this Command to diſtribute and read the Declaration, whereby all theſe Laws are diſpenſed with, is to let the People know, they will not do what the Act requires of them.

Now, with your Lordſhip's Favour, my Lords the Biſhops lying under this Preſſure, the Weight of which was very grievous upon them, They, by Petition, apply to the King to be eaſed of it, which they might do as Subjects: Beſides, my Lord, they are Peers of the Realm, and were moſt of them ſitting as ſuch in the laſt Parliament, where (as you have heard) it was declared, ſuch a Diſpenſation could not be; and then in what a Caſe ſhould they have been if they ſhould have diſtributed this Declaration, which was ſo contrary to their own Actings in Parliament? What could they have anſwered for themſelves, had they thus contributed to this Declaration, when they had themſelves before declared that the King could not diſpenſe?

And that this was no new Thing, for it had been ſo declared in a Parliament before in two Seſſions of it, in the late King's Reign, within a very little Time one of another; and ſuch a Parliament that were ſo liberal in their Aids to the Crown, that a Man would not think they ſhould go about to deprive the Crown of any of its Rights: It was a Parliament that did as great Services for the Crown as ever any did; and therefore there is no Reaſon to ſuſpect that, if the King had had ſuch a Power, they would have appeared ſo carneſt againſt it.

But, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, theſe are not the beginnings of this Matter; for we have ſhewed you, from the 15th of Richard the IId, that there was a Power granted by the Parliament to the King, to diſpenſe with a particular Act of Parliament; which argues, that it could not be without an Act of Parliament: And in 1662 it is ſaid expreſly, that they can not be diſpenſed but by an Act of Parliament. 'Tis ſaid ſo again in 1672, the King was then pleaſed to aſſume to himſelf ſuch a Power as is pretended to in this Declaration: Yet, upon Information from his 1688. 4 Jac. II. his Houſes of Parliament, the King declared himſelf ſatisfied that he had no ſuch Power, cancelled his Declaration, and promiſed that it ſhould not be drawn into Conſequence or Example. And ſo the Commons, by their Proteſtation, ſaid, in Richard II's Time, that it was a Novelty, and ſhould not be drawn into Conſequence or Example.

Now, my Lord, if your Lordſhip pleaſes, if this Matter that was commanded the Biſhops to do were ſomething which the Law did not allow of, ſurely then my Lords the Biſhops had all the Reaſon in the World to apply themſelves to the King, in an humble Manner to acquaint him Why they could not obey his Commands, and to ſeek Relief againſt that which lay ſo heavy upon them.

Truly, my Lord, Mr. Attorney was very right in the opening of this Cauſe at firſt; that is, That the Government ought not to receive Affronts, nor the inferior Officers are not to be affronted; a Juſtice of the Peace, ſo low a Man in Office, is not. For a Man to ſay to a Juſtice of Peace, when he is executing his Office, that he does not do right, is a great Crime; and Mr. Attorney ſaid right in it. But ſuppoſe a Juſtice of Peace were making of a Warrant to a Conſtable, to do ſomething that was not legal for him to do; if the Conſtable ſhould petition this Juſtice of the Peace, and therein ſet forth, Sir, You are about to command me to do a Thing which I conceive is not legal; ſurely that would not be a Crime that he was to be puniſhed for; for he does but ſeek Relief, and ſhew his Grievance in a proper Way, and the Diſtreſs he is under.

My Lord, this is the Biſhops Caſe, with Submiſſion: They are under a Diſtreſs, being commanded to do a Thing which they take not to be Legal; and they, with all Humility, by way of Petition, acquaint the King with this Diſtreſs of theirs, and pray him, that he will pleaſe to give Relief.

My Lord, there is no Law but is either an Act of Parliament, or the Common Law: For an Act of Parliament, there is none for ſuch a Power; all that we have of it in Parliamentary Proceedings is againſt it; and for the Common Law (ſo far as I have read it), I never did meet of any thing of ſuch a Nature, as a Grant or Diſpenſation that pretended to diſpenſe with any one whole Act of Parliament. I have not ſo much as heard of any ſuch thing mentioned by any of the King's Counſel: But here, my Lord, is a Diſpenſation that diſpenſes with a great many Laws at once: Truly I cannot take upon me to tell how many; there may be forty, or above, for ought I know.

Therefore, my Lord, the Biſhops lying under ſuch a Grievance as this, and under ſuch a Preſſure, being ordered to diſtribute this Declaration in all their Churches, which was to tell the People they ought to be under no Law in this Caſe, which ſurely was a very great Preſſure both in Point of Law and Conſcience too, they lying under ſuch Obligations to the contrary, as they did; with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, if they did deliver this Petition, (Publiſhing of it I will not talk of, for there has been no Proof of a Publication, but a Delivering of a Petition to his Majeſty in the moſt ſecret and decent Manner that could be imagined) my Lords, the Biſhops are not guilty of the Matter charged upon them in this Information. It has been expreſly proved that they did not go to diſperſe it abroad, but only delivered it to the King himſelf: And in ſhort, my Lord, if this ſhould be a Libel, I know not how ſad the Condition of us all would be, if we may not petition when we ſuffer. 1688. 4 Jac. II.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, I challenge them to ſhew us any one Inſtance of ſuch a Declaration, ſuch a general Diſpenſation of Laws, from the Conqueſt till 1672: The firſt Umbrage of ſuch a Thing is that of Car. II. 1662; but your Lordſhip hears the Declaration of the Parliament upon it. Before that, as there was no ſuch Thing, ſo your Lordſhip ſees what the Parliament did to enable the King (not to do this Thing, but ſomething like it) in Richard the Second's Time, where you ſee the Parliament did give the King a Power to diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors for a Time; but at the ſame Time declared that very Grant of their own to be a Novelty, and that it ſhould not be drawn into Conſequence or Example.

My Lord, we ſhall leave it upon this Point: To ſuſpend Laws is all one as to abrogate Laws; for ſo long as a Law is ſuſpended, whether the Suſpenſion be Temporary, or whether it be for ever; whether it be at once or at ſeveral Times; the Law is abrogated to all Intents and Purpoſes: But the Abrogation of Laws is Part of the Legiſlature, that Legiſlative Power is lodged (as I ſaid before, and I could never find it otherwiſe in all our Law) in King, Lords, and Commons, ——.

Lord Chief Juſtice. You did open that before, Mr. Finch.

Mr. Finch. With this, my Lord, That my Lords the Biſhops, finding this Order made upon them to publiſh this Declaration, did what in Duty they were bound to do; and unleſs the Jury do find, that they have done that which is contrary to Law and to the Duty of their Places, and that this Petition is a Libel, and a ſeditious Libel, with an Intent to ſtir up Sedition among the People (we rely upon it), my Lords the Biſhops can never be found guilty upon this Information.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Have you now done, Gentlemen?

Mr. Finch. Yes, my Lord, till they give us further Occaſion: If they have any other Evidence to offer, we muſt anſwer it; if not, this the Anſwer we give to what they have ſaid.

Mr. Sollicitor General. We make no Bargin with you: If you have done, ſay ſo.

Lord Chief Juſtice. You muſt know, that you are not to have the laſt Word.

Mr.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Mr. Sollicitor General. You have been three Hours already: If you have any more to ſay, pray conclude.

Mr. Finch. If they ſay they have no more Evidence, then we know what we have to do.

Lord Chief Juſtice. If you do ſay any thing more, pray let me adviſe you one thing; don't ſay the ſame Thing over and over again; for after ſo much Time ſpent, it is irkſome to all Company, as well as to me.

Mr. Finch. My Lord, we have no more Evidence to offer to your Lordſhip at preſent, unleſs they, by offering new Evidence, give us Occaſion to Reply upon them.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Gentlemen, you ſhall have all the Legal Favour and Advantage that can be; but, pray, let us keep to an orderly decent Method of Proceeding.

Sir Robert Sawyer. Pray, my Lord, favour me a Word before we conclude: My Lord, I do find very few Attempts of this Nature, in any King's Reign.

In the Reign of Henry IV. there was an Act of Parliament, that Foreigners ſhould have a free Trade in the City of London, notwithſtanding the Franchiſes of London: After the Parliament roſe, the King iſſued out his Proclamation, forbidding the Execution of that Law, and commanding that it ſhould be in Suſpence uſque ad proximum Parliamentum; yet that was held to be againſt Law.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Sir Robert Sawyer, that which you are to look to, is the Publiſhing of this Paper, and whether it be a Libel or no: And as to the Buſineſs of the Parliaments you mentioned, they are not to the Purpoſe.

Sir Robert Sawyer. My Lord, I ſay, I would put it where the Queſtion truly lies; if they do not diſpute the Point, then we need not labour it; but I do not know whether they will or no, and therefore I beg your Lordſhip's Favour to mention one Caſe more, and that is upon the Statute of 31 Hen. VIII. cap. 8. which enables the King by Proclamation in many Caſes to create the Law, which Statute was repealed, 1 Edw. VI. cap. 12. That very Act does recite, that the Law is not to be altered or reſtrained but by Act of Parliament, and therefore the Parliament enables the King to do ſo and ſo: But that was ſuch a Power, that the Parliament thought not fit to continue, and it was afterwards repealed; but it ſhews, that at that Time the Parliament was of the ſame Opinion, as to this Matter, that other Parliaments have been ſince.

Mr. Somers. My Lord, I would only mention the great Caſe of Thomas and Sorrel in the Exchequer-Chamber, upon the Validity of a Diſpenſation of the Statute of Edward VI. touching ſelling of Wine: There it was the Opinion of every one of the Judges, and they did lay it down as a ſettled Poſition, that there never could be an Abrogation or, a Suſpenſion (which is a Temporary Abrogation) of an Act of Parliament, but by the Legiſlative Power. That was a Foundation laid down quite through the Debate of the Caſe: Indeed it was diſputed, how far the King might diſpenſe with the Penalties in ſuch a particular Law, as to particular Perſons; but it was agreed by all, that the King had no Power to ſuſpend any Law: And, my Lord, I dare appeal to Mr. Attorney General himſelf, whether in the Caſe of Godwin and Hales, which was lately in this Court, to make good that Diſpenſation, he did not uſe it as an Argument then, that it could not be expounded into a Suſpenſion: He admitted it not to be in the King's Power to ſuſpend a Law; but that he might give a Diſpenſation to a particular Perſon, was all that he took upon him to juſtify at that Time.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

My Lord, by the Law of all civilized Nations, if the Prince does require ſomething to be done, which the Perſon (who is to do it) takes to be unlawful, it is not only lawful, but his Duty, reſcribere Principi; this is all that is done here, and that in the moſt humble Manner that could be thought of. Your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve how far it went, how careful they were that they might not any way juſtly offend the King: They did not interpoſe, by giving Advice as Peers; they never ſtirred till it was brought home to themſelves; when they made their Petition, all they beg is, That it may not ſo far be inſiſted upon by his Majeſty, as to oblige them to read it; whatever they thought of it, they do not take upon them to deſire the Declaration to be revoked.

My Lord, as to Matters of Fact alledged in the ſame Petition, that they are perfectly true, we have ſhewn by the Journal of both Houſes. In every one of thoſe Years which are mentioned in the Petition, the Power of Diſpenſation was conſidered in Parliament, and upon Debate, declared to be contrary to Law; there could be no Deſign to diminiſh the Prerogative, becauſe the King hath no ſuch Prerogative.

Seditious, my Lord, it could not be, nor could poſſibly ſtir up Sedition in the Minds of the People, becauſe it was preſented to the King in private and alone: Falſe it could not be, becauſe the Matter of it is true: There could be nothing of Malice, for the Occaſion was not ſought, the Thing was preſſed upon them: And a Libel it could not be, becauſe the Intent was innocent, and they kept within the Bounds ſet by the Act of Parliament, that gives the Subject Leave to apply to his Prince by Petition, when he is aggrieved.

Then Mr. Sollicitor (Sir William Williams) ſummed upon the Evidence, and made his Obſervations on it for the King.

Mr. Sollicitor's Argument for the King.

Mr. Sollicitor General. My Lord, and Gentlemen of the Jury, I am of Counſel in this Caſe for the King, and I ſhall take Leave to proceed in this Method: Firſt, I ſhall put the Caſe of my Lords the Biſhops, and then conſider the Arguments that have been uſed in their Defence, and anſwer them as much as is Material to be anſwered; and then leave it to your Lordſhip, and the Jury's Conſideration, Whether what has been ſaid by theſe Gentlemen, weigh any Thing in this Caſe?

Firſt, my Lord, I take it for granted, and I think the Matter is pretty plain by this Time, by my Lord Preſident's Evidence and their own Confeſſion, that it is not to be diſputed but that this Paper was preſented by theſe Lords to the King: I think there is no great Difficulty in that Matter at all; but I juſt touch upon it, becauſe I would follow them in their own Method.

Then, my Lord, let us take this Caſe as it is, upon the Nature of the Petition, and the Evidence that they have given; and then let us ſee, whether that will juſtify the Thing that is done: For the Buſineſs of Petitioning, I would diſtinguiſh, and enquire, Whether my Lords the Biſhops, out of Parliament, can preſent any Petition to the King? I do agree, that in Parliament the Lords and Commons may make Addreſſes to the King, and ſignify their Deſires, and make known their Grievances there; and there is no doubt but that is a natural and proper way of Application: For in the Beginning of the Parliament, there are Receivers of Petitions appointed, and upon Debates, there are Committees appointed to draw up Petitions and Addreſſes; but to come and deduce an Argument, that becauſe the Lords in Parliament have done thus, (there being ſuch Methods of Proceedings uſual in Parliaments) therefore my Lords the Biſhops may do it out of Parliament, that is certainly a Non ſequitur; no ſuch Concluſion can be drawn from thoſe Premiſes.

My Lord, I ſhall endeavour to lay the Fact before you as it really is, and then conſider what is proper for the Court to take Notice of, as Legal Proof or Evidence: And I take it, all thoſe Precedents that they have produced, of what the Lords did, and what the Commons did, in Parliament, is no Warrant for them to ſhelter themſelves under, againſt the Information here in Queſton.

Here Mr. Juſtice Powel ſpake aſide to the Lord Chief Juſtice, thus:

Mr. Juſtice Powel. My Lord, this is ſtrange Doctrine; ſhall not the Subject have Liberty to petition the King, but in Parliament? If that be Law, the Subject is in a miſerable Caſe.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Brother, let him go on; we will hear him out, though I approve not of his Poſition.

Mr. Sollicitor General. The Lords may addreſs to the King in Parliament, and the Commons may do it; but therefore, that the Biſhops may do it, out of Parliament, does not follow: I heard nothing ſaid that could have given Colour to ſuch a Thing, but the Curſe that has been read in 1 Eliz.

But pray, my Lord, let us conſider that Evidence they have given; they have begun with that Record in Richard the Second's Time; and what is that? That the King may diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors, till the Meeting of the next Parliament, and a Proteſtation of the Commons at the End of it, Whether that be an Act of Parliament that is Declaratory of the Common Law, or Introductory of a new Law, non conſtat; and for ought appears, it might be a Declaratory Act; and if ſo, it is a Proof of the King's Prerogative of Diſpenſing. It might be an Act in Affirmance of the King's Prerogative, as there are a great many ſuch, we very well know; and generally moſt of the Laws in that Kind, are in Affirmance of the King's Power; ſo that the Law turns as an Argument for the King's Prerogative, and they have given him that which will turn upon themſelves: So it ſtood in Richard the Second's Time; but whether that be an Argument one way or other Concluſive, is left to your Lordſhip and the Jury.

Ay but, ſay they, there is no Execution of ſuch a Power, till very lately; and the firſt Inſtance they produce, is, that in the Year 1662: But your Lordſhip knows, that before the Reign of Henry IV. there was great Juriſdiction aſſumed by the Lords in Original Cauſes: Then comes the Statute of Appeals, 1 Hen. IV. which takes Notice, that before that Time, the Lords had aſſumed an Original Juriſdiction in all Cauſes, and would proceed, and determine them in Parliament and out of Parliament; and it fell out to be ſo great a Grievance, that it was thought neceſſary to to make a Law againſt it, that Appeals in Parliament ſhould be aboliſhed and deſtroyed; and then comes that Law in Favour of the Subjects of England, and that ſettles the Bounds between the King and the Lords, in a great meaſure: Before that Time, the Lords were grown very powerful, and where there is a Power, there always will be Applications: And what is the Effect of that Statute, 1 Hen. IV? for all that we endeavour is, to make Things as plain as can be, that no further Applications, no Accuſations, no Proceedings in any Caſe whatſoever, be before the Lords in Parliament, unleſs it be by Impeachment of the Commons; ſo that there is the Salvo; and the Uſe that I make of it, is this: The Commons, by that very Statute, did aboliſh the Power that the Lords had arrogated to themſelves; and Ordered, That they ſhould not meddle with any Cauſe, but upon the Impeachment of the Houſe of Commons, and eſtabliſh the Impeachment of the Commons, which is as antient as the Parliament, for that was never yet ſpoken againſt, the Power of the Commons impeaching any Perſon under the Degree of the Prince, and that is the regular legal Way; and ſo the Commons aſſerted their antient Right, and whatſoever the Lords took Notice of, muſt come by Application of the Commons; then Conferences were to paſs between the Houſes, and both Houſes, by Addreſſes, apply to the King: This is the proper Way and Courſe of Parliament, of which my Lord Cook ſays, It is known to few, and practiſed by fewer; but it is a venerable honourable Way, and this is the Courſe that ſhould have been taken by my Lords here, and they ſhould have ſtayed till the Complaint had come from the Commons in Parliament, and then it had been regular for them to addreſs to the King: But they were too quick, too nimble.

And whereas the Statute of Henry IV. ſays, That no Lord whatſoever ſhall intermeddle with any Cauſe, but by the Impeachment of the Commons, they interpoſe, and give their Advice before their Time; and if there be any Irregularity in Parliament, or out of Parliament, the Commons are to make their Complaint plaint of it; and a Man must not be his own Judge, nor his own Carver; nor must every Man create Difficulties of his own, nor set upon Petitioning in this Sort: But there I lay my Foundation, That in such a Matter as this, there ought to have been the Impeachment of the Commons in Parliament, before these Lords could do any thing: And I know nothing can be said for the Bishops more than this, that they were under an Anathema, under the Curse that Sir Robert Sawyer speaks of; and for Fear of that, they took this irregular Course. But some would say, Better fall into the Hands of God than of Men: Some would say so, (I say) I know not what they would say: But these being the Methods that these Lords should have taken, they should have pursued that Method: The Law should have carved out their Relief and Remedy for them; but they were for going by a new Fancy of their own.

My Lord, the Law continued thus, and was practised so till 3 Hen. 7. where the Grievance was found, that Offences in the Intervals of Parliament could not well be punished: And then comes the Statute that sets up the Court of Star-Chamber; and there Men were often brought to Judgment and Punishment for their Sins: And though very great Power was given them, yet they arrogated to themselves a greater; and therefore that Court is abolished by the Statute of 15 Car. I. And what is the Reason of abolishing that Statute? Because the Star-Chamber did not keep within their Bounds that the Law set them, but assumed to themselves a larger Power than the Law would allow; and grew very exorbitant and very grievous to the Subject. And another Reason was, which the Statute of 15 Car. I. founded it self upon, because there was nothing that was brought in Judgment before that Court, but might be relieved and remedied in the ordinary Methods of Justice in the Courts in Westminster-Hall: So that upon these two Considerations, because that Course was exorbitant, and because all the Sins and Misdemeanors that were punished there, might be punished in an ordinary way of Law in another Court, and therefore there was no Need of that Court; and so it was abolished, and the Subject was pretty safe. If there was a Crime committed here, a Man might come properly before your Lordship into this Court, and have it punished.

My Lord, they find Fault with the Words in the Information, and they say, Why are these Words put in, seditious, malicious? If the Matter be libellous and seditious, we may lawfully say so; and it is no more than the Law speaks; it results out of the Matter it self; and if it be a libellous Paper, the Law says, it is maliciously and seditiously done. And these Gentlemen need not quarrel with us, for so are all the Informations in all Times past; and 'tis no more than the vi & armis, which is Common Form. It may be said, How can the publishing of a Libel be said to be done vi & armis? That is only a Supposition of Law; and they may as well object to the Conclusion of the Information, that it was contra Coronam, & Dignitatem Domini Regis. If it be an illegal Thing, or a Libel, these are necessary Consequences: It is no more than the speaking of the Law upon the Fact.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

But, my Lord, let us a little consider, whether this Matter were warrantable, and whether they had any Warrant to do what was done: They pretend it was done upon this Account, That the King had set forth a Declaration, and had ordered them to read it; which to excuse themselves from, they make this Petition, or this Libel, (call it what you will): And they use this as the main Argument, That they say the King has done illegally; and they tell the King plainly so, that it is illegal: For they take Notice of this Declaration, and say it is illegal, because it is contrary to the Declarations of Parliament in 1662, 1672, and 1685.

Pray, my Lord, let us consider a little, whether there be any Declaration in Parliament that they have given Evidence of: Have they read any Declaration of the Parliament in 1662? What is a Declaration in Parliament, but a Bill that is passed by the King, Lords, and Commons? That we know to be the Meaning, and no other: If it pass the Commons it is no Declaration in Parliament; nay, if it pass the Lords and Commons, it is not a Declaration in Parliament, except it also pass the King. All these Things are Nullities, and the Law takes no Notice of them: We have it in our Books over and over; and no Court ought to suffer such Evidence to be given. I know these Gentlemen are very well acquainted with the Authority in Fitz-Herbert's, Title Parliament: There was an Act that was said to be by the King and the Lords; but because the Commons did not agree to it, it is declared and adjudged to be a Nullity; and the Court would take no Notice of it. And how can any Man call that a Declaration in Parliament which is only a Vote of the House of Commons, or of the Lords? No sure; that is one of the Heads I go upon: It's not a Declaration in Parliament, unless it be by an Act of Parliament.

Indeed, my Lord, there is another Sort of a Declaration in Parliament before the Lords, as they are a Court of Judicature, and that is a fair Declaration too; for if any thing comes Judicially before the Lords, either by Writ of Error, or by natural Appeal from any of the other Courts, or by Adjournment, and there be any Judgment given, That is a Declaration in Parliament, and may be fairly so called. So likewise there is another Judicial Declaration, which is, when any thing comes before the Lords Judicially, upon an Impeachment of the Commons, and they give Judgment, that is, a Declaration in Parliament: But to say, that there is any other Declaration in Parliament, is to say more than these Gentlemen can make out. If they will shew me any such, I will submit to them, and not speak a Word against my Lords the Bishops: But if these learned Gentlemen cannot shew me any such, then they have not said that was true in this Petition, that it was so and so declared in Parliament.

For

1688. 4 Jac. II.

For let us conſider what there is in this Caſe upon this Evidence; for that in 1662 is only a Vote and an Opinion of the Houſe of Commons: And I always underſtood, and have been told ſo by ſome of the Gentlemen of the other Side, that ſuch a Vote ſignifies nothing: But beſides, it ſeems to be a miſtaken Addreſs; for they ſay in it, that the Declaration in 1662. which they addreſs againſt, was the firſt Declaration of that Sort, to ſuſpend Laws without Act of Parliament; and yet in the ſame Breath they do take Notice of the King's Declaration from Breda. But here is a mighty Argument uſed from the King's Speech, That becauſe he wiſhed he had ſuch a Power, this muſt be declared in Parliament that he had no ſuch Power. Is the Speech of the Prince a Declaration in Parliament? All the Speeches that were made upon the opening of the Parliament, will you ſay they are Declarations in Parliament? Then the Chancellor, or the Keeper's Speech, or the Lord Privy Seal's, muſt be a Declaration in Parliament. Whoever ſpeaks the Senſe of the King, if he does not ſpeak that which is Law and Right, is queſtionable for it: And ſeveral have been impeached for ſo doing; for they look not upon it as the King's Speech, except it be according to Law: Nothing can turn upon the Prince but what is Legal: If it be otherwiſe, it turns upon him that ſpeaks it. I never did hear that a Speech made by the Chancellor (and I will appeal to all the Lords that hear me in it) was a Declaration in Parliament.

Then, my Lord, we come to the Buſineſs in 1672, which with that in 1662, and that in Breda, ſhews that this of the King's is not ſuch a Novelty, but has been done often before. In 1672, the King was in Diſtreſs for Money, being intangled in a Dutch War, and wanted Supply: He capitulates with his Commons, you have heard it read; and, upon the Commons Addreſs, he aſſerts it to be his Right, and makes his Complaint to the Lords how the Commons had uſed him; for, when he gives them a fair Anſwer, they reply, and there are Conferences with the Lords about it; but at length it all ends in a Speech by the King, who comes and tells them of his preſent Neceſſities, and ſo he was minded to remit a little at the Inſtigation of the Commons; and he has a good Lump of Money for it. Would this amount to a Declaration in Parliament? Can my Lords the Biſhops fancy or imagine, that this is to be impoſed upon the King, or upon the Court, for a Declaration in Parliament?

Then, laſt of all, for that in 1685, in this King's Time, What is it? The Commons make an Addreſs to the King, and complain to his Majeſty of ſome of his Officers in his Army, that might pretend to have a Diſpenſation, ſomething of that Nature, contrary to the Teſt Act: And what is done upon it? They make their Application to the King, andthe King anſwers them; and that is all. But ſince it is ſpoken of in the Court, I would take Notice, That it is very well known by the Caſe of Godwin and Hales, the Judgment of this Court was againſt the Opinion of that Addreſs.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

But what Sort of Evidence is all this? Would you allow all the Addreſſes of the Houſe of Commons to be Evidence? Give me Leave to ſay it, my Lord, If you ſuffer theſe Votes, theſe Copies of imperfect Bills, theſe Addreſſes and Applications of one or both Houſes to the King, to be Evidence and Declarations in Parliament, then what will become of the Bill of Excluſion? Shall any body mention that Bill of Excluſion to be a Declaration in Parliament? If ſo, then there is Declaration againſt Declaration; the Declarations of the Commons againſt the Declaration of the Lords. I know not what Judgment my Lords the Biſhops may be of now, concerning thoſe Things of Votes and Addreſſes being Declarations in Parliament, but I am ſure they have ſpoken againſt it heretofore; nay, I am ſure ſome of them have preached againſt it.

And if my Lords the Biſhops have ſaid, Theſe are Declarations in Parliament, and they are not Declarations in Parliament; and if they accuſe the King of having done an illegal Thing, becauſe he has done that which has been declared in Parliament to be illegal, when it was never ſo declared, then the Conſequence is very plain, that they are miſtaken ſometimes; and I ſuppoſe by this Time they believe it.

I dare ſay, it will not be denied me, That the King may, by his Prerogative Royal, iſſue forth his Proclamation: It is as eſſential a Prerogative, as it is to give his Aſſent to an Act of Parliament to make it a Law. And it is another Principle, which I think cannot be denied, That the King may make Conſtitutions and Orders in Matters Eccleſiaſtical; and that theſe he may make out of Parliament, and without the Parliament. If the King may do ſo, and theſe are his Prerogatives, then ſuppoſe the King does iſſue forth his Royal Proclamation (and ſuch in effect is this Declaration under the Great Seal) in a Matter Eccleſiaſtical, by Virtue of his Prerogative Royal, and this Declaration is read in the Council and publiſhed to the World; and then the Biſhops come and tell the King, Sir, You have iſſued out an illegal Declaration, being contrary to what has been declared in Parliament, when there is no Declaration in Parliament: Is not this a diminiſhing the King's Power and Prerogative, in iſſuing forth his Declaration, and making Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical? Is not this a queſtioning of his Prerogative? Do not my Lords the Biſhops, in this Caſe, raiſe a Queſtion between the King and the People? Do not they (as much as in them lies) ſtir up the People to Sedition? For who ſhall be Judge between the King and the Biſhops? Says the King, I have ſuch a Power and Prerogative to iſſue forth my Royal Proclamation, and to make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, and that without the Parliament, and out of Parliament. Say my Lords the Biſhops, You have done ſo, but you have no Warrant for it. Says the King,

Every

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Every Prince hath done it; and I have done no more than what is my Prerogative to do: But this, ſay the Biſhops, is againſt Law. How ſhall this be tried? Should not the Biſhops have had the Patience to have waited till a Parliament came? When the King himſelf tells them, He would have a Parliament in November at the furtheſt.

L. C. J. Pray, Mr. Sollicitor, come cloſe to the Buſineſs, for it is very late.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I beg your Patience: You have had a great deal of Patience with them: Pray ſpare me a little. I am ſaying, When the King himſelf tells them that He would have a Parliament in November at furtheſt, yet they have no Patience to ſtay till November, but make this Application to him: Is not this raiſing a Queſtion upon the King's Prerogative in iſſuing forth Declarations? and upon the King's Power and Right in Matters Eccleſiaſtical? And when I have ſaid this, that my Lords the Biſhops have ſo done; If they have raiſed a Queſtion upon the Right of the King, and the Power of the King in Matters Eccleſiaſtical, then they have ſtirred up Sedition. That they have ſo done, is pretty plain; and for the Conſequence of it, I ſhall appeal to the Caſe in the 2 Cro. 2. Jac. I. That it is a plain direct Authority for me.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Nay, Mr. Sollicitor, we all very well know, to deny the King's Authority in Temporals and Spirituals, as by Act of Parliament, is High-Treaſon.

Mr. Soll. Gen. I carry it not ſo far, Sir: We have a gracious Prince; and my Lords the Biſhops find it ſo by this Proſecution. But what ſays that Caſe? It is printed in three Books, in Noy 100, in Moor 375, and in Mr. Juſt. Cro. 371, ſays that Caſe, The King may make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical.

Mr. Juſtice Powel. But how will you apply that Caſe to this in Hand, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. I will apply it by and by, Sir. I would firſt ſhew what it is: There is a Convention of the greateſt Men in the Kingdom ——

Mr. Juſtice Powel. Indeed, Mr. Sollicitor, you ſhoot at Rovers.

Mr. Sol. Gen. There is the Lord Privy Seal, the Archbiſhop of Canterbury, and a great many others: It is the greateſt Aſſembly we meet with in our Books; and all of them are of this Opinion, That the King may make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical.

My Lord, there is another Authority, and that is, from the Statute 1 Eliz. which erected the High Commiſſion Court; and that Statute was not Introductory of a new Law, but Declaratory of the old Law. The King, by his Proclamation, declares his Senſe to do ſuch and ſuch a Thing; the Court, and all Perſons there, give their Judgment and Opinion upon that Statute, That they looked upon it as the groſſeſt Thing, and the fouleſt Affront to the Prince, for any Man to bring into Queſtion that Power of the King in Matters Eccleſiaſtical; 'tis ſaid to be a very high Crime. Why then, my Lord, what is done in this Caſe?

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Mr. Juſtice Powel. Mr. Sollicitor, Pray, when you are applying, apply that other Part of the Caſe too, which ſays, it was a heinous Offence, to raiſe a Rumour that the King did intend to grant a general Toleration: And is there any Law ſince that has changed it, Mr. Sollicitor?

Mr. Sol. Gen. In the main, Judgment goes another way: As for that Part, it was perſonal to the Prince that then was, of whom they had ſcandalouſly reported, that he intended to do ſuch a Thing. They looked upon it as a Scandal to King James; that it was a ſowing Sedition, and ſtirring up People againſt the Government; and that will come up to our Caſe: For as ſome Men do it on the right Side, others do it on the left: And whoever he be that endeavours to bring a Diſlike of the King in the People, that is moving Sedition againſt the Prince; but that is perſonal to the Prince himſelf, and does not go to his Succeſſors.

Now, my Lord, I come to that which is very plain, from the Caſe of De Libellis Famoſis: If any Perſon, in any Paper, have ſlandered the Government, You are not to examine who is in the Right, and who is in the Wrong; whether what they ſaid to be done by the Government be Legal or no; but whether the Party have done ſuch an Act. If the King have a Power (for ſtill I keep to that) to iſſue forth Proclamations to his Subjects, and to make Orders and Conſtitutions in Matters Eccleſiaſtical; if he does iſſue forth his Proclamation, and make an Order upon the Matters within his Power and Prerogative; and if any one would come and bring that Power in Queſtion, I ſay that is Sedition; and you are not to examine the Legality, or Illegality of the Order or Proclamation: And that I think is very plain upon that Caſe, in the 5th Report; for it ſays, If a Perſon does any thing that is Libellous, you ſhall not examine the Fact, but the Conſequence; whether it tended to ſtir up Sedition againſt the Publick, or to ſtir up Strife between Man and Man. In the Caſe of private Perſons, as if a Man ſhould ſay of a Judge, He has taken a Bribe, and I will prove it: This is not to be ſent in a Letter; but they muſt take a regular Way to proſecute it according to Law.

If it be ſo in the Caſe of an inferior Magiſtrate, what muſt it be in the Caſe of the King? To come to the King's Face, and tell him (as they do here) that he has acted illegally, doth certainly, ſufficiently prove the Matter to be Libellous. What do they ſay to the King? They ſay and admit, that they have an Averſeneſs for the Declaration; and they tell him from whence that Averſeneſs doth proceed: And yet they inſinuate, that they had an Inclination to gratify the King, and embrace the Diſſenters, that were as averſe to them as could be, with due Tenderneſs, when it ſhould be ſettled by Parliament and Convocation. Pray, what hath their Convocation to do in this Matter?

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Lord Chief Juſtice. Mr. Sollicitor General, I will not interrupt you; but, pray, come to the Buſineſs before us: Shew us that this is in Diminution of the King's Prerogative; or that the King ever had ſuch a Prerogative.

Mr. Soll Gen. I will, my Lord: I am obſerving what it is they ſay in this Petition—— They tell the King, It is inconſiſtent with their Honour, Prudence, and Conſcience, to do what he would have them to do; and if theſe Things are not reflective upon the King and Government, I know not what is: This is not in a way of Judicature: Poſſibly it might have been allowable to petition the King to put it into a Courſe of Juſtice, whereby it may be tried; but alas! there is no ſuch thing in this Matter. It is not their Deſire to put it into any Method of Trial; and ſo it comes in the Caſe De Libellis Famoſis; for by this Way, they make themſelves Judges, which no Man by Law is permitted to do. My Lords the Biſhops have gone out of the Way; and all that they have offered does not come home to juſtify them; and therefore I take it, under Favour, that we have made it a good Caſe for the King: We have proved what they have done; and whether this be warrantable or not is the Queſtion, Gentlemen, that you are to try. The whole Caſe appears upon Record; the Declaration and Petition are ſet forth, and the Order of the King and Council. When the Verdict is brought in, they may move any thing what they pleaſe in Arreſt of Judgment: They have had a great deal of Latitude, and taken a great deal of Liberty: But truly, I apprehend, not ſo very pertinently. But I hope we have made a good Caſe of it for the King, and that You, Gentlemen, will give us a Verdict.

Mr. Juſtice Holloway. Mr. Sollicitor, there is one thing I would feign be ſatisfied in: You ſay the Biſhops have no Power to petition the King.

Mr. Soll. Gen. Not out of Parliament, Sir.

Mr. Juſt. Holloway. Pray give me Leave, Sir. Then the King having made ſuch a Declaration of a general Toleration and Liberty of Conſcience; and afterwards he comes and requires the Biſhops to diſperſe this Declaration: This they ſay, out of a Tenderneſs of Conſcience, they cannot do, becauſe they apprehend it contrary to Law, and contrary to their Function. What can they do, if they may not Petition?

Mr Soll. Gen. I'll tell you what they ſhould have done, Sir. If they were commanded to do any thing againſt their Conſciences, they ſhould have acquieſced till the meeting of the Parliament.

[At which ſome People in the Court hiſſed.]

Mr. Att. Gen. This is very fine, indeed: I hope the Court and the Jury will take Notice of this Carriage.

Mr. Soll. Gen. My Lord, it is one thing for a Man to ſubmit to his Prince, if the King lay a Command upon him that he cannot obey, and another thing to affront him. If the King will impoſe upon a Man what he cannot do, he muſt acquieſce: But ſhall he come and fly in the Face of his Prince? Shall he ſay it is illegal? and that the Prince acts againſt Prudence, Honour, or Conſcience; and throw Dirt in the King's Face? Sure that is not to be permitted; that is Libelling with a Witneſs. 1688. 4 Jac. II.

L. C. J. Truly, Mr. Sollicitor, I am of Opinion, that the Biſhops might petition the King; but this is not the right Way of bringing it: I am not of that Mind, that they cannot petition the King out of Parliament; but if they may petition, yet they ought to have done it after another Manner; for if they may in this reflective way petition the King, I am ſure it will make the Government very precarious.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. Mr. Sollicitor, it would have been too late to ſtay for a Parliament; for it was to have been diſtributed by ſuch a Time.

Mr. Soll. Gen. They might have lain under it, and ſubmitted.

Mr. Juſt. Powel. No, they would have run into Contempt of the King's Command, without petitioning the King not to inſiſt upon it: And if they had petitioned, and not have ſhewn the Reaſon why they could not obey, it would have been looked upon as a piece of Sullenneſs; and that they would have been blamed for, as much on the other Side.

L. C. J. I do aſſure you, if it had not been a Caſe of great Concern, I would not have heard you ſo long: It is a Caſe of a very great Concern to the King and the Government on the one Side, and to my Lords the Biſhops on the other; and I have taken all the Care I can to obſerve what has been ſaid on both Sides. 'Tis not to be expected that I ſhould repeat all the Speeches, or the particular Facts; but I will put the Jury in mind of the moſt material Things, as well as my Memory will give me Leave: But I have been interrupted by ſo many long and learned Speeches, and by the Length of the Evidence which has been brought in, in a very broken, unmethodical Way, that I ſhall not be able to do ſo well as I would. The Chief Juſtice directs the Jury.

Gentlemen, thus ſtands the Caſe: It is an Information againſt my Lords the Biſhops, his Grace my Lord of Canterbury, and the other ſix Noble Lords; and it is for preferring, compoſing, making, and publiſhing, and cauſing to bepubliſhed a Seditious Libel: The Way that the Information goes is ſpecial, and it ſets forth, That the King was graciouſly pleaſed, by his Royal Power and Prerogative, to ſet forth a Declaration of Indulgence for Liberty of Conſcience, in the third Year of his Reign; and afterwards, upon the 27th of April, in the fourth Year, he comes and makes another Declaration; and afterwards, in May, orders in Council, That this Declaration ſhould be publiſhed by my Lords the Biſhops in their ſeveral Dioceſes; and after this was done, my Lords the Biſhops come and preſent a Petition to the King, in which were contained the Words which you have ſeen.

Now, Gentlemen, the Proofs that have been upon this, you will ſee what they are; the two Declarations are proved by the Clerks of the Council, and they are brought here under the Great Seal: A Queſtion did ariſe,

Whether

1688. 4 Jac. II. Whether the Prints were the ſame with the Original Declarations? and that is proved by Hills, or his Man, that they were examined, and are the ſame: Then the Order of Council was produced by Sir John Nicholas, and has likewiſe been read to you: Then they come to prove the Fact againſt the Biſhops, and firſt they fall to proving their Hands; they begun indeed a great way off, and did not come ſo cloſe to it as they afterwards did; for ſome of their Hands they could hardly prove, but my Lord Archbiſhop's Hand was only proved and ſome others; but there might have been ſome Queſtion about that Proof, but afterwards it came to be proved, That my Lords the Biſhops owned their Hands; which, if they had produced at firſt, would have made the Cauſe ſomething ſhorter then it was.

The next Queſtion that did ariſe, was about the Publiſhing of it, Whether my Lords the Biſhops had publiſhed it? and it was inſiſted upon, That nobody could prove the Delivery of it to the King: It was proved the King gave it to the Council, and my Lords the Biſhops were called in; there they acknowledged their Hands, but nobody could prove how it came to King's Hands: Upon which we were all of Opinion, that it was not ſuch a Publiſhing as was within the Information; and I was going to have directed you, to find my Lords the Biſhops Not Guilty; but it happened, that being interrupted by an honeſt, worthy, learned Gentleman, the King's Counſel took the Advantage, and informing the Court that they had further Evidence for the King, we ſtaid till my Lord Preſident came, who told us how the Biſhops came to him to his Office at Whitehall, and after they had told him their Deſign, That they had a Mind to petition the King, they asked him the Method they were to take for it, and deſired him to help them to the Speech of the King: And he tells them he will acquaint the King with their Deſire, which he does; and the King giving Leave, he comes down, and tells the Biſhops, that they might go and ſpeak to the King when they would; and (ſays he) I have given Direction that the Door ſhall be opened for you as ſoon as you come: With that the two Biſhops went away, and ſaid, They would go and fetch their other Brethren; and ſo they did bring the other four, but my Lord Archbiſhop was not there; and immediately when they came back, they went up into the Chamber, and there a Petition was delivered to the King. He cannot ſpeak to that particular Petition, becauſe he did not read it; and that is all he knew of the Matter, only it was all done the ſame Day, and that was before my Lords the Biſhops appeared in Council. Gentlemen, after this was proved, then the Defendants came to their Part, and theſe Gentlemen that were of Counſel for my Lords let themſelves into their Defence by notable learned Speeches, by telling you, That my Lords the Biſhops are Guardians to the Church, and great Peers of the Realm, and were bound in Conſcience to take Care of the Church: They have read you a Clauſe of a Statute made in Queen Elizabeth's Time, by which they ſay, My Lords the Biſhops were under a Curſe, if they did not take care of that Law. Then they ſhew you ſome Records; one in Richard the Second's Time, which they could make little of, by reaſon their Witneſſes could not read it; but it was, in ſhort, a Liberty given to the King to diſpenſe with the Statute of Proviſors. Then they ſhew you ſome Journals of Parliament, firſt in the Year 1662, where the King had granted an Indulgence; and the Houſe of Commons declared it was not fit to be done, unleſs it were by Act of Parliament: And they read the King's Speech, wherein he ſays, He wiſhed he had ſuch a Power; and ſo likewiſe in 1672, which is all nothing but Addreſſes and Votes, or Orders of the Houſe, or Diſcourſes, either the King's Speech, or the Subjects Addreſſes; but theſe are not Declarations in Parliament, that is inſiſted upon by the Counſel for the King, That what is a Declaration in Parliament, is a Law, and that muſt be by the King, Lords, and Commons; the other is but common Diſcourſe, but a Vote of the Houſe, or a Signification of their Opinion, and cannot be ſaid to be a Declaration in Parliament. Then they come to that in 1685, where the Commons take Notice of ſomething about the Soldiers in the Army, that had not taken the Teſt, and make an Addreſs to the King about it; but in all theſe Things (as far as I can obſerve) nothing can be gathered out of them one way or other; it is all nothing but Diſcourſes. Sometimes this Diſpenſing Power has been allowed, as in Richard the Second's Time; and ſometimes it has been denied, and the King did once wave it; Mr. Sollicitor tells you the Reaſon, There was a Lump of Money in the Caſe: But I wonder indeed to hear it come from him. 1688. 4 Jac. II.

Mr. Sol. Gen. My Lord, I never gave my Vote for Money, I aſſure you.

L. C. J. But thoſe Conceſſions which the King ſometimes makes for the Good of the People, and ſometimes for the Profit of the Prince himſelf, (but I would not be thought to diſtinguiſh between the Profit of the Prince and the Good of the People, for they are both one; and what is the Profit of the Prince, is always for the Good of the People); but I ſay, thoſe Conceſſions muſt not be made Law, for that is reſerved in the King's Breaſt to do what he pleaſes in it at any Time. The Truth of it is, the Diſpenſing Power is out of the Caſe, it is only a Word uſed in the Petition; but truly I will not take upon me to give my Opinion in the Queſtion, to determine that now, for it is not before me; the only Queſtion before me is, and ſo it is before you, Gentlemen, it being a Queſtion of Fact, Whether here be a certain Proof of a Publication? and then the next Queſtion is a Queſtion of Law indeed, Whether, if there be a Publication proved, it be a Libel?

Gentlemen, upon the Point of the Publication I have ſummed up all the Evidence to you; and if you believe, that the Petition which theſe Lords preſented to the King, was this Petition; truly, I think, that is a Publication ſufficient; if you do not believe it was this Petition

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Petition, then my Lords the Biſhops are not guilty of what is laid to their Charge in this Information, and conſequently there needs no Enquiry, whether they are guilty of a Libel: But if you do believe that this was the Petition they preſented to the King, then we muſt come to enquire, Whether this be a Libel.

Now, Gentlemen, any Thing that ſhall diſturb the Government, or make Miſchief, and a Stir among the People, is certainly within the Caſe of Libellis Famoſis; and I muſt in ſhort give you my Opinion, I do take it to be a Libel. Now, this being a Point of Law, if my Brothers have any Thing to ſay to it, I ſuppoſe they will deliver their Opinions.

Judge Holloway's Opinion.

Then Mr. Juſtice Holloway delivered his Opinion, and ſaid: As it was the Right of every Subject to petition, it could not be a Fault, unleſs it were done with an ill Intent: Indeed if the Jury were ſatisfied it was done with an ill Intention, as to raiſe Sedition or the like, they ought to find them Guilty: But if they did deliver the Petition to ſave themſelves harmleſs, and to free themſelves from blame, by ſhewing the Reaſon of their Diſobedience to the King's Command, which they apprehended to be a Grievance to them, and which they could not in Conſcience give Obedience to, he could not think it was a Libel.

Judge Powel's Opinion.

Mr. Juſtice Powel alſo obſerved, That to make it a Libel, it muſt be falſe and malicious, and tend to Sedition; and he ſaw nothing offered by the King's Counſel to ſhew either the Falſhood or the Malice of it: Nor did he remember any Caſe in Law, and he had taken ſome Pains upon this Occaſion to look into it, that there was any ſuch Diſpenſing Power in the King, and then it could be no Libel: That this was a Diſpenſation with a Witneſs, which amounted to an Abrogation and utter Repeal of all Laws: And he could ſee no difference in Law between the King's Power to diſpenſe with Laws Eccleſiaſtical, and his Power to diſpenſe with any other Laws whatſoever: That if this were once allowed, they ſhould have no need of Parliaments; all the Legiſlature would be in the King, which was a Thing worth conſidering, and he left the Iſſue to God and their Conſciences.

Judge Allybone's Opinion.

Mr. Juſtice Allybone on the other hand ſaid, that he laid it down as a Rule, That no Man could take upon him to write againſt the actual Exerciſe of the Government, unleſs he had Leave from the Government; if he did, it was a Libel. That no private Man might take upon him to write againſt the Government at all: When the Government came to ſhake his particular Intereſt, he might redreſs himſelf by Law; but if he intruded into other Men's Buſineſs, that did not concern his particular Intereſt, he was a Libeller.

He agreed, every Man might petition the King or Government in a Matter that related to his own private Intereſt: But to meddle with a Matter that related to the Government, he did not think the Biſhops had any more Power to do that than others.

When the Houſe of Lords and Commons were ſitting, they had a proper way of applying to the King: But if every private Man was to interpoſe his Advice, there would be no End of adviſing the Government. And in the Reign of King James I. there was a ſolemn Reſolution, That it was a High Miſdemeanor, and next to Treaſon, to petition the King to put the Penal Laws in Execution.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Mr. Pollexfen. The Puritans threatened there, unleſs their Requeſt was granted, ſeveral Thouſands of the King's Subjects would be diſcontented.

Mr. Juſtice Powel. That was the Reaſon of that Judgment.

Mr. Juſtice Allybone ſaid, He laid no great Streſs on that Objection, That the Matter of that Petition was not falſe; and for Sedition, that was what every Libel carried in it ſelf: As every Treſpaſs implied Vi & Armis, ſo every Libel againſt the Government carried in it Sedition, and all the other Epithets that were in the Information. This was his Opinion as to the Law in general, and he ſhould not debate the Prerogative of the King, or the Privilege of the Subject; but as the Fact was, he thought theſe venerable Biſhops did meddle with that which did not belong to them: They took upon them in a Petitionary Way to contradict the actual Exerciſe of the Government, which he thought no particular Perſons might do.

The Jury had Leave to ſend for Wine, and deſiring they might have the Papers out with them, which had been given in Evidence, the Chief Juſtice ſaid, They might have a Copy of the Information, the Libel, and the Declaration under Seal, but not the Votes of the Houſe of Commons, or the Journals; for they could have no Paper that was not under Seal.

The Jury then withdrawing, remained together all Night, without Fire or Candle: And the Court ſitting again next Morning (being Saturday the 30th of June) the Biſhops came into Court, and the Jury brought in their The Biſhops acquitted. Verdict, that the Defendants were NOT GUILTY.

At which the People ſhouting, Mr. Sollicitor moved they might be committed; and a Gentleman of Grays-Inn was apprehended, to whom the Chief Juſtice ſaid, I am as glad, Sir, as you can be, that my Lords the Biſhops are acquitted; but your Manner of rejoycing in Court is indecent: However he was ſoon after diſcharged.

Then the Court aroſe, and my Lords the Biſhops were permitted to return Home, the Attorney General informing the Court he had nothing more againſt them.

The Victory King James's Forces obtained over the Duke of Monmouth at Sedgemore, in the Year 1685, was the Ruin of that Prince. The King looked upon himſelf to be ſo well eſtabliſhed by that ſucceſsful Battel, that he was no longer under a Neceſſity of concealing his Paſſion for Popery; or indeed of keeping his Word, which he had ſo ſolemnly given at his Acceſſion, to protect and maintain the Church of England, and the Civil Conſtitution.

He told the Parliament, at their Meeting the following Winter, that he both had, and would employ Popiſh Officers: And when that dutiful Houſe of Commons addreſſed him, and offered fered to indemnify the Popiſh Officers for what paſſed; but deſired he would not continue any Recuſants in Office; he imperiouſly anſwered, He did not expect ſuch an Addreſs from the Houſe of Commons, and prorogued them a few Days afterwards, though they were then upon a Bill for raiſing his Majeſty 700,000 Pounds: Nor did he ever ſuffer them to meet afterwards; but increaſing his ſtanding Forces, diſplacing ſeveral Proteſtant Officers, and employing Iriſh Popiſh Officers to command them in their Stead, plainly diſcovered his Intentions of introducing his Religion by Force, without any Regard to the Laws and Statutes of the Realm: This was further manifeſted by his Majeſty's aſſuming a Diſpenſing Power, which in Effect repealed and abrogated all our Laws at once. And when Sir Thomas Jones Lord Chief Juſtice of the Common Pleas, the Lord Chief Baron Mountague, Sir Job Charlton one of the Judges of the Common Pleas, and Sir Edward Nevil, one of the Barons of the Exchequer, declared, (their Opinions being demanded) That the King could not diſpenſe with the Laws, either in Favour of the Papiſts or Diſſenters, they were diſplaced, and more complying Lawyers advanced to thoſe Poſts: One of them, Chriſtopher Milton, who was made a Baron of the Exchequer, being a profeſſed Roman Catholick, as was alſo Richard Allybone, who was not long after preferred to be one of the Judges of the King's-Bench; and ſeveral Popiſh Lords were called to the Council-Table, particularly the Lords Powis, Arundel, Bellaſis, and Dover.

And we find it was ſoon after reſolved, in the Caſe of Godwin and Hales above-mentioned, That the King might diſpenſe with the penal Laws in Caſes of Neceſſity; and that the King was Judge of that Neceſſity.

Whereupon the Papiſts were allowed the free and open Exerciſe of their Religion; Schools and Seminaries of Jeſuits, and other Orders, were erected; four Popiſh Biſhops were conſecrated in the Royal Chapel, and ſent to exerciſe Epiſcopal Juriſdiction in ſeveral Parts of England: Their Paſtoral Letters, directed to the Engliſh Catholicks, were printed by the King's Printer, and diſperſed all over England; Monks and Friers of all Orders appeared in their proper Habits; and, leſt the Clergy of the Church of England ſhould preach againſt Popery, his Majeſty's Letters were directed to all Proteſtant Biſhops, requiring them to prohibit their inferior Clergy to meddle with any controverted Points of Religion: And, by what followed ſoon after, it was manifeſt, the principal Motive for this Injunction was, That they might not preach againſt Popery. However, the Divines of the Church of England never exerted their Talents more vigorouſly or ſucceſsfully, in preaching and writing againſt all the Abſurdities of Popery, than at this Time; while the Diſſenting Teachers, of every Denomination, remained ſilent, or rather flattered and encouraged this unfortunate Prince in his Projects of diſpenſing with the Laws, and breaking down thoſe Boundaries, which had hitherto ſo happily defended and protected the Proteſtant Religion, and the Liberties and Properties of the People.

The Church of England, therefore, now became the principal Object of the King's Averſion, and the Butt againſt which the Popiſh Miniſters levelled their whole Artillery; and the Court not being able to change and new model the Bench of Biſhops, as they had done the Lay Judges, a Kind of High Commiſſion Court was erected, entitled, The Commiſſion for Cauſes Eccleſiaſtical, on which an unlimited and abſolute Power was conferred over all Cauſes and Perſons Eccleſiaſtical; and, for Form-ſake, Dr. Sancroft, Archbiſhop of Canterbury, was made the firſt Commiſſioner; but he refuſed to act: And ſome other Biſhops were made Members of this Court, particularly the Biſhops of Rocheſter and Durham; but theſe at length withdrew, as did alſo ſome of the Lay Commiſſioners. The Lord Chancellor Jeffries, and the Earl of Sunderland, Preſident of the Council, were the principal Men the King depended on, to bring the Church of England under the Subjection of the See of Rome; or, rather to eſtabliſh Popery in the Room of the Church of England: Not that theſe Noblemen were really Papiſts; they ſeemed indifferent to all Religions, but could profeſs any to advance their Fortunes, and make their Court to the Powers in Being.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

This Commiſſion was generally held to be illegal; for the Statute of 17 Car. I. which aboliſhed the High Commiſſion Court, had enacted, That no Court ſhould be erected with the like Power or Juriſdiction for the future, and the Statute of 13 Car. II. which confirmed the ordinary Power of Archbiſhops and Biſhops, rectified that Clauſe in the 17th of Car. I. for aboliſhing the High Commiſſion Court, and all Courts of the like Nature: However, the King having obtained the Opinions of ſome of the Judges, that he had Power to erect ſuch a Court, the Biſhops of Rocheſter and Durham, the Lord Mulgrave, and ſome others, ſubmitted to act by virtue of this Commiſſion, for ſome Time; more out of Fear to offend the King, than upon Choice.

Not long before the opening of this Commiſſion, Dr. Sharp, Rector of St. Giles's in the Fields, (afterwards Archbiſhop of York) had preached a Sermon againſt Popery; at which the King was highly offended, and wrote to Dr. Compton, Biſhop of London, to ſuſpend him; which the Biſhop neglecting, it occaſioned the Proſecution of that Right Reverend Prelate above-mentioned, that ended in his own Suſpenſion by the ſaid Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, whoſe Juriſdiction that Prelate bravely conteſted, as contrary to the ſaid Statutes of 17 Car. I. and 13 Car. II.

The Biſhops of Durham, Rocheſter, and Peterborough, were appointed by the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, to exerciſe Epiſcopal Authority in the Dioceſe of London, during the Biſhop's Suſpenſion; which was not taken off till the Rumour of the Prince of Orange's intended Invaſion.

The next that fell under the Weight of the King's Diſpleaſure, was, the Univerſity of Cambridge: His Majeſty had found Means to get one Baſſet, a Roman-Catholick, choſen Maſter of Sidney-College; and, in the Year 1687, ſent his Letter Mandatory to that Univerſity, to admit Alban Francis, a Benedictine Monk, to the Degree of Maſter of Arts, without adminiſtring to him the uſual Oaths: And when the Univerſity of Cambridge petitioned in the 1688. 4 Jac. II. humbleſt Manner, to be excuſed from doing that illegal Act, which was ſo contrary to their Statutes and their Oaths; we find the King made uſe of the ſame illegal Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion to puniſh them for it, and diſplace the Vice-Chancellor; and the Univerſity too much countenanced that Authority, by electing another Vice-Chancellor, before Dr. Peachell was legally diſplaced: However, they deſerve great Applauſe, in perſiſting to refuſe Father Francis his Degree, when they ſaw the King in the Height of his Power, and ſupported by a ſtanding Army: May the Univerſity ever be governed by Men of Equal Courage and Zeal for their Religion!

The next Piece of Oppreſſion the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners were employed in, was, the expelling the Fellows of Magdalen-College in Oxford, for not electing that Scandal to the Univerſity, Anthony Farmer, for their Preſident; a Man every Way unqualified for that Poſt: The King indeed afterwards, aſhamed to inſiſt on their chuſing a Perſon of ſo profligate a Character, commanded them to elect the Biſhop of Oxford their Preſident; but they had before elected Dr. Hough, and truly anſwered, The Place was full; whereupon we find the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners broke open the Doors of the Preſident's Lodgings, and expelled him and moſt of the Fellows from their Fellowſhips, which were their Freeholds: A Stretch of Juriſdiction beyond what the antient High Commiſſion Court had pretended to, before it was ſuppreſſed. And, if the King had continued thus to impoſe Heads of Houſes and Fellows upon the Univerſity, and not been oppoſed in it, there is no Doubt, but we ſhould have ſeen the Colleges ſoon repleniſhed with Jeſuits, and other Popiſh Orders; and the Univerſities themſelves made inſtrumental to the Deſign of ſubverting the Eſtabliſhed Religion, and introducing Popery. The Preſident and Fellows of Magdalen-College can never be ſufficiently applauded, therefore, for making ſo brave a Stand, when the King had aſſumed, and in a Manner poſſeſſed himſelf of a deſpotick Power, having no Parliament to be a Check upon him; few Judges that durſt diſpute his Commands, how illegal ſoever; and a Standing Army ſufficient to have terrified the Boldeſt into a Compliance with his Dictates.

But, before the King proceeded to Extremity, it is ſaid, his Majeſty uſed Abundance of Artifice to wheedle or fright this College into his Meaſures; and, amongſt other Stratagems, employed that ſubtil Quaker Penn to write to the College, and tell them, that the King's Temper was ſuch, that he would never be baffled in any thing he heartily eſpouſed: And to ſuggeſt that there were ſo many Statutes to be obſerved, That it was impoſſible but ſome of them muſt be broken; and a Failure in any one Point would forfeit their Charter, and lay them open to the Royal Diſpleaſure: And that their Deſtruction would make Way for the intended Reformation, that was aimed at, firſt in the Univerſities, and then in the Church: From whence he infers, that for their own Sakes, and for the Sake of the Publick, it would be their Wiſdom to comply with his Majeſty.

To this Letter, it is ſaid, the College returned an Anſwer of the following Tenor: That they were not conſcious they had given his Majeſty any juſt Offence; and the Miſdemeanors of ſome particular Perſons could not deſtroy a College; but if their College ſhould be diſſolved, the Revenues would return to the Heirs of the Founders, and not devolve on the Crown: That if their College was to be made the firſt Example of that Kind, they ſhould juſtify themſelves better, by an Obſervation of their Statutes and of their Oaths, at leaſt to God and their Conſciences, than by a voluntary and deliberate Breach of them; concluding with ſome Inſtances of their Loyalty to the Crown, even in this Reign; particularly during Monmouth's Rebellion, when they raiſed a Company at their own Charge, and fought the Enemy under thoſe very Fellows that were now threatned with Expulſion. 1688. 4 Jac. II.

That mercenary Prelate Dr. Parker, Biſhop of Oxford, who was forced upon the College as their Preſident, did not only palliate and defend theſe illegal and arbitrary Proceedings of the King and the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners in Converſation, but publiſhed a Book for that End, intitled, Reaſons for Abrogating the Teſt (which was licenſed by the Earl of Sunderland, then Secretary of State, Lord Preſident, and Prime Miniſter) in which he ſhamefully betrayed the Intereſts of his own Order, and of the Church of England in general: Whereupon another Writer obſerved, That if there were two or three Falſe Brethren (among twenty-ſix Biſhops) who had been preferred to do the Dirty Work of the Court, they might comfort themſelves, that (among a Dozen of as good Men) there was one as bad as this Traitor Parker could be, who betrayed his Mother, as the other did his Maſter.

The next violent Attack King James made upon the Church, was, in proſecuting and impriſoning the ſeven Biſhops, for not promoting the diſpenſing Power, and commanding their inferior Clergy to read his Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience in their Churches, and for Petitioning that he would not inſiſt upon it. Theſe Right Reverend Prelates were no ſooner acquitted of the Crime of Libelling, with which they were charged, for preferring the ſaid Petition to the King, but the People appeared tranſported; ſuch Shouts and Rejoicings were never known, as upon this Occaſion: The People of London, and the reſt of England, as they received Advice of the Biſhops being acquitted, were extremely loud in their Acclamations: The very Army at Hounſlow-Heath made the Air ring with their Shouts; at which his Majeſty, who was that Day in the Camp, was perfectly confounded; and having ordered Maſs to be ſaid about the ſame Time on Board the Fleet, a Mutiny was apprehended among the Sea-men, who were reſtrained with ſome Difficulty from throwing the Popiſh Prieſts over-Board.

The King, to ſhew his Reſentment againſt the two Judges, Sir Richard Holloway and Sir John Powel, who had delivered their Opinions in Favour of the Biſhops, diſplaced them; and ſtill perſiſted in his Reſolution of compelling the Clergy to read his Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience; commanding the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſioners, to iſſue their Precepts to all Chancellors, cellors, Archdeacons, Commiſſaries, and Officials, to enquire in what Churches and Chapels the Declaration was not read, and to tranſmit an Account of the Defaulters to the Commiſſioners; but ſcarce any Body appeared at the Day appointed; and the Biſhop of Rocheſter, one of the Commiſſioners, refuſed to ſit any longer amongſt them; declaring, he would rather ſuffer with his Brethren, the Biſhops, than concur in proſecuting thoſe who refuſed to read the Declaration.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

The King, finding that little Obedience was given to the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion, and that ſeveral of the Commiſſioners refuſed to act, made his Court to the Soldiery, to aſſiſt him in compelling his Subjects to ſubmit to a Diſpenſing Power; propoſing it to the Officers and Soldiers to ſign an Inſtrument, engaging themſelves to contribute, to the utmoſt of their Power, to procure the Penal Laws and Teſt to be repealed: And a Writing of this Tenor was ordered to be offered to every Regiment, ſeverally to be ſigned.

The firſt Experiment was made of the Earl of Litchfield's Regiment; which being drawn up under Arms, the Major made a ſhort Speech to the Soldiers upon the Occaſion, and commanded all thoſe who did not think fit to ſubſcribe to it, to lay down their Arms: When, to the great Surprize of his Majeſty, who was preſent, the whole Regiment grounded their Arms, except two Captains, and ſome private Soldiers: Whereupon the King, after ſome Pauſe, ordered them to handle their Arms again; telling them, he ſhould not for the future do them the Honour to aſk their Advice; and thereupon dropped his Deſign, without making any further Trial of the Diſpoſition of his Forces, but proceeded with more haſte in his Project of new-modelling his Army, by diſcharging the Engliſh Proteſtants, and introducing Iriſh Catholicks; which provoked his Army ſtill more: And before he could make any great Progreſs in this Matter, Advice was brought of the Prince of Orange's intended Invaſion.

Thus had this unhappy Prince worked himſelf out of the Affections of the whole Nation, by a Series of Mal Adminiſtration, and a Succeſſion of political Blunders; ſuch as were ſurely never committed, till this weak Reign, at leaſt in ſo ſhort a Time. The Univerſities, the Biſhops and Clergy; the Parliament, Nobility, and Commons; the Army and the Navy, all of them, appearing eminently loyal and affectionate to his Perſon at his Acceſſion, were, within leſs than the Space of four Years, ſo highly exaſperated by his arbitrary Adminiſtration, and alarmed at his Attempts to ſubvert the Conſtitution, that, when an Invaſion threatned him, he ſaw the Nation ripe for a general Revolt, and ſcarce knew a Man he could rely upon.

In which Diſtreſs he applied himſelf to thoſe very Biſhops, and their Brethren, he had ſo unjuſtly and ungratefully proſecuted; offering to undo all he had been doing, to introduce Popery and an arbitrary Dominion, ever ſince Monmouth's Defeat: And theſe truly Chriſtian Fathers, far from any Thoughts of Revenge, gave him the beſt Advice they could, to re-eſtabliſh him in the good Opinion of his Subjects, and to reſtore and ſecure the Conſtitution of the Government at the ſame Time.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

1. They adviſed him, in the firſt Place, to put the Government of the ſeveral Counties into the Hands of ſuch Noblemen and Gentlemen, as were qualified by Law for thoſe Poſts.

2. To aboliſh the Eccleſiaſtical Commiſſion.

3. To grant no Diſpenſations to any particular Perſons, to hold Places or Preferments, that were not legally qualified for them; and particularly, that he would reſtore the Fellows of Magdalen-College in Oxford.

4. To revoke all Licences and Faculties given to Papiſts to teach publick Schools.

5. That he would relinquiſh the diſpenſing Power.

6. That he would prohibit the four foreign Biſhops, who ſtiled themſelves Vicars Apoſtolical, to invade the Eccleſiaſtical Juriſdiction.

7. To fill up the vacant Biſhopricks, in England and Ireland, with Men duly qualified for them; particularly that of York.

8. To ſuperſede all Proſecutions on Quo Warranto's againſt Corporations, and reſtore them their antient Charters.

9. That his Majeſty would call a Parliament, wherein the Church of England might be ſecured according to the Acts of Uniformity; a Proviſion made for a due Liberty of Conſcience, and the Liberties and Properties of the Subjects ſecured. And,

10. That his Majeſty would permit his Biſhops to offer ſuch Arguments, as they truſted, by God's Grace, would induce his Majeſty to return to the Communion of the Church of England, in which Moſt Holy Catholick Church he had been baptized, in which he was educated, and to which it was their daily Prayer he might be re-united.

With moſt of theſe Propoſitions his Majeſty immediately complied. The Lord Chancellor Jeffries, by the King's Order, carried the City of London their antient Charters: The Lord-Lieutenants of the ſeveral Counties were ordered to redreſs all Abuſes and Innovations, that had been made in the reſt of the Corporations of the Kingdom: The Biſhop of Wincheſter, Viſitor of Magdalen-College, was ordered to reſtore the excluded Fellows: A Proclamation was publiſhed for reſtoring the antient Charters to the reſpective Corporations: The Popiſh Lord-Lieutenants, Deputy-Lieutenants, Juſtices of Peace, Mayors, and other diſqualified Officers and Magiſtrates, were diſplaced; and thoſe of the Church of England put in their Room; particularly the Anabaptiſt Lord-Mayor of London, Sir John Eyles, was diſplaced, and the Chair ſupplied by Sir John Chapman, a Member of the Church of England: For the Diſſenters, of all Denominations, had made great Advantages of the King's Declaration for Liberty of Conſcience, as well as the Papiſts.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

But all theſe Conceſſions and Regulations came too late; the Nation was ſufficiently convinced they were all forced from the King, and whenever he had an Opportunity, he would renew his Attempts upon the Conſtitution. It was the general Opinion, therefore, that he ought to be ſo reſtrained and limited in the Exerciſe of the Government, that it ſhould be no more in his Power to ſhake the Foundations on which it was eſtabliſhed: Though, I am ſatisfied, neither the Biſhops, nor a Majority of the Nation, had then then any Proſpect of that Revolution which ſucceeded ſo ſoon after, or of depoſing the King.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Some of them propoſed the ſame or the like Expedients, for ſecuring the Conſtitution, at the Meeting of the Parliament, as had been offered when the Bill of Excluſion was upon the Anvil; particularly, that all the great Officers, Miniſters, Judges, and Magiſtrates ſhould be nominated by the Parliament for the future.

Others had actually invited over the Prince and Princeſs of Orange, propoſing, that the Government ſhould be adminiſtered by that Princeſs, the next Proteſtant Heir to the Crown, during the Life of her Father, and that he ſhould retain little more than the Title and Revenue of a King: And this, poſſibly, was as much as the Prince of Orange himſelf expected at that Time.

But there was ſtill a third Claſs, conſiſting of Diſſenters and Republicans, that were for altering the Conſtitution entirely, to that of a Commonwealth, like that of Holland; and if they had not Strength to carry that Point, they propoſed to depoſe King James, and ſet the Prince of Orange, alone, upon the Throne, under ſuch Limitations and Reſtrictions, as he ſhould have little more than the Name of King. But the Expectations of none of theſe were exactly anſwered; for, after a terrible Concuſſion, the Government ſettled almoſt on the ſame Baſis it had ſtood for many Years before. I ſhall conclude theſe Remarks with this further Obſervation; That all Parties, except the Papiſts, at the Revolution, agreed, the King ought to be reſtrained in the Exerciſe of his Power, though they did not agree in the Manner of reſtraining him.

The Caſe.

THIS is no State Matter, only an ordinary Trial for Murder, and that very imperfect; however, it appears that ſome Gentlemen got drunk at the Swan-Tavern on Fiſh-ſtreet-Hill, and quarrelling at the Tavern Door, as they were going away, Sir Charles Pym and Mr. Walters drew their Swords in the Street; Sir Charles Pym wounded Mr. Walters in the Thigh, and Mr. Walters run Sir Charles through the Body, who died upon the Spot; and the Court obſerving there was no premeditated Malice, the Gentlemen having never ſeen one another before, directed the Jury to find Mr. Walters guilty of Manſlaughter only; and the other two, being in the Houſe when Sir Charles was killed, were acquitted.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges, that, Whereas, by the Laws of Scotland, the ſpeaking of malicious and ſeditious Words, to the Diſdain of his Majeſty's Perſon, and Contempt of his Royal Government; ſuch as drinking or wiſhing Confuſion to his Majeſty, is High-Treaſon; and the Curſing, Beating, Invading or Aſſaſſinating a Parent, is puniſhable with Death; the ſaid Philip Stansfield, nevertheleſs, ſhaking off the Fear of God, &c. did, in the Months of June, July, Auguſt, or September laſt, in the Kitchin of New-Milns, as a moſt villainous Traitor, begin a Health to the Confuſion of his Majeſty, his lawful Sovereign, and cauſed others to drink the ſame. The Indictment further charges,

That, notwithſtanding his Father had given him a liberal Education, he had taken ill Courſes; and been thrown into Priſon, in Southwark, and at Antwerp, Orleans, and other Places, from which his Father had releaſed him; and yet he fell to his debauched and villainous Courſes again. Whereupon his Father ſignifying his Intentions to diſinherit him, and ſettle his Eſtate on John Stansfield, his ſecond Son, the ſaid Philip did declare he would cut his Father's Throat, and particularly in the Months of January, February, or March, in the Year 1687. And in the Years 1683, 1684, and 1685, at Bruſſels, Breda, and other Places in Holland and Flanders, and in the Priſons of London and Southwark, he did moſt wickedly and unnaturally rail upon and curſe the ſaid Sir James Stansfield, his Parent, praying, the Devil might take him, the Devil rive him; declaring, if he had a Sword, he would run it through him; and, if ever he came to Scotland, he would be revenged on him; and that his Mother recovering out of a Swoon, and ſaying, ſhe ſhould die ſhortly, he anſwered, By my Soul, my Father ſhall be dead before you.

That

1688. 4 Jac. II.

That in the Months of January, February, March, or in ſome other Months in the Year 1680, 81, 82, 83, and 84, or one or other of them, he did attempt to aſſaſſinate his ſaid Father, by purſuing him on the Highway, and firing Piſtols on him.

That in the Month of November laſt, the ſaid Sir James Stansfield coming from Edinburgh to his Houſe at New-Milns, and going into his Chamber to reſt, about Ten o'Clock at Night, and being alone in the Room, under the Credit, Truſt, and Aſſurance of the ſaid Philip his Son, and the Servants in the Family, the ſaid Philip did conſult with one George Tomſon, and divers other Perſons, how to murder him; and accordingly they did ſtrangle and murder him in his Bed-chamber; and, in the Dead of the Night, carried him from the ſaid Room, and threw him into a Water near the Houſe: That the next Morning, when the Body was found, the ſaid Philip cauſed him to be buried in haſte, and refuſed to ſtay till his Friends and Phyſicians viewed it: That the Body being taken up again by Authority, and inſpected by Surgeons, it appeared to have been ſtrangled, and not drowned: And that his neareſt Relations being required to lift the Corps into the Coffin, after it had been inſpected, upon the ſaid Philip Stansfield's touching of it, it bled afreſh upon the ſaid Philip; and thereupon he let the Body fall, and fled from it, in the greateſt Conſternation, crying, Lord have Mercy upon me! For which Crimes he ought to be puniſhed, as the Laws of Scotland require, &c.

The Evi-dence for the King.

The Evidence for the Crown being called, John Robertſon, Servant to the deceaſed Sir James Stansfield, depoſed, That he ſaw the Priſoner, a little before Harveſt laſt, in the Kitchin at New-Milns, (his Father Sir James's Seat) drink Confuſion to the Pope, Antichriſt, the King and the Chancellor; and that he commanded him, (the Witneſs) to drink it on his Knees: That he anſwering, it was Treaſon, the Priſoner replied, Ye Dog, what are you concerned? you do not underſtand to whom you ſpeak.

He alſo teſtified, that he heard the Priſoner wiſh the Devil might take his Father (Sir James); and when Sir James was going abroad, prayed the Devil would not let him, or any of his Company, come back; and at other Times had heard him ſay of his ſaid Father, The Devil damn him, the Devil rive him, &c. adding, that his Father girned upon him like a Sheep's Head in a Pair of Tongs. Spofforth, another of Sir James's Servants, depoſed, that he heard the Priſoner drink Confuſion to the Pope, the King, &c. Agnes Bruce alſo teſtified, ſhe heard the Priſoner, in the Kitchin at New-Milns, drink Confuſion to the Pope and the King, and made the laſt Witneſs drink it upon his Knees: And this being talked of in the Family, a Week afterwards, he ſaid, God damn him, if he knew who divulged it, he would be their Death.

This Witneſs alſo teſtified, that ſhe had often heard the Priſoner vow and ſwear, he would kill any Perſon that offended him; and that he converſed much with Janet Johnſton, Wife of —— Johnſton, with whom he had a criminal Amour; and with George Tomſon, and his Wife, (all of them charged with the ſame Murder): That ſhe had often heard the Priſoner curſe his Father, and expreſs the utmoſt Abhorrence of him: That the Night before Sir James's Death, ſhe thought he was not ſo merry as uſual: That when he came home on the Saturday Night, (when he was ſuppoſed to be murdered) he went to his Lady's Chamber, but did not ſtay a Quarter of an Hour there; his Lady quarrelling with him for going to another Houſe before he came home.

1688. 4 Jac. II

That this Witneſs, going the next Morning to light Sir James's Fire, found the Bed in better Order than uſual, and Sir James gone; and deſiring the Body might be brought up to his Chamber, when it was found, the Priſoner, his Son, anſwered, it ſhould not enter there; for he had died more like a Beaſt than a Man, and cauſed it to be laid in a Cellar, where there was very little Light: That he took the Gold and Silver out of his Father's Pockets, and out of his Cabinet, and the very Buckles out of his Shoes, and put them in his own, within an Hour after his Father was found in the Water: That a little before this Accident, his Mother being ill, and ſaying, ſhe ſhould die, he anſwered, his Father ſhould be dead firſt.

John Shard, another of Sir James's Servants, depoſed, that a little after the Priſoner's Marriage, he heard him complain, his Father gave him too ſhort an Allowance for a married Man; and ſaid, if his Father gave his Eſtate to his Brother John, he would cut his Throat, (he thought he meant his Father's Throat); and that the Night before he was found dead, he heard Sir James ſay in his Chamber, he had no Comfort in his Wife and Family.

Roderick Mackenzie, Advocate, depoſed, that about a Week before Sir James's Death, obſerving him to be under ſome Concern, he aſked him, what troubled him; and Sir James anſwered, he had no Satisfaction at home; that his Son was the greateſt Debauchee upon Earth; and what troubled him moſt was, he had twice attempted his Perſon.

Archibald Dunbar, Merchant, depoſed, that Sir James told him, his Son ſhot two Piſtols at him, as he was going to Lothian-Burn, and that, if he had not been better mounted than his Son, he had killed him; and one ſaying, Sure there could not be Ball in the Piſtols, Sir James anſwered, he had too many Proofs of his Son's unnatural Behaviour: That Sir James durſt not go to Bed that Night, hearing a Shot or two made at the Door, and that this Witneſs ſat up with him all Night, and afterwards conducted him ſafely to Edinburgh.

Mr. William Clarke, Advocate, depoſed, that Sir James ordering him to draw a Settlement, to diſpoſe of his Eſtate to his younger Son John; and he (the Witneſs) ſaying his Son Philip might be reclaimed, Sir James anſwered, he had no Expectation of it; for when he was at the Lead Hills, there was a Piſtol ſhot at him, which, he was ſure, came from his Son Philip.

John Bell, a Miniſter, depoſed, that the Day before Sir James died, he accompanied him from Edinburgh to his Houſe at New-Milns; that both on the Way and at Supper, his Diſcourſe was rational and pertinent; that after Supper, Sir James went with him (the Witneſs) to his Chamber, and ſtaid with him till Ten o'Clock, and his Judgment ſeemed very ſound in what he ſaid.

That the Deponent waking in the Night, heard a great Din, a confuſed Noiſe of ſeveral

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Voices, and ſometimes heard Perſons walking, which affrighted him, and occaſioned his bolting the Chamber-Door faſter: That he ſtill heard Voices, but not ſo plain, till they came about to the Chamber-Window, and then he heard Voices as high as before; whereupon he roſe again, and endeavoured to look out at the Window, but could not open it; and that the Voices went on, towards the Garden and the Water, till he heard no more of them.

That about an Hour after Day, the Priſoner came to his (the Witneſs's) Chamber, and aſked if Sir James had been there that Morning; ſaid he had been ſeeking him on the Bank of the Water, and immediately went down Stairs again: That he followed, to ſee what he meant, and one came running, and ſaid, they had found Sir James lying in the Water; which ſo aſtoniſhed him, (the Witneſs) that he returned trembling to his Chamber, and ſoon after took Horſe, but returned to New-Milns again in the Evening; and adviſed the Priſoner to have the Corps viewed by his Friends, and the Phyſicians; but he buried Sir James that Night, without acquainting the Witneſs, or the honeſt Men of the Neighbourhood, with it.

The Evidence of the Surgeons.

James Murehead, Surgeon, depoſed, that upon the Priſoner's aſſiſting to lift the Body, after it had been ſewed up, and clean Linnen put on, it darted out Blood through the Linnen, from the Left-Side of the Neck, which the Priſoner touched; but that when he (the Witneſs), and the other Surgeon, put on the Linnen, and ſtirred and moved the Head and Neck before, he ſaw no Blood at all. The ſaid Murehead, and the other Surgeon, James Crawfurd, depoſed further, that being ordered by Sir John Dalrymple, his Majeſty's Advocate, to view the Corps, they obſerved the Face to be a little ſwelled, &c. and upon their Report the Surgeons of Edinburgh gave their Opinions.

That whereas there was found a Swelling and preternatural Redneſs in the Face; a large conſpicuous Tumour, about three Inches broad, of a dark-red or black Colour, from one Side of the Larinx, round backwards to the other Side thereof; a large Swelling betwixt the Chin and the Cartilago Scutiformis; the Jugular Veins on both Sides very large and diſtended; and when Inciſion was made downwards, betwixt the Os Hyoid and Larinx, was obſerved a Laxneſs and Diſtance between the Os Hyoid and the Cartilago Scutiformis: Inciſion being made along the Tumour, it was found full of bruiſed Blood; the Jugulars likewiſe, when opened, yielding a conſiderable Quantity of Blood, eſpecially on the Left Side, no Smell or Corruption appearing in any Part of the Body: It was very probable theſe Parts had ſuffered ſome External Violence, which hath made them appear ſo far different from their natural Figure and Colour, and could not be cauſed by drowning ſimply: That the Breaſt and Belly being opened, and the Lungs diſtended, the Bronchi full of Air, without any Water, nor any Water found in the Stomach or Inteſtines; a Body, when drowned, being generally found to have much Water in it, with other Circumſtances of the Report conſidered, gave juſt Ground to think he was not drowned.

The College of Phyſicians at Edinburgh, having, at the Deſire of his Majeſty's Advocate, conſidered the ſaid Report of the Surgeons, delivered their Opinions, That there was ſufficient Grounds to believe the ſaid Sir James Stansfield was ſtrangled, and not drowned.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

Humphry Spurway being ſworn, depoſed, that waiting on Sir James, about ſix Weeks before his Death, and obſerving he was not ſo pleaſant as uſual, he enquired the Reaſon; Sir James ſighed, and wringing his Hands, while the Tears trickled down his Cheeks, he ſaid he had great Cauſe for it: He had borne his Burthen without complaining to others, but he had a very wicked Family; and it was very ſad, that a Man ſhould be deſtroyed by his own Bowels; Let him be never ſo ſparing at home and abroad, yet his Family at home conſumed him; and mentioned ſeveral large Sums they had expended beyond what he allowed them, which was very ſufficient: But what grieved him moſt was, that his youngeſt Son, whom he had ſome Hopes of, and whom he had ſettled his Eſtate upon, was debauched by his eldeſt Son, and came home ſeveral Times of late, as drunk as the other: That on the Saturday Night Sir James died, he (the Witneſs) was with him, and Mr. Bell the Miniſter, at the Houſe of one Marr, at New-Milns, and he ſuſpected Sir James had ſome Fears upon him, that he did not go firſt to his own Houſe, when he came from Edinburgh: That Sir James and the Miniſter afterwards went home; and the next Morning he (the Witneſs) hearing Sir James was miſſing, and meeting the Priſoner, who demanded what could be the Occaſion of this Man's Diſcontent, that he ſhould thus leave his Lodgings, he (the Witneſs) replied, do you wonder at his Diſcontent, that never gave him Content? Whereupon the Priſoner turned his Back upon him: That he, the Witneſs, then ſent out Sir James's Servants, and his own, to look for him; and at length they found him in the River, a little Weſt of the Town; the Corps floating on the Water, about eight Feet from the River's Brink, lying on its Face, with only a Coat and Waiſtcoat looſe about it; the Bank of the River being beaten to maſh with Feet, and the Ground open and mellow, though it was a froſty Morning.

That early on Monday Morning, about Three o'Clock, he ſaw great Lights at the Gates of the Deceaſed; and, upon Enquiry, found they were carrying the Corps to be buried at Morum, pretending it was by the Lord Advocate's Order: However, on Tueſday Night, Mr. Campbel, and two other Gentlemen, and two Surgeons, called him (the Witneſs) out of his Bed, having an Order from the Lord Advocate to take up the Body; that he went with them, and they carried the Corps into the Church, and found it in the Condition the Surgeons depoſed, (as above) and particularly, that the Corps bled on the Priſoner's touching of it.

The Priſoner's Defence by Counſel.

James Mitchel, Nephew of the Deceaſed, depoſed, that about twenty Days before Sir James's Death, he heard the Priſoner ſay, That if his Father diſpoſed of his Eſtate from him, he would kill him, though he died in the Graſs-Market for it.

James Dick depoſed, that he ſaw the Body taken out of the Water, and obſerved no Water came from it.

The King's Advocate deſired two Children might

1688. 4 Jac. II.

might be examined, viz. James Tomſon, the Son of George Tomſon, being about thirteen Years of Age; and Anne Johnſton, the Daughter of Janet Johnſton, about ten Years of Age; but the Court refuſed it: However, at the Inſtance of the Jury, they were permitted to declare what they knew, without Oath.

The Evidence of two Children.

The Subſtance of what the Boy ſaid, was, that his Father and Mother aroſe that Night Sir James was murdered, and went out; and returning about two Hours after, he heard his Father ſay, the Deed was done, and that the Priſoner guarded the Door with a drawn Sword, and a bended Piſtol; that he never thought a Man would have died ſo ſoon; and that they carried him out to the Water-Side, and tied a Stone about his Neck; but they afterwards took away the Stone, and threw him into the Water; and that his Father ſaid, he was afraid the Murder would come out; whereupon his Mother anſwered, Hout Fool! there is no fear of that; it will be thought he drowned himſelf.

The Girl depoſed, that the Night Sir James was killed, the Priſoner was at her Mother's Houſe (with whom the Priſoner had a criminal Converſation); that he ſent for George Tomſon and his Wife, (ſuppoſed to be concerned in the Murder); and that, after they went out, her Mother followed, and did not return till Two in the Morning; and her Father ſaid, Bitch, Whore! Where have you been ſo long? To which her Mother anſwered, Where-ever I have been, the Deed is done; and then went to Bed.

The Priſoner's Defence by Counſel.

The Priſoner's Advocates, or Counſel, ſaid in his Defence, That his drinking Confuſion to the King, was an improbable Calumny, he having, on all Occaſions, given Teſtimonies of his Loyalty, particularly at Monmouth's Rebellion; when he entered himſelf a Volunteer in the Earl of Dunbarton's Regiment, where he remained till the Rebels were defeated: That he could not conceive any Diſpleaſure againſt his Father, for ſettling his Eſtate on his ſecond Son, becauſe he did not know of it till after his Death.

As to the pretended Curſes and Imprecations, ſaid to be uttered againſt his Father, if he had been guilty of them, they were pardoned by the Act of Indemnity, in 1685: And as to his railing or curſing his Father, ſince, theſe if any, muſt be underſtood to be forgiven, becauſe his Father was reconciled to him, employed him ſince to receive his Rents, and ſtiled himſelf his loving Father in his Letters.

As to the Statute which made Murder under Truſt to be Treaſon; the Father could not be ſaid to be under the Truſt of his Son, as a Traveller was under the Protection of his Hoſt at an Inn.

That the Circumſtances, from whence it was inferred he was guilty of his Father's Death, were very remote and uncertain; and as to his firing Piſtols in 1683 and 1684, it was not likely, becauſe there was an entire Friendſhip between his Father and him at that Time: However, thoſe Facts were pardoned, being before the Act of Indemnity; and for the bleeding of the Corps, it was a ſuperſtitious Obſervation, founded neither upon Law nor Reaſon: The bleeding was probably occaſioned by the moving of the Body, and the Inciſions of the Surgeons; and that other People touching the Body at the ſame Time, it could not be aſcribed to the Priſoner.

1688. 4 Jac. II.

That in Capital Crimes, where the Charge was founded, as this was, upon Preſumptions, the Perſon ought not to be found guilty on remote and uncertain Conjectures; and beſides, thoſe Preſumptions were over-balanced by Preſumptions on the other Side: It was rather to be preſumed, Sir James threw himſelf into the Water, being ſubject to Melancholy, and had before attempted to throw himſelf out of a Window: And, if he was murdered, it could not be preſumed, the Priſoner ſhould break through all the Ties of Nature to do it, when there was an entire Friendſhip between them. Had he been conſcious of any Concern in it, he ſhould have fled, whereas he ſurrendered himſelf as ſoon as he heard he was ſuſpected; which alone was ſufficient to take off the Preſumptions urged againſt him.

The Argument of the King's Advocate contra.

His Majeſty's Advocate anſwered, The drinking or wiſhing Confuſion to his Majeſty, (which was not denied) was Treaſon: And that the Words were ſpoken deliberately or maliciouſly, appeared from their being repeated, and others forced to drink the ſame Health; and he had a due Senſe of the Importance of the Words, by conjureing the Company to Secrecy, and threatning to brain them that ſhould diſcover it.

That the Crime of curſing Parents was not included in the General Act of Indemnity: And as to the Crime being forgiven by his Father, becauſe he ſeemed reconciled, they inſiſted, where the Publick was concerned, an expreſs Releaſe could not have diſpenſed with the Puniſhment.

And although it was ſaid, a Son's threatening to cut his Father's Throat was but a remote Circumſtance, and, it would not be concluded from thence, he actually murdered him; yet, it was ſuch a Circumſtance, that unleſs the Priſoner could ſhew another Perſon killed him, he muſt be reputed the Murderer.

As to the bleeding of the Corps, though ſeveral Perſons touched it, none of their Hands were ſtained with Blood but the Priſoner's: And the Body having lain two Days in the Grave, in a cold Seaſon, the Blood muſt naturally have been congealed; and he muſt attribute it therefore to the Providence of God, that it fell a bleeding afreſh when the Priſoner touched it; and, that the horrible Impreſſions it made on him, was another Argument of his Guilt.

And, though it was urged, that a Capital Puniſhment cannot be inferred on bare Conjectures, but there ought to be clear and poſitive Teſtimonies; he anſwered, A Complication and Conjunction of ſo many Circumſtances, though none of them, per ſe, was ſufficient; yet all of them together induced a greater Certainty than two poſitive Witneſſes.

And whereas it was ſaid, It could not be preſumed, he was guilty of ſo unnatural a Crime; they anſwered, The Fact being ſo ſtrongly proved, this did but conclude the greater Guilt: That though Sir James had been melancholy and diſturbed in the Year 1679, he was known known to be recovered, and ever ſince of a ſedate and compoſed Temper of Mind, and ſo capable of Buſineſs, as to be intruſted by the wiſeſt Men in the Kingdom: But, beſides, as it appeared he was ſtrangled, it could not be preſumed he walked out and drowned himſelf afterwards. As to the Priſoner's ſurrendring himſelf, it was agreeable to the reſt of his Impudence; and he might imagine, by that Action, to make the World believe he was innocent.

The Reply of the Priſoner's Counſel.

The Priſoner's Counſel replied, As to the Treaſonable Expreſſions, that it appeared the Priſoner was ſurpriſed into them, by his conjureing Perſons to Secrecy; and ſuch haſty Expreſſions were never laid hold on to infer a Capital Puniſhment, where the Party accuſed was not otherwiſe ſuſpected of Diſloyalty: They inſiſted ſtill upon the Act of Indemnity, by which all Murders and Robberies were expreſly pardoned; for, that a Pardon ought to be taken in the moſt ample and beneficial Senſe for the Subject; and the Priſoner having no viſible Fortune all that Time, did not come within the Exception in that Act.

They ſtill inſiſted alſo, that all Pretence of private Injury was taken away, by the offended Party's diſſembling it, and appearing reconciled; and the Act being intended in Favour of Parents, was never executed but at their Inſtance: As to the habitual Curſing and Swearing, it was pardoned by the Act of Indemnity; and beſides, the particular Inſtances ought to have been charged in the Indictment, or the Priſoner could not be puniſhed for them.

As to the Teſtimony of the Miniſter, he appeared to be in ſuch Terror and Confuſion by his own Evidence, as rendred him incapable of obſerving or judging what happened: And as to the Body's floating, it might be occaſioned by a great Coat the Priſoner had on: As to there being no Water in the Body, when the Surgeons opened it, the Water might have run out before: And, although a Man who was unwillingly drowned, by endeavouring to breathe as long as he could, might ſuck in a great deal of Water; yet when a Man drowned himſelf, he might be ſuppoſed to hold his Breath for the quicker Diſpatch; and his holding his Breath might occaſion the Body to float, and prevent the Water coming in: That the great Collar thrown about the Neck of the Deceaſed, and by which he was pulled out, might occaſion the congealed Blood there; and the Ice remaining unbroken near the Bank where the Body lay (though very thin), made it apparent, the Deceaſed jumped in: And, as to the Opinions of the Phyſicians and Surgeons, they were founded on the Report of one or two Surgeons, on whoſe Skill or Ignorance that Matter depended: But whatever the Preſumptions were, that the Deceaſed was murdered, they could not affect the Priſoner, unleſs there was Evidence of his being concerned in it: That as to the bleeding of the Corps, he inſiſted on the Anſwers already given; but that the Priſoner ſhould appear ſurpriſed at the Sight of his Father's Blood, was to be aſcribed to natural Affection and filial Piety, rather than be made a Preſumption of his Guilt. 1688. 4 Jac. II.

Before the Jury withdrew, the Court gave them the following Directions, as to the Points of Law, (viz.)

Points of Law adjudged by the Court.

1. They declared, That drinking Confuſion to the King, was Treaſon.

2. That curſing his Father was puniſhable with Death: And,

3. That the Act of Indemnity would not avail the Priſoner, it not being deſigned to extend to thoſe of his Quality.

4. That as to his Father's Murder, Preſumptive Proof was ſufficient Legal Proof; but whether the Preſumptions were ſufficient, was left to the Jury, who thereupon withdrew.

The Priſoner convicted,

The Jury being returned, found the Priſoner guilty of all the Facts laid in the Indictment, (viz.) Of Treaſon, of curſing his Father, and of being concerned in his Murder.

and executed.

Whereupon Sentence of High-Treaſon was pronounced on him; and he was afterwards executed as a Traitor.

Remarks on Stanfield's Trial.

Thus we ſee the Lawyers of Scotland charge ſeveral Crimes of different Natures in one Indictment, as Treaſon, Murder, and the Curſing of a Father; which is never done in England: It is alſo obſervable, that the Curſing a Parent is Capital in Scotland; whereas in England there are too many young Fellows, who look upon an undutiful Behaviour to a Parent, and the reproaching, contemning, and even curſing and wiſhing the Death of a Father, to be Inſtances of Gallantry and polite Education: Even among Gentlemen, we hear it often ſaid, What am I more obliged to my Father than to another Man? If he has no Eſtate to give me, I owe him no Duty: While the Heathen Nations, who have no other Light to guide them, but that of Nature, puniſh this Crime with greater Severity than in Scotland. The Chineſe, we find, are not content with puniſhing ſuch unnatural Children in their own Perſons; but the very Town, where ſuch Inſolence is ſuffered with Impunity, is deſtroyed; the very Foundations ploughed up, and the Ground never permitted to be built or inhabited again.

Pro-

1689. W. & M. Lord Caſtlemaine's Caſe.

Proceedings of the Houſe of Commons, againſt the Earl of CASTLEMAINE, on the 26th of October, 1689. 1 W. & M.

1689. W. & M.

THE Earl of Caſtlemaine, on King James's Abdication, taking a Journey from London, towards his Seat in Montgomeryſhire, was apprehended by the Mob at Oſweſtree, a ſmall Corporation on the Borders of that County, and carried before the Mayor of that Place, who ſet a Guard upon his Lordſhip at his Inn, and detained him Priſoner for a Month, refuſing to admit him to Bail: He was afterwards brought to London by a Party of Horſe, and committed to the Tower, (by what Authority does not appear): However, the Houſe of Commons being informed his Lordſhip was a Priſoner there, ordered the Governor of the Tower to bring him before them; and, upon his appearing, the Speaker told his Lordſhip, They underſtood he went Ambaſſador to Rome; and, that he alſo took his Place at the Board, without taking the Oaths; both which were againſt Law; and demanded what he had to ſay for himſelf.

To which his Lordſhip anſwered, That he was ſo far from deſiring to be ſent on that Embaſſy, that he uſed his utmoſt Endeavours to avoid it: That he was commanded by the King to undertake that Employment, and could not refuſe it; and, as he knew no Law which forbad his Obedience, ſo neither did he know how ſuch a Law could be made; for the Pope being a Temporal Prince, and his Territories bordering on the Mediterranean and Adriatick Seas, if the Subjects of this Crown were drove into his Ports, or ſurprized in their Travels by a Roman Party, it would be ſtrange, if the Government ſhould want Power to ſend an Agent to reclaim them: That wherever the Commerce or Intercourſe of Nations had been prohibited, yet the Commander in Chief, much more the Sovereign, had ſtill the Liberty of ſending a Trumpet, or beating a Parley, and of ſending and receiving Letters in any Exigency of Affairs: And as to Religion, he had no Commiſſion concerning it, or ever tranſacted any thing with his Holineſs about it.

That while he was at Rome, his Houſe was a Place of Refuge for all his diſtreſſed Fellow-Subjects: He ſaw Juſtice done to the Engliſh Merchants, whenever they were abuſed or moleſted in their Traffick: His Care extended to all our Factories in Italy; not only the Conſuls, but every private Man had eaſy Acceſs to him, and he was indefatigable in ſerving them; inſomuch that the Turky Merchants had returned him their Thanks.

That he had ſpent great Sums of his own Money in his Embaſſy, for the Honour and Advantage of the Nation: And had he been ſent to the Mahometans at Conſtantinople, or the Pagans of China, the Figure he made would not have been cenſured, as an Honour done to their reſpective Religions, but for the Glory of his own Nation: And he could not but hope, they would have a favourable Opinion of an Ambaſſador, though at Rome, who, to the utmoſt of his Power, had maintained the Glory and Grandeur of the Engliſh Nation: That if he had done amiſs in obeying the King's Commands, then no Conſul who purſued a Pirate or Banditti to Rome, nor any private Factor, who followed a Debtor thither, could be innocent; but might be charged as Contemners or Breakers of the Law.

That as to his ſitting in Council without taking the Oaths, the Judges had delivered their Opinions, that the King could diſpenſe with them; and therefore, he did not think his omitting to take them any Crime: If it was a Fault, the Judges were more to blame than he, who led him into that Error.

Then the Houſe demanding to ſee his Lordſhips Inſtructions; he anſwered, That at his ſetting out for Wales, he burnt his Papers, eſpecially thoſe that related to Rome, which he knew, in theſe Times of Trouble and Diſtraction, would render him liable to the Cenſure of every malicious Man: But there was nothing in them but Things of Courſe, and Copies of thoſe Powers might be found in the Lord Sunderland's Office; and he had not any private Inſtructions.

Then his Lordſhip withdrawing, the Commons ordered, That the Earl of Caſtlemaine ſhould ſtand committed to the Tower, by a Warrant from that Houſe, for High-Treaſon, in endeavouring to reconcile this Kingdom to the See of Rome, and for other High Crimes and Miſdemeanors.

The Commons commit his Lordſhip for High-Treaſon.

His Lordſhip remained a Priſoner in the Tower, till the fifth of February following, when he brought his Habeas Corpus, and was admitted to Bail by the Court of King's-Bench, Mr. Attorney having nothing to object againſt him; and I do not meet with any further Proſecution of this Lord afterwards.

His Lordſhip complained, That he was illegally impriſoned and detained; which he would have Reaſon for, if it had been in ſettled Times; but Allowance muſt be made for ſuch great Turns of State. It was certain, there was leſs Miſchief done, and fewer illegal Acts committed, than could have been expected on the Abdication of King James. But how the Houſe of Commons came to order his Lordſhip to be detained in Priſon for High-Treaſon, by their own Warrant, when the Courts of Weſtminſter-Hall were open, and Magiſtrates appointed by King William, who might have committed the Priſoner in a legal and regular Way, is not eaſy to conceive; for the Houſe of Commons ſeldom do commit for High-Treaſon, but leave it to the Magiſtrate, whoſe proper Buſineſs it is; eſpecially if the Party be none of their own Members, as the Lord Caſtlemaine was not.

Remarks.

1689. 1 W. & M. Price's Case.

The Trial of JOHN PRICE, Esq; and one hundred other Protestants, for High-Treason, at the Assizes at Wicklow in Ireland, on the fifth of March, 1689. 1 W. & M.

THIS is indeed no Trial, but barely an Arraignment: For the Prisoners making their Challenges, there were not Freeholders enough remaining in the Pannel to try them; and before another Assizes, the War commenced between King James and King William, and the Courts of Justice were shut up; and the War concluding in Favour of the latter, they were dismissed of Course.

The Case was no more than this: Mr. Price and his Neighbours had shut themselves up in his House, or Castle of Ballinderry, to prevent their being plundered by the Irish Papists; and refusing to surrender to some Popish Officers, this was termed a Rebellion; and they were all indicted for High Treason, though they did surrender afterwards to Colonel Sheldon, who was sent by the Government to summon them.

1690. 2 W. & M. Lord Preston's Trial.

The Trial of Sir RICHARD GRAHME, Bart. (Viscount Preston) for High-Treason, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 16th of January, 1690. 2 W. & M.

The Indictment.

THE Prisoner was indicted and arraigned (together with John Ashton, and Edmund Elliot, Gentlemen) for High-Treason, in compassing the Death of their present Majesties King William and Queen Mary; and, for that End, on the 29th Day of December, in the second Year of their said Majesties Reign, at the Parish of St. Clement-Danes, in the County of Middlesex, traitorously consulting and agreeing to raise great Numbers of armed Men, to make War and Rebellion against the said King and Queen; and preparing and composing divers treasonable Letters, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions, in Writing, to inform Lewis the French King, and his Subjects, their Majesties Enemies, of the Number, Force, and Condition of their Majesties Ships of War; and how the Castles and Fortresses of Portsmouth, South-Sea, and Gosport, were fortified, and might be taken; as also how they might invade the Kingdom, and depose their Majesties; and when and where the Enemy's Fleet might attack their Majesties, insult the City of London, and procure War and Rebellion in the Kingdom: That they did also keep and conceal two several Bills of Exchange, for the Use of the Enemy; and, for the Sum of 100 Pounds, did hire a Ship to transport themselves, and the said Bills of Exchange, Notes, Memorandums, and Instructions, beyond Sea, to their Majesties Enemies: That they prepared a Boat to carry them to the said Ship; and being on Board, did sail towards France with the said Papers: And the Indictment further charges them with adhering to the said Enemies of the King and Queen, and preparing the said Papers, &c. in Execution and Performance of the said Adhesion, against the Duty of their Allegiance, &c.

Lord Preston insists on his Peerage.

The Lord Preston upon his Arraignment, said, He found he was indicted by the Name of Sir Richard Grahme; but he thought he was intitled to another Way of Trial, as being a Peer of England before the Vote of Abdication; at a Time when all Writs and Processes run in the late King's Name, and all Officers acted by Virtue of his Commissions.

The Lord Chief Justice Holt answered, If his Lordship pleaded that he was made a Peer by a Patent under the great Seal, he must produce it under the Great Seal.

Lord Preston replied, He hoped the Court would enable him to do it, by sending an Order to the Clerk of the House of Lords to bring the Patent, for it was in his Hands.

The Chief Justice said, That was not in their Power; and, if he insisted on his Peerage, he must be ready to make it out immediately, they were not to enable him to plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court.

Lord Preston then desired his Counsel might be heard to that Matter.

Mr. Solicitor shews his Patent and has it read.

Here Mr. Solicitor (Somers) informed the Court, that on the eleventh of November, 1689, the Lord Preston did claim his Peerage in the House of Lords, and produced his Patent from the late King James: Whereupon the House of Peers committed him to the Custody of the Black-Rod: And the next Day, upon a solemn Debate, concerning the Validity of the Patent, their Lordships having consulted the Judges, did adjudge and declare, That the Patent was null and void; and, upon the 27th of the same Month of November, upon my Lord Preston's Submission and Petition, and disclaiming his Right of Peerage, his Lordship was discharged; and this Matter having thus received a solemn Determination in a proper Court, he did not think it would have been urged again in this Place: But that there was nothing offered by my Lord, that the Court could take any legal Notice of: If my Lord would plead to the Jurisdiction of the Court, he ought to bring his Plea in Form, and be ready with his Proofs to make it good.

Then

1690. 2W.&M.

Then the Chief Juſtice, and the reſt of the Judges, declared, His Lordſhip had offered nothing they could take Notice of, unleſs he had his Patent to produce; and they could not give him Time to plead to the Juriſdiction of the Court.

The Priſoners deſire a Copy of the Indictment.

His Lordſhip, and the other Priſoners, then deſired the Indictment might be read in Latin; which was granted: They alſo deſired a Copy of the Indictment; inſiſting, that by the 46th of Edw. III. every Priſoner might have a Copy of the Records; and that it was given as a Reaſon for the Reverſal of Mr. Corniſh's Attainder, that it was not a legal Trial, becauſe he had not a Copy of his Indictment.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, That was a private Act; he never ſaw it, nor could he take Notice of it: It had not been the Courſe to allow a Priſoner a Copy of his Indictment; it was denied to Colonel Sidney, Sir Harry Vane, and my Lord Ruſſel.

Then the Lord Preſton cited the Statute of 46 Edw. III. which ſays, That all Perſons were to have Copies of Records, and deſired Counſel to ſpeak to it.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, That was only meant of Records, that were to be given in Evidence, and the Indictment was no Evidence; nor did they think fit to allow him Counſel in a Caſe that was ſo plain.

and Time to prepare for their Trial.

Then the Priſoners inſiſted on having more Time allowed them, to prepare for their Trial, having had but ſix or ſeven Days Notice. The Chief Juſtice anſwered, Seven Days was very fair Notice: The Priſoners anſwered, that three of the ſeven Days they had not the Liberty of ſeeing their Friends or Counſel.

The Court told them, They debated the Time of their Trial too early; they muſt firſt plead to the Indictment.

Then the Priſoners ſeverally pleaded, Not Guilty.

The Priſoners again deſiring that the Trial might be put off, that they might make Enquiries into the Jurors returned upon the Pannel: Mr. Solicitor anſwered, There could be no Reaſon for putting off the Trial longer than till Tomorrow; that was Time enough for making ſuch an Enquiry as was fit and juſtifiable: But if by Time to look into the Jury, was meant Time for tampering with them, that, he was ſure, the Court would not permit.

The Lord Preſton replied, It was a very hard Preſumption, that their aſking Time to enquire into the Pannel, was with a Deſign to tamper with the Jury. If he was to be tried to Morrow, he was as willing to be tried to Day; for he was as ready now, as he ſhould be then.

Mr. Aſhton added, That all ſuch haſty Proceedings were thought very hard in the late Times; and particularly, the denying Mr. Corniſh Time: And it was one of the Reaſons given in this King's Declaration for his coming into England, the Hardſhips that the Law laid upon Men in their Trials, which he came to prevent.

The Lord Chief Juſtice Pollexfen anſwered, When Men were plotting againſt the Government, they ought not to have Time given them to carry on their Plots: They might deſire the Trial to be put off, in Hopes the King of France might come and determine the Matter in the mean Time; nor would the Court give them longer Time than till the next Day.

1690. 2W.&M.

The Priſoners being brought to the Bar again, on Saturday the 17th of January, 1690-1, and the Pannel called over, they declared, they would make their Challenges ſeverally. Whereupon they were tried apart; and Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot being ſent back to Newgate, (though they deſired to be preſent at the Lord Preſton's Trial), his Lordſhip was ordered to look to his Challenges.

Lord Preſton tried ſeparately.

Challenges by the King's Counſel.

Several being challenged by the Priſoner, and others for the King, the Lord Preſton inſiſted, the King's Counſel ought to ſhew Cauſe; but was told by the Court, they need not to ſhew Cauſe, till the Pannel was gone through.

A Jury being ſworn, Mr. Knapp opened the Indictment; and Mr. Solicitor, Sir John Somers, ſhewed the Nature and Courſe of the Evidence.

Mr. Solicitor opens the Evidence.

Mr. Solicitor-General. My Lords, and Gentlemen of the Jury, the Indictment hath been opened to you at large, and I do not doubt, but you have obſerved it: It conſiſts of two Parts, which are formed upon two ſeveral Branches of the Statute of the 25th of Edw. III. The one is for Compaſſing and Imagining the Depoſing and Deſtruction ath of the King and Queen; the other, for Aiding and Aſſiſting the King and Queen's Enemies.

Treaſon, Gentlemen, conſiſts in the Imagination of the Heart; but becauſe that Imagination of the Heart can be diſcovered no other way but by ſome open Act; therefore the Law doth require that ſome Overt-Act, manifeſting that Intention and Imagination, be aſſigned and proved: I doubt not, but you have obſerved that there are ſeveral Overt-Acts, of both theſe kinds of Treaſon, aſſigned in this Indictment.

Gentlemen, The general Deſign of the Conſpiracy (as will appear by the Evidence) was this: The King and Queen were to be depoſed; and this was to be effected by a French Army, and a French Fleet. It will be eaſily granted, that nothing more dreadful can enter into the Imagination of an Engliſh Man, than the Deſtruction of our Fleet, and the Conqueſt of the Kingdom by the Arms of France.

But yet it will be Part of the Evidence, that we ſhall offer to you, that the Priſoners, and others of the Conſpirators, ſeem to be of another Mind; for, amongſt the Papers which were taken with the Priſoners, you will ſee one, which is ſtiled, The Reſult of a Conference; wherein they pretend to ſhew, the Poſſibility of reſtoring King James, by the Power of the French King; and yet to preſerve the Proteſtant Religion, and the Laws and Liberties of the Kingdom. They themſelves went not further than to think it poſſible; and, I believe, it will be hard to perſuade any other Engliſh Man, that it is poſſible; unleſs one Inſtance could be given, that the French King ever employed his Arms for ſetting up any Body, but himſelf, his own Religion, and his own Government. I never heard, that he did pretend to form any Part of his Glories upon the Virtue of Moderation, or Self-denial. And there can hardly be imagined a greater Inſtance of Self-denial, than for the French King, after he had deſtroyed the Dutch and Engliſh Fleets, and ſubdued our Forces at Land, not to make uſe of his Succeſs, ſo as to add 1690. 2W.&M. add these three Kingdoms to his Conquests, and possess himself of the uncontested Dominion of the Sea forever; but only to intitle him, at so great Hazard and Expence, to become a Mediator between King James and the People of England, and, by his Mediation, to establish the Protestant Religion, and the Liberties of the People: And yet, as absurd as this seems, you will find this to be the Result of one of their Conferences. I did never think it was the Part of any, who were of Counsel for the King, in Cases of this Nature, to endeavour to aggravate the Crime of the Prisoners, by going about to put false Colours upon Evidence, or to give it more than its due Weight; and therefore, I shall be sure to forbear any Thing of that Nature: But I think it my Duty to give some short Account of the Nature and Course of the Evidence to be produced to you; which consisting of several Sorts, it will be in some sort necessary to open it, that you may the more clearly apprehend it, and with more Ease make your Observations upon it. Gentlemen, we shall produce in Evidence, as well living Witnesses, as Papers and Writings; which, by a strange kind of Providence, were taken upon my Lord Preston, and the other two Persons named in the Indictment, when they were apprehended; and therein this Design, that I have opened to you, will be made evident beyond all Contradiction.

As to the living Witnesses, the Course of the Evidence will be this: One Nicholas Pratt is the Owner of a Smack, called the Thomas and Elizabeth; he does usually entrust his Wife, Jane Pratt, with the hiring out this Smack; William Paceley is Master of the Vessel, and has of late been made a Part-owner, to protect him from being pressed; for it is a Privilege that the Owners of Vessels claim, not to be pressed.

Some Time since, (the Witnesses will tell you the precise Time), this Jane Pratt was sent for to one Mr. Burdett's House, in the City, where she met with Mr. Ashton; who desired to know, whether she could undertake to convey him, and some others, with Safety into France: She said, she did not doubt but she could do so; and thereupon Mr. Ashton told her, that he and his Friends were Merchants and Traders, and that they should make great Advantage, to the Value of one thousand Pounds at least, if they could be there quickly. Their Discourse went no farther at that Time; but Mrs. Pratt was appointed, by Mr. Ashton, to bring the Master of the Vessel along with her, for he had a Mind to discourse himself with the Master, and they were to meet at the Wonder-Tavern in Ludgate-Street; and, because there should be no Mistake about the Meeting, Mr. Ashton gave the Woman a Note of Direction in Writing, ready to be produced.

Accordingly, by the 29th of December, Mrs. Pratt and the Master came to the Wonder-Tavern, where Mr. Ashton met with them; and there they treated of the Price to be given for the Hiring of this Vessel to carry them to France; and I think one hundred and fifty Guineas was the Sum then insisted upon; but no Bargain was made at this Time: But there was a new Appointment to meet the next Day, which was the 30th of December, at Mr. Burdett's House.

The next Day, when she and the Master came thither, they found there together Ashton and Ellyot, the two other Persons named in the Indictment, and there this Matter was treated of with great Secrecy, in Mrs. Burdett's Bed-chamber. 1690. 2W.&M.

And they came to an Agreement, that one hundred Pounds should be the Sum to be paid to Mrs. Pratt, for conveying into France Ashton and Ellyot, and two other Persons: So the Contract was originally made for others, besides Mr. Ashton and Ellyot; and the Money was actually deposited by Mr. Ashton and Ellyot in Mr. Burdett's Hand, and a Six-pence was broken, one half of which was delivered to Mrs. Burdett to keep, the other half Mr. Ashton was to take along with him; and, when the Master had safely landed them in France, Mr. Ashton was to deliver his half of the Six-pence to the Master, which being brought to Mrs. Burdett, either by him or Mrs. Pratt, upon the joining of the two Pieces together, the Master was entituled to receive the 100 l.

The next Appointment was, to meet at one Mr. Rigby's House, in Covent-Garden, and that was to be on the 31st of December, when the Voyage was to be begun; and the Tide not serving to go through Bridge till late, the Appointment was to meet the later: When they, Mrs. Pratt and the Master, came there, they found only Mr. Ashton and Mr. Ellyot; but before that Time, Care was taken to provide a Sculler at Surry-Stairs, to be ready to carry them on Board the Smack; and the Waterman was appointed to stay in a little Ale-house thereabouts, to be ready when he should be called. About Ten o'Clock at Night, four Persons came down together, and went into this Sculler, with the Master of the Smack, and made what Haste they could through Bridge, till they came to Pickle-herring-Stairs, over-against the Tower, where the Smack lay; and there went aboard the Master and these four Persons, my Lord Preston, a Servant of my Lord Preston's, Mr. Ashton, and Mr. Ellyot.

The Smack set sail, immediately after they were on board, and their Haste made them carry away the Waterman's Coat, which he had lent them whilst they were in the Sculler; and that Accident was the Occasion of discovering who the Waterman was that carried them from Surry-Stairs.

After they were on board the Smack, they were possessed with great fear of being surprized; they knew the Nature of the Business they were about, and the Danger they were in, if they should be discovered; and therefore, when they were to pass by the George Frigate, a Man of War that lay in the River, they desired the Master to hide them; which he did, by putting them under the Quarter-Hatches, a Place where they could not stand or sit, but must lie along on the Ballast: When they were passed by the George Frigate, they quitted that Place; but when they were near the Block-house at Gravesend, they grew apprehensive, and they desired to hide a second Time, which was accordingly done.

And they continued to lie in that Place till they were taken; and it was a happy Thing they did so: The Place was such, that they had not 1690. 2W.&M. not any Poſſibility of throwing away the Letters and Papers, though they had made Preparation for it, in Caſe of any Accident, having tied them together, and fixed a Piece of Lead to them; that ſo, if they ſaw themſelves in Danger of being taken, they might eaſily ſink the Pacquet: But being ſo cloſe ſhut up in this Place, that they could not execute their Purpoſe, the Papers were taken, and will be offered to you in Evidence.

Gentlemen, Captain Billop, by the Order of a noble Lord, now preſent, was directed to uſe his utmoſt Diligence to ſeize ſome dangerous Perſons, of whoſe Deſign of going beyond Sea, for ſome very ill Ends, an Intimation had been given: He got ready a Pinnace well manned, and went in Purſuit of them down the River; and, both as he went, and returned, he took Care to ſearch ſuſpected Veſſels: When he came to this, he demanded of the Maſter, what Number of Men he had on Board, pretending he came to preſs Men: The Maſter told him, he had but three, and for thoſe he had a Protection: But the Captain ſaid, he muſt be better ſatisfied, and muſt ſearch the Veſſel; and in the Search he found theſe four Perſons, lying concealed in this ſecret Place, under the Quarter-Hatches.

As they were taken out, one after another, one of the Sea-men obſerved Mr. Aſhton to take up a Bundle of Papers from off the Ballaſt, and put it in his Boſom; and near the Place where the Papers lay, he took up two Seals, which after proved to be my Lord Preſton's Seals, when he was Secretary: Captain Billop being informed of this by that Sea-man, he put his Hand into Mr. Aſhton's Boſom, and took away from him the Bundle of Papers with the Lead fixed to it.

When they were put on Board the Captain's Pinnace, they all preſſed him much, that he would let them go on Shore at Graveſend; pretending Want of Refreſhment, they not having eaten, and the Night having been cold: But he did not think that proper nor ſafe; but told them, they ſhould go on Board the George Frigate, and refreſh themſelves there.

When they came on Board the George Frigate, all the three Gentlemen, and my Lord Preſton in particular, were very earneſt with Captain Billop, to diſpoſe of the Bundle of Papers, mixing extraordinary Promiſes with great Compliments.

Not prevailing there, when they were returned to the Pinnace, they renewed their Sollicitations; and one of them told him, it would be eaſy to remove all Suſpicion, by fixing the Lead to ſome other Papers of little Signification, which were found in my Lord Preſton's Pocket, which he might produce; and they would without Difficulty paſs for the Papers that were taken.

But the Captain was too juſt, to comply with this Propoſal. When they found he was not to be moved, you will find from the Witneſſes, that their Promiſes were turned into Threats, and they uſed another Sort of Language.

When they were brought to Whitehall Stairs, upon their Landing, they gave Money to the Maſter and the Sea-men, deſiring them to ſay, they were hired to go for Flanders, and not for France. 1690. 2W. & M.

Gentlemen, theſe Things which I have opened, carry a ſtrong Preſumption of Guilt; for Engliſhmen, eſpecially one of that Quality of my Lord Preſton, to go into the Country of an Enemy, without any Manner of Paſport; and, in ſuch a Manner, as they could not expect but to be ſeized for Spies, unleſs they were aſſured, that their Character was ſo well known there, that they ſhould be looked upon not as Perſons coming to get Intelligence, but to give it; unleſs they were well aſſured of a good Reception, when they came there.

But there is no Occaſion to leave any thing to Conjecture in this Caſe; what is contained in theſe Papers, makes the Deſign of the Voyage beyond Diſpute. I think, Gentlemen, after you have heard the Evidence, you will be very well ſatisfied, that my Lord Preſton, and the other two, who ſtand indicted, were equally concerned in the Papers: They were all alike earneſt to preſerve them from being ſeen; they all ſolicited for the diſpoſing of them, and promiſed Rewards, that they might prevail.

Gentlemen, theſe Papers are of various Natures. One, I mentioned before, is intitled, The Reſult of a Conference between ſeveral Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs; in which it was undertaken to prove the Poſſibility and Methods of reſtoring King James by a French Power, without indangering the Proteſtant Religion, and the Civil Adminiſtration, according to the Laws of this Kingdom.

Another contains Heads for a Declaration to be prepared, in order to be publiſhed, when the French have had Succeſs at Sea, and are landing; and that is filled with ſuch Pretences, as they thought moſt ſpecious, and moſt likely to amuſe and delude the People.

There is another Sort of theſe Papers, which conſiſts of Letters: Theſe Letters are directed in falſe Names, and are not ſubſcribed; and, it is not to be imagined it ſhould be otherwiſe: Yet, Gentlemen, (though that is not the preſent Buſineſs) the Hands of the Writers of theſe Letters are very well known, and the Subject Matter of them will eaſily reveal to you, for whom they were intended: For though theſe Letters are moſt of them written under divers Cants; ſome under the Colour of Trade; ſome of them under the Colour of a Law-Suit, for the redeeming of a Mortgage, others under the Notion of a Match, and a Settlement to be made upon that Match; yet the real Buſineſs is ſo plain, that you need but hear them read, to ſee through the Diſguiſe.

Though they begin generally in the Stile of Merchants, writing to one another, or the like; yet towards the End of the Letters, you will obſerve Expreſſions of Duty and Reverence (Terms which do not uſually paſs in Correſpondence between Perſons of that Sort) ſufficient to ſhew, that ſomewhat elſe was intended to be covered, in what went before.

Gentlemen, it will appear to you, that ſome of the Writers of theſe Letters were of the Number of thoſe who were ſecured the laſt Summer, when the French Fleet was upon our Coaſts: And, you will obſerve, they complain, that by Reaſon of that Reſtraint, the Deſign was very much hindred, though they have endeavoured to redeem that Loſs of Time, ſince their Diſcharge, and have carried on the Buſineſs with more Vigour than ever.

In ſhort, the Deſign of theſe Letters, is to importune the ſetting out of the French Fleet with all poſſible Expedition: They ſay, they muſt not ſuffer ſuch a fit Seaſon to be ſpent unprofitably: That the beſt Time is between this and the Firſt of March, to come to a good Market; and, if they come not before the Tenth of March, all will be loſt. In another of their Letters, they ſay, if the Suit be well ſollicited and managed, it may come to a final Hearing before the End of Eaſter Term.

They complain, That there are ſeveral indiſcreet Letters came from St. Germains, that turn to the Prejudice of the Deſign: Thoſe Letters are not enough diſguiſed, to deceive the People here, but ſpeak too plainly what is to be expected from themſelves, and from the French. You will take Notice, that the Letters which all you will hear, are all Bills with high Characters of the Bearer; for which Reaſon they write in ſuch general Terms, becauſe the Bearer was intruſted with the whole. Some of the Letters ſay no Particulars are, or need be expreſſed, becauſe he will inform them of every thing: Others, That they could not write ſo much as he could ſay; and, that nothing was wanting, but to allow him a full and fit Seaſon to give an Account of all the Buſineſs; and that they entirely depend upon his Account of them, and their Condition.

And, Gentlemen, in one of the Letters, the Bearer is ſtiled a Lord; and to whom can that be applied, unleſs to the Priſoner at the Bar.

In another Letter, when they ſpeak of ſending the Copper and the Linnen (the Goods pretended for carrying on the Trade), it is added, and what the Meaning of that is, they muſt refer to the Bearer, who was able to give them a particular Account.

I have mentioned ſo much of the Papers, only that you might have a general Notion of them; that ſo, when you have heard them read, you may more readily make your Obſervations: I aſſure you, I have been as careful as I could not to exceed the Truth, in opening any Part of the Evidence: But it is your Part to ſee, whether what I have opened be made out in Proof.

There is another Paper, that gives an Account of their Majeſties Fleet to be ſent out this Summer; and there is an Obſervation at the End of it, that it was hoped it may be out in March: But you will find by other Papers (and particularly by one of my Lord's own Handwriting) that he was of another Mind, that the Fleet will not be out before June.

Gentlemen, the laſt Sort of Papers which I will mention to you, are ſome Memorandums and Notes, written by my Lord Preſton, wherein he gives an Account of ſeveral Things of great Moment; which, as his Memory ſerved him, are put together without Connection or Method, being only to remind him of them, when he ſhould have Occaſion to mention them.

He therein gives an Account of the Number and Strength of the Engliſh Fleet, how they are manned, and who are the principal Officers and Commanders, and in what Time they will be out.

He likewiſe gives an Account of the Number and State of the Dutch Fleet, and how that is to be divided and diſpoſed of. 1690. 2W.&M.

And with Relation to the French Fleet, there is a particular Memorandum, That they muſt be out at furtheſt in April: That they muſt be out ſo as to ſeparate the Dutch Fleet and ours; that they muſt be ſure to look in at Spithead as they come by, and ſecure what Ships ſhould be in that Harbour from joining the reſt.

There is alſo a Hint given of thoſe, that were moſt likely to come in to them; and there is Advice in what Place their Fleet ſhould fight ours: They muſt not come ſo high as Beachy, where they fought the laſt Year, but rather chuſe to fight in the Chops of the Channel.

There is an Account of Portſmouth, how fortified and garriſoned; that it had but 500 Men; that Goſport had nothing but Palliſadoes about it, and South-Sea Caſtle very weak.

There are Memorandums of other Heads, proper for a Declaration.

There are the Names of ſeveral Perſons, ſome of them with particular Characters, and ſome without; and, amongſt the reſt, there is this Character given of the Clergy of the City of London, that they are the worſt of all others.

Gentlemen, we ſhall proceed to the Evidence, and firſt call the living Witneſſes, and then read the Papers; and when you have heard what the one can ſay, and what the other contain, we muſt leave it to your Conſideration, and ſubmit all to the Direction of the Court.

The King's Witneſſes were then called and firſt Mrs. Pratt was ſworn, who depoſed, That Mr. Elliot hired a Smack of her to go to France, for 100 Pounds, at Mr. Burdettt's Houſe in Queen's-Street; and that her Men fetched a Hamper and a Trunk from Mr. Burdet's, and carried them to the Veſſel: And, that Mr. Elliot wrote a Note for her, to call for the Company at Mr. Rigby's, the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden, about ten the next Night, which ſhe did, and found Mr. Aſhton there, who went out and fetched Mr. Elliot, and two other Gentlemen ſhe never ſaw before: That Mrs. Aſhton afterwards came in, and ſaid, She was afraid they ſhould have no very good Luck, for the Cock crowed: And ſome of the Company told her People, if they went ſafe that Time, they would help them to the earning of 1000 Pounds before Lady-Day. The Witneſſes for the Crown.

That the Gentlemen went from Rigby's about eleven o'Clock at Night; ſhe did not go with them, but ſtaid there with Mrs. Aſhton, who gave her the Leg of a Gooſe.

Paſely, the Maſter of the Smack, was ſworn, and depoſed, That he and his People fetched a Trunk and a Hamper from Mr. Burdett's, and carried them on Board the Smack (which lay at Billingſgate) as Mrs. Pratt had teſtified; and that they ſaw the Money told out at Mr. Burdett's, being ninety-three Guineas and a Sixpence; which was to be paid his Owner, by Mrs. Burdett, on his Return from France: That Mr. Aſhton broke the Sixpence, and gave his Owner one half, and took the other himſelf; and when he (the Maſter) brought back the other half of the Sixpence, which Mr. Aſhton had, the Money was to be paid.

That they called upon the Company as they were 1690. 2W.&M. were directed, at the Seven-Stars, in the little Piazza in Covent-Garden, about Ten the next Night, and from thence to Surry-Stairs, where they called at an Alehouſe for their Waterman; and he (this Witneſs) was ordered to go firſt into the Boat; where being ſeated, there came in four Men, namely, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Elliot, my Lord, and his Man: That they went through Bridge, and went on Board the Veſſel which was riding on Southwark Side, over-againſt the Tower: That ſailing down the River, the Gentlemen were hid under the Quarter-Hatches, as they went by the George Man of War, and hid themſelves again, when they came over-againſt the Block-Houſe at Graveſend; and Captain Billop coming on Board there, took them all Priſoners: That the Captain commanded the Gentlemen to go into his Boat, and the Witneſs and his Sailors with them, and carried them all to Whitehall.

When they came to Whitehall-Stairs, one of the Gentlemen ſaid to him (the Witneſs), Maſter, when you come upon your Examination, ſay you were bound to Flanders, and not to France; gave him half a Crown, and ſaid, he would take Care of him: Aſhton gave one of his Men half a Crown alſo; and my Lord's Man gave the other Sea-man half a Crown——And, that the Waterman who carried them on Board, left two Coats behind him in the Veſſel.

Charles Betſworth, the Waterman, depoſed, That a Gentleman called him, and asked him to carry him down the River, as far as the Tower, when the Tide turned; and that he agreed to carry him for half a Crown, and to wait for him at an Alehouſe near Surry-Stairs: That about Eleven, the Gentleman came with ſome others; and he took them into his Boat, and carried them on Board a Veſſel, which lay over-againſt the Tower; and returning through Bridge, he miſſed his Cloaths; and thereupon rowed towards the Smack again, to enquire for them; but ſhe was gone, and he did not hear of his Cloaths again till laſt Friday Sen'night, when they were ſent to him.

Fiſher, one of the Sailors belonging to the Smack, depoſed, That he carried the Trunk above-mentioned, on Board the Smack; and between Eleven and Twelve the ſame Evening, my Lord, Mr. Aſhton, Mr. Elliot, and my Lord's Man, came on Board, and ſailing down the River, they hid themſelves twice under the Hatches, and were taken by Captain Billop, over-againſt Graveſend, as the Maſter of the Smack had teſtified.

Amonds, another of the Sea-men, confirmed Fiſher's Teſtimony, and added, That when Captain Billop took them, he ſearched my Lord's Pockets, and took out ſome Papers, which he put into his own: That he gave his Lordſhip his Watch again, and ſaid, he would meddle with nothing but Papers: Then he ſearched Mr. Elliot, and Mr. Aſhton; and one of the Watermen telling Captain Billop, he ſaw Aſhton put ſomething into his Boſom, the Captain pulled out a Roll of Papers, with a Piece of Lead tied to it: And that when they came to Whitehall, my Lord's Man gave this Witneſs half a Crown, and bid him ſay they were bound for Flanders, and not for France.

Captain Billop depoſed, That on the laſt of December, about two o'Clock, the Lord Preſident, the Marquiſs of Carmarthen, told him; there were ſome Perſons going to France about Buſineſs of dangerous Conſequence, and deſired him (the Witneſs) to get them apprehended: That my Lord Danby furniſhed him with a Boat and Arms; with which he ran down the River as far as Graveſend that Night; and ſeeing this Veſſel come by, which his Men informed him was the Veſſel he looked for, and called the Thomas and Elizabeth; he went on Board, and found the Lord Preſton, Mr. Elliot, and Mr. Aſhton, under the Hatches in the Cabbin: That he ſearched his Lordſhip, took all the Papers he found on him, and put them into his own Pocket: Then he ſearched Mr. Elliot, but found nothing on him; but one of his Men telling him, Mr. Aſhton had put ſomething into his Boſom, he (the Witneſs) clapped his Hand into Aſhton's Boſom, and pulled out a Packet, with a Lead fixed to it. 1690. 2W.&M.

That he brought theſe Gentlemen, with the People that belonged to the Smack, up the Thames with him in his Boat; and Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot telling my Lord that he (the Witneſs) was their Acquaintance, my Lord ſaid, he was glad he was fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman, and, if ever it lay in his Power to do him Service, he would; and uſed a great many kind Expreſſions, to induce him to diſpoſe of the Packet: Mr. Aſhton and Elliot alſo courted him to throw the Packet over-Board, invited him to go with them, and asked him, What Good it would do him, to injure ſo many honeſt Gentlemen? They ſaid, he had it now in his Power to make himſelf as great and as rich as he pleaſed: That the Tide would not always run that Way; and when nothing would prevail, they ſaid, Every Dog had his Day.

That he brought the Gentlemen and the Papers to my Lord Nottingham's (the Secretary's) Office, and ſaw the Papers opened; and when my Lord Nottingham had read them, he tied them up, and ſent them by him (the Witneſs) to the Lord Preſident.

The Lord Preſton demanding, If thoſe were the ſame Papers that were taken on Board the Smack? Billop anſwered, He marked ſome of them, which he could ſwear to, and no more.

Johnſon, one of Billop's Boat's Crew, confirmed the Captain's Evidence, and added, That he ſaw Aſhton take the Packet off the Ballaſt, or Gravel, and put it into his Boſom; and there were a Couple of Seals lying by it, which he (the Witneſs) took up: And that they went on Board the George Frigate, and my Lord's Man told this Witneſs, he would give him ſomething to drink, if he would deliver him the Seals; but he (the Witneſs) delivered them to Captain Billop. (And the Captain depoſed, that the Seals produced in Court were the ſame he received of Johnſon).

That, as they were coming up the River, Elliot wiſhed a Thunder-bolt might ſink the Boat; and, when they went through Bridge, he wiſhed that London-Bridge might fall on their Heads.

The Lord Nottingham depoſed, That all the Papers he received of Captain Billop, he ſealed up, with his Seal, and delivered to the Captain again, when he had read them.

The Marquis of Carmarthen, Lord Preſident, depoſed, That Captain Billop brought him a Bundle 1690. 2W.&M. Bundle of Papers, ſealed with Lord Notting-ham's Seal: That he ſhewed them to the King next Morning, and then delivered them, by his Majeſty's Command, to the Lord Sidney.

The Lord Sidney depoſed, That he marked every Paper, and then delivered them to Mr. Bridgman, who copied them, and delivered them to him again.

Bridgman depoſed, That my Lord Sidney delivered him the Papers, ſigned with his Lordſhip's Hand; and, when he had copied them, he delivered all of them to his Lordſhip again.

Here the Lord Preſton objected, That my Lord Nottingham acknowledged he opened no Papers, before he (the Priſoner) was called in and examined, and that then Captain Billop withdrew: He could not ſee, therefore, how the Captain could ſay, theſe were the ſame Papers he took in the Smack.

Captain Billop anſwered, My Lord Preſton obſerved very right, That after he had delivered the Packet to my Lord Nottingham, he (Billop) withdrew: But when he came in again, the Packet was in the ſame Condition he left it on the Table? he believed the Lord Nottingham had not opened it.

The Lord Preſton demanding, If this was ſufficient Evidence? the Chief Juſtice anſwered, It was Evidence enough to have the Papers read; but the Queſtion was, what Credit the Jury would give to the Evidence.

Then the Lord Preſident was deſired to look upon the Papers; and having caſt his Eye on them, he ſaid, This is one of the Papers I had from Captain Billop, and ſhewed the King; and this is another of them.

One of which Papers was afterwards read, entitled, The Reſult of a Conference between ſome Lords and Gentlemen, both Tories and Whigs; in which it was undertaken to prove, the Poſſibility and Method of reſtoring King James, by a French Power, without endangering the Proteſtant Religion and Civil Adminiſtration, according to the Laws of this Kingdom. The Subſtance whereof was,

1. That it was the Intereſt of France rather to endeavour to oblige, than conquer us.

2. That France muſt take off the frightful Character we have of him, and ſhew he had no Deſign of returning our offended King a Conquerer upon us; upon which he will find many Lords and Gentlemen in his Intereſt.

3. That the muſt over-rule the Bigotry of St. Germains, where one ſilly Thing or other was done every Day, which obſtructed their Return; and, particularly, that none be ſuffered to ſend Letters from thence, but King James; for they were generally filled with Arguments againſt a Reſtoration: That King James muſt think of nothing ſhort of a Proteſtant Adminiſtration, and muſt give us a Model of this, by preferring Proteſtants at St. Germains.

4. That he ſhould encourage Lords and Gentlemen to come to him, of whom he might frame a Council; which would facilitate his Return and give Satisfaction here.

5. That the French King ſhould grant Liberty of Conſcience to the Hugonots, that we might believe his Conduct towards them flowed from the Hazard he thought himſelf in from their rebellious Principles, rather than an Inclination to Perſecution. 1690. 2W.&M.

Laſtly, All other Meaſures depended on the Acceptance this Propoſal found; and an Anſwer was impatiently expected: This was ſaid to be prepared by the unanimous Conſent of Whigs and Tories, who were upon the Point of uniting in his Majeſty's Intereſt.

The Lord Preſton, on the reading this Paper, ſaid, He could ſafely ſwear, he never ſaw it: Then another Paper was read, of the like Tenor; and a third Paper was ſhewn to the Lord Preſident and the Lord Sidney, who teſtified it was in the abovefaid Packet.

This contained the Heads of a Declaration: King James was adviſed to promiſe in it, that the Laws ſhould be the Rule of his Actions, and that he would endeavour to ſettle Liberty of Conſcience by Law; and, whatever had formerly occaſioned Jealouſies, particularly the Diſpenſing Power, ſhould be determined in a Parliament to be ſpeedily called.

That it ſhould be repreſented, he had ſhewn his Averſion to an Army of Strangers, by refuſing Aid from France on the Prince of Orange's Invaſion; and declare, he would bring no more over with him, than for the Defence of himſelf and his loyal Subjects; and even theſe ſhould be diſmiſſed, when the Nation was rid of thoſe Foreigners, which had invaded it, and trampled on the Laws and Liberties of the People.

Then ſome Letters were read, that were written in canting Terms, ſubſcribed by no body; and ſome of them directed to no body: In one of them, the Writer ſays, His young Maſter had all their beſt Wiſhes, and daily got more Friends: In another, directed to Mr. Jackſon, the Writer ſays, He will never quit his Intereſt, whatever the reſt of the Freeholders do: That his Adverſary had diſobliged all the old Tenants, and a little Matter would redeem the Eſtate, if he would appear in Weſtminſter-Hall himſelf; and begs he would haſten to them, for that the Cauſe might be brought to a final Hearing before Eaſter, if it were well ſolicited.

In another Letter, the Writer ſays, That in Trade, as well as in Government, Schemes muſt be laid; and adviſes his Correſpondent to lay his Deſigns probably, and purſue them diligently, and with Vigour; and though the Times were hazardous, yet by venturing boldly, when venturing was adviſeable, it often returned great Profit.

The Writer, in another Letter, informs his Correſpondent, That this was the Time to make large Advantages by Trading, the Sea being freer than for two Months paſſed, or than they could hope it would be two Months hence: That the Bearer was well inſtructed in the Markets, and what Goods they wanted, and when and where they ſhould be ſent; earneſtly deſiring this happy Opportunity might not be loſt: That if the ſeveral Parcels promiſed did not arrive before the 10th of March, (eſpecially the Copper and the Linnen, of which the Bearer would be more particular) he was ſatisfied the Summer's Profit would be loſt.

In another Paper, the Writer ſays, For his own Part, he would ſtay as long as he could be ſafe, though with never ſo much Trouble; but it would be be a Comfort to know, when they were driven from hence, where they could be ſafe: The Report of People's Uſage was terrible; they ſuffered by the Indiſcretion of the Family at St. Germains, and the ridiculous Letters from them, which daily fell into the Hands of the Government; and that their Maſter and Miſtreſs were as little obliged to them as they were; tells him, the Bearer had furniſhed 200 l. for his Uſe, which he deſired might be paid.

A Cypher, with an Alphabet of Names, was alſo found to be in the Packet; in which A. ſtood for the King, B. for the Queen, C. the Prince of Wales, D. the Prince of Orange, &c. A Liſt of the Engliſh Fleet alſo was proved to be in the Packet; with two Bills of Exchange, in French, amounting to 500 l. and drawn on two Bankers in Paris: Some Memorandums of the Condition of the Fleet; when the Dutch were likely to join them, and how the French might fight the Engliſh Fleet before they were joined, were produced.

Some Memorandums alſo of the Strength of Portſmouth; intimating, that it was garriſoned by five hundred Men, commanded by Gibſon, a Scotch Pedlar. A Liſt alſo of the Admirals that commanded each Squadron, and ſome Heads for a Declaration, were inſerted: The King was adviſed to land in Scotland in February, and endeavour to unite the Epiſcopal and Preſbyterian Parties: That his Army ſhould conſiſt of Scots, not French, and that he ſhould procure five thouſand Swediſh Foot: It would be to his Reputation to have a Proteſtant Ally: It was adviſed to block up Newcaſtle with Scotiſh Ships, and diſtreſs London: It was ſaid that Ormonde and Brandon were diſobliged about the Guards; mentions the proteſting Lords againſt the Uſurper; and ſays, three in five were againſt the Vacancy of the Throne: That the London Clergy were the worſt; for we have their Wiſhes, and they their Oaths.

Then Mr. Townſend depoſed, That he belonged to the Office of the Great Wardrobe, where he had Occaſion to ſee his Lordſhip's Hand ſometimes, and believed theſe Memorandums to be his Hand.

Mr. Bland depoſed, He had ſeen Lord Preſton's Hand, and he believed theſe Papers were his Lordſhip's Hand-writing.

Mr. Warr depoſed, He believed one of the Papers of Memorandums to be his Hand; and, as to the Seals that had been produced, he teſtified, that one was his Lordſhip's Seal, when Secretary of State, and the other his private Seal.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice directing the Lord Preſton to enter upon his Defence; his Lordſhip obſerved, in the firſt Place, That the Treaſons he was charged with were none of them done in the County of Middleſex, and yet they were laid in the Indictment to be done in this County.--Then he deſired to know, whether the Memorandums were ſufficiently proved to be his; that is, Whether Similitude of Hands was Proof againſt him in ſuch a Caſe?

The Chief Juſtice demanding, If his Lordſhip would diſprove any of the Facts that had been teſtified againſt him? The Lord Preſton anſwered, he muſt deny the whole Fact, but had no Witneſſes, or Evidence to offer; and obſerved further, that none of the Witneſſes declared he knew any thing of going into France, or had any Concern in hiring the Ship; though he ſuppoſed if they had, that was not Treaſon; nor did they ſay, the Papers were found upon him.

1690. 2W.&M.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, If it was proved his Lordſhip had an Intention to carry thoſe Papers into France, and took Boat with them in the County of Middleſex, and went on Ship-board in order to it; the taking Boat at Surry-Stairs in Middleſex, and in Proſecution of that Intention, was an Overt-Act in the County of Middleſex.

The Lord Preſton anſwered, They had not proved that Deſign. The Chief Juſtice replied, He was was of Opinion, if his Lordſhip had ſuch a Deſign to go with thoſe Papers into France, and thoſe Papers were framed by him, or he was privy to the Contents of them; then it was plainly proved, that he went into a Boat in the County of Middleſex, in order to carry on this Deſign; and that made the Indictment good: Whether he did take Water with an Intention to carry theſe Papers to France, that the Jury were to Judge of.

The Lord Preſton ſaid, There ought to be two credible Witneſſes to prove every Fact; and he hoped the Gentlemen of the Jury would conſider, there was nothing but Suppoſition as to him; and he hoped he and his Family ſhould not be ruined on a Suppoſition.

Then the reſt of the Judges on the Bench delivered their Opinions, That if the Jury believed my Lord Preſton took Boat with an Intention to carry thoſe Papers (which were treaſonable) to France, then there was ſufficient Evidence of an Overt-Act in the County of Middleſex.

The Lord Preſton, however, ſtill inſiſted, That it was not proved theſe Papers were taken upon him; or that he did take Water at Surry-Stairs with an Intent to go into France: And thus having concluded his Defence, the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt proceeded to ſum up the Evidence, and direct the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

Lord Chief Juſtice Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, My Lord Preſton ſtands indicted of High-Treaſon, in Imagining and Compaſſing the Depoſition, Death, and Deſtruction of the King and Queen; and for that Purpoſe did write, or cauſe to be writ, ſeveral treaſonable Papers and Letters; deſigned to go into France, and there to correſpond with the French King and his Subjects, who are Enemies to the King and Queen, and to carry with him thoſe treaſonable Papers and Letters, containing a Project, and a formed Deſign, how this Kingdom ſhould be invaded by Foreigners.

There is another Treaſon in the Indictment mentioned, and that is for adhering to, and abetting, the King's Enemies; there being open War declared between the King and Queen and the French King.

You have heard, Gentlemen, a very long Evidence: Witneſſes have been produced viva voce, and ſeveral Papers have been read to you. Some of the Papers that have been produced, though they may ſeem myſterious and canting, yet they are not ſo very obſcure and unintelligible, but, if you conſider them well, the Meaning of them will appear: Others of them are more expreſs, 1690. 2W.&M. and do plainly demonſtrate a Deſign, that this King and Queen ſhould be depoſed, and that there ſhould be another Prince ſet upon the Throne, and reſtored to the Government of this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, there are two other Perſons mentioned in the Indictment with my Lord; and though my Lord is only now upon his Trial, yet the Evidence that doth affect them, doth alſo concern my Lord.

You have heard how there was an Intention of ſome Perſons to go to France; and how Mr. Aſhton, one of the two others that ſtand indicted with my Lord, did treat with one Mrs. Pratt, one of the Witneſſes, to hire a Veſſel for that Purpoſe; and it was by the Means of one Mr. Burdett, that lives in the City: They had a Meeting at Burdett's Houſe, where they treated about the Price that ſhould be given for the Hire of this Ship to go to France, but at that Time they did not agree. It was concluded, that the Woman, and Aſhton, and Burdett ſhould meet at the Wonder-Tavern; but Mr. Burdett not being there, nothing was concluded upon then. After that, the Woman, Mr. Burdett, and Aſhton, and Elliot, met at Mrs. Burdett's: The Woman inſiſted at firſt upon 150 l. After they had been treating for ſome Time, the Bargain was made to go to France for 100 l.

Then the next Thing conſidered, was, how this Money ſhould be paid; by Agreement ninety three Guineas, and Six-pence, which made up the 100 l. was depoſited in Mrs. Burdett's Hand; a Six-pence broken, one Part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other Part of the Six-pence Mr. Aſhton had; and when either Mrs. Pratt, or the Maſter of the Veſſel, did bring back that Part of the Six-pence that Aſhton had, to Mrs. Burdett, the Money was to be paid.

After this Agreement, they were appointed to go to the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden, to the Houſe of one Mr. Rigby; and there the Woman, Mrs. Pratt, and the Maſter of the Veſſel, Aſhton, and Elliot met; and they were that Night to go away, and to take Water at ſome Place near, to go on Ship-board; and having ſtaid there till it was about Ten o'Clock at Night, then they went away into the Strand, and ſo into Surry-Street, and took Water at Surry-Stairs.

But before they came from Mr. Rigby's, ſome Perſons went to Surry-Stairs, and met with that Fellow that was here produced, who was a Sculler, and did hire him to go through the Bridge, when the Tide ſerved, and to carry ſome Gentlemen on Ship-board; they agreed with him for half a Crown, and he was to ſtay in a Houſe near the Stairs until they came.

And, at the Time appointed, Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot, and the Maſter of the Veſſel, came to that Place, and my Lord Preſton and his Man with them, to take Water: My Lord Preſton was not at Burdett's Houſe, at the hiring of the Ship, nor at Mr. Rigby's; but it is proved, by the Maſter of the Veſſel, that he took Water with the reſt of them at Surry-Stairs; that he went with them on Ship-board, and was to go along with them.

Being on Board the Ship, they did appear to have ſome Apprehenſions of Danger; and, paſſing by a Man of War, my Lord Preſton, his Man, and the other two, went under the Quarter-Hatches, where they lay down, to prevent themſelves from being taken or diſcovered; and they hid another Time, when they came near Graveſend; and coming up, they, ſeeing a Boat coming towards them, hid themſelves again: Captain Billop, who it ſeems was ſent to apprehend them, pretended he was to preſs Seamen; and when he came on Board the Smack, he ſaid, he would preſs the Mariners, who anſwered, they had a Protection; but he being upon the Search, pulled up the Boards of the Quarter-Hatches, and there was my Lord Preſton, and the other Perſons, lying down: It was not a Place that was very proper for Gentlemen, or indeed for any Paſſengers, to repoſe themſelves in; it was an uneaſy Place, no body could ſtand or ſit upright in it; nay, there was no convenient Place for lying down, but they muſt lean upon their Elbows, which Poſture thoſe Gentlemen were in; ſo that their Purpoſe was plainly to conceal themſelves, and their concealing themſelves muſt be becauſe of ſome Deſign they were about, which they would not have diſcovered. 1690. 2W.&M.

They being taken out from under the Hatches, one of the Witneſſes tells you, he ſaw a Packet lying there, and Aſhton, pretending to fetch his Hat, went down, took it up, and put the Packet into his Boſom; and the Witneſſes informing Captain Billop thereof, he cauſed Aſhton's Coat to be ſearched, and from thence took the Packet, and a Piece of Lead tied to it, which was produced here in Court.

When they were bringing away in Cuſtody, they ſeemed all of them to be very much concerned about this Packet; ſome of them, that is, Aſhton and Elliot, would have had it thrown, with the Lead, over-board: My Lord Preſton did not ſay ſo much, but complimented Captain Billop in this Manner; He was glad he was fallen into the Hands of a civil Gentleman, a Perſon of Worth, and he ſhould always acknowledge his Kindneſs, and would do him all the Service he could, if he would diſpoſe of the Packet.

My Lord Preſton was ſearched at that Time, and Letters of no great Moment taken about him. Aſhton and Elliot would have had Captain Billop to take thoſe Letters which were taken in my Lord Preſton's Pocket, and tie the Lead to them, and have thrown the Packet over-board, and to report to the King and Council, that thoſe Letters were the Packet that was taken with the Lead, and ſo have perſuaded him to be falſe to the Truſt that was repoſed in him.

And Aſhton and Elliot uſed many Expreſſions to induce him to that Compliance: They told him the Government was unſtable, and every Dog had his Day, and the Tide would turn; and that he would deſerve very well, if he would change Sides, and go with them where they were going; and that he had Opportunity to get any Preferment he would have.

Lord Preſton. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhip obſerves, that I ſaid none of all this.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord, I do not ſay you did: My Lord Preſton did not ſay any thing of all this, but only about diſpoſing of the Packet; that his Lordſhip ſpoke of to Captain Billop; and complimented him, and promiſed him Kindneſs, if he would diſpoſe of the Packet.

But

1690. 2W.&M.

But, Gentlemen, as there was a Packet taken, ſo there were two Seals taken at the ſame Time, and in the ſame Place, which have been produced and ſhewn to you; they lay both of them upon the Ballaſt, under the Quarter-Hatches, near the Packet: The one of them is the Seal of my Lord Preſton's own Coat of Arms, the other Seal belongs to the Secretary's Office, which Office my Lord once held in the late Reign.

Lord Preſton. I beg your Lordſhip would be pleaſed to obſerve, that the Papers were not taken upon me; and it can be no Treaſon to have Seals, I ſuppoſe.

L. C. J. Holt. Good my Lord, I will not do your Lordſhip any Wrong: I do not ſay that the Papers were taken about you, no, nor the Seals; but only, that they lay upon the Ballaſt, from whence the Packet was taken; and, I ſay further, that theſe Seals are not denied by your Lordſhip to be your Seals; the one is your own Seal of your Coat of Arms, which was taken at that Time, and ſo I do not your Lordſhip any Wrong, and, by the Grace of God, will not.

Lord Preſton. It is no Crime, I hope, to have Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. I do ſay, my Lord, the Papers were taken about Aſhton, and not about your Lordſhip; but they lay upon the Ballaſt, where the Seals were, and where your Lordſhip lay: But how far my Lord Preſton is concerned in this Matter, is to be conſidered by you of the Jury by-and-by.

Now, Gentlemen, you have heard how earneſt Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot were; one of them, to wit, Elliot, wiſhed a Thunder-bolt might ſtrike the Boat under Water, as they were coming back; and when they came through Bridge, he wiſhed that London-Bridge had fallen upon them, and knocked them on the Head.

Lord Preſton. But I hope that is not to lie upon me neither; for I ſaid no ſuch Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. No: But Aſhton and Elliot did ſay theſe Things; and how the Caſe ſtands as to that, in Relation to your Lordſhip, is to be conſidered: It is proved they afterwards gave Money to the Seamen, half a Crown a-piece to two of them, to ſay they were going to Flanders, and not to France.

Now, Gentlemen, that my Lord was on Board this Veſſel, that my Lord was under the Hatches, and that the Papers were taken in this Manner, is beyond all Contradiction; ſo likewiſe, that the Ship was hired for France, that my Lord took Water at Surry-Stairs, and was taken in this Veſſel, in that Manner you have heard.

The next Thing, Gentlemen, is about the Papers: I muſt tell you, though there are ſeveral of them that do ſeem myſterious, yet there are Papers that do ſhew a very great Deſign of depoſing the King and Queen, and a Purpoſe of altering the preſent Government.

But, Gentlemen, I will mention to you thoſe Papers that are very plain, and leave you to conſider what Conſtruction to put upon thoſe that are obſcure: There is one Paper that ſeems to be Inſtructions and Heads for a Declaration, that is to ſay, That the King of France muſt not come with a Deſign to make an entire Conqueſt.

1690. 2W.&M.

Lord Preſton. My Lord, with Submiſſion to your Lordſhip, I hope you will pleaſe to remember, and obſerve to the Jury, that Paper is not proved to be mine.

L. C. J. Holt. No, my Lord: I will do your Lordſhip no Wrong; but I cannot ſpeak all my Words at once.

Lord Preſton. I am ſure you will not, my Lord; but I beg leave to put your Lordſhip in Mind.

L. C. J. Holt. Well then, Gentlemen, the Paper begins, That the King's Declaration is to be formed in general Terms; that he will govern by the Laws, that they ſhall be the Rule of his Actions; that he will endeavour to ſettle Liberty of Conſcience by a Law; and that whatſoever was done by him, that gave any Occaſion of Jealouſy, ſhall be ſettled by Parliament: That he hath given ſufficient Proof and Evidence of his not being willing to bring an Army of Strangers into the Kingdom, by refuſing the Succours the King of France offered him, and that were even ready to be embarked, upon the firſt Notice of the Prince of Orange's Coming; that he brings ſuch an Army only as is neceſſary for his own Defence, and ſecuring ſuch of his loyal Subjects as ſhould come to him; and that he will diſmiſs them as ſoon as he ſhall have rid the Nation of thoſe Foreigners that had invaded us, and trampled upon the Laws.

So that, Gentlemen, here is a Paper in this Packet that has plainly laid open and proved the Deſign; and ſhews the Meaning of it was to ſeduce their Majeſties Subjects from their Allegiance: It was to be in ſuch general Terms, making general Promiſes; hoping thereby, that People would be the more eaſily impoſed upon, to renounce their Allegiance to their preſent Majeſties. But, Gentlemen, the Declaration imports farther, that the Realm was to be invaded by Foreigners; and to palliate it, it is pretended, that Foreigners were only brought in to rid the Nation of Foreigners; and you know who are meant by that: So that this Project was only to colour a Foreign Invaſion; and this Declaration was to direct them how, and upon what Pretences, they ſhould invade this Kingdom.

Gentlemen, there is no Manner of Doubt but this is a treaſonable Declaration; and if any Perſon had this in his Poſſeſſion, and was going into France to carry it, with an Intention there to make uſe of it, that is Treaſon, though it be couched under ſpecious Pretences, of reſtoring People to their Liberty: It was plainly a Deſign to invade England by a French Army.

L. Preſton. My Lord, that Paper was not found about me.

L. C. J. Holt. No, no, my Lord, it was not; but, good my Lord, give me your Favour: I will certainly obſerve every thing that is fitting, but I tell you I cannot do it all at once.

Then, Gentlemen, there is another Paper found in the Paquet, that is ſaid to be, The Reſult of a Conference, that was held between divers Lords and Gentlemen, as well Tories as Whigs, as they call them, to prove it poſſible to reſtore the late King by French Arms; and how this may be effected, were Propoſals made: Yet ſtill it was pretended to preſerve the Proteſtant tant Religion, and the Civil Adminiſtration, according to Law.

And, that it might be brought to paſs, the Credulous were to be impoſed upon, and made to believe that the French King would not conquer England for himſelf; no, but he would conquer it for the late King; he would be at that vaſt Charge, that great Expence of Men and Arms, to reſtore King James, and make no Profit of it himſelf.

And it was propoſed how to ſeduce the People of England into a Belief of the French King's Kindneſs: He was to indulge the Proteſtants in France, and let them have the Exerciſe of their own Religion there; and this to ſatisfy the Engliſh Proteſtants, That his Proſecution of the Hugonots in France, was not out of Averſion to the Proteſtant Religion, but only becauſe of their Antimonarchical and Reſiſting Principles: So that they were propoſing among themſelves what they were to do, to make the People believe the French King had no dangerous Deſign againſt our Religion and Liberties; and if they could meet with Perſons to believe this, that was a probable Way thought upon in this Conference, to get a great many Adherents to the French King; thereby this Invaſion to be facilitated, and the whole Project rendered more ſucceſsful.

There is another Thing, Gentlemen, in this Paper, and that is this: They complained of the Miſmanagement of their Affairs at St. Germains; that though they did earneſtly deſire the Reſtitution of the late King, yet there was always ſome fooliſh Thing or other that came from St. Germains, that obſtructed their Deſign.

What that fooliſh Thing is, I cannot ſay, it does not appear; but whether it were not too great a Diſcovery of their Zeal for Popery, and the Advancement of the Popiſh Religion, is worth your Conſideration.

And ſomething is to be done for Satisfaction of the People as to that; and it is adviſed, that there ſhould be ſeven or nine, or ſuch a Number of Engliſhmen, that ſhould go over, and be received into Favour at St. Germains, and they ſhould be of the Council there, and theſe were to be Proteſtants; and that was to be a Colour and Pretence, that the late King was reconciled to the Proteſtant Intereſt, becauſe he choſe Proteſtant Councellors, and had received them at St. Germains, and was adviſed by them.

This, ſays the Paper, will make the World believe he is ours, and that we have gained him; which was to delude a great many of the People of England, that they ſhould not be affrighted, in caſe there ſhould be ſuch an Invaſion of England, but invited rather, and encouraged, to join with the French when they came.

But, Gentlemen, the three laſt Papers that have been produced to you, are Papers that do ſomewhat more nearly concern my Lord Preſton.

The firſt Paper contains ſeveral Memorandums: It begins with Lady D. 2000 l. who that Lady D. is, I muſt leave it for you to imagine; though perhaps it may not be hard to gueſs.

It takes notice, that the Engliſh and Dutch were like to join; and theſe Memorandums do alſo ſhew a Deſign and Purpoſe of ſomething to be done for the Prevention of that Conjunction: They ſeem alſo to be Inſtructions to be made uſe of upon going into France to negotiate or tranſact ſome Matters of dangerous Conſequence. 1690. 2W.&M.

L. Preſton. My Lord, I hope your Lordſhip will obſerve, that theſe Memorandums are broken kind of Notes, incongruous and incoherent.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, my Lord, they are ſo, they are but broken Things; but I ſay ſtill, they are Memorandums, that were to be uſed for ſome Purpoſe: Now I leave it to the Jury to conſider of the Matter of them: What can be plainer than what is there expreſſed? The French are to come in Time, before the Dutch and the Engliſh join; they are to watch their Opportunity, and come betimes; and they are to fight at the Chops of the Channel, and not come as far as Beachy.

L. Preſton. This is all but preſumptive Evidence, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. I appeal to your Lordſhip, if it was not in the Paper; and I appeal to the Memory of the Jury, whether I miſrepeat it or not.

The Paper mentions Jennings, Strickland, and Trevannion, that they were to come from St. Malo's in one Night; the King (meaning the late King) was not to be on Board; and there were Ships to lie at Newcaſtle, to plague London: It is eaſy to underſtand what they meant. Among theſe Memorandums it is made a Remark, that the London Clergy are the worſt. It gives an Account how Portſmouth was fortified, and Goſport, and what Number of Men were in them; and of the State and Condition of our Navy, what Rates our Ships were, and how many, and who were to be the Commanders.

L. Preſton. I beg your Lordſhip to obſerve this is not Treaſon.

L C. J. Holt. I ſhall tell you that, my Lord, by and by; I am now ſtating the Evidence.

Gentlemen, my Lord Preſton inſiſts upon it, that theſe Papers were not found about him: It is true, they were not; but it does not therefore follow, that they were none of his Papers; but you have three Witneſſes, Mr. Townſend, Mr. Bland, and Mr. Warr, produced to prove theſe Papers to be my Lord's Hand: Mr. Townſend ſays he was acquainted pretty well with my Lord Preſton's Hand; he was one of his Clerks in the Office of the Wardrobe; He ſays, he has ſeen my Lord write ſeveral Times, and does believe the Writing to be his Hand; and to the ſame Purpoſe ſays Bland; and Mr. Warr ſwears to one of the Papers, that he believes it to be my Lord Preſton's Hand.

L. Preſton. I hope your Lordſhip will pleaſe to obſerve to the Jury, that this is only a Proof of Similitude of Hands; no body ſaw me write them.

L. C. J. Holt. They only ſay, they do believe it to be your Hand; no body ſays they ſaw you write them: If I omit any thing, pray tell me when I have done.

Gentlemen, there are other Papers which have been produced and read, that are writ in canting Terms; which yet plainly ſhew the general Deſign: They tell the Party, that Counſel are of Opinion, he has a very good Title: They hope he will appear himſelf; and, if the Cauſe be well ſolicited, it may come to a Hearing before the End of Eaſter-Term.

There

1690. 2W. & M.

There is another Matter mentioned in another Letter, which is under the Diſguiſe of Trade: That the Goods muſt come before the firſt of March. And another of them ſays, That unleſs the Copper and the Linnen come before the 10th of March, they ſhall loſe this Summer's Profit.

Gentlemen, What can be the Meaning of all this.

L. Preſton. I know not indeed, my Lord.

L. C. J. Holt. In another of the Papers, it is ſaid, 'Tis thought our Fleet will be ready by March or April; but they believe not till June.

Truly, Gentlemen, I have not been able to take Particulars of every Letter, but I muſt leave it to your Obſervation; only there is one of them that makes mention of acquainting my Lord with the Condition of the Writer; and Direction is therein given to ſpeak to the Bearer; and what other Lord was there, but he, in the Company?

L. Preſton. I deſire to obſerve, my Lord, that I was not the Bearer.

L. C. J. Holt. Truly, my Lord, I cannot tell who was meant; I muſt leave it to the Jury to judge of that; but there was no other Lord in that Company.

L. Preſton. I give your Lordſhip Thanks for obſerving, that it was not proved that they were taken upon me before; but I beg Pardon for interrupting your Lordſhip.

L. C. J. Holt. Interrupt me as much as you pleaſe, if I do not obſerve right: I will aſſure you I will do you no Wrong willingly.

Now, Gentlemen, the Queſtion is, in the firſt Place, whether this be Treaſon? and I told you before, without Queſtion if any Perſons do go into France to negotiate ſuch a Deſign as this, or do purpoſe to go into France, and do any Act in order thereunto, that is High-Treaſon; and theſe Letters do import High-Treaſon as great as can be committed, a Treaſon againſt the King and Queen; a Deſign to invade the Realm, to ſubvert the Government, to reſtore another Prince to the Throne, by the Aſſiſtance of Foreign Force.

There was a Deſign to delude and impoſe upon a great many People; and thoſe that would not be deluded into a Belief by theſe fair Pretenſions of Friendſhip, they were to be ſubdued by an Army of Foreigners.

Then, Gentlemen, the next Queſtion will be, how my Lord Preſton is affected by this Evidence; and whether you have ſufficient Proof, from what has been offered, to ſatisfy you he is guilty of this Treaſon or no?

Firſt, my Lord tells you, there has not been a clear Proof that theſe were the Papers that were taken: For (ſaith he) they have been conveyed from Hand to Hand; and therefore poſſibly there might be ſome Alteration made in them. You, Gentlemen, are to conſider, notwithſtanding this Objection, whether the Identity of the Papers be not proved.

Captain Billop tells you, he took them, and in what Manner; and afterwards carried them to my Lord Nottingham, who laid them by for a little Time upon his Table; and Captain Billop withdrew, (that is Part of my Lord's Objection) while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Preſton: After that my Lord Nottingham called in Billop again, and Billop ſwears the Packet was not opened, but remained intire, in ſuch Manner as they were delivered to my Lord Nottingham; and ſo ſays my Lord Nottingham. Then Captain Billop ſaw my Lord Nottingham open it at that Time; and he ſaw all theſe Papers every one put up again by my Lord Nottingham, ſo that he could not be deceived; and my Lord Nottingham delivered them to him, and he carried them to my Lord Preſident, all ſealed up with my Lord Nottingham's Seal; and my Lord Preſident tells you, he opened them, and brought them to the King, and had them back from the King; but they were never out of his Sight while the King read ſome of them; but he took them all, and brought them to the Cabinet Council, where my Lord Sidney received all theſe Papers that have been read, and marked them: You have my Lord Sidney's Oath, that theſe are the Papers he had from my Lord Preſident; you have my Lord Preſident's Oath, that he had them from Billop, ſealed with my Lord Nottingham's Seal; you have my Lord Nottingham's Oath, that he had them from Billop; and Billop ſwears they were taken in the Smack.

1690. 2W. & M.

So that it is plain, if you believe this Evidence, that they are the ſame Papers: Beſides, as to ſeveral of them, Billop marked them, and ſwears directly to them: If you believe theſe Witneſſes, as you have no Reaſon, I think, to the contrary, it is plainly proved, theſe are the very Papers which were taken from the Boſom of Aſhton, and taken up by him from under the Quarter-Hatches in the Smack.

L. Preſton. I beg your Lordſhip's Pardon for one Thing.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, what ſay you, pray? Say what you will.

L. Preſton. With humble Submiſſion, there is one Thing that I think the Jury ought to take Notice of, That when the Papers were ſent from Mr. Bridgman to my Lord Sidney, they were ſent by a Meſſenger.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, you are miſtaken as to that Objection; for my Lord Sidney did not ſend them to Mr. Bridgman by a Meſſenger, but he delivered them with his own Hand; and after he had ſet his own Mark upon them: And Mr. Bridgman ſays, they were never out of his Sight; he copied them all, but two or three, the other Mr. Pulteney copied in his Preſence; and ſo he ſwears, he re-delivered them to my Lord Sidney.

L. Preſton. With humble Submiſſion, my Lord, if I remember right, they were in a third Hand.

L. C. J. Holt. Never, never.

L. Preſton. Did not my Lord Sidney ſay ſo, or Mr. Bridgman?

L. C. J. Holt. No; neither my Lord Sidney, nor Mr. Bridgman ſaid ſo: I ſuppoſe the Jury are apprehenſive of the Matter; I would not miſlead them, I'll aſſure you, nor do your Lordſhip any Manner of Injury in the World.

L. Preſton. No, my Lord, I ſee it well enough that your Lordſhip would not; I am for my Life, and beg your Lordſhip's Pardon for interrupting of you.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen, the next Thing

1690. 2W.&M. is to consider, whether my Lord Preston be answerable for these Papers, or a Party in this Treason.

First, Gentlemen, I would have you to consider, that there was the hiring of a Vessel for France: It is true, my Lord Preston was not present at the Bargain; but you observe that my Lord Preston, his Servant, Ashton, and Elliot, took Water at Surry-Stairs, on Purpose to go on Board that Smack.

Now, Gentlemen, whether or no you can intend any other ways, than that my Lord Preston was privy in hiring this Vessel, though he was not present at the hiring of it; for how should my Lord Preston be ready to take Water with them at Surry-Stairs? Can you imagine my Lord came there by Chance, and took a sudden Resolution? If you can imagine, that he came only to go on Ship-board, without knowing the previous Design, truly you imagine a very great Thing for my Lord's Advantage.

It is plain, he went voluntarily, without Compulsion; truly, I think the Evidence is very strong, to induce you to believe he was privy to this Design, and that he did know of hiring the Vessel.

L. Preston. I hope your Lordship will observe, at the same Time, that I was never seen before we took Boat.

L. C. J. Holt. My Lord, I have observed it, and I lay that Weight upon the Evidence that I think it will naturally bear, and no more; and leave it to the Jury to consider, whether your Lordship was privy to the Design or no, when they weigh the Circumstances of the Evidence together.

L. Preston. I hope I shall not be condemned upon Presumption and Argument.

L. C. J. Holt. What Weight the Evidence has, they will consider: And then, Gentlemen, there is another Thing that I would observe; Why should my Lord Preston, a Nobleman, a Person of his Honour and Quality, put himself in such a Place as he was found in, and that twice? It must sure be out of an Apprehension of some Danger. As for the Sea-men, they were secure enough; they were not frightened, because they thought they were protected, and my Lord Preston knew he was not liable to be pressed; the Master of the Vessel tells you they were fearful, and therefore hid themselves in a Place they could not stand in, nor sit in; there was the Gravel and Ballast; it was uneasy to them, and dangerous to their Health to be there.

Gentlemen, why do Men avoid the Light, and put themselves under Covert, unless they have some evil Design? Persons that are innocent, seek not Obscurity.

The Seals were found there, and my Lord does not deny they were his Seals.

L. Preston. I do not deny that: I hope it is no Crime to have such Seals.

L. C. J. Holt. Ay, but says my Lord, that does not affect— because the Papers were not found about me, but were found about Ashton. Gentlemen, if you can imagine my Lord Preston had a different Design from the rest of the Company that were with him, then you may acquit my Lord, and find him Not Guilty: But it is left to you to consider, whether he had not the same Design with them. Besides, there is Mention made in one of the Letters of my Lord, and there was no other Lord but he; and here are Papers proved to be my Lord's own Hand, containing several of the Matters of which he stands indicted; and he would have had the Captain to have disposed of the Papers. 1690. 2W.&M.

Now, Gentlemen, what Account does my Lord give you, where he was going? It seems they did pretend at the Time they were taken, and they would have had the Master of the Vessel said, that their Design was for Flanders; but the Witnesses tell you positively, that the Vessel was hired for France.

Truly, Gentlemen, I must leave the Matter to your Consideration, whether my Lord be guilty of this Design, or not guilty.

There is another Thing that my Lord has urged (for I would not willingly omit any thing material, on the one Side or the other); he says, his Indictment is laid in the County of Middlesex, but the Papers were not taken there; the Ship they went on Board lay at Anchor in Surry; and when they were taken, it was in the County of Kent, and so there is no Proof of Treason in Middlesex.

Ay, but, Gentlemen, give me Leave to tell you, if you are satisfied upon this Evidence, that my Lord was privy to this Design, contained in these Papers, and was going with them into France, there to excite an Invasion of this Kingdom, to depose the King and Queen, and make use of the Papers to that End, then every Step he took, in order to it, is High-Treason, where-ever he went; his taking Water at Surry-Stairs, in the County of Middlesex, will be as much High-Treason as the going on Ship-board in Surry, or being found on Ship-board in Kent, where the Papers were taken.

Gentlemen, I have failed of recollecting several of the Particulars of this Evidence, because they are many; and you will not depend upon my Recollection of Things so very incoherent as some Parts of the Evidence in the Papers are, but upon your own Notes and Observations.

If you do think, having heard the Evidence, that my Lord was not concerned in this Matter, that my Lord had no Design to go into France with these Papers, but that he was an utter Stranger to all these Things, then you are to acquit my Lord: But if you believe my Lord was privy to, and knew of the hiring of this Vessel; and that he went to carry on the Design contained in these Papers, and that he wrote some of these Letters; and with the others he was acquainted, then you are to find him Guilty.

The Lord Chief Justice Pollexfen observed to the Jury, that my Lord Preston had produced no Evidence of his Affection to the present Government, which would have been of some Weight in this Case: Adding, That if they suffered those who were conspiring against the Government, to do it with Impunity, they would do well to consider what the Consequence would be.

The Lord Preston thereupon desired he might have the Liberty of speaking again, before the Jury went out: The Chief Justice answered, That was contrary to the Course of all Proceedings, to say any thing to the Jury after the Evidence was summed up; but for once they would permit it.

Then

1690. 2 W. & M. Lord Preſton permitted to ſpeak after the Directions to the Jury.

Then the Lord Preſton ſaid, He deſired the Jury might be informed he was a Proteſtant, baptized in the Religion of the Church of England, in which he always lived, and hoped to die in it; and obſerved, that Things had been urged againſt him with Severity; that they made that a Proof which amounted but to a Preſumption; as in the Caſe of the Letters that were written in a Cant, and his Intention of going to France; and thoſe Words in the Letter, My Lord, the Bearer, were applied to him; but that Letter was directed to no body, and as full of Cant Terms as any of the reſt; and why ſhould he be ſuppoſed to be the Bearer more than any of the reſt, eſpecially as they were found upon one of them? The Reaſon of his going beyond Sea was not to be wondered at; for though he had lived quietly after the Loſs of his Places, upon the Revolution, and ſuffered great Inconveniencies in his Eſtate, and was retired to his own Houſe, he was impriſoned twice in the Tower, and proclaimed a Traitor in every Market-Town, without any Indictment found againſt him: This made him uneaſy here, and occaſioned his Reſolution of going to Flanders, or to any Place where he could be quiet.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, If his Lordſhip thought himſelf hardly uſed, he muſt remember it was in a Time of Danger when he was taken up before, and when he had ſhewn his Diſaffection to the preſent Government; and the Government was not to be blamed for ſecuring itſelf againſt him: And, if he had a Mind to go abroad, was France the only Country he could chuſe; a Country at open War with us?

1690. 2 W. & M.

The Lord Preſton repeated it again, That he hoped the Gentlemen of the Jury would conſider all that was alledged againſt him was but Preſumption.

The Chief Juſtice replied, If he reflected on the Court, the Court would reflect upon him: He thought the Evidence had been ſtated very impartially; and the Evidence that had been given muſt have its due Weight and Conſideration: If any one could deſign innocently to go to France, at that Time of Day, with ſuch Papers, and in ſuch a Manner, he left to the Conſideration of the Jury.

The Jury then withdrew, and, returning within half an Hour, brought in the Priſoner GUILTY.

The Sentence, and Remarks on this Trial, will be found at the End of the next Trial of Mr. Aſhton.

1690. W. & M.

The Trial of JOHN ASHTON, Gent. for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on Monday, the 19th of January, 1690. 2 W. & M.

1690. 2 W. & M.

The Indictment.

THE Priſoner was indicted and arraigned, together which Sir Richard Grahme, Lord Viſcount Preſton, and Edmund Elliot, Gent. for Compaſſing the Death of the King and Queen, conſpiring to raiſe a Rebellion, to procure an Invaſion of the Kingdom, and adhering to their Majeſties Enemies. See the Indictment, in the Trial of the Lord Preſton immediately preceding.

Obtained one Warrant for Pen, and Ink for him.

Mr. Aſhton deſiring he might have Pen, Ink, and Paper, and a Solicitor to ſtand by him, and refreſh his Memory, the Chief Juſtice allowed him Pen, Ink, and Paper; but ſaid, the other was an Innovation, the Court could not allow it.

The Jurors being called, the Priſoner ſaid, He ſhould make no Challenges, but put himſelf upon the firſt Twelve in the Pannel; and accordingly the firſt Twelve were ſworn.

The Witneſſes for the Crown.

Then the Indictment and Evidence were opened, and the Witneſſes called; and firſt Mrs. Pratt was ſworn, who depoſed, That Mr. Aſhton hired a Smack of her, to go to France, and carry over two or three Gentlemen, who were Merchants, as was pretended, and going to fetch over Silk: That he agreed with her, at Mr. Burdett's Houſe, for an 100 l. and the Money was paid on Tueſday Night, in Mrs. Burdett's Bed-chamber, being ninety-three Guineas and Six-pence, and Mr. Aſhton broke the Six-pence in two Pieces, and gave one half, with the ninety-three Guineas, to Mrs. Burdett, and kept the other himſelf; and when the Maſter of the Veſſel brought the other half of the Six-pence to Mrs. Burdett, ſhe (Pratt the Witneſs) was to receive the 100 l.

That Mr. Aſhton gave her a Note to meet them the next Night at Mr. Rigby's, the Seven Stars in Covent-Garden, and ſhe went thither about Ten o'Clock; and Mr. Aſhton, Elliot, and two other Gentlemen came in, and having ſtaid a little while, went away; but Mrs. Aſhton ſtaid at the Seven Stars, and entertained her (the Witneſs) after they were gone: Said, ſhe hoped the Witneſs would not diſcover her Husband, and that God would deliver her out of the Lion's Mouth; and, upon the Cock's Crowing, Mrs. Aſhton ſaid, ſhe doubted they ſhould have no good Luck.

Mr. Aſhton demanding of Mrs. Pratt, If he ever ſpoke to her about going to France? ſhe anſwered, Yes; and ſaid, if ſhe helped them well away, they would help her to the earning 1000 l. before Lady-Day; and he aſked her, if there was a Hole in the Veſſel to hide what he might have Occaſion to conceal.

Paſeley, the Maſter of the Smack, depoſed, That he was with Mr. Aſhton, in Mrs. Burdett's Bed-chamber, when the 100 l. was paid; and that a Six-pence was broken, as Mrs. Pratt teſtified; one Part of which Mrs. Burdett kept, and the other Mr. Aſhton; and when he (the Witneſs) brought back Mr. Aſhton's half, the Owner was to have the reſt of the Money.

That he carried a Trunk and Hamper on Board, from Mrs. Burdett's Houſe, in Queen-Street, and afterwards met the Company at the Seven 1690. 2W.&M. Seven Stars in Covent-Garden, took Boat with them at Surry-Stairs, and went on Board the Ship, over-againſt the Tower; from whence they ſailed down the River, and were all taken over-againſt Graveſend, (as he had depoſed at the Lord Preſton's Trial) upon the Ballaſt, under the Hatches, where they had concealed themſelves.

Paſeley depoſed further, That they aſked him, if he could carry them ſafe to France; and when they were brought back, one of them gave him half a Crown, and bid him ſay, they were bound for Flanders. That Aſhton and Elliot both aſked, If there was a Place in the Ship to hide them in, and deſired, if they ſaw a Man of War's Boat coming on Board, they would tell them, that they might lie hid.

A Juryman demanding what was the uſual Rate for going to Flanders, with a Smack and three Men, Paſeley anſwered, twenty or thirty Pounds.

Betſworth, the Waterman, depoſed, He carried Mr. Aſhton, and the reſt of the Company, from Surry-Stairs, on Board the Smack, as he had teſtified in Lord Preſton's Trial.

Fiſher, one of the Ship's Crew, teſtified, That Mr. Aſhton, and the reſt of the Company, came on Board between Eleven and Twelve at Night; that they ſailed as far as Graveſend, and were taken by Captain Billop, and carried to Whitehall; and Aſhton, whiſpering him, bid him ſay, they were going to Flanders, and gave him half a Crown.

James Amonds, another of the Smack's Crew, depoſed, that they ſailed down the River, with Mr. Aſhton, and the reſt of his Company; and that Mr. Aſhton ſaid, If they took Care of them now, they (the Priſoner and his Company) would take Care of them hereafter, and help them to many a Pound: That after they were paſſed Graveſend, Fiſher was ſent down for the Victuals, and brought up ſome Roaſt-Beef, and other Things; and juſt as the Beef was going into the Cabbin, he (the Witneſs) gave them Notice a Barge was coming on Board to preſs, and they took the Victuals down, under the Quarter-Hatches, and there the Gentlemen lay, with the Victuals a-top of them, and Captain Billop, coming on Board, found them in this Condition; and when they were come up, the Captain put his Hand into Mr. Aſhton's Boſom, and pulled out a Packet of Papers, with a Lead tied to them; after which they were commanded into the Captain's Boat, and all carried to Whitehall; and my Lord Preſton's Man gave the Witneſs half a Crown, and ſaid, this will ſerve you to Night, and you ſhall be taken further Care of to morrow; only ſay you were bound to Flanders, and not to France.

Then Captain Billop teſtified, That on the laſt of December the Lord Preſident (the Marquis of Carmarthen) ſent for him, and told him there were ſeveral Perſons going to France, with Papers of dangerous Conſequence, and ordered him to uſe his Endeavours for ſeizing them; and thereupon he (the Witneſs) armed a Boat at the Tower, and, about Eleven at Night, rowed down the River to Graveſend, where he refreſhed his Men, and then went down further, into the Hope; and judging that no Veſſel which came from London that Tide, could be a-head of him, he returned, and preſſed ſeveral Men in the Ships upon the River, and, among the reſt, ſome Barking Men; and ſeveral Smacks coming down the River, they ſhewed him the Thomas and Elizabeth, the Veſſel he looked for; whereupon he went on Board, on Pretence of preſſing Men; and the Maſter ſhewing him his Protection, he (Billop) told him, he muſt ſearch further, and found the Lord Preſton and the reſt under the Hatches: That he took ſome Letters from my Lord, and a Packet, with a Lead to it, out of Mr. Aſhton's Boſom, who deſired he would throw the Packet over-board, and ſaid, What Good would it do him to injure ſo many Gentlemen? That Mr. Aſhton alſo ſaid, What if he (the Witneſs) ſhould turn about, and go with them? That they preſſed him ſeveral Times to throw the Packet over-board, as they came up the River; and when he refuſed, Elliot ſaid angrily, Every Dog has his Day: That he brought them to Lord Nottingham's Office, and laid the Packet on the Table in the Office, and then withdrew, while the Lord Preſton was called in to be examined; and going in again, when the Lord Preſton came out, he ſaw the Packet remained, where he left it, unopened; and my Lord Nottingham demanding, who he took the Packet from, Mr. Aſhton owned the Witneſs took it from him.

Johnſon depoſed, He went down the Thames, in the armed Boat, with Captain Billop, and that they took Mr. Aſhton, and the reſt of the Company, on Board the Smack, as the Captain teſtified: That he (the Witneſs) ſaw Mr. Aſhton take ſomething off the Ballaſt, and put it into his Boſom; and informing Captain Billop of it, the Captain put his Hand into Mr. Aſhton's Boſom, and pulled out a Parcel of Papers, with a Lead tied to it; and he (the Witneſs) afterwards found two Seals on the Ballaſt.

Mr. Aſhton demanding, If he had not been up, and ſearched, before the Bundle of Papers was found upon him, Johnſon anſwered, He thought he was up before, and that he (the Witneſs) afterwards ſaw him take them off the Ballaſt, and put them into his Boſom; and that the Bundle of Papers lay near the Place where the Seals lay.

Then the Lord Nottingham, the Lord Preſident, and Lord Sidney were ſworn, and teſtified, That the Papers produced in Evidence were the ſame that were in the Packet Captain Billop brought them; as they had teſtified at Lord Preſton*'s Trial. Then the ſame Papers were read, which were given in Evidence at the preceding Trial, to which I refer the Reader.*

The Chief Juſtice afterwards directing Mr. Aſhton to proceed in his Defence, he ſaid:

My Lord, my own Defence will be very weak, for I am very illiterate and unſkilled in the Laws; but where I do fail of taking Advantage, to obſerve what may be for my Advantage, I hope your Lordſhips will be ſo kind to me, as well as juſt (I may call it) to yourſelves, being upon your Oaths, as to take Notice of it.

My Lord, upon the whole, I have this to obſerve, firſt, as to my Buſineſs of going into France, I muſt ingenuouſly own it; though I proteſt to you, I never owned it, or named it, to the Woman, though ſhe hath ſworn it, but yet I do now. My Deſign was to go to France, and I had very great and good Reaſon for it, I think; I had endeavoured, all Ways I could in the 1690. W. & M. the Word to procure a Paſs to go to France; 'tis very well known I did Buſineſs under Lieutenant-General Worden, that died half a Year ago; his Accounts are now depending, and ſuch Accounts as may be prejudicial in ſome Points to his Family, to whom I have always owned, and muſt, a great Obligation, and would be very glad, upon all Occaſions, to ſerve it, and all the Branches of it: This was not the whole nor only Deſign I had in going thither, but I had likewiſe ſome Buſineſs of my own: I have a conſiderable Sum of Money owing me; if it be neceſſary to prove it, I can prove it by a Bond, from a Perſon that is there; a great Sum it is, a very conſiderable one to me at leaſt. And, my Lord, I did think if I did not go myſelf, it was impoſſible for me to do any thing in that Affair; and that was the true and only Reaſon of my Deſign in going to France, having been out of Hopes of getting any other Convenience otherways: This was not a Deſign juſt now formed, as if I were juſt now upon ſome Plot concerning the Publick, but it has been my Deſign ever ſince Lieutenant-General Worden died, and he upon his Death-Bed ingaged me to do it; and I once went down, hoping to have gone from Dover, and there I was apprehended and taken: And, my Lord, I have uſed all manner of Endeavours to go other ways, but they have always failed me, and this Way I hoped would have taken. My Lord, I do own I did hire the Boat, and I did pay the Money; but, with Submiſſion, I think that is not any Manner of Treaſonable Act, my Lord. Perhaps it is an ill Act, but it does not amount in the leaſt to Treaſon, going to the King's Enemies; ſuppoſe I went upon that Account, that is no manner of Treaſon in the World: Carrying Papers to the King's Enemies, except it be proved that I was privy to them, and knew the Contents of them, if Lawyers inform me right, is not Treaſon. Then what remains? 'Tis true, I muſt own, the Papers were found upon me; and I believe there is no body that has heard the Evidence that has been given, but muſt readily conclude, that I found them in the Place where the Seaman ſays I took them up; and beſides, my Lord, there is not any manner of Proof, ſo much as aimed at by the King's Counſel in all their Evidence, that I was privy to any one of theſe Papers; ſo that, my Lord, I think there is very little proved upon me at all. I had the Misfortune to be taken in this Company, and where theſe Papers were taken, it is true; but they have not attempted to prove that I was privy to, or knew any thing of them at all, nor that I was more concerned than that they were taken in my Stomach; this is all I have to obſerve upon the Whole. As to the Buſineſs of the Indictment, there are great and grievous Aggravations in it, and ſuch as I am not able to comprehend the Meaning of; the Words confound me, and therefore, I humbly deſire your Lordſhip to tell me, upon what Statute I am indicted.

L. C. J. Holt. I will tell you, Mr. Aſhton: You are indicted upon the 25th of Edw. III. for Conſpiring, Compaſſing, and Imagining the Death of the King and Queen, and for that Purpoſe going to France, and endeavouring to incite the French King to invade the Kingdom, and telling him how he ſhould do it; and letting him know in what State and Condition the Kingdom was, and how fit to be invaded. 1690. 2 W. & M.

Mr. Aſhton. Pray, my Lord, is that all proved upon me?

L. C. J. Holt. That is the Queſtion the Jury is to judge of, upon the Evidence that has been given.

Mr. Aſhton. As to that of Compaſſing the Death of the King and Queen, I am ignorant of Dealings in Law; but I conceive there are ſeveral Species of Treaſon mentioned in that Act of the 25th of Edw. III. and as to the Imagining the Death of the King, that is only to be proved by ſome Overt-Act: Now, I think, nothing at all has been proved of any open Act, conducing to prove the Imagining or Compaſſing the Death of the King or Queen; no Manner of Conſultation or Treaſonable Act at all; and therefore, my Lord, I do not ſee that there is any great Matter that is proved upon me; and I hope you are of that Opinion too.

L. C. J. Holt. Mr. Aſhton, that you may not go away with a Miſtake, any Perſons that deſigned the Depoſition of the King and Queen, and the Invaſion of the Kingdom, which is proved by an Overt-Act, this is ſufficient to prove that they compaſſed and imagined the Death of the King and Queen.

Mr. Aſhton. I preſume it may be ſo; I believe that may be the Conſtruction of the Law.

L. C. J. Holt. And I make no Queſtion, but thoſe that you have conſulted with have told you as much.

Mr. Aſhton. Truly, as to Counſel, my Trial has been as hard as ever Man met withal.

L. C. J. Holt. Why do you ſay ſo, Mr. Aſhton? the Court has not been hard upon you.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I do not complain of the Court; but as to the Matter of Time: I had Notice by that Gentleman, Mr. Bale, to prepare for my Trial, and that was on Friday, and not before.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Friday was Seven-night, you mean, I ſuppoſe.

Mr. Aſhton. Yes, I do mean Friday was Seven-night: I was then a cloſe Priſoner, I had not the Opportunity or Liberty of ſeeing any Chriſtian Soul: I ſpake to him then, and told him, Mr. Bale, this is very ſhort Notice; pray be ſo kind as to move my Lord that I may have Counſel: Truly, he was civil enough, and ſaid, he would do all he could. Says he, Will you give me the Names of your Counſel? So I gave him the Names of four, and of a Solicitor, but I never heard more of him in the Matter. I did, with all my Induſtry and Skill, give my Friends Notice; but I was under great Difficulty; for I had not the Liberty of Pen, Ink, or Paper, nor a Man to ſend upon a Meſſage: On Saturday I gave my Friends Notice of it; on Sunday (which was no very good Day for Buſineſs) they applied themſelves to my Lord Sidney, whoſe Favour and Kindneſs I ſhall always own as long as I live: He gave me all the Diſpatch poſſible, and got me an Order to ſee my Wife that Day, though it was Sunday: The next Day I made Application to have my Counſel come to me; that was Monday. He, with the ſame Readineſs, procured that; but it was Tueſday in the Afternoon before I could ſee any living Soul but my 1690. 2W.&M. Wife; and ſome of the Counſel that I deſired, would not readily come to me, and it was Wedneſday before I did ſee any of them; and ſo I had but Wedneſday and Thurſday to conſult with them in. On Friday I was brought here, and I endeavoured to procure a Copy of the Pannel, that I might inform myſelf of the Characters of the Men that were to be my Jury; and, my Lord, I would deſire you to give me leave to clear one Point, which, through Inadvertency, ſlipt from me, about the Time that I deſired to ſend to enquire about the Jury. I did not mean, as was apprehended, to ſend to them to take them off, but I only meant to enquire after their Characters: This was done upon Friday; I had not a Copy of the Pannel till laſt Friday, when we were arraigned in Court; it was two o'Clock before the Pannel was given us; it was between Three and Four when we came to Newgate; we were to come upon our Trial the next Morning by Eight o'Clock: So that, before the Copies could be tranſcribed for us, there were left but ſix Hours for us to enquire into the Morals of ſo many Men; of whom ſome live eight, ſome ten, ſome fifteen Miles out of Town: For my Part, I was not able to enquire after any one; that your Lordſhip may think, by my taking the firſt Twelve that appeared, and believing myſelf innocent of this Matter, I reſolved to put myſelf upon my Trial by any twelve indifferent Engliſh Men. I only beg, if I have omitted any thing in Reference to myſelf, or misbehaved myſelf with Reſpect to the Bench, that you would pleaſe to ſet me right, and conſider that I ſtand here for my Life; and to grant me your Pardon for any thing wherein I have offended your Lordſhips, to whom, and to the Jury, I refer my Cauſe; only I beg leave to call two or three Witneſſes, I know it has been before allowed in ſuch Caſes, to give ſome ſhort Account of my Life and Converſation; becauſe it hath been reflected upon me that I was a Papiſt, becauſe I deſigned to go into France: But, I believe, there is not any Man whoſe Devotion to the Proteſtant Religion, eſtabliſhed by Law, is greater than mine hath been, or to whom that Religion is dearer than to myſelf.

Then Mr. Aſhton called ſome People to his Character; and firſt Dr. Fitz-Williams appeared, and teſtified, that Mr. Aſhton conſtantly attended Divine Service at Church, and received the Sacrament about half a Year before; but being aſked, Whether this was before the Prayers were altered? he could ſay nothing to that.

Dr. Lake teſtified, That Mr. Aſhton was a Man of exemplary Piety, and had ſhewn an extraordinary Zeal againſt Popery.

Other Witneſſes alſo gave him a good Character.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, Why he uſed ſuch Importunity to have the Papers thrown over-board, and why he deſired Captain Billop to go with them? Mr. Aſhton thanked his Lordſhip for reminding him of theſe Things, and ſaid, Whatever his Fate was, he muſt own he had had a fair Trial for his Life.

That he did indeed deſire Captain Billop to throw the Packet over-board, for the Sake of his Friend, the Lord Preſton, who was uneaſy, he obſerved, at their being taken; but he did not remember he deſired Captain Billop to go with them. 1690. 2W.&M.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. As to what you have offered to prove you a Proteſtant, no body queſtions it; all that are concerned in this Matter are ſuch; for the whole Deſign ſhews, they were all ſo careful of the Proteſtant Religion, that they deſigned to reſtore and eſtabliſh it by the French King's Power. Conſider, Mr. Aſhton, the Difficulties you have to get over: Firſt, you ſay you went over upon your own Account; then that you hired the Veſſel for you and Elliot: Why would you have Elliot go with you into France?

Aſhton. He deſired to go; I did not aſk him.

L. C. J. Why would you have Lord Preſton go with you?

Aſhton. I thought to have got my Paſſage free, with a Perſon of his Lordſhip's Quality.

L. C. J. Then you hired the Veſſel for my Lord Preſton.

Aſhton. No, my Lord.

L. C. J. Was it my Lord's Money, or your own, that you paid?

Aſhton. I paid the Money; but how I ſhould be repaid I could not tell.

L. C. J. Would you pay 100*l.* for a Boat to go to France for your own Convenience, and yet hope to get your Paſſage free by taking in my Lord Preſton?

Aſhton. I cannot tell how it would have been; but, at the worſt, we could but have paid our Shares.

L. C. J. But you can tell, if you will, how it was agreed amongſt you.

Aſhton. As I hope to be ſaved, I cannot tell.

L. C. J. But why did you deſire the Seamen to ſay you were going to Flanders, and not to France?

Aſhton. Your Lordſhip knows it is a Fault to go to France, though it do not amount to High-Treaſon.

L. C. J. Why did you aſk the Maſter of the Veſſel for a convenient Place to hide in?

Aſhton. Becauſe I know many had been ſtopped going to Flanders, though they had Paſſes.

Then the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt gave the following Directions to the Jury:

The Chief Juſtice's Direction to the Jury.

L. C. J. Holt. Gentlemen of the Jury, you underſtand that Mr. Aſhton is now tried for High-Treaſon; it is mentioned in the Indictment to be for conſpiring the Death, and depoſing the King and Queen; and, for that Purpoſe, he did endeavour to go into France, and to carry divers Propoſals in Writing, and ſeveral Memorials, to ſhew how this Kingdom might be invaded by the French.

To prove this, the Evidence produced and given by the King's Counſel has been long, and conſiſts of two Parts; 1*ſt*, Witneſſes Viva Voce; they have told you how Mr. Aſhton deſigned a Voyage to France; and, That he hired a Ship for that Purpoſe, and ſeveral Papers were taken out of his Boſom.

In the firſt Place, the Witneſſes tell you, That about the latter End of December laſt, Mr. Aſhton and Mr. Elliot came to Burdett's Houſe, 1690. 2W.&M. House, where they met with Mrs. Pratt, and Burdett having before that spoken to her about a Smack that she called the Thomas and Elizabeth.

Then there was a Meeting appointed between her and Mr. Ashton, at the Wonder-Tavern, where they did treat and debate about the Hire of it; afterwards they came back to Burdett's again, and there the Agreement was made between the Woman and Mr. Ashton, the Prisoner at the Bar, to have one hundred Pounds. Ninety-three Guineas and Six-pence were fetched down by Mr. Ashton, and told out, and deposited in the Hands of Mrs. Burdett: Then there was a Six-pence broken, and one Part Mrs. Burdett had, and the other Part Mr. Ashton had; and when either the Master, or Mrs. Pratt, should bring the Part of the Six-pence that Mr. Ashton kept to Mrs. Burdett, the hundred Pounds were to be paid.

And this Agreement being made, it is positively sworn, that they did ask, Whether there was a hiding Place in that Vessel? An Answer was made, there was one; and thereupon a Note was given, that the Master and Mrs. Pratt should go to the Seven-Stars in Covent-Garden.

Upon Wednesday Night they went there, according to the Direction, where they met Ashton and Elliot: But before that there was a Boat hired at Surry-Stairs, to carry them down to the Ship through Bridge, over-against the Tower; but the Tide not serving till about ten o'Clock at Night, they had agreed with a Waterman for half a Crown to carry them, and he was to stay till the Tide served. And when they went out of Rigby's they parted; Elliot and the Master went together; Mr. Ashton did not go with them, but came near about the same Time to Surry-Stairs, where they took Water.

Being aboard, it was observed, that all these Gentlemen were very timorous, and seemed to be much frighted at the Sight of any Vessel, from which there was any Apprehension of their being taken Notice of, and therefore they went down under the Quarter-Hatches, which is a Place very inconvenient for such Persons, where none could stand or sit upright, but they were forced to lie upon the Boards or upon the Ballast.

It seems some Intimation was given, that some Gentlemen had an Intention to go into France, to prosecute some Treasonable Design; and Captain Billop being imployed to pursue them, which he did in a Pinnace, when he came near the Vessel where they were, he called to the Vessel, and under Pretence of pressing Sea-men, he went on Board: The Master of the Vessel said, he had a Protection from the Admiralty, so that there was no Cause for them to fear pressing; nor indeed was there any for Gentlemen to fear it, they being not liable to be pressed.

When the Captain came near the Ship, and declared his Intent of coming on Board, these Gentlemen were gone under the Quarter-Hatches again; Captain Billop coming on Board, and speaking about pressing of the Men; and saying there was a Couple that would make good Seamen for the King, the Master shewed his Protection; and then the Captain said, he would search further in the Ship, and so he did; and then he pulls up the Boards, and there he finds all these Gentlemen, who were called up one after another, and searched by the Captain. 1690. 2W.&M.

Gentlemen, there is one of the Witnesses tells you, that when they were come up, he saw a Packet that lay in this very Place under the Quarter-Hatches, unto which was tied a Piece of Lead, which Mr. Ashton takes up, and puts in his Bosom; with which the Captain being acquainted, Enquiry is made by him, What Mr. Ashton had there? Mr. Ashton said it was his Handkerchief, and nothing but that which he pulled out: But Captain Billop put his Hand into his Bosom between his Coat and his Body, and takes out the Packet, and carried these Gentlemen on Board the George Frigate, where they stayed till the Tide served to bring them to Whitehall.

But before they came on Board the Frigate, Mr. Ashton was very importunate with him to throw his Packet into the Water: When they were on Board the George Frigate, and in the Cabbin alone, they continued their Importunity.

Now, say they, we have you here, and you are alone, pray will you throw this Packet over-Board? And particularly Mr. Ashton said, It would do the Captain no Good to injure so many Gentlemen; and Mr. Elliot would have persuaded the Captain to take the Lead that was tied to the Packet, and tie it to some Letters that were taken out of my Lord Preston's Pocket, and throw the Packet over-Board; and then have informed the King and Council, that those Letters composed the Packet taken out of Mr. Ashton's Bosom: But the Captain very honestly rejected all their Motions of that kind.

Truly, Gentlemen, my Memory will not serve me, to repeat all the Particulars; but I question not your Notes will bring them to your Minds. Mr. Elliot, it seems, was so mightily concerned at their being taken with these Papers, that when they shot London-Bridge, he wished the Bridge might have fallen upon them and knocked them on the Head; and when they were got through, he wished a Thunder-Bolt would fall down into the Boat and sink them: That indeed was Mr. Elliot, and not Mr. Ashton; but Mr. Ashton was as much concerned about disposing of the Packet as Mr. Elliot.

At Whitehall this Packet is opened; and you have several Papers produced in Evidence, and read to you: You have heard what Evidence has been given, that these are the very Papers that were in the Packet thus taken.

First of all, Captain Billop tells you, he carried them to my Lord Nottingham; and that they lay there in his Office: He withdrew, indeed, while my Lord Nottingham examined my Lord Preston; but the Packet was not opened in the Interim, but there was only a Paper stuck on the Out-side, that my Lord had taken off before the Packet returned into the Room, and there the Captain remained intire: He says, my Lord Nottingham opened the Packet, and put up all the Papers that were in the Packet in his Presence into a Cover again, and sealed them up with his Seal. My Lord Nottingham says positively, He did put up all the Papers that were 1690. 2 W. & M. were in the Packet again; all, and no more, except the Cover, and that he ſealed up, and delivered it to Captain Billop.

Captain Billop ſays, He took theſe very Papers from my Lord Nottingham; and, as he received them, carried them without opening to my Lord Preſident.

My Lord Preſident ſays, He locked them up, unopened, in a cloſe Cabinet in his Cloſet, a Room where no body comes; there they were that Night, and the next Day he carried them intire to the King; and ſome of them were read by the King, in the Preſence of my Lord Preſident, and they were all taken away by his Lordſhip, no more nor no leſs; and my Lord Preſident brought them all to the Cabinet Council, where they were read, and were delivered to my Lord Sidney. My Lord Sidney ſwears, theſe Papers now produced are the ſame Papers he had from my Lord Preſident; and my Lord Preſident ſwears that they are the ſame he received by Billop from my Lord Nottingham, and my Lord Sidney marked them.

So that there can remain no Doubt of theſe being the ſame Papers that were contained in the Packet, that was taken out of the Boſom of Mr. Aſhton.

Then, as to the Matter of the Papers, I think it is plain, beyond all Contradiction, that the Import of them is Treaſonable: They ſhew a Deſign of invading the Kingdom by a Foreign Force, of depoſing the King and Queen from the Government, and of ſetting the late King upon the Throne.

It is agreed, as it is mentioned at a Conference between ſeveral Noblemen and Gentlemen, that were of the Whig and Tory Party, as they call them, that the late King was to be reſtored, though by a French Power.

It was impoſſible for them to effect it, by going plainly to Work, and ſaying in plain Words, the French ſhould invade us: It was to be done in this Manner.

The French King muſt pretend by all Means to be our Friend, and a Mediator betwixt the late King and the People of England; and this was out of a Deſign, plainly, to get a Party of the Kingdom to join with them, the moſt credulous and inconſiderate Sort of People; who, when they ſhould be ſeduced into a Belief of the French King's great Kindneſs, it was not doubted, but there would be a Conjunction between them and the French Forces, to reſtore the late King.

And to procure ſuch a Perſuaſion in the People, the French King was to ſhew himſelf kind to the Engliſh Proteſtants, to appear and act another Part than he had formerly done; he was to permit them the Exerciſe of the Proteſtant Religion; thereby to perſwade many, that his Proſecution of his own Subjects the Hugonots, was not out of any Averſion to the Proteſtant Religion, but only to their Antimonarchical and Reſiſting Principles.

Then an Inconvenience is to be removed; for they complain that they are too full of Bigotry at St. Germains, and too bare-faced: For they make an open Profeſſion of Popery, and ſpeak truly what they do intend; but, ſay they, if they will have the Deſign take Effect, they muſt be more cloſe and ſecret; for the Folly and Bigotry of St. Germains was a very great Obſtruction: Therefore they propoſed that 1690. 2 W. & M. ſome Perſons might be ſubſtituted as Agents to correſpond here, that underſtood the Temper of the Nation, and what would moſt eaſily prevail with the People: And a Model was to be framed at St. Germains; the Proteſtants are to be ſeemingly careſſed, ſeven or nine to be of the late King's Council, that ſo we might believe that he was ours in Intereſt again, and that we have a Relation to him.

And, if Things were carried with ſuch Cunning and Subtility, they hoped to delude a great many People over into the Intereſt of the late King; but, if they went bare-faced, it would cauſe ſuch great Jealouſies, that they muſt totally deſpair of Succeſs.

Yet they did not hope, by theſe Artifices, to obtain ſo many Friends here, as might have been ſufficient to accompliſh their Deſign; and therefore they muſt have Recourſe to a Foreign Force, particularly a French Force: For ſays one of the Papers, Uſe Foreigners to expel Foreigners; that is, uſe French to expel Dutch Foreigners, who are our Allies, and are falſly accuſed by them to have trampled upon the Rights and Liberties of the Nation.

There is one Argument uſed to encourage People to aſſiſt the French in the Invaſion of their own Country, which I cannot omit; namely, That as ſoon as the French, with a conſiderable Expence of Men and Money, had reſtored the Proteſtant Religion, the late King to the Crown, and the People to their Liberties, that he would withdraw all his Forces, and reap no Profit or Advantage by his Succeſs. I muſt confeſs, this carries ſo little of Perſuaſion in it, that it is ridiculous to think thereby to impoſe upon any Number of Men: But notwithſtanding the Weakneſs of their Arguments, it is apparent, they were in good Earneſt; the Papers give an Account to the French, in what State and Condition our Forts were, Portſmouth not manned with above 500, and Goſport how weakly fortified.

It was a happy Juncture between this and the firſt of March, when Advice is given to make uſe of the Opportunity: For Men cannot give, but Men may uſe Opportunities; and ſomething was to be done forthwith, and the Goods muſt be got in Readineſs, particularly Linnen and the Copper are mentioned, which are myſterious and dark Expreſſions; and you may put a Conſtruction upon them as well as I: For they are written in a Style of Trade, as if there were a Correſpondence between two Tradeſmen; and the Linnen and Copper are ordered to be brought before the tenth of March.

But however obſcure ſome of theſe Expreſſions are, there are others that are more plain: That the French Fleet muſt be out in April at fartheſt; and are to come before the Conjunction between the Engliſh and the Dutch; and Jennings, Strickland, or Trevannion, are to come from St. Malo's in one Night, and to fight the Engliſh Fleet in the Chops of the Channel; and not come to ſo high as Beachy, where they came the laſt Year.

And there is an Account given, in what Condition and State our Navy was, how many Ships, what Rates, how manned, and who the Officers; and then as the French were to be in Readi-

1690. W. & M.

Readineſs to come in April, ſo they ſay our Fleet was not to be out till June.

Gentlemen, there are a great many other Particulars; but theſe are enough, nay half of them were enough, to make any Man guilty of Treaſon, that was concerned in them, or that had a Hand in carrying or making uſe of them.

Beſides, there are other Letters, which can import nothing, but the Writer was of the late King's Intereſt; one directed to Mr. Redding, the other to Mrs. Redding; and theſe were to go to France, to let them know how zealous he was in his Duty, and how the Intereſt of the young Maſter increaſed. The Letters have theſe Expreſſions: That though the Family were decreaſed, yet our Intereſt is increaſed, which is yours; and I ſpeak in the Plural Number, becauſe I ſpeak the Sentiments of my dear Brother, and the reſt of our Relations; and deſire them to believe they were zealous and cordial in their Duty to Mr. Redding. Now what Interpretation you will make of this, I'll leave to you.

Then there is another Letter directed to Mrs. Charlton, and another to Mr. Jackſon, and divers other Things that have been read; and, amongſt the reſt, have been read the Heads of a Declaration at large, ſhewing what ſhould be done, and what Methods ſhould be taken, in order to the reſtoring the late King, and depoſing this.

And there is alſo Mention made in a Paper, how divers Perſons, who were to be pardoned, as particularly, all Juſtices of the Peace, actually in Commiſſion, are not to be excepted; Outlaws are to be pardoned; Chimney-Money to be taken away; and all that come in within twenty-one Days are to be forgiven.

So that it is plain, theſe Letters import a Deſign to depoſe the King and Queen, and the Kingdom to be invaded by Foreigners; only a little to colour the Matter, nor to loſe the Pretence of a Proteſtant Intereſt altogether, there was to be five or ſix thouſand Swedes to be made uſe of in the Invaſion.

Gentlemen, if there was a Deſign of an Invaſion, be it by Papiſts or by Proteſtants; if any Act was done tending thereunto, it is High-Treaſon, within the Statute of 25 Edw. III. For purpoſing and intending to depoſe the King and Queen, manifeſted by any Overt-Act, hath always been held to be High-Treaſon.

This, Gentlemen, is the Sum and Subſtance of the Evidence that has been given againſt the Priſoner at the Bar.

Mr. Aſhton ſays for himſelf, It is true, ſaith he, my Deſign was to go to France: I was ſo unfortunate as to have the Papers taken about me: I did take them up; but, ſays he, it is not at all proved, that any one of the Papers that are now produced, are my Hand; which is true: There is no ſuch Proof.

The next Thing is, that Mr. Aſhton being asked, What Occaſion he had to go to France? he ſays, He had formerly a Relation to Colonel Worden, and did tranſact, and had the Management of his Affairs, which were very great. Colonel Worden died half a Year ago; and he injoined him, upon his Death-Bed, to go into France, about ſettling ſome Accounts of his; and he was deſired by the Family of Colonel Worden ſo to do.

1690. 2 W. & M.

This Mr. Aſhton alledges; but he has not proved it. 'Tis very ſtrange, that if Mr. Aſhton was to go to France to negotiate that Affair for Colonel Worden's Family, none of that Family ſhould be produced to prove, that Colonel Worden gave him ſuch Directions; or that the Family deſired him to go into France upon that Account.

Then Mr. Aſhton hath endeavoured to give another Reaſon for his Voyage into France: He affirms, he had ſome Affairs of his own, with Relation to the late Queen; he was concerned for her, and ſhe did owe Monies here, and he paid ſeveral Debts to Tradeſmen, particularly 400 l. ſhe owed to the Coach-Harneſs Maker; and he having paid it, went over to reimburſe himſelf: The Tradeſman was produced; and he ſays, Mr. Aſhton did pay the Money a Year ago; but whether Mr. Aſhton had Effects from the late Queen, or paid it out of his own Pocket, does not appear; Mr. Aſhton ſays, he paid it out of his own Pocket, which is very extraordinary, that he ſhould be ſo kind to pay what he was not obliged to pay, and have no Security to reimburſe himſelf.

So that, Gentlemen, you had beſt conſider, whether there be any thing at all ſaid or proved, that can juſtify Mr. Aſhton's going to France; or whether there be any good Reaſon offered for it.

Then Aſhton has called Witneſſes to prove, that he was always a Proteſtant, though he did live in a Popiſh Family, where they did encourage Papiſts, and diſcountenance Proteſtants; for which he had the ill Will of thoſe he did depend upon.

Gentlemen, all that is agreed; and it is not a Queſtion in this Caſe, Whether Mr. Aſhton be a Proteſtant or a Papiſt? But the Queſtion is, Whether he be guilty of High-Treaſon? from which the being a Proteſtant does not ſecure a Man.

But, Gentlemen, if Mr. Aſhton had no Knowledge, upon what Deſign the other Perſons were to go into France, though he had actually gone into France, it had been a Crime in this Juncture of Affairs, yet not High-Treaſon; but to go into France, and carry a Treaſonable Scheme of a Deſign, and Project of an Invaſion, that is Treaſon.

Now the Queſtion is, Whether Mr. Aſhton went with ſuch a Purpoſe, or not? You are to conſider: I would not lead you into any Strain of the Evidence, but only ſtate it how it ſtands. It is plain, he was concerned all along in hiring the Smack; and, as the King's Counſel obſerved to you, the Price was ſomething extraordinary, they were to pay 100 l. for the Voyage; to which was added ſome Encouragement for the Woman, that if ſhe performed this Voyage well, ſhe might get 1000 l. before Lady-Day; and the Money was paid by Mr. Aſhton, and he was taken aboard the Veſſel.

Mr. Aſhton was much concerned to ſecure the Papers, by taking them out of the Place where they lay upon the Ballaſt, under the Quarter-Hatches; and after they were taken out of his Boſom, he was very importunate, and ſo often, with Captain Billop, to throw them overboard: And why ſhould he be ſo earneſt, and concerned, unleſs he very well knew, and was acquainted with the Contents of thoſe Papers?

And he gave one of the Seamen half a Crown, to ſay they were bound for Flanders: Unleſs it was a Matter of great Importance he went about, and that was not fit to be known, why ſhould he deny it, or labour to have it concealed? An hundred Pounds to be paid for this Voyage, was upon a Joint Account, as well for my Lord Preſton, as for Mr. Aſhton and Elliot; Mr. Aſhton did pay the Money, and he does not make it appear whoſe it was.

Gentlemen, it reſts upon you to conſider the Evidence you have heard, whether it is ſufficient to induce you to believe, Mr. Aſhton was going into France with theſe Papers, to carry on the Deſign of depoſing the King and Queen, and invading the Kingdom. If you are not ſatisfied in your Conſciences, that he is Guilty, then find him Not Guilty: On the other Side, if you are ſatisfied that he is Guilty, I do not queſtion, but you will find him ſo.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Look you, Gentlemen of the Jury, my Lord has rightly repeated and ſtated the Evidence to you; I ſhall only ſay but a very few Words to it.

In the Trial of my Lord Preſton, then the Labour was, that my Lord was not the Man that was concerned, as the Bearer of this Packet of Letters, or Writings, wherein the Treaſon is contained; but then it was Mr. Aſhton; the Packets were found about him: But now it is not Mr. Aſhton, but my Lord Preſton; and this is now the Queſtion before you, that he ſtands upon.

But, if ſo be, they were all concerned in the Carriage and Tranſporting of this Buſineſs, then they are all alike guilty of Treaſon, and therefore they cannot ſhuffle it from one to another.

Now there appears ſome Reaſon, why they would not all agree to be tried together; for now it is but turning it from my Lord Preſton upon Aſhton, and Mr. Aſhton upon my Lord Preſton, and Elliot upon either of them; and ſo, by this Means, all might eſcape, if this were ſufficient to ſerve their Turn.

But the Queſtion before you, is, Whether all theſe Perſons are not all equally concerned? and it is the Evidence muſt be your Guide and ours: For it is not Mr. Aſhton's Affirmation, that he had Buſineſs to go into France, and he happened unluckily to fall into theſe Men's Company, that will be a ſufficient Excuſe, unleſs he prove it.

It had been an eaſy Matter for him to have proved, if he had been going into France upon Buſineſs for Colonel Worden; but at length that is turned off, and then the Pretence for going, is, to recover ſome Money he had owing to him there, and that he had payed for another Perſon: Had he Papers of Inſtructions of this kind? Had he any one Witneſs of this Thing?

The Merchandize that he carried out with him, is of another Import: Where were the Notes or Bonds that he was to recover? Where is the Account that he had to make up with any body beyond Sea? There is no Manner of Evidence of any ſuch Thing.

Next, Gentlemen, do but conſider, if the Man were ſo innocent, as he would inſinuate, as if he had not gone with the reſt upon this Errand; How came the Man to have ſo heavy a Concern upon him? Why ſhould he go to take up theſe Papers if they were not his Brats? Why ſhould he clap them into his Boſom, if he knew nothing what was in them? Why was his Concern ſo great, to have them thrown overboard?

1690. 2W. & M.

Gentlemen, if you expect the Hearts of Men ſhould be proved, otherwiſe than as Men gueſs one another's Meanings by their Actions, it is impoſſible to convict any Man of a Crime: For if his own Affirmation ſhall be a Defence, he will never want a Defence to keep himſelf from being convicted: But that is not what the Law gives Credit to; it muſt be Proof and Evidence that you are to judge upon. But of all he pretends to, he proves nothing.

How came he acquainted with my Lord Preſton? Sure he was a Man ſufficiently known in the World? Why ſhould he go with him and Mr. Elliot? Are they not all known? Are they not Perſons of the ſame Diſpoſition, and much in the ſame Imployment?

He had been taken a little before, he ſays himſelf, and was hindred from going; and he had ſtrange ill Luck, if there was nothing elſe in the Buſineſs than what he pretends.

Gentlemen, in ſhort, if you do find by the Evidence, that he was going upon a good and honeſt Deſign, and that he knew nothing of the Danger that was in theſe Papers; and that theſe Perſons were in, by Reaſon of theſe Papers, and yet would go about to have theſe Papers concealed, and endeavour to have them thrown away, without knowing what was in them: Theſe are Evidences that will be good for you to go by, if you have any ſuch; but to take his Affirmation, becauſe he ſays it, when he proves nothing, that is no Evidence to go by.

I leave it to you, as my Lord has done. If you are ſatisfied upon the Evidence, that he is guilty; I doubt not, you know, and will do your Duty, and will find him ſo; and if you have no ſuch Evidence, then you ought to find him not guilty.

Mr. Aſhton. My Lord, I ſhall reckon it a particular Favour, if you will pardon me one Word, after your Lordſhip has given the Charge.

L. C. J. Holt. Well, what ſay you?

Mr. Aſhton. I think, with Submiſſion, that there is no Proof I knew, or was privy to, the Contents of any of theſe Papers.

L. C. J. Pollexfen. Pray, Mr. Aſhton, ſhew any Man any Reaſon, if you can, why did you go down and catch up theſe Papers, if you did not know what was in them? They might be for your Advantage to be ſhewn, for any thing you pretend to know.

Mr. Aſhton. I did it for my Lord Preſton's Sake, whoſe Hand was proved, and he ſtands convicted as the Bearer of thoſe Papers.

Mr. J. Eyre. But you forget one Thing that was plainly proved, Mr. Aſhton; That when you importuned Captain Billop to throw away the Papers, you uſed this as an Argument, It would do him no Good to injure three honeſt Gentlemen.

Mr. Aſhton. I did not ſay ſo, my Lord, that I know of, though indeed he has ſworn it.

L. C. J.

1690. 2W.&M.

L. C. J. Holt. Look you, Mr. Aſhton, you have been heard as long as you did deſire to ſpeak, and were aſked over and over again, Whether you had any more? You are not now ſaying any new Matter; if you could urge any thing that had been omitted, which made for your Advantage, I believe the Court would indulge you, though it be againſt the Courſe.

Aſhton. My Lord, I ſay there is nothing under my Hand; there is no Privity proved: Does Suppoſition condemn a Man? And is there any thing but Suppoſition againſt me? There is not my Hand proved in any of the Papers: I beſeech your Lordſhip and the Jury to obſerve that.

L. C. J. Holt. Your being in the Company, and being ſo concerned, and importunately endeavouring to have them thrown over-board; the hiring the Veſſel to go with theſe Treaſonable Papers to an Enemy's Country, and the Papers found about you, is Fact proved, and is left to the Gentlemen of the Jury to conſider of.

Aſhton convicted.

The Jury being withdrawn, returned about half an Hour afterwards, and brought in Mr. Aſhton GUILTY.

Then the Court adjourned for an Hour, and being ſet again, my Lord Preſton and Mr. Aſhton were called to Judgment; and it being demanded, What they could ſay, why Sentence ſhould not be pronounced on them? the Lord Preſton ſaid, He appealed to the Court, if the Treaſon had been ſufficiently proved; for in the Caſe of Colonel Sidney, it was held that Compariſon of Hands was no Evidence, and that there ought to be one or two Witneſſes to teſtify the Hand-writing; that having been diſordered by the Crowd, and the Length of his Trial, he had not urged this when he ought, and knew it was now too late; he had nothing more to ſay, but ſubmitted to the Judgment of the Law.

Mr. Aſhton objected, That the Word Cymba was written with an S in the Indictment, which was a falſe Spelling, and, he was informed, would vitiate the whole Indictment; but, upon Peruſal of it, this appeared to be a Miſtake; whereupon the uſual Sentence in High-Treaſon was pronounced on both of them; but my Lord Preſton was afterwards reprieved, and Mr. Elliot was never brought upon his Trial: Only Mr. Aſhton was executed, on the 28th Day of January, 1690-1.

Lord Preſton and Aſhton condemned.

Aſhton only executed.

Remarks on the Trials of Lord Preſton and Aſhton.

Theſe are the firſt State Trials we meet with after the Revolution; the Government was then but in its Infancy, ſcarce acknowledged by many; which made it ſeem neceſſary to the Adminiſtration to aſſert their Authority, and ſhew thoſe who were aiming at a Reſtoration, that it was no leſs penal to conſpire againſt the Crown in this Reign, than it had been in any other that preceded it.

The Lord Preſton objected, That he ought not to be tried in any inferior Court, becauſe King James had made him a Peer, before the Vote of Abdication, when all Writs and Proceſs run in that King's Name, and the Magiſtrates acted by Commiſſions from him; but it appeared, that the Houſe of Lords had rejected his Patent, and taken his Lordſhip into Cuſtody for making the like Claim in that Houſe; and that my Lord Preſton, to obtain his Liberty, had himſelf diſclaimed his Right of Peerage: I preſume, therefore, that the Houſe of Lords looked upon King James's Reign to be expired on his retiring to France, which was ſome Time before the Vote of Abdication.

The Priſoners in this Reign, as in the laſt, we find, moved for a Copy of the Indictment, a Copy of the Pannel, and for Counſel to plead for them; the denying of which were thought great Hardſhips in the late Reigns: But, yet we ſee ſome of the ſame Men, who pretended their Friends had hard Meaſure, that they were not indulged in theſe Particulars formerly, now maintaining that the Priſoners had no Right to ſuch Privileges.

We find alſo Similitude of Hands held to be an Evidence of High-Treaſon at this Trial, which had been ſo much clamoured againſt at Sidney's Trial: And indeed thoſe that are under the Hatches never fail to exclaim at the Rigour of the Law, and the Hardſhips put upon them; while thoſe in Authority think it abſolutely neceſſary to inſiſt on the Legality of ſuch Proceedings, and of ſuch Evidence, for the Preſervation of the Government. I make no manner of doubt, from the Inſtructions and Memorandums found under the Lord Preſton's Hand, that he was going over to give Intelligence to the Enemy, of the State of the Nation, and of our Forces by Sea and Land, in order to bring about another Revolution; but whether Aſhton was equally guilty, is a Queſtion.

Every Caſe almoſt may be reduced to a very narrow Compaſs; and, notwithſtanding the extraordinary Length of theſe Trials, my Lord Chief Juſtice Holt obſerved rightly, that there was but one Point to be conſidered, namely, If the Priſoners were acquainted with the Contents of thoſe Papers, and were carrying them over with an Intent to promote a foreign Invaſion and Rebellion? And, as to my Lord Preſton, I believe every one who reads theſe Trials muſt be of Opinion, that he knew the Contents of the Papers, and was carrying them over with ſuch Views.

But as to Mr. Aſhton, he ſeems to have inſiſted, with a great deal of Reaſon, that there was no Proof of his being acquainted with the Contents of theſe Papers: It is very poſſible my Lord Preſton might not have acquainted him with them; or if he did, ſince his Lordſhip was actually convicted of being the Bearer of them, and the Contriver of them, how could Aſhton be preſumed guilty of either? Let us put the Caſe, that three People hire a Boat to go to an Enemy's Country, on different Views; one of them to give an Account of our Strength, and to invite an Invaſion, and the other two only to get out of the Way, becauſe they found themſelves obnoxious to the Government; ſhall the two laſt be adjudged guilty of High-Treaſon, becauſe they knew the Third was going upon a Treaſonable Deſign? This I very much queſtion: But admitting there was no poſitive Proof that they were privy to the Deſign, then ſurely no Man will affirm they were guilty of High-Treaſon, eſpecially when the Law requires two poſitive Witneſſes in theſe Caſes.

I cannot find there was any thing but preſumptive Evidence againſt Aſhton; and he rightly obſerves, that he was one of the firſt Men that ever was convicted of High-Treaſon upon Preſumptions: It was true he hired a Veſſel for the Uſe of all Three, and gave an extraordinary

Price for it; this ſhews he wanted to get over to France, out of the Way of Proſecution; but this is ſurely very ſlender Proof of his being privy to the Contents of the Lord Preſton's Papers, any more than the taking up the Packet his Lordſhip had dropped, and putting it into his Boſom: He might reaſonably preſume there were Letters in that Packet that were not fit for the Government to ſee, and yet he might not know there was High-Treaſon in them; or, if he did ſuſpect as much, he was not the Bearer of them, but the Lord Preſton; and if he was not the Bearer, the Chief Juſtice ſeems to admit, he could not be guilty, though he was of the Company: However, the Jury took upon them to preſume he was engaged in the ſame Deſign with the Lord Preſton, and upon that Preſumption to convict him. 1690. 2W.&M.

As to Elliot, it was not thought fit to try him as the Bearer of theſe Papers, when two Perſons had been already convicted of being the Bearers, and my Lord Preſton, though moſt notoriouſly guilty, was pardoned, poſſibly on Account of the Diſcoveries he made: It was of more Importance to the Government, at that Juncture, to know who were their Friends, and who their Foes, than to take the Forfeiture of that Lord's Life: He ſeems to have capitulated not to be made an Evidence, and that may be the Reaſon we meet with no more Trials for this Conſpiracy.

1692. 4W.&M. Harriſon's Trial.

The Trial of HENRY HARRISON, Gent. for Murder, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 6th of April, 1692. 4 W. & M. 1692. 4W.&M.

THE Caſe was this: Harriſon, and another Man, on the Fourth of January preceding, about Ten at Night, took a Hackney-Coach, and drove to Dr. Clenche's Houſe, in Brownlow-Street; and pretending there was a ſick Perſon wanted the Doctor, he was perſuaded by them to come into the Coach, and they drove to Leadenhall-Street; where Harriſon ſent the Coachman of an Errand, and in the mean Time Harriſon and the other Man ran away, and when the Coachman returned, he found Dr. Clench ſtrangled in the Coach, with a Handkerchief, in which was a Coal that lay againſt his Windpipe.

Harriſon was induced to do this, as it is ſuppoſed, on the Account of one Mrs. Vanwicke, with whom he was very intimate, and who having borrowed Money of the Doctor, he had called it in; and, upon her not paying it, the Doctor had delivered Ejectments, in order to get Poſſeſſion of the Eſtate ſhe had mortgaged for it. Harriſon was convicted of the Murder, and afterwards executed; but this being no State Trial, I ſhall take no further Notice of it.

John Cole was tried at the Old-Baily, for the ſame Murder, on the 2d of September following; but there being only hear-ſay Evidence produced againſt him, he was acquitted. Cole tried for the ſame Murder.

1692. 4W.&M. Lord Mohun's Trial.

The Trial of CHARLES, Lord Mohun, for Murder, before the whole Houſe of Lords, in Weſtminſter-Hall, on the 31ſt of January, $169\frac{2}{3}$. 4 W. & M. 1692. 4W.&M.

THIS alſo is a Trial for Murder; but as it was before the Houſe of Lords, and ſo many Points of Law debated and reſolved, by moſt of the Judges of England, on this Occaſion, it ſeems to require our Attention as much as a State Trial, and therefore I ſhall be more particular in this than in the former.

The Indictment.

The Indictment was found by the Grand Jury of the County of Middleſex, and ſet forth; That Richard Hill, late of the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, Gent. and Charles Lord Mohun, late of the Pariſh and County aforeſaid, did, feloniouſly, wilfully, and of their Malice afore-thought, aſſault William Mountford, Gent. in the ſaid Pariſh and County; and that the ſaid Richard Hill, with a drawn Sword or Rapier, did ſtrike and thruſt the ſaid William Mountford near the Right Pap, giving him thereby one mortal Wound, of the Breadth of one Inch, and of the Depth of twenty Inches; of which the ſaid William Mountford languiſhed till the Tenth of the ſame Month, and then died; and that the ſaid Charles Lord Mohun, at the Time of the Murder aforeſaid, wilfully, and of his Malice afore-thought, was preſent, aiding, abetting, comforting, and aſſiſting the ſaid Richard Hill: And ſo the ſaid Charles Lord Mohun, and the ſaid Richard Hill, did feloniouſly, wilfully, and of their Malice afore-thought, kill and murder the ſaid William Mountford, againſt the Peace of the King and Queen, &c.

Marquis of Carmarthen Lord High Steward.

The Lords coming down from their Houſe, to the Court erected in Weſtminſter-Hall, on Tueſday the 31ſt of January, their Majeſties Commiſſion, conſtituting Thomas Marquis of Carmarthen, Preſident of the Council, Lord High Steward, was read; his Grace, and the reſt of the Peers, ſtanding up uncovered, while it was reading.

Then

1692. 4W.&M.

Then the Writ of Certiorari, directed to the Commiſſioners of Oyer and Terminer for the County of Middleſex, to remove the Indictment into the Houſe of Lords, with the Return and the Record of the Indictment, were read: After which his Grace removed from the Wool-pack to the Chair, which was placed upon an Aſcent before the uppermoſt Step of the Throne, and ſeated himſelf in the Chair; and Proclamation was made for the Governor of the Tower to return his Precept, and bring the Lord Mohun, his Priſoner, to the Bar. Whereupon the Deputy-Governor brought Lord Mohun to the Bar, the Gentleman-Jaylor carrying the Axe before him, and ſtanding with it afterwards at the Right Hand of the Priſoner, with the Edge from the Priſoner.

The Priſoner, on approaching the Bar, made three low Bows; one to his Grace the Lord High Steward, a ſecond to the Peers on the Right Hand, and a third to the Peers on the Left; which his Grace and all the Peers returned.

Then his Grace, obſerving that his Voice would not be heard at ſuch a Diſtance from the Bar, (by the Conſent of the Lords) went down to the Wool-pack again, and made the following Speech.

Lord High Steward's Speech.

Lord High Steward. My Lord Mohun, I am to let your Lordſhip know, you are not to hold up your Hand upon your Arraignment; and I am to let you that are Counſel at the Bar likewiſe know, that both you and the Witneſſes are to direct yourſelves to the Court in the Stile of my Lords, ſpeaking to the Court.

Then there was a little Pauſe; after which his Grace addreſſed himſelf to the Priſoner thus:

Lord High Steward. My Lord, you are brought here before this Supreme Court in order to your Trial.

The Charge againſt you is, for the Murther of one of the King's Subjects, which is a Crime the King will at no Time paſs over, in the meaneſt Man's Caſe, without making a ſtrict Enquiry into the Offence, and cauſing due Puniſhment to be inflicted on the Offender.

This, my Lord, is charged upon you; not by any ſlight Information, but by the Grand Inqueſt of this County, made up of Gentlemen of good Worth and Conſideration. It is true, that this Inqueſt does not amount to much more than a bare Accuſation; and therefore it ought not to be made any uſe of, ſo as to prejudice your Lordſhip's Trial: But it is that which is the Ground of preſenting this Black Crime before my Lords your Peers, who cannot receive it without ſome Trouble, to find any one of their Body ſuſpected to be guilty of an Action ſo diſhonourable as this is repreſented to their Lordſhips.

My Lord, you are but a very young Man, and therefore it is to be hoped you cannot ſo early have had your Hands in Blood: And the ſame Reaſon, becauſe you are ſo young, may, perhaps, make you conceive that you are under ſome greater Diſadvantage in making your Defence, than you would be if your Experience had been longer. 1692. 4W.&M.

But, to remove any Miſapprehenſion you can have of that kind, it is very proper to put your Lordſhip in mind that you have the good Fortune now to be tried for this Fact in full Parliament, where no Evidence will be received but ſuch as muſt be manifeſt and plain, beyond all Contradiction; ſo that you have nothing to fear here, but your own Guilt.

In the next place, my Lord, you need not be diſcouraged for the Want of Counſel; for the Honour of this Court is ſuch, as will take Care to inform you of any Advantage that the Law can give you. And you may be farther aſſured, that no Art or Skill in arguing can take any Place here, either againſt your Innocency, or to divert my Lords from doing you exact Juſtice. Nay, I dare preſume to ſay, on the Part of my Lords, that if there be Room for any Abatement of Severity, you may reaſonably expect to find it from their Lordſhips.

Theſe Conſiderations, my Lord, cannot but give you great Conſolation under your unhappy Circumſtances, it being moſt certain that nothing but your own Crimes can hurt you.

But at the ſame time I muſt tell you, that your Lordſhip is not to flatter yourſelf with an Expectation or Hope that any Favour will be ſhewed you beyond what Honour and Juſtice can allow: And I hope you have well conſidered, that it is no leſs than your Life, your Honour, and your Eſtate, that you are now to defend; inſomuch that I cannot doubt but your Lordſhip has recollected and prepared yourſelf for the Defence of what ſo very much concerns you. I will not therefore detain you any longer than to give you ſome Directions in the Order and Method of your Trial; and thoſe are, That your Lordſhip do give Attention carefully to the reading of your Indictment: That you give no Interruption to the Counſel or Witneſſes, when they ſpeak againſt you; and when the proper Time ſhall come for your Witneſſes to be examined, and that you are to be heard in your own Defence, I will give you due Notice of it.

Your Lordſhip may alſo be certain, that when it ſhall come to your Turn to ſpeak, you ſhall be heard with all the Patience and Favour that the Matter will bear; and at laſt, when all hath been heard that can be ſaid on both Sides, your Lordſhip need not doubt but that my Lords will give ſuch a Judgment as will be ſuitable to the Honour, Juſtice, and Equity of this great Court.

Clerk, read the Indictment to my Lord.

Then the Indictment was read in Engliſh; to which his Lordſhip pleaded, Not Guilty; and the Judges were permitted to be covered. After which Proclamation being made for the King's Witneſſes to appear, Mr. Serjeant Thompſon opened the Indictment, and Mr. Attorney General opened the Evidence.

Mr. Attorney General. My Lords, the Indictment has been opened, and by that your Lordſhips ſee, the Noble Lord at the Bar ſtands

Mr. Attorney Gen. (Sir John Somers.)

1692. 4W. & M. ſtands charged with the High Crime of Murder.

My Lords, his Peerage gives him a Right to be tried in this Great and Noble Court; and as my Lord has juſt Reaſon to put a high Value upon this Privilege, ſo on the other hand, their Majeſties, who are making Inquiſition for the Blood of one of their Subjects, have a full Aſſurance that no Compaſſion for my Lord's Youth, no Conſideration of his Quality, or Regard for one of your own Order, will make your Lordſhips unmindful of the heinous Nature of the Crime, or cauſe any Variation in the Steadineſs of your Juſtice.

It is true, my Lords, the Difference between the Trial of a Peer, and a Commoner, is very great; but there is no Difference in the Crime, whether committed by one or the other: It is the ſame Law by which they muſt be tried and judged; and that Fact which would be Murder in the meaneſt Subject, is no leſs than Murder if committed by the greateſt Peer.

My Lords, it is not inſiſted upon, that the Noble Lord at the Bar gave the Mortal Stroke with his own Hand; nor is it ſo alledged in the Indictment: The Indictment findeth the Wound to have been given by the Hand of Richard Hill: But if my Lord the Priſoner was of his Party, if he concurred with him in the Thing, if he was preſent and abetting to the Fact, though he did not ſtrike a Stroke, though he was no more than a Looker-on when the Thing was done, the Law ſaith, He is a Principal in the Murder.

Whether my Lord's Caſe will fall within this Rule, is the Point for your Lordſhips to determine, when the Witneſſes are heard.

My Lords, it is my Part to give an Account of the Nature of the Evidence, to the End that your Lordſhips may more eaſily go along with the Witneſſes as they are examined, and more readily make your Obſervations upon what they ſay.

This I ſhall do as ſhortly and as exactly as I can, without pretending to aggravate any thing, which I could never think did become any one in my Station; and I am ſure would be to very little Purpoſe before ſuch a Judicature as this: For, after all, your Lordſhips will found your Judgments upon the Fact; not as it is repreſented by us, but as it appears upon the Oaths of the Witneſſes.

The Time when the Fact for which my Lord is to be tried was committed, was the 9th Day of December laſt.

The Occaſion of it was thus:

Captain Hill, the Perſon mentioned in the Indictment, had for ſome time before made Addreſſes of Courtſhip in the Way of Marriage to one Mrs. Bracegirdle, an Actreſs in the Play-houſe; but theſe Propoſals were totally rejected. This put Mr. Hill in a very great Rage, and he declared, that Mr. Mountford (the Perſon ſlain) was the only Man that ſtood in his Way, and with many Execrations expreſſed his Reſolution to be revenged upon him: This he did at ſeveral Times, and before ſeveral Perſons.

The ſame Day the Fact was committed, in the Morning, my Lord who is now at the Bar, and Captain Hill, went together to hire a Coach to go to Totteridge, and directed the Coachman to have ſix Horſes ready; but to be waiting for them in Drury-lane, near the Play-houſe, with only two Horſes in his Coach, about Nine o'Clock the ſame Night. My Lord and Capt. Hill dined together that Day at a Tavern in Covent-Garden; and there much of their Diſcourſe was about Mrs. Bracegirdle; and both of them did freely declare their Opinion, that Mr. Mountford lay with her. But the Principal of their Diſcourſe was in Relation to a Deſign which they had formed for the ſeizing upon Mrs. Bracegirdle, and forcing her into a Coach, and carrying her away into the Country.

This was to be executed that Night; and accordingly they were then providing Arms for that Purpoſe. Mr. Hill did acquaint my Lord, that the Soldiers would be ready by the Time; and my Lord took Notice that the carrying her off would ſtand Mr. Hill in 50*l.* at leaſt. Thereupon (as your Lordſhips will hear from the Evidence) Mr. Hill uſed this Expreſſion, If the Villain reſiſt, I will ſtab him; and then my Lord was pleaſed to ſay, That he would ſtand by his Friend.

After they had continued there ſome Time, being about to part, Mr. Hill told my Lord, that unleſs he was at the Play-houſe by Six o' Clock, the Thing could not be effected, and he ſhould be undone: But my Lord promiſed to be there at the Time.

Accordingly, they both met at the Play-houſe, and after they had been behind the Scenes, and informed themſelves that Mrs. Bracegirdle would not be there that Night, they left the Play-houſe. But it ſeems they had got Intelligence that ſhe was to ſup that Night at one Mr. Page's Houſe in Drury-Lane, and therefore they planted themſelves with their Soldiers near that Place, over-againſt my Lord Craven's Houſe.

Lord High Steward. They; who do you mean?

Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, the Priſoner at the Bar and Mr. Hill. After they had continued there for a conſiderable Time, (I think till towards Nine o'Clock) they began to have a Jealouſy that they might be under ſome Miſinformation; and therefore ordered the Coachman to drive them into Howard-Street, the Place where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged; and obſerving ſome People walking near the Lodging, they ſaid they doubted they were diſcovered, and had been betrayed.

But they ſoon came back again to Drury-Lane, and fixed themſelves in their former Station. About ten o'Clock Mrs. Bracegirdle, accompanied with Mr. Page, (at whoſe Houſe ſhe had been) and with her Mother, and (I think) her Brother, going home; when they came to the Place where the Coach ſtood, with the Door open, and my Lord at the Bar placed in the Coach, and ſeveral Caſes of Piſtols by him, the Soldiers, together with Capt. Hill, came up to Mrs. Bracegirdle, ſeized upon upon her, and would have forced her into the Coach: Mr. Hill endeavoured with Violence to force away Mr. Page, who was then leading her, and ſtruck him; but Mrs. Bracegirdle's Mother holding her about the Middle, they could not readily get her into the Coach; and during this Struggle, there was an Opportunity given to Mr Page to call for Help; and ſeveral Perſons coming preſently from the Houſes near, and the People in the Street beginning to riſe upon them, they found it impracticable to effect their Deſign at that Time.

Thereupon the Soldiers were diſmiſſed; but my Lord and Mr. Hill would not be denied the Liberty to wait upon Mrs. Bracegirdle to her Lodging; and accordingly, together with Mr. Page, and her Mother, and other Perſons, they went together to Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodging, at one Mrs. Browne's Houſe in Howard-Street. Mr. Mountford's Houſe was in Norfolk-Street, below Howard-Street. Howard-Street is a Croſs Street which leads from Arundel-Street, and through Norfolk-Street to Surry-Street; and ſo it was not poſſible for Mountford to come to his own Houſe, but whoever ſhould fix themſelves in Howard-Street muſt have the Opportunity of ſeeing him.

As they were going along, Hill ſwore he would be revenged; but named nobody.

After that Mrs. Bracegirdle and the Company were come to her Lodging, ſhe and her Mother, and Page, went into the Houſe: My Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill ſtaid in Howard-Street, and there continued for near two Hours together, and for the moſt Part of that Time with their Swords drawn.

Mr. Mountford, as it happened, did not come Home till late that Night; ſo that their Stay being long, my Lord and Mr. Hill thought fit to ſend for Wine, and had one or two Bottles, which they drank in the Street, near Mr. Bracegirdle's Lodgings.

During this Time, they were heard to ſay (that is, one of them was; but which of them, by reaſon of the Darkneſs, we cannot tell) that if he could not be revenged that Night, he would the next Morning; upon which a Boy, who was there with them (but who the Boy was we cannot diſcover) ſaid, Good my Lord, do not do it; alter your Reſolution. I did obſerve before, that Mrs. Bracegirdle ſupped that Night at Mr. Page's Houſe, and Mrs. Page having heard of the great Outrage and Tumult in the Street, and that her Husband was gone Home with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and being under a great Concern for his Safety, thought fit to follow him thither. As ſhe entered into the Houſe, ſhe ſaw my Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill near the Door; and preſently after, before ſhe could have a full Relation of what had happened in Drury-Lane, Mrs. Browne, the Owner of the Houſe where Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged, came into the Room, and told them that my Lord Mohun and Hill where waiting for Mr. Mountford, and that ſhe was apprehenſive it was with no good Intention. Thereupon Mrs. Page thought it requiſite to go to Mrs. Mountford's Houſe, to give her Notice of it, and to deſire her to find out where her Husband was, and to caution him not to come home unleſs he brought a good Guard with him.

1692. 4W. & M.

As ſhe went out, ſhe ſaw them both with their Swords drawn, and ſhe acquainted Mrs. Mountford with it, who ſent to ſeveral Places in Search of her Husband; but ſhe was ſo unfortunate that the Meſſengers could not find him.

Whilſt this was doing, the Watch came into Howard-Street, being alarmed at the Report that two Gentlemen were drinking in the Street, and walking there with their naked Swords. The Watch demanded of my Lord Mohun, Why he had his Sword drawn? My Lord was pleaſed to return them this Anſwer, That he was a Peer of the Realm, and bid them touch him if they durſt. They then asked Hill, Why his Sword was out? and my Lord made the Excuſe for him, That Hill had loſt his Scabbard.

The Watch obſerving the Drawer who attended upon them, and knowing that he lived at a Tavern in Surry-Street, went to inform themſelves who theſe Perſons ſhould be, that were walking in ſuch a Manner at that Time of Night: But they were hardly gone into the Houſe before they heard the Cry of Murder.

The Witneſſes will inform your Lordſhips, that as Mr. Mountford, about twelve o'Clock, was coming home, my Lord Mohun met him, and ſaluted him. Mr. Mountford ſaid, My Lord Mohun, What does your Lordſhip do here at this Time of Night? and my Lord made Anſwer, He ſuppoſed Mr. Mountford had been ſent for. No, no, ſays Mountford, I came by Chance. My Lord ſaid to him again, I ſuppoſe you have heard about the Lady. Mr. Mountford anſwered, I hope my Wife hath given your Lordſhip no Offence. No, ſays my Lord Mohun, it is Mrs. Bracegirdle I mean. To this, the Reply of Mr. Mountford's was, Mrs. Bracegirdle is no Concern of mine; but I hope your Lordſhip does not countenance any ill Action of Mr. Hill's.

Upon this, Hill came up to them, and ſaid to my Lord, it was not a Time to diſcourſe of theſe Matters; and as my Lord continued to talk with Mountford, Hill ſtruck Mountford firſt, and in a manner at the ſame Inſtant, made a Paſs at him, and run him clean through the Body; and this before Mr. Mountford's Sword was drawn. Immediately upon this, there was a Cry of Murder, and the Watch came with what Haſte they could and took my Lord Mohun; but Hill was fled: When my Lord was taken, his Sword was not drawn.

As ſoon as my Lord Mohun was taken, the firſt Queſtion he asked was, If Hill was apprehended? and when he was told he was not, he ſaid he was glad of it, and he did not care if he were hanged for him: Adding at the ſame Time, That he was ſorry that Mr. Hill had ſo little Money about him, and wiſhed him all that he had in his own Pocket: And he did then alſo own to the Watch, that he had changed Coats with Mr. Hill, and had Hill's Coat on him at that Time.

My Lords, this is the Subſtance of the Evidence, and in this Order, with your Lordſhips Leave, we ſhall offer the Proofs to your Lordſhips.

ſhips. I do not doubt, but your Lordſhips will attend to the Evidence with all Care, and will determine upon it according to Juſtice and Honour. I will detain your Lordſhips no longer; but proceed to call the Witneſſes to prove what I have opened.

Then the King's Witneſſes were ſworn, and firſt Mr. George Powel, who teſtified that about five or ſix Days before Mr. Mountford's Death, he was drinking with Hill, who began Mrs. Bracegirdle's Health, and ſaid there was no Bar between him and her, but Mountford, and he was reſolved to be revenged on him, one Way or other. That three Nights afterwards, he was at Supper with Lord Mohun and Captain Hill, and the ſame Diſcourſe ariſing, Hill whiſpered the Witneſs, and ſaid he was reſolved to have the Blood of Mountford; and the ſame Night Mr. Mountford was wounded, he (the Witneſs) ſat up with him, and asking him how the Matter happened, he anſwered Captain Hill killed him baſely, for whilſt Lord Mohun talked with him, Hill run him through, and that his Sword was not drawn till after he received the Wound.

Mrs. Knight teſtified, that Hill ſaid Mrs. Bracegirdle hated him, but loved ſomebody elſe; and ſhe demanding if he meant Mountford, Hill ſwore he ſhould find a Way to be even with him ſpeedily.

Mrs. Sandys teſtified, that ſhe dined with Lord Mohun and Hill that Day Mr. Mountford was killed, at the Three-Tun-Tavern, in Chandos-Street, and Lord Mohun asked her (the Witneſs) if ſhe thought Mountford had lain with Mrs. Bracegirdle? and ſaid preſently after, This Deſign would coſt Hill fifty Guineas; and Hill replied, If the Villain offered to reſiſt, he would ſtab him, and my Lord Mohun thereupon ſaid, He would ſtand by his Friend. That Hill afterwards deſired Mr. Brough to borrow a Caſe of Piſtols for him, and ſaid he had a Coach and Six in Wyche-Street, to ſeize Mrs. Bracegirdle, and carry her into the Country, deſiring my Lord Mohun to meet him at Six at the Play-houſe, or he ſhould be ruined; and my Lord gave him his Honour to meet him, and ſaid, He would ſtand by his Friend.

Mrs. Rogers teſtified, ſhe ſaw Lord Mohun and Hill at the Play-houſe that Night Mountford was killed, and they had changed Coats.

Dixon the Coachman teſtified, that Lord Mohun and Capt. Hill bargained with him for a Coach and Six, to carry them to Totteridge, bid him come to the Play-houſe with a Pair only, and let the other four Horſes ſtand at St. Giles's-Pound: That he came to Drury-Lane as he was ordered, and drove his Lordſhip and Mr. Hill from thence to Norfolk-Street, where he ſet them down and waited for them. When they returned, he drove them to Craven-Houſe in Drury-Lane, and it being then about Ten he went Home, and left his Poſtilion to take care of the Coach: That while he was in Norfolk-Street, he heard Hill ſay, They were betrayed, adding, Dam me, my Lord, let us go and thraſh him.

Mrs. Anne Bracegirdle being ſworn, gave the following Evidence: Having ſupped at Mr. Page's in Prince's-Street; about ten Mr. Page went Home with me, and my Mother, and my Brother, and coming down Drury-Lane, there ſtood a Coach by my Lord Craven's; the Boot of the Coach was down, and my Lord Mohun was in it; and two Soldiers came and pulled me from Mr. Page, and four or five more came up, and they almoſt knocked down my Mother; but ſhe recovered herſelf and hung about my Neck, ſo that they could not get me into the Coach; and Mr. Page went to call Company to reſcue me. Then Hill came with his naked Sword and ſtruck at Mr. Page and my Mother; but Company coming in prevented the Deſign. Then Hill ſaid, he would ſee me home, and led me by one Hand (his Sword being drawn) and my Mother by the other; and my Lord Mohun came out of the Coach and followed us, as did all the Soldiers; but they were diſmiſſed. And as we went along Mr. Hill ſaid, he would be revenged: And when we came Home, Mr. Hill pulled Mr. Page by the Sleeve, and ſaid he would ſpeak with him: But Mr. Page was pulled into the Houſe, and Mr. Hill walked up and down the Street with his Sword drawn. ——My Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill were together, and when Mrs. Brown asked them, what they ſtayed there for; Hill anſwered, to be revenged of Mr. Mountford. Whereupon we ſent to Mrs. Mountford to prevent Danger. And as I was liſtening at the Door, the Watch came by, and ſaid to my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, Gentlemen why do you walk with your Swords drawn? Says my Lord Mohun, I am a Peer of England, touch me if you dare. Then the Watch went away, and about a Quarter of an Hour after, there was a Cry of Murder.

1692. 4W & M.

Mr. Gawen Page was ſworn.

He depoſed, That on Friday the 9th of December, about Ten at Night, as he was leading Mrs. Bracegirdle home, there ſtood a Coach againſt my Lord Craven's Door in Drury-Lane; and two Soldiers forced Mrs. Bracegirdle from him, and would have put her into the Coach: And that Capt. Hill was there with his Sword drawn, and gave the Deponent ſeveral Blows, and cryed, You Villain, ſtand! and my Lord Mohun was in the Coach; but Help coming in, they were prevented carrying off Mrs. Bracegirdle. Then the Deponent conveyed Mrs. Bracegirdle home, and Mr. Hill went with them (but bid the Soldiers be gone) and my Lord Mohun followed at a Diſtance. That when they came to Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings, Hill pulled the Deponent by the Sleeve, and ſaid he would ſpeak with him: And the Deponent anſwering, That Tomorrow would be better, Hill replyed, Tomorrow then; but, God damn me, you will not go home to Night. Then the Deponent went into the Houſe, and about an Hour and a half after he heard an Out-cry of Murder; and going into the Street, he ſaw my Lord Mohun ſurrendering himſelf to the Conſtable; and my Lord's Sword was then in the Scabbard. That the Deponent then went to Mr. Mountford's Houſe, and found him lying in his Blood upon the Floor: And Mountford told the Deponent, That he was barbarouſly run through, before he could draw his Sword.

Mrs.

1692. 4W. & M.

Mrs. Mary Page being ſworn, gave the following Evidence. My Lord, my Husband went home with Mrs. Bracegirdle, and hearing he had like to have been murdered, I went down towards Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings, and found my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill walking about the Street, (Mr. Hill's Sword only was drawn then); ſo I came into the Houſe, and Mrs. Browne went out to them, and asked why they ſtaid there? They anſwered, they ſtaid for Mountford: Whereupon Mrs. Bracegirdle deſired me to go over to Mrs. Mountford's Houſe, and ſpeak to her to ſend her Husband Word, that he ſhould keep where he was, or come Home with a good Guard: And as I was going over, I ſaw that my Lord Mohun had his Sword drawn, (they were then walking before Mrs. Bracegirdle's Lodgings in Howard-ſtreet, and might ſee any one that went to Mr. Mountford's Houſe, and up Surry-ſtreet); and whilſt I was deſiring Mrs. Mountford to ſend away to her Husband, I heard Murder cried; and opening Mr. Mountford's Door, he came in, and threw his Arms about my Neck to ſupport himſelf; and he ſaid, Hill had murdered him. I helped him as far the Parlour-Door, and there down he fell. Then I went up the Street and called out Murder; and my Lord Mohun came to me, and bid me take Notice, he had no Hand in it; for, he ſaid his Sword was not drawn: I replied, he was with Hill, with his naked Sword, juſt before.

Mrs. Browne was ſworn, (at whoſe Houſe Mrs. Bracegirdle lodged.)

She depoſed, That when Mrs. Bracegirdle came Home, ſhe cry'd, and related how my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill, with ſome Soldiers would have forced her into a Coach; and added, that my Lord Mohun and Hill were then at the Door: That thereupon the Deponent went out to them, and asked why they uſed Mrs. Bracegirdle in that manner? And my Lord Mohun anſwered, he protected her; and if it had not been for him, the Rabble would have torn her in Pieces: That he had no Deſign upon her, for his Part, but only to ſerve his Friend; and that Mr. Hill's Deſign was to take her out of Town, and keep her a Week, and ſee if he could perſwade her to marry him: That Hill ſaid, he ſhould light of this Mountford; and the Deponent demanding What hurt Mountford had done him? Hill replied, I have been abuſed, and will be revenged; and the Deponent went, and told Mrs. Mountford of it. That half an Hour after, or more, the Deponent ſaw Mr. Mountford coming down the Street; and ſhe went to him, but he would not ſtay to let her ſpeak to him: And preſently after Mountford met my Lord Mohun, and there paſſed ſeveral Compliments between them; and my Lord told Mr. Mountford he had a great Reſpect for him, and deſired they might have no Difference; but added, Here is a Thing fallen out between Mrs. Bracegirdle and Mr. Hill. — Mountford replied, has my Wife diſobliged your Lordſhip? If ſhe has, ſhe ſhall ask your Pardon; but Mrs. Bracegirdle is no Concern of mine; I know nothing of this Matter; I come here by Accident, but I hope your Lordſhip will not vindicate Mr. Hill in ſuch Actions as theſe are. Upon this, ſhe heard Mr. Hill bid Mr. Mountford draw, and Mr. Mountford ſaid he would, and drew his Sword: But whether Mr. Mountford received his Wound before, or after he drew his Sword, ſhe could not tell.

1692. 4W & M.

Richard Row was ſworn.

He depoſed, That being in his Houſe in Surry-ſtreet, about a Quarter after Ten at Night he heard a Noiſe, and went out, and ſaw two Gentlemen and two Lads; and one of the Lads had one of the Gentlemen by the Arm, and ſaid, Pray, my Lord, good my Lord, don't do it;—alter your Reſolution; and there was Anſwer made, that they would be revenged. That then the Deponent knew none of them; but that they went to the upper End of the Street, and returned again, and he ſaw Capt. Hill's Boy following him: But that Capt. Hill was not in the ſame Cloaths he uſed to come to the Deponent's Houſe in. That he could not ſwear that my Lord Mohun was one of the Gentlemen, for the Deponent had never ſeen my Lord Mohun.

William Merry, a Watchman, teſtified, That as he was going his Rounds between Eleven and Twelve, he ſaw my Lord Mohun and Mr. Hill in Surry-ſtreet, walking on the paved Stones with their Swords drawn, and he (the Witneſs) bidding them put up their Swords, the Lord Mohun put up his, and offered it to him, but Mr. Hill's remained drawn, having loſt his Scabbard, as they ſaid: That ſeeing ſome Women at a Door with Candles, and a Neighbour's Man with a Bottle and Glaſs, attending two Gentlemen, he asked what the Meaning of it was, and was anſwered, one of the Gentlemen had a Sweetheart there, and my Lord ſaid, he was drinking a Lady's Health, and as ſoon as his Bottle was out, he would be gone. And that the Witneſs and the Conſtable going into a Houſe to enquire further about the Buſineſs, they heard Murder cried; whereupon they ran back again, and the Conſtable ſeized his Lordſhip.

Two other Watchmen confirmed the Teſtimony of Merry, and one of them added, That when they ſeized his Lordſhip, his Sword was in his Scabbard, and he trembled extreamly.

Mrs. Brewer depoſed, That ſhe liv'd next Door to Mrs. Bracegirdle, and ſaw Mr. Mountford come down the Street, and that my Lord Mohun went to him, and embraced him; and after mutual Salutations, Mr. Mountford asked What made his Lordſhip there at that Time of Night? And my Lord ſaid, I ſuppoſe Mr. Mountford you are ſent for: You have heard of the Buſineſs of Mrs. Bracegirdle, and Mountford replied, No, he came by Chance: Then Hill came up and ſaid, Pray, my Lord, hold your Tongue; this is not a convenient Time to talk of that Buſineſs; and would have drawn his Lordſhip away. Mr. Mountford ſaid, He was ſorry to ſee my Lord aſſiſt Captain Hill in ſo ill an Action, and deſired his Lordſhip to forbear: Whereupon Hill ſtruck Mountford a Box of the Ear; and

1692. 4 W & M.

Mountford ſaid, Damn me, What's that for? And immediately Hill made a Paſs at him with his Sword, before Mountford's Sword was drawn; and my Lord and they were all together at that Time, as near as ſhe could diſcern.

Davenport the Conſtable confirmed the Teſtimony of his three Watchmen, and added, that when he had carried his Lordſhip to the Round-houſe, he ſaid, God damn me, I am glad Hill is not taken; but I am ſorry he has no more Money about him: I wiſh he had ſome of mine, and I do not care a Farthing if I am hanged for him. That his Lordſhip ſaid, he had changed Coats with Hill four or five times that Day, and that he had Hill's Coat upon his Back then: That his Lordſhip ſurrendered very civilly, and told this Witneſs where Mr. Hill lodged; and he and his Watchmen going to the Lodgings to ſearch for him, Hill's Boy came in, and they found Powder and Ball about him; and the Conſtable produced Mr. Mountford's Sword in Court, which he ſaid he found broken in Pieces. He alſo brought with him the Lord Mohun's and Hill's Swords (for Hill it ſeems had left his Sword in the Street.)

Mr. Bancroft the Surgeon, who dreſſed Mr. Mountford's Wound, teſtified, That when he told Mr. Mountford the Wound was mortal, he anſwered, my Lord Mohun offered me no Violence; but while I was talking with him, Hill ſtruck me with his Left Hand, and with his Right Hand run me through, before I could put my Hand to my Sword; and that Mountford died of the Wound about One the next Day.

Mr. Hunt, another Surgeon that attended Mr. Mountford, teſtified, That he declared Mr. Hill was in him, and through him, before his Sword was drawn.

Lord Mohun's Witneſſes.

Then my Lord Mohun called his Witneſſes, and firſt Mr. Brereton, to ſhew he had no Malice againſt Mountford: And Mr. Brereton depoſed, That a few Day's before Mountford's Death, he heard Lord Mohun ſay Abundance of kind Things of him.

Hill's Boy depoſed, That his Maſter and Lord Mohun had a Deſign to ſeize Mrs. Bracegirdle, and carry her to Totteridge; and that as ſhe came down Drury-Lane, they endeavoured to force her into a Coach, but were prevented; as the King's Witneſſes had depoſed: That he was with his Maſter and Lord Mohun when Mr. Mountford came down Norfolk-ſtreet and turned into Howard-ſtreet, and that there paſſed ſome Compliments between Lord Mohun and Mr. Mountford; after which Mr. Mountford ſaid, he was ſorry his Lordſhip ſhould vindicate Captain Hill in ſuch Rudeneſs: Whereupon the Captain came up, and ſaid, he would vindicate himſelf, and bid Mountford draw: Then his Maſter went into the middle of the Street, and Mountford drew and met him, and made three or four Paſſes, in which his Sword broke: That my Lord Mohun ſtood all the while on the flat Stones and did not meddle, only ſaid, he would ſtay by his Friend, and Mr. Hill was his Friend: That his Maſter Mr. Hill ran away, after Mr. Mountford was wounded; but Lord Mohun ſtood ſtill, and ſurrendered himſelf to the Watch. 1692. 4 W. & M.

Mrs. Bracegirdle's Maid depoſed, That ſhe ſaw Mr. Hill and Mr. Mountford fight in the middle of the Street, and make two or three Paſſes at one another; after which Mountford ſaid he was killed, and threw down his Sword, and ſhe took it up, and there was a good Piece broken off. That Hill ran away, and Mountford went to his own Houſe; but Lord Mohun ſtaid on the flat Stones where he firſt met Mountford and embraced him, and when the Watch came his Lordſhip ſurrendered himſelf to them.

Mrs. Ann Jones depoſed, That Lord Mohun met Mountford and embraced him, and ſeveral Expreſſions of Kindneſs paſſed between them; but Mountford ſaying he hoped his Lordſhip would not vindicate Captain Hill, The Captain hit Mountford a Box of the Ear and bid him draw; and thereupon Mountford ſaid, Damme, What's that for? and they both went off the pav'd Stones into the middle of the Street; and at the ſecond Paſs Mr. Mountford's Sword was broke, and he flung it down and ran away ſaying, I am a dead Man. Hill ran off another Way; but my Lord ſtood ſtill upon the pav'd Stones: He did not meddle, as ſhe ſaw, while the others were fighting; and afterwards his Lordſhip ſurrendered himſelf to the Watch. Mr. Attorney demanding, If the Scuffle did not begin upon the Pavement, ſhe ſaid, it began there.

Warrington depoſed, That he ſaw Hill and Mountford, with their Swords, drawn upon the paved Stones, and that they went off the paved Stones not a Swords Length aſunder, and paſſed at each other; but running for a Paring-ſhovel to part them, he ſaw no more of the Encounter: And it being demanded if he ſaw Mountford's Sword drawn, before he was wounded, he anſwered, He could not be poſitive whether it was or no, ſome Women ſtanding between him and them.

Then the Examination of Hill's Boy before the Coroner was read, which differed but little from his Evidence in Court; for he teſtified before the Coroner, That when his Maſter and Mountford were paſſing, my Lord Mohun ſaid, He would ſtand by his Friend, and that Hill was his Friend.

Seven Points decided by the Judges.

Upon this Evidence the Lords propoſed ſeven Queſtions to the Judges, which were anſwered by them.

1ſt Queſtion.

I. In caſe a Man ſhall murder another, Whether all thoſe in his Company, at the Time of the Murder, are ſo neceſſarily involved in the ſame Crime, that they may not be ſeparated from the Crime of the ſaid Perſon, ſo as in ſome Caſes to be found guilty only of Manſlaughter?

Anſwer.

Anſwer. The Crime of thoſe who are in the Company at the Time of the Murder committed, may be ſo ſeparated from the Crime of the Perſon that committeth the Murder as in ſome Caſes, they are only to be found guilty of Manſlaughter.

II. A, conſcious of an Animoſity between B and C, A accompanieth B, where C happens 1692. W & M. pens to come, and B. kills him: Whether A without any Malice to C, or any actual Hand in his Death, be guilty of Murder?

Anſwer. A is not guilty of Murder; for it appears the Meeting was caſual, and there was no Deſign in A againſt C; and therefore, though A did know of the Malice between B and C, yet it was not unlawful for A to keep Company with B; but he might go with him any where, if was not upon a Deſign againſt C: And therefore, as the Caſe was put, there was not any Offence in A.

III. Whether if A heard B threaten to kill C, and ſome Days after A ſhall be with B upon ſome other Deſign, where C ſhall paſs by, or come into the Place where A and B are, and C ſhall be killed by B, A ſtanding by without contributing to the Fact, his Sword not being drawn, or any Malice ever appearing on A's Part againſt C; Whether A will be guilty of the Murder of C?

Anſwer. A in this Caſe would not be guilty either of Murder or Manſlaughter.

IV. Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Man, who happens to be killed (when the Perſon who knew of the Deſign is preſent) be guilty of the ſame Crime with the Party who had the Deſign and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

Anſwer. This is neither Murder or Manſlaughter; but if he that knew of the Deſign had adviſed it, or agreed to it, or lay in wait for it, or reſolved to meet the third Perſon with him that killed him, It would have been Murder.

V. Whether a Perſon knowing of the Deſign of another to lie in wait to aſſault a third Perſon, and accompanying him in that Deſign, if it ſhall happen that the third Perſon be killed at that Time, in the Preſence of him who knew of that Deſign, and accompanied the other in it, be guilty in Law of the ſame Crime with the Party who had that Deſign and killed him, though he had no actual Hand in his Death?

Anſwer. If a Perſon is privy to a felonious Deſign, or to a Deſign of committing any perſonal Violence, and accompanieth the Party in putting that Deſign in Execution, though he may think it will not extend ſo far as Death, but only Beating, and hath no perſonal Hand or doth otherwiſe contribute to it than by his being with the other Perſon when he executeth his Deſign of aſſaulting the Party; If the Party dieth, they are both guilty of Murder: For by his accompanying him in the Deſign, he ſhews his Approbation of it, and gives the Party more Courage to put it in Execution: Which is an aiding, abetting, aſſiſting, and comforting of him, as laid in the Indictment. 1692. 4W. & M.

VI. If a Perſon be preſent, named William, when Thomas ſaid he would ſtab John, upon which William ſaid he would ſtand by his Friend; and afterwards Thomas doth actually murder John, and William is preſent at the Murder: Whether the Law will make William equally guilty with Thomas? Or what Crime is William guilty off?

Anſwer. This is rather a Caſe of Fact than Law: For if William was deſignedly preſent with the other that committed the Murder, then it would be Murder in William: And if there was no Evidence to prove upon what Account he was preſent, it might be preſumed he was preſent in Purſuance of his former Agreement: But if it appeared he did not meet in Purſuance of that Agreement, then it might not be Murder. That this was all Matter of Evidence, and reſted upon the Conſciences of thoſe that were to try the Priſoner.

VII. If A accompanieth B in an unlawful Action, in which C is not concerned, and C happeneth to come in the Way of B, aft r the firſt Action is wholly over, and happeneth to be killed by B, without the Aſſiſtance of A, whether A is guilty of that Man's Murder?

Anſwer. As this Caſe is ſtated, A is not guilty of Murder.

Then the Lords adjourned.

The Lords coming into the Court erected in Weſtminſter-hall again on Saturday the 4th of February, the Lord High Steward demanded of the youngeſt Baron, (Lord Lemſter) Whether my Lord Mohun was guilty of the Murder of William Mountford? and the Lord Lemſter ſtanding up uncovered, and laying his Right Hand on his Breaſt, ſaid, Not Guilty, upon my Honour.

The ſame Queſtion having been propoſed to the reſt of the Lords in their Order; the Lord High Steward declared, that fourteen of their Lordſhips had found my Lord Mohun guilty, and ſixty-nine had found him Not Guilty. After which the Priſoner being called to the Bar, the Lord High Steward acquainted him, that their Lordſhips Judgments was, that he was Not Guilty; and thereupon he was diſcharged——Then the Lord High Steward ſtanding up, broke his Staff, whereby his Commiſſion was diſſolved, and the Lords returned to their Houſe above. Lord Mohun acquitted.

Proceedings against the Judges, Pemberton and Jones.

Proceedings of the COMMONS againſt the Judges for giving Judgment againſt their Serjeant, who pleaded an Order of the Houſe to the Juriſdiction of the Court of King's-Bench, in July 1689, 1 W. & M.

1689 1W & M.

Vote of the Commons.

IT was reſolved by the Houſe of Commons, on the 6th of July, 1*W. & M.* 1689. That the Judgment of the Court of King's-Bench, in Eaſter Term, 34 Car. II. upon the Plea of John Topham, (their Serjeant) at the Suit of John Jay, to the Juriſdiction of that Court, and alſo the Judgments given againſt the ſaid Topham at the Suit of Samuel Verdon, John Hilliard, and others, were illegal, and a Violation of the Privileges of Parliament, and pernicious to the Rights of Parliament. And being informed that Sir Francis Pemberton, and Sir Thomas Jones were Judges of the King's-Bench at that Time, ordered them to attend the Houſe, which they did accordingly: And it was demanded of them, upon what Reaſons they gave that Judgment againſt Topham at the Suit of Jay.

Sir Francis Pemberton's Apology.

Sir Francis Pemberton, on the 19th of July, gave the Houſe the Reaſons that induced him to give that Judgment: He ſaid, this was an Action of Treſpaſs brought by Jay againſt Topham, for arreſting and detaining him in Priſon ten Days, and keeping him till he paid him Thirty Pounds to let him out of Priſon.

To this Topham the Defendant pleaded, That there was an Order of the Houſe of Commons for taking Jay into Cuſtody, and bringing him to the Bar of that Houſe; and that he took him and detained him by Virtue of that Order: And this he pleaded to the Juriſdiction of the Court; and that they had nothing to do with it. Upon which there was a Demurer, and upon the Demurer it was adjudged he ſhould anſwer over, that is, he ſhould plead in Bar of the Action—Sir Francis ſaid, He acknowledged that this Houſe was a ſuperior Court, of a higher Nature than the King's-Bench, and of a greater Authority; and that the King's-Bench had nothing to do to inſpect the Actions of this Houſe: But then he conſidered, where a Juſtification was made even by an Act of Parliament, which was an higher Authority than an Order of either Houſe, ſuch Acts gave ſome Power to plead ſummarily, and others to plead Not Guilty, and juſtify by giving the ſpecial Matter in Evidence: Yet he never heard there was any Proviſion made for pleading to the Juriſdiction of any Court: He thought, therefore, that the High Authority of the Houſe of Commons could not exempt the King's-Bench, being a Court of Law, from examining whether what was alledged to be done, was done in purſuance of their Authority or not.

He conſidered alſo, If this Plea was overruled, the Defendant was not prejudiced; for the ſame Matter might be pleaded in way of Bar, and would have been admitted a good Bar, if true: They did not diſpute the Legality or Power of their Orders, but whether Topham the Defendant had purſued the Order of the Houſe; and that was the Thing properly examinable by them: But it would be a monſtrous Miſchief to the Plaintiffs if ſuch a Plea was allowed to the Juriſdiction; for if Mr. Topham had abuſed his Authority, and had been guilty of any Outrage; if when he had an Order to bring a Member to the Bar of the Houſe, he ſhould not bring him thither, but extort Money from him, It was very certain he ought to be puniſhed, and make Satisfaction to the Party injured: But during a Receſs of Parliament he could have no Satisfaction; and if a Parliament was not held in ſix or ſeven Years he would loſe his Action.

But further, If the King's-Bench could not examine this Caſe, the Plaintiff (the Party wronged) muſt be without Remedy; for if the Commons could puniſh their Offences, they could not give Damages to the Party injured: Nay, they could not examine the Witneſſes upon Oath in order to aſſeſs Damages.

That when he conſidered this Caſe, he ſaw a great Miſchief on one Side, if the ordinary Courts of Law had no Juriſdiction; but could obſerve none, if they had: There could be no Hurt in examining, if the Orders of the Houſe were fairly executed; and he was confident the Houſe would not encourage an Abuſe of their Orders: And theſe being his Apprehenſions, he thought he was bound to over-rule the Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court. If he was miſtaken, it was an Error of his Judgment; he had no Deſign to meddle with the Affairs of the Houſe, but to do Juſtice.

Mr. Speaker demanded, If he delivered theſe Reaſons when he gave Judgment? for, if he had, this would have been ſome Light to their Serjeant to have pleaded afterwards.

Sir Francis anſwered, He was ſure the Serjeant was told he might have pleaded this Matter in Bar, and this would have been a good Bar of the Action, which he thought Direction enough.

Mr. Speaker demanded, If it was not uſual in Caſes of great Moment, as this was, to argue the Point upon giving Judgment? Sir Francis anſwered, It was ſo, if they would argue it; but when the Counſel on both Sides let it go, they examined no further. Then Sir Francis withdrew, and Sir Thomas Jones being brought in, the Speaker demanded, upon what Reaſons they over-ruled the Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court?

Sir

1689. 1W & M. Sir Thomas Jones's Defence.

Sir Thomas ſeriouſly proteſted before God, and that Honourable Houſe, that he never deſigned to interfere with the Authority and Privileges of the Houſe: He always conceived, that for any thing tranſacted in that Houſe, no other Court had any Juriſdiction to hear and determine it. But he thought there was a Difference to be taken in Matters that were meerly tranſacted by the Houſe, and thoſe complicated of the Authority and Commands of the Houſe; and of the Execution of the Authority and Commands of the Houſe abroad; which was the Caſe before the King's-Bench.

Mr. Topham was complained of, that he not only impriſoned the Plaintiff Jay, but kept him in Priſon till he paid 30 l. And he humbly conceived this Declaration ought to have been anſwered, and not put off with a Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court: That this Court was moſt proper to try it, which could try and determine the whole Merits of the Cauſe between them, eſpecially where the Privileges of the Houſe could not be injured. And he thought Mr. Topham was adviſed to plead this Matter in Bar, wherein there would have been a due Regard paid to the Authority of the Houſe: If he had but produced a Copy of their Journal, that would have been ſufficient. But Mr. Topham did not think fit to make any Anſwer to the Complaint of his taking 30 l. for which, if it was an Extortion upon the Subject, he was ſure that the Houſe, which was entruſted with the Subjects Rights, would not have ſuffered the Party wronged to have gone without a Remedy and Satisfaction: And he never obſerved, when he was an unworthy Member of that Houſe, that they ever gave Damages to a Perſon that had been injured by their Officer: And beſides, at this Time the Houſe was riſen, and could do nothing in it.

He obſerved alſo, as Sir Francis had done, that the Authority of an Act of Parliament was ſuperior to that of the Houſe of Commons: But if a Man did any thing by Virtue of ſuch an Act, for Inſtance, under the Commiſſioners of Sewers, or in the executing a Rate for the Poor, or levying of a Poll-Tax, and he be charged with exceeding or going beyond his Authority, he muſt either plead in Bar ſpecially, or, in many Caſes (where the Statute allows it) generally, and give the ſpecial Matter in Evidence: But it was never known that ſuch an Officer, though appointed and authorized by Act of Parliament, ever pleaded to the Juriſdiction of the Court, and inſiſted they ſhould not take Cognizance of the Matter, becauſe he acted by Virtue of an Act of Parliament: And conſequently he thought, where there was only a Command of the Houſe to do a Thing, and there was an Abuſe of their Order in exacting the Thirty Pounds complained of, they might take Cognizance of it, though they ſhould have given all imaginable Reverence to their Order, if there had been a Plea in Bar.

1689. 1W. & M.

Upon theſe Reaſons it was he gave his Opinion that the Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court ſhould be over-ruled; and if it was not agreeable to their Judgment, he humbly begged Pardon.

Sir Francis and Sir Thomas being withdrawn, the Houſe reſolved that Sir Francis Pemberton, giving Judgment to over-rule the Plea to the Juriſdiction of the Court of King's-Bench, in the Caſe between Jay and Topham, had broken the Privileges of the Houſe; and the like Reſolve paſſed in Relation to Sir Thomas Jones.

The Judge taken into Cuſtody.

And, by Order of the Houſe, both Sir Francis Pemberton and Sir Thomas Jones were taken into Cuſtody for the ſaid Breach of Privilege, and remained confined till the Prorogation of the Parliament, which happened ſoon after.

This Caſe is ſo very plain that it needs no Remarks; and if it did, perhaps it may not be prudent to touch upon the Privileges of this awful Senate.

Proceedings againſt the Biſhop of Rocheſter, before the LORDS of the Privy Council, in Relation to a Plot to reſtore King JAMES II. 1692. 4*W.* & M.

THE Proceedings againſt Dr. Sprat, Biſhop of Rocheſter, ſtand next in the State Trials: It is a Narrative of the Biſhop's, wherein he relates, that he was apprehended on the 7th of May, at his Houſe at Bromley, by a Meſſenger, accompanied by Mr. Dyve, Clerk of the Council: That they had a Warrant from the Privy Council to apprehend him on Suſpicion of Treaſon, and ſearched his Perſon and his Houſe at Bromley very narrowly, and then brought him to his Houſe at Weſtminſter; and he was examined before a Committee of Council the next Day: That he was afterwards ſent to his Houſe at Weſtminſter again, where he remained till the 18th in the Cuſtody of a Meſſenger, and under a Guard of Soldiers.

That at his Examination before the Council it was demanded, If he compoſed a Declaration againſt the intended Deſcent of King James, or drew up Heads for ſuch a Declaration, or was ever deſired to undertake ſuch a Work? Whether he ever held any Correſpondence with France, or ſigned an Aſſociation for Reſtoring King James? Or if he knew of ſuch an Aſſociation, or any Perſons that had ſigned it?

To all which the Biſhop anſwered in the Negative; and on the 19th of May, was ſuffered to return to Bromley.

That on the 8th of June, the Lord Nottingham, Secretary of State, ſent him a Letter to appear before the Council the next Day; and upon his Attendance, he was confronted with one Blackhead, who pretended he brought the Biſhop a Letter to Bromley, from one Young, and received an Anſwer to it, for Young, from the Biſhop: And his Lordſhip being asked if he knew Blackhead, he did not remember at firſt, but recollected afterwards, that he brought him a Letter from a Clergyman in Buckinghamſhire, to enquire whether he ordained a certain Perſon that deſired to be the Curate, becauſe he ſuſpected his Orders were counterfeited; and that he wrote that Clergyman an Anſwer, that he had ſearched his Books, and could aſſure him he never ordained any ſuch Perſon.

Blackhead, on the contrary affirmed, that the Letter he carried to the Biſhop, was from Young, and the Biſhop anſwered directly to Young: But the Biſhop's Secretary, Mr. Moore, being called in, atteſted that he remembered Blackhead's bringing the Letter to Bromley: That it was ſigned by one Hooke, repreſented by Blackhead, to be a Buckinghamſhire Clergyman; and the Biſhop wrote an Anſwer, and directed it to the ſame Hooke, ſending it by Blackhead. But Blackhead ſtill perſiſted, he brought the Biſhop a Letter from Young, and no other.

The Biſhop was further examined, If he had written a Letter to the Earl of Marlborough within 3 Months; or received any Letter or Papers from him? To which the Biſhop anſwered in the Negative.

That on Monday the 13th of June, the Biſhop attended the Council again, and was confronted with another Man: And it being demanded if he knew him, the Biſhop proteſted he never ſaw him: Then he was informed by the Council that this was Robert Young, whom Blackhead mentioned: Whereupon the Biſhop ſaid, that ſome Years before, one Robert Young wrote to him from Newgate, pretending to be a Clergyman; and informing him that he and his Wife were in Priſon, upon a falſe Accuſation, and deſired his Lordſhip would recollect, that he had officiated ſome Weeks for the Chaplain of Bromley-College, and preached in the Pariſh Church there: Deſired he would ſend him a Certificate of this, and it would be of Service to him; and withal begged he would ſend him ſomething, out of Charity, to relieve him and his Wife in their great Diſtreſs. But the Biſhop ſent him no Anſwer, becauſe he had not the leaſt Remembrance of him himſelf; and upon Enquiry, found he did not deſerve any. Then the Biſhop produced the very Letter Blackhead brought him to Bromley, being of the ſame Tenor as the Biſhop related; and Blackhead at length confeſſed it to be the ſame Letter: He confeſſed alſo that Young directed him to leave a Treaſonable Aſſociation in the Biſhop's Houſe at Bromley; and that he left it in a Flower-Pot, in the Parlour Chimney; but the Meſſenger not finding it when the Biſhop was apprehended, he (Blackhead) made another Pretence to go to Bromley, while the Biſhop was confined, and brought it from thence; for Young ſaid that was the Original, and he brought it to the Lords of the Council, and it lying upon the Council Table, at this Time, the Biſhop had a Sight of it, and ſays it was of the following Tenor. 1692. 4W. & M.

"That We whoſe Names were ſubſcribed, The Subſtance of the Aſſociation.

Marlborough. Salisbury. W. Cant.
Baſil Firebrace. Tho. Roffen.
Cornbury.
John Wilcoxe.

Upon Sight of this Paper, the Biſhop adds, He was amazed to ſee his Hand ſo well counterfeited, and obſerved that there was another innocent Perſon, whoſe Hand he knew very well, that was ſtill more nicely forg'd, and that was Archbiſhop Sancroft's; and the Earl of Marlborough's Hand alſo was well forged.

Young being called in again, and examined, If the Letter Blackhead carried the Biſhop of Rocheſter, was of his Hand-Writing, denied it was, though Blackhead atteſted to his Face it was; and Young had the Impudence to ſay, This was a Conſpiracy between Blackhead and the Biſhop, to baffle the Diſcovery of the Plot: And when the Lords of the Council laughed at the ſenſeleſs Suggeſtion, Young ſtill perſiſted, that he believed the Biſhop had taken Blackhead off. Then the Letter Young had ſent the Biſhop, and the Aſſociation, being compared together, appeared to have been written by the ſame Hand. However, Young ſtill denied he wrote the Letter; and the Biſhop aſſures his Readers, that, during the whole Examination, though Young's Forgery was ſo evidently proved by the Confeſſion of his Accomplice, and otherwiſe, yet he behaved himſelf with a daring unconcerned Confidence, a bold erect Countenance, though it had naturally very much of the Villain in it. His whole Carriage was ſuch as became the Diſcipline he had undergone for many Years, having been almoſt a conſtant Inhabitant in ſome of the common Jayls in England and Ireland.

He

1692. 4W. & M.

He was executed afterwards at Tyburn, on the 19th of April, 1700, for Coining, when he delivered a Paper to the Sheriff, wherein he ſays, " I think myſelf eſpecially obliged to " diſcover to the Publick, how far I was con- " cerned in that pretended Plot, ſuppoſed to " be carried on by the Earls of Marlborough " and Salisbury, the Lord Biſhop of Rocheſ- " ter, and ſome others; the Truth of which, " I call God to witneſs, is as follows. I was " committed to Newgate, till I diſcharged a " certain Fine impoſed on me; during my " Confinement, one Henry Pearſon, a Surgeon, " I think, was committed to the ſame Place " for Debt; he percieving me to be very ex- " pert in counterfeiting Hands, told me, that " if I could contrive a ſham Plot, and father " it upon thoſe Noble Peers, I might ſoon " have Money enough to pay my Fine. Be- " ing in very low Circumſtances, I readily " conſented to this Propoſal; but told him, " nothing could be done in that Matter, till " he was releaſed, which in a ſhort Time was " effected. As ſoon as he was at Liberty, he " employed one Blackhead, to carry Letters " between us. I happened, by a certain Stra- " tagem, to ſee the Earl of Marlborough's Hand; " this I counterfeited ſo cunningly, that it was " very difficult to diſcern the true from the " falſe: Then I drew up an Aſſociation, and " affixed to it the Hands of the Earls of Marl- " borough and Salisbury, as alſo Sir Baſil Fire- " brace's, the Lord Biſhop of Rocheſter's; and " the Lord Cornbury's was wrote by another " Hand, according to my Requeſt. And that " the more Credit might be given to this pre- " tended Plot, I wrote ſeveral Letters in the " Name of the Lord Marlborough (for I was " perfectly acquainted with his Way of Wri- " ting) ſuppoſed to be directed to me, which " Blackhead uſed to bring me again; and yet " he ſwore before the Lords of the Council, " that the ſaid Earl ſent them to me; whereas, " to his Knowledge, I myſelf forged them, " and ordered them to be ſent after that Man- " ner. This is the Truth of that Buſineſs, " which has made ſo great a Noiſe in the World. " I humbly beg the Pardon of thoſe Noble " Peers, and do declare once more, in the Pre- " ſence of God, that I did not ſet the Lord " Biſhop of Rocheſter's, or the Lord Cornbu- " ry's Hand to the ſaid Paper; yet it was done " by my Conſent, by another Perſon".

Inſtead of making any Obſervations of my own on theſe Proceedings, I ſhall preſent the Reader with the Remarks of a certain Writer, in a Letter ſaid to be written to the Lord Chief Juſtice Holt, wherein that Gentleman ſays, Remarks on the Proceed- ings of the Biſhop of Rochef- ter.

" I crave Liberty to remind you what " Young the Parſon, in Conjunction with Black- " head, had contrived, in order to the Mur- " dering ſeveral of the firſt Quality in the " Kingdom, beſides divers Gentlemen of low- " er Degree: For theſe Fellows, judging it too " little and mean for Perſons of their Tran- " ſcendency in Villany, meerly to ſwear that " ſuch and ſuch had conſpired and combined " to reſtore and re-eſtabliſh King James, had " the audacious and unprecedented Impudence " to forge an Aſſociation, and to counterfeit " and affix the Hands and Names of Honour- " able Peers, and worthy Perſons unto it; " importing their having mutually and jointly " undertook to diſpoſſeſs King William, and " to bring back, and re-advance King James. " And though it was morally impoſſible, as " well as altogether incredible, that, had " there been ſuch a Deſign, ſo concerted, " Wretches of the Meanneſs of Young and " Blackhead, ſhould have been admitted upon " a Secret of ſuch Importance in itſelf, and " whereof the Diſcovery would have render- " ed thoſe concerned, liable to the Loſs of " Life, Honour, and Eſtates: Yet not on- " ly with what Eaſineſs, but Letchery, was the " Belief of it entertained, by divers of our ſu- " preme and reputed wiſe Miniſters! And not- " withſtanding its being, in the whole Matter " of it, more ludicrous than Farce, or Bartho- " lomew-Fair-Shew, than to be entertained by " Stateſmen; yet with what Seriouſneſs and " Gravity was it brought to the Council- " Board, and received there as a Subject wor- " thy of weighty and ſolemn Debate! See a Letter to the Right Honourable Sir John Holt, Knight, Lord Chief Juſtice of the King's Bench, *occaſioned by the Noiſe of a Plot. 1692. 4W. & M.

And in the ſame Letter, Page 11 and 12. The Author ſays, " Nor could the " Miniſters be ſo great Strangers to the " infamous Characters of the Witneſſes " (whoſe many and notorious Crimes had " ſufficiently publiſhed them before, through- " out the whole Nation, as Raſcals, who had " forfeited all Right to be believed and credi- " ted) as to hope to have their Integrity and " and Righteouſneſs juſtified, in ſeizing and " proſecuting any upon their Teſtimony: And " yet, had it not been for the miſſing of the " forged Paper, when it was at firſt ſo nar- " rowly ſearched for, at the Biſhop of Ro- " cheſter's, where one of the Rogues traito- " rouſly and feloniouſly lodged it; it is ſcarce " to be conceived, how ſome of our Stateſmen " were prepared to have puſhed on that Af- " fair to the Impriſonment of ſeveral. But " that Miſadventure, together with the De- " fences which the aforeſaid eloquent Biſhop, " after his Apprehenſion, made at his being " examined before the Council, rendered them " more ſlow and wary in their Proceedings: " And thereupon, through the gaining the " Reſpite of a little Time, there was an Op- " portunity obtained, not only of diſcover- " ing and laying open the many infamous and " horrid Crimes, whereof the Rogues had at " other Times been guilty, but of fully de- " tecting the Forgery of the Aſſociation, and " where they had ſecretly laid it in the Bi- " ſhop's Houſe, in order to have deſtroyed " him and others, in caſe it had been found " by the Clerk of the Council and the Meſ- " ſengers, when is was ſo induſtriouſly ſought " for. And truly, my Lord, had not Young " laboured under a ſtrange Defect of Morals, " he was incomparably qualified in all other " Reſpects, to have been a ſelect, ſingular, " and ſtanding Witneſs for the State: For as " he has a Sufficiency of Wit, and Preſence " of Mind, to be able to give Things the beſt

" beſt Gloſs, and readieſt Turn of Thought, " ſo he is furniſhed with a larger Stock of " Impudence and Aſſurance than moſt Men " in the World are: Of which your Lord- " ſhip was an aſtoniſhed Witneſs, when you " had him before you at the Bar, to be tried " for the Forgery which I have mentioned, " and to be condemned to the too gentle and " feeble Puniſhment which the Law hath or- " dained for it. For with what Confidence " did he ſtand, not only under the Load of " a thouſand infamous Actions, of which all " the Court knew him to have been guilty; " but under the fulleſt and cleareſt Proof of " the malicious Forgery for which he was then " arraigned. Yea, with what Effrontery, and " Air of Impudence, to the Amazement of " all there, did he continue to aſſert his own " Innocence, and perſevere in his Crimination " of others? But that which filleth Men " moſt with Sorrow, in Reference to that " Tranſaction, and which keeps them under " diſquieting Fears ever ſince, is, that though " Young and Blackhead were Inſtruments in " it, yet People of another Figure muſt " have been the firſt Contrivers and Authors " of it: And the handing Money to Black- " head, while kept in Cuſtody by Allen the " Meſſenger, and conniving at his Eſcape " from thence, gives us more than a Suſpi- " cion of it, and little leſs than a moral Cer- " tainty: For that Rogue, having been the " Tool employed too with Young, by the Su- " perior Managers, and having threatned to " ſqeak, in caſe given up, and abandoned to " a publick Puniſhment, it was ſo ordered, that " he might not only be permitted to get away, " but be ſheltered and maintained in Ireland, " whither he withdrew; and from whence the " Government might have eaſily brought him " back, were there not a Myſtery in that " Affair, which it is not for ſome People's " Honour to have unravelled. An imperfect Piece. THIS which is called Anderton's Trial is a very imperfect Piece, and clogged with a great deal of Rubbiſh, not fit to be bound up with the State Trials, and was only inſerted by the Bookſellers to enhance the Price of the Work, or for the Advantage of the Perſon they employed in compiling this Volume. They have neither given us the Indictment or the Evidence regularly, or the Obſervations of the Counſel or Judges. We only underſtand that the Indictment charged the Priſoner with High Treaſon, in compaſſing the King and Queen's Deaths, and the Subverſion of the Government. And that the Overt Acts laid of this Treaſon, were his printing ſome Books tending to incite a Rebellion; the one of them intitled, Remarks upon the preſent Confederacy and the Revolution in England: And another intitled, A French Conqueſt neither deſirable or practicable. But they have given us none of the treaſonable or obnoxious Paſſages; and therefore I ſhall diſmiſs this pretended Trial without taking any further Notice of it, than that the Priſoner was convicted of High Treaſon, and executed on Friday the 16th of June, 1693.

Proceedings of the Privy Council againſt Dr. OLDYS, the King's Advocate, and other Doctors of the Commons, for refuſing to proſecute JOHN GOLDING and others, as Traitors and Pirates, who acted under Commiſſions from the French King, and King JAMES II. Sept. 1693. 5 W. & M.

1693. 5W.&M.

Proceedings againſt Dr. Oldys.

THE Lords of the Admiralty, in the Month of November 1692, commanded Dr. Oldys to proſecute the ſaid John Golding, and other Priſoners, for High Treaſon and Piracy, in taking ſeveral Engliſh Ships, under Colour of a Commiſſion from the French King (an Enemy to England) and another Commiſſion from King James as King of England, and carrying the ſaid Ships into Breſt, where they were condemned as lawful Prize by Thomas Shadford, Judge of the Admiralty there for King James.

Dr. Oldys hereupon gave his Opinion in Writing, That the Priſoners were not Pirates, and ought not to be proceeded againſt as ſuch. Whereupon Dr. Oldys, Sir Thomas Pinfold, Dr. Walker, Dr. Littleton, and Dr. Tindall, were ſummoned before a Committee of Council; and on their Appearance it was demanded of Dr. Oldys, Why he refuſed to proſecute the Priſoners?

Dr. Oldys anſwered, Pirates were the common Enemies of Mankind, pretending to no legal Authority; but theſe Priſoners ſhewed a Commiſſion ſigned J. R. dated at the Court of St. Germain's, together with Articles and Inſtructions annexed in the ſame Form that Privateers had, giving Caution and Security to bring their Prizes into the Court of Admiralty for Judgment before Thomas Shadford, at Breſt, or elſewhere.

Mr. Secretary Trenchard anſwered, King James had left his Sovereignty, having parted with his Crown, and conſequently with the Power of granting Commiſſions.

Doctor Oldys replied, A King might be depoſed, but could not loſe his Right: He had ſtill a Right to make War, and to grant Letters of Mart and Reprizal.

Mr. Secretary Trenchard ſaid, That might be Law, where a King was depoſed; but what if he abdicated?

Dr. Oldys anſwered, If he really abdicated, as the Emperor Charles V, and Chriſtina Queen of Sweden had done, he was no more than a private Perſon, and could not legally grant Commiſſions: But whether a Privateer acting by a Commiſſion, granted him de facto by King James, and not knowing he had abdicated, Whether ſuch an Error would not excuſe a pœna delicti, was the Queſtion? for that a Reputable Power was equivalent to a Real one in ſuch a Caſe. It was notorious, that K. James was once a lawful King, acknowledged by them and all the World; and when his Army deſerted him, he fled to his Ally in France, for Aid: Then went to Ireland, to recover his Kingdoms, as his Declarations ſet forth. There he granted Commiſſions, and his Soldiers who fought under thoſe Commiſſions, and were taken, were not treated as Thieves and Robbers, but as Priſoners of War, whereby his Claim ſeemed to be allowed by his Enemies. Upon his Return to France, thoſe who ſerved under him in Ireland, repaired thither to King James, believing him ſtill impowered to grant Commiſſions, as well by Sea as Land, and upon Receipt of Commiſſions from him, came out animo hoſtili, as Privateers, non animo furandi, as Pirates: That a colourable Authority remaining in King James, would excuſe thoſe who acted under him, from being Pirates, ſince the Abdication was never publiſhed, nor ſo much as heard of in France. And ſince in Piracy, which deſerves ultimum ſupplicium, if proved, all favourable Allowances ought to be made, and a general Acknowledgment of a falſe Authority in another Country (where the Commiſſions were taken) would free them from a felonious Intent in taking them, and conſequently from Piracy; King James was owned and reputed a King in France; and therefore in this Caſe it was undoubted Law, Communis error facit jus.

Here Mr. Secretary Trenchard, and Lord Falkland in a great Heat ſaid, Pray, Doctor, let us deal more cloſely with you, for your Reaſons amount to High Treaſon: Pray, what do you think of the Abdication?

The Doctor anſwered, That was an odious, enſnaring Queſtion; however, perhaps he thought of the Abdication as they did; for ſince it was voted, it bound, at leaſt in England: But thoſe Gentlemen were in a foreign Country, and knew nothing of it; and though King James was not King here, yet the Colour of Authority remaining, and a common Reputation of him as a King there, excuſed them.

It being demanded of Sir Tho. Pinfold, what he had to ſay to it, the Doctor anſwered, He was of the ſame Opinion. Dr. Newton and Dr. Walker did not declare their Opinions, but deſired Time to conſider of it; and Dr. Newton ſaid, It was againſt his Conſcience to have a Hand in Blood.

Dr. Littleton, on the contrary, held, That King James was now a private Perſon; we had no War with him, or he with us; or if he deſigned it, Ærarium non habet, He was not in a Capacity of making War, he could neither ſend or receive Ambaſſadors, and thoſe who adhered to him were not Enemies but Rogues, and conſequently theſe Perſons were 1693. 5 W. & M. not Privateers, but Pirates. Dr. Tindall declared himſelf of Dr. Littleton's Opinion.

In the End, Dr. Oldys was removed from his Place of King's Advocate, and Dr. Littleton ſucceeding him, tried the Priſoners, and condemned them; and, according to the Editor of the Eighth Volume of the State Trials, ſeveral of them were executed. 1693. 5 W. & M.

The Indictment. THE Indictment charges the Priſoners with High Treaſon, in compaſſing the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government; and the Overt Acts laid to prove theſe Treaſons, were their meeting, conſulting, and agreeing, on the 10th of February, then laſt paſt, at the Pariſh of St. Clement Danes, in the County of Middleſex, with divers other falſe Traitors, to aſſaſſinate the King as he rode in his Coach, in the following Manner, viz. That forty Horſemen (of which Number they were to be Part) ſhould lie in Ambuſh, and ſet upon the King's Coach, and the Guards that were to attend him in his Return from Hunting; and that they bought Horſes, Arms, &c. for executing the ſaid Deſign.

Denied Counſel, &c. At their Arraignment Mr. Charnock inſiſted on their having Counſel, and a Copy of their Indictment, according to a late Act; and being told, that Act did not commence till Lady-Day, he obſerved, that the Preamble of that Act ſaid, That this was reaſonable; and if it was ſo, it was as reaſonable to Day as it would be a Fortnight hence: But this was over-ruled by the Court, and they were allowed neither.

Denied further Time, or a Sollicitor. Then they moved for further Time for their Trial; but this alſo was denied: They were alſo denied a Sollicitor to ſtand by them and aſſiſt them: After which the Attorney General opened the Evidence.

The Attorney Gen. (Sir Thomas Trevors) opens the Evidence. Mr. Attorney General. My Lord, and you Gentlemen of the Jury, theſe Gentlemen at the Bar ſtand indicted for a moſt horrid and barbarous Conſpiracy, to aſſaſſinate and murder His Majeſty's Royal Perſon. Gentlemen, this Aſſaſſination was to be ſeconded with an Invaſion from France, where Troops lay ready at Calais, as ſoon as the diſmal Stroke was given, to have landed upon our Coaſts; which if it had taken Effect, we had not only ſuffered that moſt unſpeakable Loſs of the King, but it would have made an End of all our Liberties and Laws at once.

Gentlemen, this Offence, in its Nature, is ſo horrid and barbarous, that as it needs no Aggravation, ſo it is incapable of having any, by any Words that can be uſed; for the very naming of an Aſſaſſination of a King, carries ſuch Horror and Deteſtation in it ſelf, to all honeſt People, that it is impoſſible to aggravate it by any Expreſſions that can be uſed about it. But there is this peculiar Conſideration to be had, by all Engliſhmen who love their Country, that this deſigned Aſſaſſination upon the Perſon of his preſent Majeſty, was to take away the Life of a King who, every body knows, firſt ventured his own Life to reſtore our Religion, Laws and Liberties, when they were juſt expiring under the Oppreſſion of Popery and Tyranny. And as he ventured his Life firſt to reſtore them, ſo he has ſince, upon all Occaſions, with the utmoſt Hazard, expoſed his Royal Perſon to the moſt imminent Dangers, for the preſerving and maintaining our Religion, Laws and Liberties, againſt the Power and Violence of the Common Enemy. This Conſideration, to all true Engliſhmen, muſt have a very great Weight, and create the greateſt Horror and Deteſtation, both of the barbarous Deſign, and of all thoſe who had any Concern or Hand in it, to attempt upon the Life, not only of a King, but of ſuch a King.

Gentlemen, when you hear the Evidence that we ſhall offer to you, to prove this Bloody Conſpiracy againſt theſe Priſoners, I doubt not but that there will be enough, and more than enough, to ſatisfy all true-hearted Engliſh Subjects, and all that have a Deſire to preſerve our Conſtitution and Government, in what Danger we and our Poſterity were, of being utterly ruined and involved in a Common Deſtruction. I ſhall not detain you longer with any Diſcourſe about the Heinouſneſs of this Offence, becauſe every Man's own Thoughts cannot but ſuggeſt to him how diſmal the Conſequences muſt have been, if ſo fatal a Stroke had been given.

But, Gentlemen, I muſt crave Leave to take up ſo much of your Time as to open how this Bloody Execrable Conſpiracy was firſt framed, and afterwards carried on, by the Priſoners at the Bar, together with others, till it was very near putting in Execution, had not the infinite Mercy of God prevented it, by a timely Diſcovery.

Gentlemen, this Conſpiracy was firſt framed and conſulted upon the laſt Year; there were ſeveral Conſultations and Meetings, at ſeveral Places about the Town, for this Purpoſe; 1695. 8 W. 3. pose; then, and at those Consultations and Meetings, there were present Capt. Porter, the Prisoners, and others, of whom you will have an Account from the Witnesses; and at that Time they had an Expectation of Commissions from the late King, to authorize the Design: That not coming, they yet resolved to put it in Execution before the King went away. But, because the French Troops were then not in a Readiness to come over hither, to protect them after the Execution of their bloody Design, it was necessary for them to fly thither for Shelter; and therefore they endeavoured to procure a Vessel to be ready to carry them over to France. But they could not get a Vessel Time enough; and then the King's going over into Flanders quickly after, prevented the Execution of the Design for that Time; and so Matters rested till the King's Return.

About two or three Months ago, Sir George Barclay, who is an Officer in the late King James's Guards in France, and some other Officers, with sixteen or eighteen Troopers in those Guards, privately came over from France to put this Design in Execution; and he did acquaint Mr. Porter and Mr. Charnock with the Design, knowing that they had been engaged in the Matter before, and so could not but expect that they would readily assist. This Design was treated and consulted of between them, at several Times, and in several Places; at Capt. Porter's, and Mr. Charnock's Lodgings in Norfolk-Street; at the Globe Tavern in Hatton-Garden, the Nag's-Head Tavern at St. James's, and several other Places: Several Consultations and Meetings were had between the Prisoners at the Bar and others, whom you will hear named at these Meetings: Several Ways and Methods were proposed how it should be best effected. It was proposed by some, that it should be done by Ambuscade; that it should be laid near the King's House at Richmond; such a Number on Foot were to lie in the Wood there, ready to attack the King as he came by, and the rest of the Conspirators, at the same Time, to fall on the Guards. But this Method was not so well approved of, as that which was afterwards proposed and agreed to; that is, there were to be three Parties of them, and the Place was the Lane lying between Brentford and Turnham-Green, at the End next Turnham-Green, which the King used to pass through upon his Return from Richmond. The Order and Method of this Design was this, Sir George Barclay, with eight or ten more, was to attack the Coach, and by firing into it, to have killed the King, and all in it; and the rest were to attack the Guards in two Parties, on each Side of the Lane, whereof Mr. Charnock and Mr. Porter were to command one, and Brigadier Rookwood the other. In order to see how feasible this Design might be, the Prisoner King, Capt. Porter, and Knightly, were to go and survey the Place; and the next Day after that Consultation they went to view the Ground, and did very carefully do it, both on this Side the Water, and on the other Side the Water; and they came back, and met the rest of the Company at the Nag's-Head Tavern, late at Night, to give an Account what they had done, in order to this Enterprize. It was agreed, the Number should be about Forty: Sir George Barclay was to make up about Twenty, Mr. Charnock was to furnish Eight, Captain Porter Seven; and so in other Proportions, in all to make up the Number of Forty; which they thought were enough to effect and accomplish their Design.

1695. 8 W. 3.

In order to make this Matter the more sure, they did appoint Two to lodge and wait at Kensington, near the Guards; who were to give Notice, when the King went abroad: And they had their several Persons assigned, to whom they should give Notice, who thereupon were to send Orders to the several Parties; one of which was Chambers, who was to give Notice to the Prisoner at the Bar Mr. Charnock; and there was one Durance, who was to give Notice to Sir George Barclay; and when such Notice was given, then they were to send Orders to the several Persons who were concerned in this bloody Business, to come at the Time appointed, to be disposed of into their several Posts.

Gentlemen, in order to the furthering this Design, they did likewise send Durance to go and view, and give them an Account of the most convenient Inns at Brentford, and Turnham-Green, and the Places adjacent; which were least liable to Observation, where the Men might be the most conveniently disposed of, to lie ready against the Time when they were to execute this barbarous Assassination: Accordingly he went, and took an Account of the several Inns within that Compass, and they were to be billetted by Two or Three in an Inn, so as not to be observed; Sir George Barclay and his Party at Turnham-Green, and the rest at Brentford.

Gentlemen, after they had thus laid the Design, Saturday the 15th of February was the first Time pitched upon for the putting it in Execution, if the King went abroad, as he used to do upon Saturdays, to Richmond to hunt; and if they had Notice from Durance and Chambers that he was so to do, which Notice they had; and every Thing was prepared in order to have perpetrated this villainous Design: But it happened that the King went not abroad that Day, of which they had Notice about Noon, from Chambers to Charnock, and Charnock sent Word so to Porter's Lodgings; and then the Order for their getting together was countermanded, and the Note by which Charnock sent Word, was subscribed with the Name of Robinson; which you will hear is a Name he goes by, as well as by that of Charnock.

Thus they were disappointed at that Time: But they were not discouraged from pursuing this inhuman Enterprize; but resolved to go on, the next Opportunity that should be given. And to omit several Things that intervened, which the Witnesses will give you an Account of, on the Friday following they met again, to have every Thing ready against the next Day, which was Saturday the 22d of February; when they expected the King would go abroad, as he usually did on that Day of the Week;

The Continuance of the Attorney General's Speech in Charnock's Trial.

1693. 8 W. 3. Week; and that Meeting was at the Sun Tavern in the Strand, and there were preſent Captain Porter, Sir William Perkins, Sir George Barclay, and Mr. Charnock; and at that Time there was a Diſcourſe amongſt them about the Diſappointment, which they had had the Week before, and ſome of them had a Jealouſy, that a Diſcovery had been made of their Deſign: But then, upon further Conſideration, they concluded, If it had been ſo, they ſhould not have met there, but have been taken up: And therefore they concluded, the King's ſtaying at Home that Day was but accidental; and ſo reſolved to put their Conſpiracy in Execution the next Day. While they were there, ſeveral Perſons, for whom Captain Porter had undertaken, that is, one Cranborne, Kenrick, and Keys the Priſoner at the Bar, came to Porter; theſe were carried into another Room, and commanded all to be ready the next Day, when it was reſolved to put the Aſſaſſination in Execution: And then Captain Porter asked Kenrick for Sherborne, who, it ſeems, had been undertaken for; but it was anſwered, That he asked ſo many Queſtions about the Matter, that he did not think fit to truſt him.

The next Morning they met again, at Captain Porter's Lodgings; and there met (as the Witneſſes will tell you) amongſt others, Mr. Pendergraſs, Mr. Keys, and Mr. King: King brought a Meſſage to Captain Porter from Sir George Barclay, to know the Names of thoſe that were concerned; and upon that Meſſage, Captain Porter writ down the Names of his Men, who were for his Quota, and ſent the Liſt by Cranborne to Mr. Charnock, to add his Liſt to it, of the Men he was to have under him: Cranborne afterwards came back, and brought the Liſt that Captain Porter ſent, with the additional Liſt ſent by Mr. Charnock, written with his own Hand, and ſubſcribed R. C. and Cranborne told them, that Chambers had ſent Word, that the King would go out that Morning: At the hearing of which, there was much Joy amongſt them; for they hoped then their wicked Deſign would be put in Execution that Day. There was a Diſcourſe then likewiſe, that Porter had a Piece which carried ſix Bullets; and this, it was ordered, ſhould be put into the Hands of Pendergraſs, who was to be one of Sir George Barclay's Men, to attack and fire into the King's Coach.

This was upon Saturday the 22d of February, when they had News that the King was to go abroad, and every Thing was to be put in Execution at his Return from Richmond. From Captain Porter's Lodgings they went to the Blue Poſts in Spring-Garden; but about Twelve o'Clock there came News from Chambers, one of the orderly Men at Keuſington, that the King did not go abroad that Day: This put them into a very great Confuſion; they then thought ſome Diſcovery muſt needs be made, becauſe of the Diſappointment two Saturdays together; and Keys, the Priſoner at the Bar, came up and told them, that the Guards were all come back in a Foam, and the King's Coaches were brought back to the Meuſe: And this confirmed them in their former Jealouſy, that the Matter was diſcovered; upon which Captain Porter, Mr. Pendergraſs, and Mr. Keys, went together to lie hid ſome Time; but they ſaid, they would ſend Keys to Mr. Charnock, to let him know where they might be heard of; and if the Matter was not diſcovered, they would ſtill go on, and put it in Execution: But they could not part without drinking ſome traitorous Healths, which the Witneſſes will tell you of, to the Reſtoring of the late King and his Queen, and the Prince of Wales; and after all, one of the Company taking an Orange, began a Health to the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange; and in this Manner it was drank by all of them before they parted, though they were under the Apprehenſion at that Time of being diſcovered already. 1693. 8 W. 3.

This is the Beginning and Progreſs of the ſeveral Conſultations that were had, for the carrying on this execrable traitorous Conſpiracy. I have opened it ſhortly to you; but you will hear it much fuller, in it's ſeveral Parts, by the Witneſſes. By what I have opened, you cannot but obſerve, that it was very near coming to be executed, if there had not been a Diſcovery of it Time enough, through the Providence of Almighty God, to prevent it. They had agreed, after the intended Aſſaſſination, to keep together till they came near the Town, and then they were to lie hid till the French Troops landed; which they were aſſured of, were ready upon the leaſt Intimation of the Succeſs of this Conſpiracy.

Gentlemen, every Body may gueſs at the diſmal Conſequences that would have followed, had this bloody Deſign taken Effect; and I am ſure, as we and our Poſterity could not have expected any thing leſs then the perpetual Yoke and Burden of Slavery and Popery, if it had pleaſed God to permit this Conſpiracy to take Effect; ſo I hope we ſhall always remember the merciful Hand of Providence, that has detected and diſappointed it.

Gentlemen, I ſhall not detain you any longer; I have opened to you part of that which will more fully be made out by the Witneſſes; only I would obſerve, that the Providence of God has not only made a Diſcovery to prevent the Execution of this abominable Villainy; but has brought this Conſpiracy ſo far to Light, by ſuch unqueſtionable Teſtimony, that no Man can doubt of the Reality of it; which, I hope, will raiſe in every honeſt Man's Mind an Abhorrence and Deteſtation of thoſe Principles upon which ſo villainous and barbarous a Deſign was founded; and I think I may ſay, that after the Evidence you will hear this Day, no one will pretend any Doubt of the Truth thereof; but either ſuch as are ſorry for the Diſcovery, or ſuch as knew too much of the Conſpiracy before. I ſhall trouble you no further, but call our Witneſſes, who will give you a full and clear Account of this Conſpiracy.

The King's Witneſſes being called, Captain Porter was ſworn, and teſtified, That Mr. Charnock and he lodged in the ſame Houſe, and that Sir William Perkins, who lodged there alſo when he came to Town, informed them that ſome Friends were come from France, Porter's Evidence.

1695. 8 W. 3.

France, and ſomething was doing that would be for the King's Service: And a little after Mr. Charnock acquainted this Witneſs, that Sir George Barclay, and thoſe that came from France, had brought a Commiſſion to levy War upon the Perſon of King William, and asked him (the Witneſs), how many he could bring to join them, if the King landed. That afterwards Sir George Barclay and Major Holmes came and talked with him and Mr. Charnock, at their Lodgings, of the Deſign, and they had ſeveral Meetings after this, particularly at the Globe in Hatton-Garden, the Nag's-Head in St. James's-Street, and the Sun-Tavern in the Strand; and in all theſe Places they conſulted which was the beſt Way to aſſaſſinate the Prince of Orange (his Majeſty). Sir George Barclay ſaid, he had as much Money as would furniſh out about Forty Horſe; Captain Charnock ſaid, he would bring Six or Seven, Sir William Perkins ſaid, he would lend Five Horſes; he (the Witneſs) ſaid, he would bring Seven Men and Horſe: That ſome propoſed to ſet upon the King as he came from Richmond; others at Kew, or in Richmond-Park; but Mr. Knightley, Mr. King, and the Witneſs going to view the Ground, Sir George Barclay, on their Report, was of Opinion, that the Lane leading from Brentford to Turnham-Green was the propereſt Place; in which the reſt concurred: And it was agreed to divide themſelves into three Parties, one to attack the Coach, and the other two the Guards; and they were to put their Deſign in Execution on Saturday the 15th of February laſt; the King uſually going to Richmond on Saturdays to hunt: And to prevent Suſpicion, they were to lie diſperſed in ſeveral Inns about Brentford the Night before; and when the Matter was over, Sir George Barclay directed them to get to London and lie concealed, aſſuring them, there would ſoon come over a ſufficient Number to their Aſſiſtance from abroad, and four or five Thouſand French would make Diverſion at the ſame Time in Scotland.

That they were preparing to put the Deſign in Execution on Saturday the 15th of February; but Mr. Charnock wrote the Witneſs a Note, that the King did not go out that Day.

That on the Friday following, the Conſpirators met at the Sun-Tavern in the Strand, and diſcourſed of their Diſappointment, and ſeveral were afraid the Deſign was diſcovered: However, it was reſolved to endeavour to execute it the next Day, being Saturday the 22d of February; when Mr. Charnock deſired a Liſt of his (the Witneſs's) Men, and ſent him a Liſt of his own: And they were preparing all Things to put the Deſign in Execution; when they received News that the King did not go out that Day neither: Whereupon they agreed to diſperſe themſelves, and on Thurſday he (the Witneſs) and Mr. Pendergraſs were apprehended.

It being demanded, which of the Priſoners were preſent at their Conſultations? Porter anſwered, Mr. Charnock and Mr. King were at all of them; that Keyes was his Servant a Year and half, and preſent at moſt of their Conſultations, and hired Horſes to be employed in the Buſineſs, and agreed to be an Actor in it. Mr. Porter teſtified further, That the Winter before this, there were ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations between Captain Charnock, Sir William Perkins, and himſelf, of the like Nature; and they were of Opinion, that the quieteſt Way of Reſtoring King James was, to knock the Prince of Orange on the Head; and the Reaſon they did not attempt it then, was, becauſe they wanted a Commiſſion from France, which they thought was neceſſary to authorize them to do it.

1695. 8 W. 3.

Mr. De la Rue being ſworn, teſtified, That this Conſpiracy had been carrying on ſeveral Years; and that the laſt Year there were ſeveral Conferences about it, between Sir William Perkins, Capt. Porter, Capt. Charnock, and others: That Charnock told him they had ſent to King James for a Commiſſion to authorize them to carry the Prince of Orange to France, if they could take him alive; and if they could not, they agreed to excuſe themſelves, by pretending he was killed by a random Shot: That the Commiſſion being delayed a long Time, they once agreed to do it without a Commiſſion; and a few Days before the King went to Flanders laſt Year, he was told, all was ready; only they wanted a Ship to carry off the Prince of Orange, which occaſioned the deferring the Deſign till the preſent Winter.

That in November or December laſt, King the Priſoner told this Witneſs, that a Major General would come from France, and that there was a Man of Quality in Town would diſburſe two or three Thouſand Pounds, to buy Horſes (as he underſtood), if King James would give Orders for it. That King alſo told him, on the 9th of February, there was the fineſt Place to put their Deſign in Execution that was poſſible, within a Quarter of a Mile of the King's Houſe at Richmond: But afterwards it was reſolved to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty in the Lane coming from Brentford to Turnham-Green; becauſe Sir George Barclay was not ſure of Horſe enough to carry him off: That Sir George was to command the Eight Perſons who were to aſſault the King, and thoſe that were in the Coach; Charnock was to attack the Guards in the Rear, and Rookwood, that came with a Party from France, and Capt. Porter were to attack the Guards on each Flank: That after the firſt Diſappointment (viz.) on the 18th of February, he met Mr. Charnock, who obſerved, that People who were forward and ſanguine, were now grown cold, and believed the King had Notice of their Deſign; however, he might depend upon it, the main Buſineſs (the Invaſion) would go on. That on Saturday Morning (the 22d) they were aſſembled at Capt. Porter's Lodgings in Maiden-Lane, and preparing to make another Attempt: And Captain Porter told this Witneſs, that Capt. Pendergraſs was to be one of the Eight under Sir George Barclay, that were to aſſaſſinate the King; and he was to lend him a Gun that would carry ſix or ſeven Bullets: Whereupon King ſaid to Capt. Pendergraſs, he hoped he would not be afraid of breaking the Glaſs 1695. 8 W. 3. Windows: That Capt. Porter at the ſame Time ſent a Liſt of his Men to Capt. Charnock, and the Meſſenger brought back a Liſt of Mr. Charnock's Men, under his Hand, ſubſcribed R. C. And while they were continuing their Preparations, Word was brought that the King did not go abroad that Day; and that the Guards who were ſent to Richmond, were returned back all in a Foam; and the King's Court was returned from Kenſington to the Meuſe-Gate: Whereupon they all looked very blank; and Porter asked Pendergraſs to go out of Town with him, and ſent Keyes to give the reſt of the Conſpirators an Account, there was no Occaſion for them; and ſo they diſperſed: But, before the Company parted, there were ſeveral Healths drunk, as To the late King's Reſtoration; A Health to the Prince of Wales, the late Queen, and the French King; and Capt. Porter, taking an Orange in his Hand, and ſqueezing it, began a Health to the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange; and ſaid, though they were diſappointed one Day, he hoped to have another; and that Keys dined with them, and drank theſe Healths with the reſt of the Company.

Pendergraſs's Evidence. Captain Pendergraſs was then ſworn, and confirmed the Teſtimony of Porter and De la Rue; adding, that upon their Diſappointment, he went out of Town to Epſom with Capt. Porter, and from thence to Leatherhead, where Keys and they were taken and brought back to London.

Bertham's Evidence. Bertham depoſed, That Mr. Charnock propoſed to him to be one of the Party to cut off the King, as the readieſt Way to facilitate an Invaſion that was intended from France, to reſtore King James.—— That on the 22d of February, after their Diſappointment, he met Mr. Charnock at Lincoln's-Inn-Gate, who told him, Warrants were out againſt them; and they had as good go out to Kenſington, and do the Work at once, take off the Spark, and then they ſhould be quiet, and have the King peaceably here.

Boyſe's Evidence. Mr. Boyſe depoſed, That he came from France the beginning of June laſt, and that on the 14th of February, going to viſit King the Priſoner, he told him there was a great Undertaking in hand; and asked him, if he would make one, and he would provide him a Horſe, and give him (the Witneſs) Twenty Shillings to buy Boots; but he never told him the Deſign was to take off the King, only ordered him to be ready, and not to be out of the Way; and ſaid that Sir George Barclay was to command the Party; and there were about Forty, or Five and Forty, concerned in the Deſign.

Charnock's Defence. Capt. Charnock, in his Defence, ſaid, He ſuppoſed the Evidence of what was done laſt Year was nothing to the Purpoſe, there being nothing mentioned, in the Indictment, of the laſt Year.

But the Court obſerved that it was ſaid in the Indictment, Divers Days and Times, as well before as after; and therefore the Indictment comprehended what was done laſt Year as well as this: Nor were the Witneſſes, or the King's Counſel, tied up either to the particular Time or Place mentioned in the Indictment, ſo it was within the County, and before the Indictment preferred. All that was to be regarded was, that no Evidence was admitted of any other Species of Treaſon, than was contained in the Indictment. 1695. 8 W. 3.

Then Mr. Charnock objected, that Porter was not a legal Witneſs, having made himſelf a Criminal, and forfeited his Life by his own Confeſſion; and now hoped, by ſwearing againſt others, and taking away their Lives, to ſave his own, which muſt affect the Credibility of his Teſtimony. If he was allowed to be a legal Witneſs, he could not be a good one. Objections to Porter's Evidence.

The Court anſwered, That not only in Treaſon, but in Robery and Felony, the Parties were ever allowed to be good Witneſſes againſt their Accomplices.

Mr. Charnock continued his Defence, and obſerved, as to Capt. Porter's Evidence, that he acknowledged, he (the Priſoner) had never ſeen the Commiſſion from King James; and that, though he teſtified they were to command a Party, he did not ſay which Men were to be of it; and it was not to be ſuppoſed, when the Deſign was ſo near being put in Execution, it ſhould not be known who were to engage in it: And though Porter ſaid he ſent him a Liſt of Names written with his own Hand, he did not ſay he ſaw him write it; and Similitude of Hands was never thought to be good Proof in Criminal Caſes: Nor was there any Proof of their providing Arms or Horſes, or any other Overt Act of this bloody Aſſaſſination, which he confeſſed he contrived and carried on himſelf. King's Defence.

That the Evidence of Mr. De la Rue was but Hear-ſay; and even that very improbable; particularly the Scheme of carrying the Prince of Orange alive into France. How was it poſſible they ſhould carry him off to Sea? They muſt have been Madmen to have entertained ſuch a Chimæra. That Captain Porter and De la Rue contradicted one another alſo in their Evidence. Captain Porter ſaid, they were to attack the Guards together; and the other ſaid, that he (the Priſoner) was to attack the King with Sir George Barclay. That De la Rue did not ſay he talked to him about killing the King, but in general of the Affair; and, indeed, that it appeared De la Rue was ſet to trepan him, which ſhews he bore him Malice; and cited Sir Robert Atkyns, who held, That he that acknowledged himſelf to be Partaker of the Crime, muſt be a bad Man, eſpecially if it appeared the Witneſs had trepaned the Priſoner. Shall ſuch a one (ſays Sir Robert) be a credible Witneſs, and believed againſt the Priſoner? God forbid!

That the Evidence of Pendergraſs againſt him conſiſted of Hear-ſay alſo. And as to Bertham's Evidence, it was very improbable that this Matter, which was ſo great a Secret, he ſhould communicate to a private Trooper: Nor could any body tell what to make of thoſe Words, Take off the Spark. He did not ſay he talked to him of killing the King, but only that he might ride out and take the Air; and there he ſhould meet with his Acquaintance.

He

He hoped, therefore, the Court would be of Opinion, that the Evidence produced againſt him was frivolous and weak; and that, if it were all true, it was only Diſcourſe. They were forced to ſupply in Words what was wanting in Fact. He did inſiſt upon it, there was not plain and manifeſt Proof, but only Preſumptions, and deſired the Judges would tell the Jury plainly, what was legal Evidence, and what was not; and then what was ſufficient Proof of any one Overt Act or Species of Treaſon: That they would not leave it to the Apprehenſion of the Jury, but inform them truly, what was legal Evidence, and what of that Sort had been given at this Trial. He added, That this was a ſtrange Sort of Conſpiracy: Forty Men only to commit this Fact on the King in his Coach, and to attack the Guards. Could it be ſuppoſed that any Man, in his Senſes, would attempt ſuch a Thing, without any Regard to his own Security? The Guards were at leaſt treble the Number, and much better appointed and provided: And that Forty ſhould attack treble their Number, in divided Bodies, were to mix Fancy and Madneſs with Reſolution; eſpecially when they had no Caſtle or Fortreſs to fly to, and none to ſupport and aſſiſt them: They ought to be confined to Bedlam rather than Newgate, if they were capable of ſuch Raſhneſs and Folly.

King's Defence.

Then Mr. King entered upon his Defence, and demanded of Capt. Porter, If there was any thing mentioned of killing the King, when they rode out to view the Ground? To which Porter anſwered, That the Day before they went to view the Ground, they dined together at the Nag's-Head, and King asked if he (the Witneſs) was to meet Knightley, and view the Ground, in order to ſettling the Deſign which was then talked of and conſulted about: And Capt. King deſired to go with them; and they lay at Knightsbridge: And while they were viewing the Ground, they diſcourſed of the Situation of the Place; and King did not approve of the Place on this Side the Water, but liked the Ambuſcade better, which was to have been on the other Side the Water.

King replied, he did, indeed, go abroad with Capt. Porter and Mr. Knightly, but it was merely to take the Air; and obſerved, as to Mr. De la Rue's Teſtimony, that he did not ſay he ever told him of a Deſign to deſtroy the King: And Mr. Pendergraſs ſaid, they diſcourſed of the Matter, but did not explain what that Matter was; nor did Boyſe charge him with a Deſign of killing the King: And as to what was Treaſon, and what was Evidence of it, he left it to the Court to inform the Jury.

Keyes's Defence.

Keyes the Trumpeter being ordered to enter upon his Defence, ſaid, he was Servant to Mr. Porter, who was now become a Witneſs againſt him; and that he did nothing but by his Orders and Perſuaſion.

The Chief Juſtice told him, the Commands of his Maſter could not excuſe his having committed High Treaſon: It was proved he had bought Horſes, and was acquainted with the Deſign, and engaged in it.

Keyes replied, he knew nothing of it; his Maſter was pleaſed to jeſt with him ſome Times, and he might ſay Things he did not regard. 1695. 8 W. 3.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

Then the Chief Juſtice directed the Jury, and ſaid, It was very true, as Mr. Charnock had obſerved, that bare Words were not Treaſon in ſome Caſes: Looſe Words, ſpoken without any relation to any Act or Deſign, were not Treaſon, or an Overt Act of it; bnt Arguments and Words of Perſuaſion, to engage another in ſuch a Deſign or Reſolution, and directing or propoſing Means to effect it, were Overt Acts of High-Treaſon: It was the Imagination, the compaſſing, and deſigning the Death of the King that was the Treaſon; there was no Way of diſcovering thoſe Compaſſings and Imaginations, but by ſome External Act that manifeſted ſuch Intention or Purpoſe; and any Thing that was a Manifeſtation of ſuch a Deſign was an Overt Act: And here had been proved ſeveral Meetings and Conſultations, and Propoſals at thoſe Meetings, about the Ways and Methods for bringing about the Deſign of Aſſaſſination. And it was never yet doubted, but to meet and conſult to kill the King, was an Overt Act of High-Treaſon; and Mr. Charnock's endeavouring to engage Bertham in the Enterprize was another Overt Act.

As to that Objection to the Credibility of the Witneſſes, That they had acknowledged themſelves involved in the ſame Crimes, they were however legal Witneſſes; but their Credit in this, as in all other Caſes, was left to the Jury: That ſuch Evidence had been always allowed; and unleſs the Accomplices were admitted to be Witneſſes, Governments could never be ſecure againſt ſuch villainous Enterprizes.

All three convicted,

The Jury, withdrawing for half an Hour to conſider of the Evidence, brought in all the three Priſoners GUILTY; and then the Court adjourned.

In the Afternoon the Priſoners were brought into Court again, and it being demanded of them ſeverally, What they could ſay, why Judgment ſhould not be pronounced againſt them? Mr. Charnock again teſtified, They ought to have had Counſel and a Copy of the Indictment, &c. according to the late Act: He alſo made ſome trivial Objections to the Latin of the Indictment, which being overruled, the uſual Sentence in Caſes of High-Treaſon was pronounced, and they were all executed at Tyburn, on Wedneſday the 18th of March 1695-6. when they left the following Papers with the Sheriffs.

condemned,

and Executed.

Mr. Charnock's Paper.

The Papers left with the Sheriffs.

THAT I might avoid Diſtractions, and be compoſed as much as is poſſible at the Time of my Execution, I thought it much more proper to communicate this to the Sheriffs, than to give my ſelf the Uneaſineſs of ſpeaking, leaving it to them to publiſh (if they ſhould think convenient) for the Satisfaction of the World; and in what I have to ſay, I have taken as much Care as I could to be

1695. 8 W. 3.

be ſhort, that I might not loſe Time in my greateſt Concern.

As concerning an Invaſion intended by King James upon England, there was certain Intelligence of it from abroad, I preſume every Body was ſatisfied; and to the facilitating of which, I own that my ſelf and ſome others did agree upon the Undertaking to attack the Prince of Orange and his Guards, for which I am now to ſuffer: But I think my ſelf obliged, by all the Ties imaginable, both of Conſcience and Honour, to declare, that as for any Order or Commiſſion of King James's, for aſſaſſinating the Prince of Orange, I never ſaw nor knew of any; but have had frequent Aſſurances of his having rejected ſuch Propoſals when they have been offered.

I confeſs, I did hear that there was a Commiſſion arrived for levying War; and which was natural to believe, if the King was in ſuch a Readineſs to come over as was reported; but if there was any ſuch Authority as that, I declare I never ſaw it.

As to what regards the Body of the Roman Catholicks, I muſt do them this Juſtice, and which I dare be poſitive in, that they had no manner of Knowledge of this Deſign: Nor do I believe it was communicated to any other Party of ſuch as are reputed the King's Friends; but carried on merely by a ſmall Number, without the Advice, Conſent, or Privity of any Parties whatſoever.

I ask Forgiveneſs of all the World for what Offences or Injuries I have done to them; and I am (I bleſs Almighty God) in perfect Charity with all Mankind.

Robert Charnock.

Mr. King's Paper.

I AM now within a few Moments of Eternity, brought to this Place by the juſt Hand of God, in Puniſhment of all my Crimes; but particularly of that of which I have been lately arraigned, and for which I ſtand here condemned; but I hope that Goodneſs of God, which has given me a Senſe of my Wickedneſs, will accept my Repentance, and ſhew Mercy on me; which I hope to obtain through the Paſſion and Merits of my Redeemer, upon whom I entirely caſt my ſelf. 1695. 8 W. 3.

And that I may find his Mercy, I think my ſelf obliged to do Juſtice to my Neighbour, that ſo none may ſuffer wrongfully on my Account: And therefore, as I am ſoon to anſwer the Truth of what I ſay before the Tribunal of God,

Firſt, I declare, That I never ſaw any Order or Commiſſion for King James's promoting the Aſſaſſination for which I am condemned, neither do I know of any ſuch Order or Commiſſion.

Secondly, That this Deſign was not undertaken with any general Knowledge or Approbation of any Body of Men, either Catholick or Proteſtant.

Laſtly, That I did not engage in it on Preſumption of any King-killing Principles that could juſtify ſuch an Undertaking; but was drawn into it by my own Raſhneſs and Paſſion; for which, and all other Sins, I heartily beſeech God to forgive me.

And I hope that ſuch who think the Misfortune of their Impriſonment or Trouble is derived from my having been engaged in this Enterprize; or ſuch to whom it has any ways given Scandal, that they will admit me to their Pardon, as I freely and heartily forgive all Mankind. In this Diſpoſition of a ſincere Repentance, and true Charity, I commend my Soul into the Hands of God, and hope to find Mercy from him: And for this I beg all your Prayers.

Edward King.

Mr. Keyes's Paper.

I AM going to appear before the living God: I truſt in his Mercy that he will forgive all my Sins committed to this laſt Moment of my Life. God is juſt in all his Judgments, and I accept of this Death as the Puniſhment of my Iniquities. I forgive all my Enemies, and hope through a hearty Repentance, and the Merits of my Saviour, to obtain Mercy.

HaveMe rcy on me, O Father of Mercy, and through thy only Son forgive me all my Sins! Thomas Keyes.

Sir John Freind's Trial.

The Trial of Sir JOHN FREIND, Knight, for High-Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 23d of March 1695-6. 8 W. 3.

1695. 8 W. 3.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the ſaid Sir John Freind with High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King, and adhering to his Enemies: And that the ſaid Sir John Freind, in Proſecution of his ſaid Treaſons, did, on the firſt Day of July in the Seventh Year of his preſent Majeſty, and divers other Days and Times, during the preſent War with France, conſult with Robert Charnock, and divers other Traitors, how to procure Forces from the French King to invade the Kingdom, and to levy Forces within the Kingdom to join the Invaders: And that he did ſend the ſaid Robert Charnock to France, to propoſe to the late King James the obtaining the ſaid Forces of the French King: And that the ſaid Sir John Freind did traitorouſly accept a Commiſſion from the ſaid King James, to be a Colonel of Horſe of the Forces intended to be raiſed within 1695. 8 W. 3. within this Kingdom: And that the ſaid Sir John actually raiſed, liſted, and kept in Pay, divers Officers and Soldiers, in order to join the French King's Forces on the intended Invaſion; and bought up, and provided Horſes and Arms for them; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

The King's Evidence being called, and Captain George Porter ſworn, Sir John Freind demanded, if he was a Proteſtant or a Papiſt? But the Court told him, the Witneſs was not bound to anſwer that Queſtion; becauſe it might ſubject him to a Penalty.

Porter's Evidence.

Then Captain Porter depoſed, That about the latter End of May, or the Beginning of June, then laſt paſſed, the Conſpirators had two Meetings; the firſt at the King's-Head in Leaden-Hall-Street, and the other at Mrs. Mountjoy's in St. James's-Street: At the firſt Meeting were preſent my Lord Montgomery, my Lord Aylesbury, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Sir John Fenwick, Mr. Cook, Captain Charnock, and himſelf; and Mr. Goodman came in after Dinner: At theſe Meetings they conſulted and agreed to ſend Charnock to France to King James, to deſire him to borrow of the French King Ten Thouſand Men, to make a Deſcent in England; and that Charnock ſaid, he did not care to go on a fooliſh Errand; and therefore deſired to know, what King James might expect from them. Whereupon they ſaid, he might aſſure the King whenever they had Notice of his Landing, they would join him with a Body of Two Thouſand Horſe, and every one of them obliged himſelf to bring his Quota.

That he ſaw Charnock after he came back from France, and he told him (this Witneſs), That King James thanked them for their Kindneſs; but the French King could not ſpare ſo many Men that Year: That he (the Witneſs) was at another Meeting at the Nag's-Head in St. James's-Street, with Sir George Barclay, Sir John Freind, Sir William Perkins, Mr. Ferguſon, and Captain Charnock; and Harriſon a Popiſh Prieſt came in after Dinner, and ſome of them whiſpered together; whereupon Sir John Freind ſaid, Is there any Thing behind the Curtain? If there be, I am not fairly dealt withal; I will proceed no further.

Blair's Evidence.

Captain Brice Blair depoſed, That about two Years before, Sir John Freind ſhewed him a Commiſſion from the late King James, conſtituting him a Colonel of Horſe; and that Sir John promiſed him (the Witneſs), that he ſhould be his Lieutenant Colonel; and he ſaw ſeveral Letters in Sir John's Hands, that came from my Lord Melford, and Secretary Caroll, who were with King James; and that Sir John appointed ſeveral other Officers of his Regiment: That he (the Witneſs) liſted ſeveral Men thereupon, and received ſeveral Sums of Money of Sir John Freind, or of Mr. Piggott by his Order, to ſpend on them; the laſt five Pounds was paid by Piggott, in the Preſence of Sir John Freind, at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe; for Piggott had received Money of King James to repay Sir John Freind what he had advanced, for facilitating Colonel Parker's Eſcape out of the Tower; and Sir John Freind told this Witneſs he had advanced an Hundred Pounds for that Service. 1695. 8 W. 3.

That he (the Witneſs) telling Sir John of the Conſpiracy againſt the Prince of Orange's Life, he anſwered, he had heard of it; and was afraid it would ruin the King's Affairs: That at another Time Sir John ſaid, he would do any Thing till the Thoulon Fleet had joined the Breſt Fleet; and that he adviſed the Witneſs to ſculk about Town, and ſaid he would keep himſelf private, leſt they ſhould be taken up at that Time.

Then Blair produced a Letter, wherein Sir John deſired him to meet him at Jonathan's Coffee-Houſe; and depoſed, that when he met Sir John, in Purſuance of that Letter, he received an Order for the 20*l.* mentioned in it.

The Court demanding, what he received the Money for? Blair anſwered, It was to drink with the Men that were to ſerve in his Regiment, to cheriſh them, and keep them together.

Here Sir John Freind ſaid, That Blair was recommended to him for a very honeſt Man, and came to him ſeveral Times, telling him his Neceſſities were very great; ſaid he was ready to ſtarve, and had a great Charge, and begged for God's Sake he would beſtow ſomething on him, to relieve his Neceſſities: And Sir John acknowledged he had given him Money ſeveral Times; but nexer for any other Uſe but as Charity, and deſired he would declare the Truth, if he had not ſeveral Times written theſe Words to him, I am ready to ſtarve, and beg you will relieve my Neceſſities.

Blair ſaid, he did acknowledge Sir John had given him Charity; but he had ſpent ſo much Money in his Buſineſs, as reduced him to the Want of it; it had coſt him many a Pound more than he had of him: Adding, that he had brought in ſeveral Officers to Sir John, particularly Captain Fiſher, Captain Symons, Captain Ridley, and Mr. Richardſon, and he promiſed Fiſher in his Hearing, he ſhould be his eldeſt Captain, upon Condition he would bring in a Troop.

Sir John Freind's Defence.

Then Sir John Freind entered upon his Defence, and ſaid, he owned he was at the Meeting at the King's-Head in Leaden-Hall-ſtreet; but there was nothing ſpoken of the Government, or of raiſing Men; that the Witneſſes were Papiſts, and not legal Witneſſes againſt Proteſtants; and called Mr. Courtney as a Witneſs for him, who teſtified, That he was a Priſoner in the Gate-houſe with Captain Blair, who declared before him, and ſeveral more, that he knew nothing of a Plot; and that reading the Flying-Poſt to him, wherein it was ſaid, He was to be Lieutenant Colonel to Sir John Freind, and had received a great deal of Subſiſtence Money for the Regiment; Blair ſaid, he knew nothing of any Regiment or Commiſſion: And that at another Time he appeared in an Agony, and under great Remorſe of Conſcience; becauſe he was to be an Evidence againſt Sir John Freind; and his Wife ſaid, he would not do it, but to ſave his own Life. Other Witneſſes teſtified, that that both Porter and Blair were reputed Roman Catholicks: And Witneſſes appeared to teſtify, That Sir John Freind was a Proteſtant, and had a fair Character; and particularly Mr. Lupton, Curate of Hackney, who ſaid, he officiated as Chaplain in Sir John's Houſe; and that after the Revolution he uſed to pray for King William; and he had often heard him ſay, Though he could not comply with the preſent Government, he would live peaceably under it, and never be concerned in a Plot againſt it. Mr. Hoadly (Father of the preſent Biſhop of Wincheſter) alſo depoſed, That Sir John was a good Proteſtant, and uſed to expreſs himſelf with great Deteſtation againſt King-killing, and Aſſaſſinating Crowned Heads.

Sir John then inſiſted, That a Conſultation to levy War was not Treaſon; and that the being at a Treaſonable Conſult was but Miſpriſion of Treaſon; and thereupon the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. was read; but theſe Points were over-ruled againſt him; and the Lord C. Juſtice Holt, in ſumming up the Evidence, obſerved, That this Statute contained divers Species, as, 1. The Compaſſing the Death of the King; and, 2. Levying War: But a bare Conſpiracy, or Deſign to levy War, was not within this Law againſt Treaſon: But if the Deſign or Conſpiracy be either to kill the King, or to depoſe or impriſon him, or to put any Force or Reſtraint upon him; and the Way propoſed to effect any of theſe is by levying War; there the Conſultation and Conſpiracy to levy War is High Treaſon, though no War be actually levied: For ſuch Conſultations and Conſpiracies are Overt Acts, proving the deſigning or compaſſing the Death of the King, which was the firſt Treaſon ſpecified in the Statute of 25 Edw. 3. That where a Man deſigned the Death, Depoſition or Deſtruction, of the King, and, purſuant to that Deſign, agreed and conſulted to levy War; that this ſhould not be High Treaſon unleſs a War was actually levied: This was a very ſtrange Doctrine: A War may be levied, indeed, without any Deſign upon the King's Perſon; which, if actually levied, however, is High Treaſon; but a bare Deſign to levy ſuch a War was not Treaſon: As for Example, the Riſing in Arms to pull down all Encloſures, to expel Strangers, or to pull down Bawdy-houſes, without Authority, was levying War and Treaſon: But the bare purpoſing and deſigning to Riſe in Arms for ſuch Purpoſes, was not Treaſon. If Perſons aſſembled themſelves alſo, and acted with Force in Oppoſition to ſome particular Law which they thought inconvenient, and hoped thereby to get it repealed, this was levying War and Treaſon: But the purpoſing and deſigning it was not ſo. When Men endeavoured, in great Numbers, with Force, to procure ſome Reformation in the Church or State, without purſuing the Methods of Law, That was a levying War, and Treaſon within the Statute; but the Purpoſing and Deſigning it was not ſo. But if there was a Purpoſe to deſtroy the King, to depoſe him from his Throne, to reſtrain him (in the Exerciſe of his Power), or to put any Force upon him, and it was propoſed or deſigned to effect any of theſe by War; ſuch a Conſpiracy or Conſultation to levy War, for bringing any ſuch Deſigns to paſs, was an Overt Act of High Treaſon.

The Chief Juſtice ſums up the Evidence.

1695. 8 W. 3.

Then the Jury withdrew, and returning half an Hour afterwards, brought in the Priſoner GUILTY.

Sir John Freind convicted.

See the Sentence and Execution after the next Trial.

The Trial of Sir WILLIAM PERKINS, Knt. for High Treaſon, at the Old-Baily, London, on the 24th of March 1695. 8 W. III.

1695. 8 W. 3.

Sir William Perkins's Trial.

SIR William, at his Arraignment, complained that a Cheſt of Plate, that was ſent him by his Wife, was ſeized by the Sheriff: To which Mr. Sheriff Buckingham anſwered, it was lodged at Mr. Secretary Trumball's Office; and when they took it from thence they gave a Receipt to return it thither: But the Chief Juſtice ſaid, He muſt have the Plate for his Subſiſtence in Priſon; and ſome Care ſhould be taken about it.

The Priſoner's Plate ſeized.

The Indictment charges the ſaid Sir William Perkins with compaſſing the Death of the King, and adhering to the King's Enemies; and that in Proſecution of his ſaid Treaſons, he did, on the 1ſt Day of July, in the 7th Year of the King, in the Pariſh of St. Paul Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, together with Robert Charnock, and other falſe Traitors, meet and conſult how to procure Forces from the French King, and to raiſe a Rebellion in his Kingdom, and join the ſaid Forces at their Landing: And that they did conſult and agree to ſend the ſaid Robert Charnock into France, to the late King James, to deſire him to procure Forces of the ſaid French King, for the ſaid intended Invaſion: And that the ſaid Sir William Perkins, to facilitate the ſaid Invaſion, did afterwards, on the 10th of February, in the Year aforeſaid, and in the Pariſh and County aforeſaid, conſult and agree with the ſaid Robert Charnock, and other Traitors, to aſſaſſinate his preſent Majeſty; and that Forty Horſemen, with Arms, &c. ſhould form an Ambuſcade for that Purpoſe. And that the ſaid Sir William did undertake, for his Part, to provide five of the Horſes to be employed in that Enterprize; and did buy Horſes and Arms,

Arms, and liſt Men, in order to raiſe a Rebellion, and join the ſaid French King's Forces, as ſoon as the ſaid Aſſaſſination and Murder of the King ſhould be committed; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

Deſires the Benefit of the late Act, and his Trial might be put off.

Sir William having pleaded Not Guilty, deſired be might have Counſel, according to the late Act; for that Act ſaid, This was juſt and reaſonable: And what would be juſt and reaſonable To-morrow, was ſo To-day; and if convenient Notice had been given him of his Trial, he ſhould have had the Benefit of the Act: That no one could ever want the Advantage of that Statute for the future, or ſuffer by ſuch Want, but himſelf; which was a particular Hardſhip on him: And deſired that the Trial might be put off but one Day, becauſe ſome of his Witneſſes were abſent, whoſe Names he would give in.

Reſt denied.

But the Chief Juſtice would give no further Time, and ordered the Jury to be ſworn, of whom the Priſoner challenged two, becauſe they were the King's Servants; but was told by the Chief Juſtice, This was no good Cauſe of Challenge. He afterwards challenged 30 more of the Pannel peremptorily.

Porter's Evidence.

Then the King's Witneſſes were called; and firſt Captain Porter was ſworn, who teſtified, That Sir William Perkins dined with Charnock, and the reſt of the Conſpirators, mentioned in the former Trial, at the King's-Head in Leadenhall-ſtreet; and afterwards met them at Mrs. Mountjoy's in St. James's-ſtreet; and that it was reſolved at both Places to ſend Mr. Charnock to France, to concert Meaſures with King James, and the French King, for ſending over Ten Thouſand Men, and to aſſure them, the Conſpirators would join them with Two Thouſand Horſe on their landing.

That he met Mr Charnock after his Return, who told him, the French King could not ſpare ſo many Men at that Time; and that he had acquainted the Lord Aylesbury, and Sir William Perkins, with the Anſwer he brought.

Capt Porter teſtified further, That he was at ſeveral Conſultations with Sir George Barclay, Mr. Charnock, Sir William Perkins, and other Conſpirators, at the Globe in Hatton-Garden, at the Nag's-Head in Covent-Garden, and at the Sun in the Strand, where it was debated, how they ſhould aſſaſſinate the King, as he came from Richmond after Hunting. That Sir George Barclay ſaid, He had received 800 l. from King James's Secretary, to buy Horſes for the Enterprize; and they agreed that Forty Horſe ſhould be the Number, of which Sir George Barclay was to furniſh Twenty, with Men, Arms, and all Accoutrements. That he (the Witneſs) promiſed to bring ſeven or eight Horſes: Sir William Perkins engaged to bring five, whereof three were to be mounted with his own Men, and the other two by Men the Witneſs was to bring: That he (Porter) asked Sir William Perkins if he had ſeen the Commiſſion, and he ſaid he had; and that, becauſe King James would not truſt any of his Miniſters, it was written with his own Hand; and the Purport of it was, For levying War on the Perſon of the Prince of Orange (the King.)

1695. 8 W. 3.

That the Evening after they had viewed the Ground, the Conſpirators met at the Nag's-Head, among whom were Sir George Barclay, Mr. Charnock, and Sir William Perkins; and, upon the Report of the Witneſs, and the reſt that viewed it, it was reſolved, the Aſſaſſination ſhould be on this Side the Water, in the Lane between Brentford and Turnham-Green; and Saturday the 15th of February was fixed for the Execution of it: But the King not going abroad that Day, Saturday the 22d was reſolved on; and two Men were poſted at Kenſington to give Notice of the King's going out. That on the Friday before the 22d, Sir George Barclay, Capt. Charnock, Sir William Perkins, and this Witneſs (Porter) met at the Sun Tavern in the Strand; and Sir George Barclay ſaid, He was afraid the Thing was diſcovered; but the Witneſs anſwered, If it had, they ſhould not have been in that Houſe at that Time: And Sir George replied, Let us go on and try another Day: And Sir William Perkins being asked if his Horſes were come to Town, he ſaid, they were to come that Night: And the Witneſs ſaying, Two of his were not fit for Service, Sir William anſwered, He would ſend to Mr. Lewis, the Earl of Feverſham's Gentleman, for two more; and accordingly ſent him two the next Morning, and let him know, Mr. Lewis could furniſh two or three more. That the Witneſs did not ſee Sir William Perkins on Saturday the 22d, but he (the Witneſs) met ſome of the Conſpirators, who were to aſſiſt in the Enterprize; and Notice was brought them firſt, that the Guards were gone abroad, and the King would go out; at which they were all glad; but afterwards News was brought them that the King did not go out; whereupon, they concluded the Thing was diſcovered; and he (Porter) went out of Town.

Here one of the Jurymen asked Porter, If there was any Diſcourſe of the Aſſaſſination in the Preſence of Sir William Perkins, and what he ſaid to it?

Porter anſwered, He could not tell exactly what he ſaid; but only that Sir William agreed to it, and was to furniſh five Horſes for it; and ſaid it was neceſſary to be done, for it would facilitate the bringing the King in; though he could not engage himſelf perſonally in it, becauſe he had a Regiment to look after.

Sweet's Evidence.

Then Abraham Sweet was ſworn, and teſtified, That about Chriſtmas laſt Sir William Perkins told him, he expected King James's landing: He had the King's Word for it: His own Troops was compoſed of Old Soldiers; and that there were ſome Gentlemen who were Captains, and old Officers, that would ſerve as Voluntiers under him; and that theſe Words were ſpoken at Sir William's Houſe in Hertfordſhire.

That Sir William alſo made a Journey into Leiceſterſhire, and at his Return, told this Witneſs that he had met his Friends, and the Weſt was as well inclined to the King's Intereſt as the North: That about the 11th of February

Sir

Sir William ſent for him (this Witneſs) to come to Town, and he came to Sir William's Lodgings in Norfolk-Street: When he told him the Buſineſs he deſigned for him, he did not think he ſhould do, becauſe of his Family; but ordered him (the Witneſs) to ſend him up three of his ſtrongeſt Horſes out of the Country. That the Witneſs being ordered to come to Town again, Sir William then asked him, If he had made Proviſion for his Family? and when he anſwered No, Sir William asked him, Why he came up then? and he dined that Day with Sir William, Mr. Charnock, and one Chambers, who came that Morning from Kenſington, who ſaid William kept as cloſe as as a Fox.

Eubank's Evidence.

Eubank, Sir William's Groom, teſtified, That in January laſt, he went with his Maſter to Leiceſter, and that Captain Scudamore went with them, and one Yarborough, and a Gentleman in Black, who ſaid they came out of Yorkſhire, met them at Leiceſter.

That on Friday the 14th of February laſt, he brought up three Horſes to the George in Holbourn, and acquainting his Maſter Sir William with it, he ſaid he thought he ſhould go Home that Night, but did not go down till the Monday following, when Mr. Holmes went him: That the Friday following they came to Town again, with four Horſes furniſhed with Piſtols; and the next Morning the Witneſs was ſent to Kenſington to one Mr. Brown, who belonged to the Kitchen, to tell him he came from a Gentleman who lay at a Confectioner's againſt Gray's-Inn in Holbourn, and his Anſwer was, he had no Buſineſs to ſend; but wrote in the Witneſſes Almanack, he would come to Town about Ten o'Clock, which the Witneſs ſhewed to the Gentleman at the Confectioner's, a luſty, black Man, who ſpoke broad Scotch (Sir George Barclay), who bid the Witneſs tell his Maſter, he would be at his Chamber ready for him; and that his Maſter thereupon bid the Witneſs make ready the Horſes, for he deſigned to go Home by and by; but he did not come to the Inn till three or four in the Afternoon; when Mr. Lewis, and the Lord Feverſham's Gentleman came with him, and asked how many Saddles had been ſent in there, ſaying there ſhould have been Twenty-four in all, but there was but Twenty-two, and two of the Saddles were ſent to two Gentlemen whoſe Horſes ſtood at the George-Inn.

That the Witneſs was then ſent down into the Country, and on Monday received a Letter from his Maſter, to go to his Servant Richard Evans, at Sir William's Houſe in Warwickſhire, with a Letter, which he did; and when Evans had read the Letter, they went to fetch ſix Boxes Home, that were at a Tradeſman's Houſe about two Miles off, and returning to his Maſter's Houſe with the Boxes in a Waggon, at ten or eleven o'Clock at Night, they buried the Boxes in the Garden; but he did not know what was in them, only Evans ſaid, they were precious Goods.

Hipwell's Evidence.

Thomas Hipwell teſtified, That on Aſh-Wedneſday laſt, about ſeven in the Evening, Richard Evans, and Sir William Perkins's Tenant, came with a Waggon to his Maſter's, Mr. Haywood's, and carried away ſix or eight Boxes. 1695. 8 W. 3

Haywood's Evidence.

Haywood depoſed, That Mr. Charnock married his Siſter, and that Sir William's Man brought him a Letter, about Michaelmas laſt, from Mr. Charnock, to deſire he might lodge the Boxes abovementioned at his Houſe, and that he took them in upon his Brother Charnock's Account: And they were fetched away upon Aſh-Wedneſday laſt, as the former Witneſs depoſed.

Whetſtone's Evidence.

Whetſtone, Sir William's Tenant teſtified, That he caaried the ſaid Boxes in his Waggon from Mr. Haywood's, to Sir William's Houſe, on Aſh-Wedneſday, in the Night-time, the Servant deſiring it might be done in the Night, and they were put into the Ground by the Side of the Garden-Wall, where he afterwards ſaw them dug up, and there were Arms in them.

Watts's Evidence.

Thomas Watts the Conſtable, depoſed, That he found ſeveral Boxes of Arms hidden underground in Sir William Perkins's Garden (viz.) four dozen of broad two-edged Swords without Hilts, and a Box of Hilts, which he ſuppoſed were prepared for them, Thirty-two Carbines, and Twenty-five brace of Piſtols.

Freeman's Evidence.

Freeman, the Hoſtler of the George, teſtified, That Sir William had often three or four Horſes ſtood at that Inn, and in the Week before the Plot was diſcovered, there came in five on the Friday Night; four with Holſters and and Piſtols, and a led Mare; and there were two pair of Jack-boots wrapped up in a Horſe-cloth; and they went away again about Saturday Noon.

That there were three other good Horſes ſtood at the George-Inn a Week; and Sir William's Groom ſaid he had orders to ſee them fed, but he did not know whoſe they were: That the Horſes were generally about fourteen Hands high, there were no large ſized Horſes amongſt them, and thoſe of Sir William's he had had a great while.

Turton's Evidence.

Turton, the Landlord of the George-Inn, depoſed, That the laſt Time Sir William Perkins came to his Inn, was the Friday before the Plot broke out, when he came with four or five Horſes, and ordered his Groom to get them ready againſt Saturday Morning; and on Saturday two Gentlemen rode out with two of them, and returning about three Hours afterwards, the Horſes were all of a Sweat, they had rid hard, and in the Afternoon all the Horſes went out of Town. That two or three of the Horſes which came up on Friday had Holſters, and there were four or five pair of Horſe Piſtols.

Sir William demanding if he did not always ride with Piſtols, Turton anſwered, he ſeldom came without two or three Pair, when he had Servants; and that he had known Sir William come up with more Horſes at other Times: He had uſed his Houſe four or five Years.

Sir Wm. Perkins's Defence.

Sir William Perkins, in his Defence, ſaid, That there was but one Witneſs to any one Overt Act, and the Law required two; and as to his Arms, the Witneſſes did not ſay for what Purpoſe they were provided; and, indeed, he found them in his Houſe when he came came to his Eſtate, as he could have proved, if he had been allowed Time to ſend for his Witneſſes. He ordered them to be buried, becauſe it was a troubleſome Time, and they might have given ſome Cauſe of Suſpicion, as he was known to be affected to King James: However, the having Arms was no Treaſon. As to the Horſes, he had not bought one theſe two Years, and travelled no otherwiſe than he uſed to do; beſides, they were very little Horſes, (Pads) not fit for the Service they were preſumed to be for. He hoped his Life ſhould not be taken away without Proof, and the Law ſtrained to deſtroy him. Levying War was one Species of Treaſon, and aſſaſſination, or Conſpiracy againſt the King's Life, was another. That his Lordſhip had known him many Years, and that his Education was not to War, but the Gown: He had always lived peaceably, and now, in his old Age, was grown lame in his Hands and Feet, by the Gout: It could not therefore be ſuppoſed he ſhould be engaged in ſuch a Buſineſs as this.

That it did not appear he had a Troop; if he had, where were they? There was not one Perſon proved to be liſted, or named: And if he had fooliſhly bragged he had a Troop, when in Reality he had none, this was not Treaſon: He hoped he ſhould not be interpreted out of his Life: And inſiſted again, That the Riſing in Arms and Aſſaſſination were different Treaſons: Depoſing the King was one Thing, and the conſpiring his Death, another. They had ſeen a King depoſed, and yet he was alive; and there ought to be two Witneſſes to each Species of Treaſon. And laſtly, he obſerved, that Capt. Porter became a Witneſs againſt him to ſave his own Life, and therefore ought not to be credited; and he was the only poſitive Witneſs to either of the Treaſons; all the reſt was but Preſumption.

The Chief Juſtice's Directions to the Jury.

The Chief Juſtice, in ſumming up the Evidence, obſerved, That the Deſign of Sir William Perkins was the Reſtoring of King James; and, in order to that, the dethroning of King William: That one Way of their effecting this Deſign was, by aſſaſſinating King William; the other, by Invaſion and Rebellion: That the conſpiring to invade the Realm, or depoſe the King, were Overt-Acts of High Treaſon, and of the ſame Species of Treaſon as the deſigning to aſſaſſinate him; it was a compaſſing and imagining his Death: And of this there were other Witneſſes, beſides Porter; that he told Sweet, his Troop conſiſted of old Soldiers; that he bought thirty Saddles, went into Leiceſterſhire, and, at his Return, related, that the Weſt was as well inclined as the North: That he had provided great Quantities of Arms, and buried them juſt as the Plot broke out: The Horſes and Saddles alſo came to Town juſt at that Time: All which were Overt-Acts of his compaſſing the King's Death.

As to the Priſoner's Objection, That Sweet proved only Words, and Words were not Treaſon; Theſe were Words that related to Things; and Mens Diſcourſes and Words explained their Actions. An Action, indifferent in it ſelf, might be ſo explained by Words as to be unlawful: It was lawful for a Man to buy a Piſtol; but if it could be plainly proved, from his own Words or Speeches, that the Deſign of buying it was to uſe it againſt the Perſon or Life of the King, that would make it an Overt-Act, or a Manifeſtation of a Treaſonable Deſign. And therefore, when Sir William Perkins ſaid, that the late King would come; that he had a Troop that conſiſted of old Soldiers; and theſe Arms were provided in this Manner, there was ample Proof for what Purpoſe he had provided them: It was not at all probable he found them in his Houſe; and his going into the Weſt, and declaring at his Return that the Weſt were as well inclined to the King's Intereſt as the North (if by the King, he meant King James) was another Evidence of his Guilt.

Sir Wiliam Perkins convicted,

The Jury, after half an Hour's Receſs, found Sir William Perkins GUILTY: And Sir John Freind being brought into Court, Sentence was paſſed upon them both as Traitors: And they were executed at Tyburn on Friday the 3d of April, 1696, when they delivered the following Papers to the Sheriffs.

condemned, and executed.

Sir John Freind's Paper.

Sir John Freind's Paper, left with the Sheriffs.

KNOWING that I muſt immediately give an Account to GOD of all my Actions, and that I ought to be eſpecially careful of what I ſay in theſe laſt Moments, I do ſolemnly profeſs, that what I here deliver is from my very Soul, with all the Heartineſs and Sincerity of a dying Chriſtian.

The Cauſe I am brought hither to ſuffer for, I do firmly believe to be the Cauſe of God and true Religion, and, to the beſt and utmoſt of my Knowledge and Information, agreeable to the Laws of the Land, which, I have evermore heard, do require a firm Duty and Allegiance to our Sovereign; and that as no foreign, ſo neither any domeſtick Power can alienate our Allegiance: For it is altogether new and unintelligible to me, that the King's Subjects can depoſe and dethrone him on any Account, or conſtitute any that have not an immediate Right in his Place. We ought, I think, not to do this; and ſurely, when it is done to aſſiſt him in the Recovery of his Right, is juſtifiable, and our Duty. And, however things may ſeem at preſent, I do believe, I am ſure I heartily pray, that he ſhall be one Day reſtored to his Rightful Throne and Dominions.

As for any ſudden Deſcent of his Majeſty upon theſe his Dominions, in order to the Recovery of them, I declare I had no certain Knowledge of it; nor can I tell what Grounds there was to believe it; ſo little Reaſon had I to be in a preſent Preparation for it. I ſuppoſe it is not expected I ſhould here endeavour to clear my ſelf of the Aſſaſſination, which was not the thing alledged againſt me; however, it was mentioned, through what Means I know not: As it was inſinuated to my Diſadvantage, I forgive ſuch as were therein inſtrumental; and I do alſo, from the very Bottom of my Soul, freely forgive, and beg of God to do ſo too, ſuch as were any ways acceſſary towards the taking away my Life, which I really look upon to be their Misfortune more than mine.

I profeſs myſelf, and I thank God I am ſo, a Member of the Church of England; though, God knows a moſt unworthy and unprofitable Part of it; of that Church which ſuffers ſo much at preſent for a ſtrict Adherence to Loyalty, the Laws and Chriſtian Principles: For this I ſuffer, and for this I die.

Though I have a perfect Charity for People of all Profeſſions, and do heartily wiſh well, and would endeavour to do ſo, to all my Fellow-Subjects, of what Perſuaſion ſoever. And indeed I have met with a great deal of Uprightneſs and Sincerity among ſome People of very different Opinions in Religious Matters.

And I hope and deſire it may not be taken as an uncharitable Cenſure, or undue Reflection, that I objected to the Legality of Popiſh Evidence, being adviſed ſo to do for my better Security, upon the Foundation of a Statute-Law.

Having owned my ſelf a Member of the Church of England, I muſt take this Opportunity, and I do it for God's Glory, to apply my ſelf to you that are Royaliſts of that Church, and of the ſame Faith and Principles with my ſelf: And I beg of you, for God's Sake, and the Love of your Souls, to be very conſtant and ſerious in all religious Offices, and holy Duties of Divine Worſhip and Service, which I have too much neglected, as I own to my great Sorrow: Let no Excuſe, no Dangers, prevent or hinder you in theſe moſt neceſſary and ſerious Matters; and be, I beſeech you, very careful and circumſpect in all your Actions, Behaviour, and Converſation, as I earneſtly exhorted all that came to me.

I have, I thank God, a great deal of Satisfaction in my preſent Sufferings, and have found it ſo ever ſince I have been under them; and bleſſed be God, it doth continually increaſe upon me: And I do now lay down my Life with all Chearfulneſs and Reſignation, in ſure and certain Hope of a Reſurrection to eternal Life, through our Lord Jeſus Chriſt; through whoſe Merits I hope for the Pardon of my Sins, and the Salvation of my Soul.

And ſo, O Lord! into thy Hands I commend my Spirit; for thou haſt redeemed me, O Lord! thou God of Truth.

John Freind.

Sir William Perkins's Paper.

1696 8 W. 3.

Sir William Perkins's Paper.

IT hath not been my Cuſtom to uſe many Words, and I ſhall not be long upon this Occaſion, having Buſineſs of much greater Conſequence to employ my Thoughts upon. I thank God, I am now in a full Diſpoſition to Charity; and therefore ſhall make no Complaints, either of the Hardſhips of my Trial, or any other Rigours put upon me: However one Circumſtance I think my ſelf obliged to mention. It was ſworn againſt me by Mr. Porter, That I had owned to him, that I had ſeen and read a Commiſſion from the King to levy War upon the Perſon of the Prince of Orange. Now I muſt declare, that the Tenour of the King's Commiſſion, which I ſaw, was general, and directed to all his loving Subjects, to raiſe and levy War againſt the Prince of Orange and his Adherents; and to ſeize all Forts, Caſtles, &c. which I ſuppoſe may be a cuſtomary Form of giving Authority to make War; but, I muſt confeſs, I am not much acquainted with Matters of that Nature: But as for any Commiſſion particularly levelled againſt the Perſon of the Prince of Orange, I neither ſaw nor heard of any ſuch.

It is true, I was privy to the Deſign upon the Prince; but was not to act in it; and am fully ſatisfied that very few, or, none knew of it but thoſe who undertook to do it.

I freely acknowledge, and think it for my Honour to ſay, that I was entirely in the Intereſt of the King, being always firmly perſuaded of the Juſtice of his Cauſe; and I looked upon it as my Duty, both as a Subject and an Engliſhman, to aſſiſt him in the Recovery of his Throne, which I believe him to be deprived of, contrary to all Right and Juſtice; taking the Laws and Conſtitutions of my Country for my Guide.

As for Religion, I die in the Communion of the Church of England, in which I was educated.

And as I freely forgive all the World, ſo, whoever I may any ways have injured, I heartily ask them Pardon.

William Perkins.

The Trial of AMBROSE ROOKWOOD, Gent. for High-Treaſon, at a Seſſions of Oyer and Terminer, held in the Court of King's-Bench, on the 21ſt of April, 1696. 8 W. 3.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the Priſoner with High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and conſpiring the Death of the King, and the Subverſion of the Government, and to ſubject the People of this Kingdom to the Dominion and Slavery of the French King; and to that End, that he, together with Robert Lowick, Charles Cranborne, Chriſtopher Knightley, and other falſe Traitors, did on the 10th Day of February, in the Seventh Year of the King, in the Pariſh of St. Paul's Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, traitorouſly conſult and agree to aſſaſſinate his Majeſty; and that forty Horſemen, of which the Priſoner was to be one, ſhould lie in Ambuſh, and ſet upon the King's Coach at his Return from Hunting; one Party being to attack the Guards, while another murdered his Majeſty: That the Priſoner and his Accomplices did buy and provide Horſes and Arms to effect the ſame; and that the ſaid Charles Cranborne did carry Meſſages between the Conſpirators, and a Liſt of the Names of the Perſons who were deſigned to perpetrate the ſaid Aſſaſſination; againſt the Duty of his Allegiance, &c.

The Priſoner being arraigned, and pleading Not Guilty, was ordered to be brought into Court again that Day ſeven-night, and he appeared at the Bar with the Counſel that had been aſſigned him, in Purſuance of the late Act, viz. Sir Bartholomew Shower and Mr. Phipps, on the 28th of April.

Objections of the Priſoner's Counſel.

The Priſoner's Counſel objected, That there being a Clauſe in the late Act, That the Priſoner ſhall have a Copy of the Pannel of the Jurors who were to try him, duely returned by the Sheriffs, two Days before the Trial; the Return muſt be antecedent to his having a Copy: That they had indeed a Copy of the Array of the Pannel delivered them; but that was not a Copy of the Pannel returned; for it was no Return, until it came into Court.

But the Court ruled, that the giving a Copy of the Pannel, before the Return, ſufficiently ſatisfied the Words as well as the Intention of the Act; and that no other Conſtruction could be made without great Abſurdities.

Another Objection made by the Priſoner's Counſel was, That they had not a true Copy of the whole Indictment delivered them, as the late Act required; for that it did not appear before whom it was taken, the Time when, or the Place where.

The Attorney General anſwered, This Objection came too late; they had admitted it to be a true Copy, by pleading to it: And of that Opinion were the Court.

The Pannel being called over, the Priſoner challenged 34 peremptorily: After which a Jury was ſworn, and charged with the Priſoner.

Then his Counſel moved, that they might offer their Exceptions to the Indictment before Evidence given, according to the Words of the late Act of Parliament.

The Court anſwered They were too late; they ought to have moved this upon the Arraignment, before Plea pleaded, or at leaſt before the Jury were ſworn and charged with the Priſoner; for after they were once charged, in Caſe of Treaſon, they muſt give a Verdict, and either acquit or convict him.

That the Deſign of the Parliament, was to reſtrain the Priſoner from moving in Arreſt of Judgment, for Miſ-ſpelling, falſe Latin, or little Matters of Form, if he did not move it in a proper Time; having ſuch a Liberty allowed him, as to have a Copy of the Indictment ſo many Days before he was compelled to plead: That although the Words of the Act were before Evidence given, it was nevertheleſs intended that they ſhould move at ſuch a Time before Evidence given, as the Law allowed; and that the Act did not eſtabliſh any new Method of Trial.

However, it was propoſed by the Court to the King's Counſel, That, ſince it was a new Act of Parliament, and the Priſoner might be led into this Miſtake by the Penning of the Act, they ſhould not take Advantage of his having lapſed; but indulge him ſo far, as to let him offer his Exceptions now.

To this Mr. Attorney conſented, provided they would confine themſelves to ſuch Heads as were mentioned in that Clauſe of the Act, which only related to Matters of Form; and not offer any Thing to the ſubſtantial Part of the Indictment; which they had ſtill a Liberty of doing in Arreſt of Judgment.

But the Counſel for the Priſoner refuſed to offer any Thing, unleſs they might urge all their Exceptions together.

Objections to Porter's Evidence.

Mr. Porter being called to give Evidence, the Priſoner's Counſel oppoſed the ſwearing him, becauſe he ſtood convicted of Felony, and was not capable of being a Witneſs, and the Record of his Conviction was read, and the Priſoner's Counſel inſiſted, that though he had the King's Pardon, that would not reſtore him to his Credit, ſo as to make him capable of being a Witneſs.

A Pardon reſtores a Convict of Felony, before Attainder.

But the Court held, that the King's Pardon was as effectual as a Parliament Pardon, and either of them, before Attainder (as their Caſe was prevented all Corruption of Blood: So that though a Man forfeited his Goods by Conviction viction, yet after a Pardon, he is capable of having new Goods, and ſhall hold them without any Forfeiture for ever: For the Pardon reſtores him to his former Capacity, and prevents any further Forfeiture. Indeed, if he had been attainted (condemned or out-lawed) whereby his Blood would have been corrupted, no Pardon, whether it were by the King, or by the Parliament, could purge his Blood, without a Reverſal of the Attainder, by Writ of Error, or Act of Parliament, or expreſs Words in the Act, reſtoring him to Blood: The Conviction, indeed, might be objected to his Credit, but could not be urged againſt his being a Witneſs.

Porter's Teſtimony.

Then Captain Porter was ſworn, and teſtified, That there was a meeting of the Conſpirators at the Globe-Tavern in Hatton-Garden, among whom was the Priſoner at the Bar, Captain Rookwood, and there they conſulted of the beſt means to aſſaſſinate the King as he came from Richmond: And ſome being of Opinion, that it was beſt to be attempted on the other Side the Water, and others, that it ſhould be done on this Side, Perſons were appointed to view both Places; and upon their Report, it was agreed to do it in the Lane that leads from Turnham-Green to Brentford; and Saturday, the 15th of February, was appointed to be the Day, that Mr. Rookwood, the Priſoner, was to command a Party of Men that came from France, who were to attack the Guards on one Side, and the Witneſs and Mr. Charnock, with their Diviſion, were to fall upon the Guards on the other Side, while Sir George Barclay, with four Men out of each Party, were to attack the King in his Coach, and kill him, and all that were in it: That there were at this laſt Meeting, Sir George Barclay, Captain Charnock, Sir William Perkins, Major Holmes, the Priſoner, Captain King, and this Witneſs; and they met at the Globe-Tavern, in Hatton-Garden.

That on the 15th, Sir George Barclay and the Priſoner were at this Witneſs's Lodging, and Durance, one of their orderly Men, who lay at Kenſington to get Intelligence, brought Word that the King was preparing to go abroad, and a great many Noblemen and Gentlemen with him: However, it was agreed by them to execute the Deſign, if the King went abroad that Day (the Priſoner being preſent): But the Witneſs could not ſay he ſaw him afterwards.

It being demanded, What the Priſoner ſaid, to expreſs his Conſent to this Attempt? Porter anſwered, he heard Mr. Rookwood ſay, It was a very deſperate Thing, and he was not very willing to engage in it; but, when Sir George Barclay ſaid, he ſhould command the Party, he replyed in French, There's an End of it.

Then it was demanded, If Mr. Rookwood made any Propoſal at that ſecond Meeting? Porter anſwered, he could not atteſt he heard Mr. Rookwood ſay any Thing in particular; but they all agreed to do the Thing that Day.

Harris's Evidence.

Then Mr. Harris was called, and the Priſoner's Counſel objected againſt the ſwearing him: That he was entitled to a Thouſand Pounds Reward by the Proclamation, on convicting the Priſoner: But this appearing a Miſtake, he was ſworn, and teſtified, That he was at St. Germains the 14th of January laſt N. S. That King James then ſent for him, and told him, he was ſenſible he had ſerved him well, and now he had an Opportunity of doing ſomething for him. That he would ſend him into England, where he ſhould be ſubſiſted; and he ſhould follow the Orders of Sir George Barclay; and that the King ordered him twenty Louisd'ors to bear his and his Comrade Hare's Charges; and if they were Wind-bound at Calais, the Preſident of Calais was to ſubſiſt them there, which he did eight or nine Days. That they afterwards came to London, and the King having told them they might find Sir George Barclay on Mondays and Thurſdays in the Evening in Covent-Garden-Square, and might knew him by a White Handkercheif hanging out of his Pocket, they went thither; but could not meet Sir George there: But two or three Days after they came to Town, Sir George had Notice of his Arrival, and ſent for him, and enquired after the King and Royal Family; and ordered him five Shillings a Day Subſiſtence while he had no Horſe, and ſix Shillings a Day afterwards: And that the firſt Saturday the Aſſaſſination was deſigned, he gave him a Guinea.

1695. 8 W. 3.

That as to Mr. Rookwood, the firſt Saturday the Aſſaſſination was to be, he ſaw him at Mr. Burck's Lodgings, in a great Hurry, and ſome Conſternation. That he asked him what they were going about, and Mr. Rookwood told him, If he would go down to Captain Counter, he ſhould know: And that Captain Counter ſaid, they muſt immediately get ready to go to Turnham-Green. That they went to the Woolpack there, and Sir George Barclay came in, and declared they were all Men of Honour; and that the Buſineſs they were going about was, to attack the Prince of Orange: But Durance came in after that, and ſaid the Prince of Orange did not go out that Day. That he was much ſtartled when they talked of attacking the Prince of Orange; and that he came next Morning to Mr. Rookwood, and asked him, If they were to be the Murderers of the Prince of Orange? and Mr. Rookwood ſaid, I am afraid we are drawn into ſome ſuch Buſineſs; but if I had known it before I came over, I ſhould have begged the King's Pardon at St. Germains, and not have come over hither That afterwards, Mr. Rookwood, Mr. Lowick, and he, had a Meeting in Red-Lyon-Fields, where they diſcourſed about the Matter. That Mr. Rookwood ſaid, It was a barbarous Thing; but he was ſent over to obey Sir George Barclay's Orders, which he had ſeveral Times declared he was reſolved to do.

Rookwood's Defence by his Counſel.

That on Saturday Morning afterwards, he came to Mr. Rookwood's Lodging, and from thence went to Sir George Barclay's; and there Mr. Rookwood gave him a Note or Liſt of ſeveral Names, particularly Mr. Hungate, Mr. Hanford, Mr. Hare, and his own Name at the Top; but that they were the Sham Names they all went by. That he was called Jenkins himſelf, and that King James directed him to go by that Name. That when Mr. Rookwood gave him the Liſt, he told him he was going to Turnham-Green, and he muſt go along with him; and ſaid, ſmiling, That he ſhould be his

That Rookwood, Bernarde, Lowick, and himſelf had met ſeveral Times in Red-Lyon-Fields, and talked of attacking the Prince of Orange.

That his Horſe ſtood in my Lord Feverſham's Stables, in Somerſet-Houſe; as did Mr. Hungate's and Mr. Hare's: He thought there might be five or ſix there, that were deſigned for the ſame Expedition. That Major Holmes delivered him his Horſe there, and he had him to another Stable; and that he had Arms delivered him by Captain Counter.

Chamberlain's Evidence. Chamberlain being ſworn, teſtified, That Six Horſes were ſent into Somerſet-Houſe Stables: That Mr. Lewis ſent a Note to take Care of them; and they were taken away by Perſons unknown to this Witneſs, about a Week before the Plot was diſcovered: Three of them had ſtood there ten Days, and the other but a Night or two.

Rookwood's Defence by his Counſel. John Allen confirmed the Teſtimony of the former Witneſs: Then the Priſoner's Counſel objected, That there were not two Witneſſes to any Overt-Act; and that the being at a treaſonable Conſult was but Miſpriſion of Treaſon, according to ſome Opinions.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, He did not know what Opinions they meant (there had been ſome ſuch Diſcourſes in Pamphlets, 'twas true; particularly thoſe of Sir John Hawles on the Lord Ruſſel's Caſe); but it was always held for Law, that Conſulting and Agreeing was an Overt-Act.

The Priſoner's Counſel anſwered, That there was no Evidence of an Agreement; and that the Liſt mentioned to be given by the Priſoner to Harris, ought not to be given in Evidence, there being no ſuch Overt-Act laid in the Indictment. By the late Act, no Evidence was to be given of an Overt-Act not laid in the Indictment.

Then they were about to call ſome Witneſſes, to prove that Mr. Porter was guilty of Robbing on the Highway, of Clipping, Fornication, and Buggery; which they thought would ſufficiently take off the Credit of his Evidence: But the Court ruled, That no Evidence ought to be given of any particular Crime a Witneſs had been guilty of, unleſs he had been convicted of it; but Evidence might be given of his Character in general.

The Priſoner's Counſel anſwered, It was the Crime that rendered the Man infamous; and they did not know why a Man that had the good Fortune not to be taken and puniſhed, ſhould be in a better Condition, as to the Credit of his Teſtimony, than one that was taken and underwent the Puniſhment of the Law.

The Chief Juſtice's Direction to the Jury. The Counſel on both Sides agreeing to leave it to the Chief Juſtice to ſum up the Evidence, his Lordſhip obſerved, That it had been objected by the Priſoner's Counſel, That there was no Overt-Act, legally proved, of a Deſign againſt the King's Life: But Captain Porter was poſitive he was at the Conſult at the Globe Tavern, where it was debated and reſolved on. And though Mr. Rookwood did diſlike it on his firſt being acquainted with it, yet, being ſent over to obey the Orders of Sir George Barclay, and Sir George producing a Scheme wherein he was to command the Party, and telling him he muſt obey Orders, he anſwered, in French, There is an End of it: And whether that did amount to a Conſent and Agreement to be engaged in it, he left to the Jury; for, if it did, it was plainly an Overt-Act. 1696. 8 W. 3.

Then Harris teſtified, That Rookwood told him, he ſhould be of his Party; be his Aid de Camp, and go to Turnham-Green, and attack the Prince of Orange; and that Rookwood gave him a Liſt of the Men he was directed to get ready; which was another Overt-Act.

Here Rookwood objected, That the Liſt given to Harris was not mentioned in the Indictment; but the Liſt in the Indictment referred to Mr. Cranborne.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, That this Liſt of Men, given to Harris, was an Evidence of the Conſent and Agreement of Mr. Rookwood to command the Party.

To which the Priſoner's Counſel replied, That, by the Words of the late Act, no Overt-Act could be given in Evidence, that was not expreſsly laid in the Indictment; and they had charged in the Indictment, That Cranborne had carried a Liſt backward and forward, as an Overt-Act of the Treaſon; which ſhewed the King's Counſel thought it neceſſary to be alledged by this Act of Parliament, or they could give no Evidence of it. But the Liſt they gave Evidence of here, was the Liſt ſuppoſed to be delivered by the Priſoner to Harris, which was no Evidence of the Liſt alledged to be carried about by Cranborne: And as this Liſt, given to Harris, was not mentioned in the Indictment, no Evidence could be given of it.

The Chief Juſtice ſaid, Although the Act did exclude the giving Evidence of an Overt-Act that was not laid in the Indictment, yet it did not exclude ſuch Evidence as was proper to prove that Overt-Act that was laid in the Indictment. Therefore the Queſtion was, Whether the giving this Liſt to Harris did not prove ſome Overt-Act that was alledged in the Indictment? There was laid, in the Indictment, an Agreement to kill the King; and, if that was proved, That was an Overt-Act of this Treaſon. And, when the Agreement to that Deſign was proved, there was no Doubt but his giving a Liſt of the Men who were to be Actors in it to Harris, was a further Proof that he did agree to it: And then it was very proper to be given in Evidence: For if by the new Statute no one Act could be given in Evidence to prove another, then not only the Overt-Act, but alſo all the Evidence of that Act, muſt be expreſſed in the Indictment.

Concluding, That if the Jury did, in the firſt Place believe, that there were ſuch Conſults and Meetings, where the intended Aſſaſſination of the King was debated and reſolved on, and that Mr. Rookwood was preſent, and did agree to it, that was an Overt-Act: And 1696. 8 W. 3. again, if they were ſatisfied, That there was an Agreement to prepare and produce a Number of Men to ſet upon the King and his Guards in the Manner they had heard, and the Priſoner was concerned in making this Proviſion, and was to have a Poſt, and command a Party in that attack; That was a further Proof of that Conſent and Agreement that was laid in the Indictment.

Then the Jury withdrew, and after a Receſs of a Quarter of an Hour, brought in the Priſoner GUILTY. 1696. 8 W. 3.

The Priſoner's Irons taken off. THE Priſoner being brought to his Trial in Irons, the Chief Juſtice ordered them to be knocked off, that he might ſtand at Eaſe to manage his Defence.

The Indictment. The Priſoner was indicted for High-Treaſon, in compaſing the Death of the King and the Subverſion of the Government (See Rookwood's Trial): But the particular Overt-acts with which the Priſoner was charged, were, That he did meet and conſult with the ſaid Traitors, how to aſſaſſinate the King, and agreed that Forty Horſemen, of which the Priſoner did undertake to be one, ſhould attack the King's Coach as he came from Hunting: That he did provide Horſes and Arms for that Purpoſe, and carried a Liſt of the Conſpirators from one to another.

Exceptions to the Indictment. The Priſoners Counſel took ſeveral Exceptions to the Indictment, as that it ſaid Anno Regni dicti Domini Regis nunc ſeptimo, and Lewis was the laſt King mentioned: To which it was anſwered, that Dominus Rex muſt be underſtood of the King of England. 2. That it was ſaid, diverſis diebus et vicibus, tam ante quam poſtea, and afterwards ſays, poſtea ſcilicet eodem decimo die Februarij, which was repugnant: To which it was anſwered, that poſtea was another Sentence, and related to different Matters. 3. That this Indictment, being againſt a Subject born, ought to have had the Words, contra Supremum naturalem Ligeum Dominum ſuum.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, he had ſeen abundance of Precedents, that had only the Words contra Ligeantiæ ſuæ debitum. That Allegiance was the Genus, and if that was ſuggeſted, all the Species of Allegiance, whether natural or local, were comprehended in it. 4. It was objected, that one of the Overt-acts was not laid to have been done traitorouſly. It being only ſaid, conſenſerunt aggreaverunt & aſſenſerunt, quod quadraginta homines, &c.

The Chief Juſtice anſwered, That after they had laid the Word Proditorie, as to the particular Treaſon, It was not neceſſary to lay it again to the Overt-Act, for the Overt-Act was but the Evidence of the Treaſon: The Treaſon it ſelf lay in the compaſſing, which was an Act of the Mind 5. That it did not appear, any of the Overt-Acts were the Preſentment of the Jury: In reciting the Overt-Acts, they ought to have begun again with a Quodque, or ſomething that ſhould have referred to the firſt Juratores preſentant; or elſe they ſhould have begun quite again with a Juratores ulterius preſentant, and not have coupled them, as this was, with an Et. To this the Chief Juſtice anſwered, that the High-Treaſon charged in the Indictment was but one and the ſame Offence: The other Facts mentioned were but Overt-Acts to manifeſt this Treaſon (viz.) The Compaſing the Death of the King; and therefore he thought the Form of the Indictment better as it was, than if it had been otherwiſe.

A Juryman who had convicted his Accomplices on this Jury. Then the Priſoner's Counſel moved, That thoſe, who were upon the laſt Jury, might not be called upon this; becauſe they had given a Verdict upon the ſame Indictment, and therefore could not be ſo indifferent as the Law intended they ſhould be.

The Court anſwered, Though it was upon the ſame Indictment, the Evidence was not the ſame; for they were diſtinct Offences.

The Evidence of Porter. Then the King's Witneſſes were called; and firſt Mr. Porter was ſworn, and teſtified, That about a Year before the Aſſaſſination Plot was on Foot, he employed Cranborne the Priſoner, to buy Arms of the Brokers at ſecond Hand: That he gave him Ten Pounds at ſeveral Times, and he bought him Ten Caſe of Piſtols, and brought a Sword-Cutler to him, of whom the Witneſs bought Twenty Swords: That when Sir George Barclay came to London, he (the Witneſs) acquainted Cranborne with the intended Aſſaſſination, and he was ready both Saturdays to go with him. That on Saturday the 22d, he ſent Cranborne to Sir William Perkins for two Horſes, and returned, and ſaid, He knew where to have the two Horſes, and that the King was to go out that Day; but Mr. Charnock was afraid they ſhould want their full Number of Men, and deſired him (Porter) to ſend ſend the Names of his Men: That he did ſo, and Cranborne brought back the Liſt of his (Porter's) Men, with a Liſt of Mr. Charnock's Men written underneath; and at the ſame Time News was brought, that the King did not go out that Day.

It being demanded, for what Purpoſe Cranborne was employed to buy Arms a Year before this Plot? Porter anſwered, Cranborne knew he was a Captain in Colonel Parker's Regiment, and thoſe Arms were bought to be in a Readineſs againſt the King landed, which had been deſigned ſeveral Times.—— That the Week before the 15th of February, he told the Priſoner, he had ſet him down to be one of his Party in the Enterprize againſt the King, and would provide him Horſe and Arms, and he (the Priſoner) agreed to go along with him; and the Friday before the 15th, he ſent him with three Caſe of Piſtols to Sir William Perkins to furniſh the three Men he was to mount with his own Horſes; and on the Friday before the 22d, he ſent him to look after the Horſes which Jeffery Gunn ſaid he could help him to; and Cranborne brought him Word, that he and Gunn had found three Hackney Horſes in Bloomsbury for their Purpoſe; and that he told Cranborne, the Conſpirators were reſolved to put the Deſign in Execution the next Day, and that Cranborne drank the Health with them, To the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange.

De la Rue's Evidence.

Mr. De la Rue teſtified, That he met Cranborne the Priſoner with Mr. Porter, on Saturday the 15th, being the firſt Day the Aſſaſſination was intended; that he ſaw him at Captain Porter's on Saturday the 22d, and Mr. Porter ſent Cranborne with a Liſt of the Conſpirators to Mr. Charnock: That he brought the Liſt back, with a Liſt of Names Mr. Charnock had added; and Cranborne told Mr. Porter, that the King did not go out that Day; and Mr. Charnock was apprehenſive the Thing was diſcovered, and deſired him (Porter) to have a Care of himſelf; as for his Part he was reſolved not to lie at Home that Night: That Keys the Trumpeter came in while they were at Dinner, and told them, my Lord Oxford's Regiment of Guards was returned from Richmond foaming, and he ſaw the King's Coaches returned to the Meuſe-Gate, Mr. Cranborne being preſent, who after Dinner drank the uſual Jacobite Healths with them, particularly that, To the Squeezing of the Rotten Orange: But imagining the Thing had taken Air, the Company ſoon broke up, and Porter went out of Town.

1696. 8 W. 3.

Pendergraſs's Evidence.

Captain Pendergraſs teſtified, That he dined with Cranborne and ſeveral more of the Conſpirators, at the Roſe Tavern in Covent-Garden, on Friday the 14th of February, and there they diſcourſed of getting ready to aſſaſſinate the King the next Day: That the next Day, Saturday the 15th, they dined at the Blue Poſts in Spring-Garden, and diſcourſed of the Aſſaſſination, and were mightily concerned when they heard the King did not go out that Day; but appointed it to be done the Saturday following: And Mr. Pendergraſs confirmed the Evidence of the two former Witneſſes in ſeveral other Particulars.

Cranborne convicted.

The Chief Juſtice demanding, If he was ſure Cranborne did agree to this Matter before the 15th? Pendergraſs anſwered, he was ſure of it; he agreed to it on the 14th at the Roſe Tavern, and to make one in the Execution of the Deſign.

Then the Chief Juſtice ſummed up the Evidence, and the Jury withdrawing, returned within a quarter of an Hour with their Verdict, that the Priſoner was GUILTY.

The Indictment.

THE Indictment charges the ſaid Robert Lowick with High-Treaſon, in compaſſing and imagining the Death of the King; and ſets forth, That the Priſoner, together with Chriſtopher Knightley, Ambroſe Rookwood, Charles Cranborne, and other falſe Traitors, did, on the 10th Day of February in the Seventh Year of his preſent Majeſty, and divers other Days and Times, as well before as after, at the Pariſh of St. Paul's Covent-Garden, in the County of Middleſex, conſult and agree, by lying in wait, to aſſaſſinate and murder his Majeſty: And in order to effect the ſame, that Forty Horſemen or thereabouts, of whom the ſaid Robert Lowick, Chriſtopher Knightley, Ambroſe Rookwood, and Charles Cranborne were to be four: And every one of them traitorouſly took upon himſelf to be one ſhould ſet upon the King in his Coach, and upon the Guards attending him as he came from Richmond, and ſo ſhould aſſaſſinate and murder his ſaid Majeſty: And that they, the ſaid Robert Lowick, Chriſtopher Knightley, &c. on the Day and Year aforeſaid, the better to execute
